From the Twenty-Ninth

Letter written from Camp Chase, Dec. 26, 1861
Arrived in Columbus at Camp at 11 a.m. Camp Chase is four miles from Columbus. Everything seems to be done for the men that can be for their comfort. There are some 300 Secesh prisoners here, confined in a large yard surrounded by a fence twenty feet high and barracks inside. I must thank you all for our provisions for what we should have done without them I don't know. It was the universal cry of the whole regiment "God Bless the ladies of Painesville," and "Hurrah for the Painesville girls."

The Parmly House – Last evening (Wed.), the Parmly House was formally opened by Mr. Samuel Burrige, by a supper and dance.

The Second Ohio Cavalry, Col. Doubleday's Regiment, received orders to move to Kansas, and report to General Hunter. Capt. C. C. Smith, Co. G, of this Regiment, was at home on a short furlough and left here Monday for his post. His company is made up principally of Lake Co. boys.

The Soldiers' Aid Society received money by subscriptions and added their own funds for the purchase of 72 rubber blankets. These were distributed to Co. G, Cav. Regt. 25 blankets; Co. F 29th Reg. Infantry 12 blankets; Co. D 7th Reg. 26 blankets; Artillery Co., Capt. Burroughs, 6 blankets; Dr. Purple 1 blanket; sold 2 blankets.

The Mansfield Herald of the 4th inst. reports the death of E. P. Sturgess, one of the oldest and wealthiest citizens of that town age about 76. Mr. Sturgess was married 3 times: In 1821 to Miss Amanda Buckingham, of Putnam; in 1834 to Miss Jerusha M. Hale, of Conn.; his last wife, Miss R. M. Tracey (well known to many of the old inhabitants of Painesville), he married in 1850. She survives him.

A Circulating Library has been started by Mr. Landon Smith at the old Post Office Book Store. There are several hundred volumes. The charge is moderate, 6 cents per volume with the privilege of keeping it a week.

My furlough expired and I left Painesville on the 25th to rejoin my regiment. Our train arrived in Wellsville at 8 p.m. We waited as our next train was not due until 4 a.m. the next morning. In Wheeling, everything seems practical and useful. The buildings are the plainest style and no shade trees adorn the streets. It was Christmas and the streets were filled with children. Instead of wishing each other a "Merry Christmas" when they met, they cried out "Christmas gift" and negroes held out their hands as we passed begging for a dime. We left Wheeling on the 10 o'clock train; at 9 o'clock we were in Cumberland, Md., where the train stopped for the night. Next morning at 10 a.m. we left with a teamster who was going through to Romney. So started a 30 mile ride in an army wagon. We arrived at Romney just as the drums were beating the tattoo. Our regiment has a pleasant camp a quarter of a mile from the village on a hill overlooking the Potomac. The health of the regiment is excellent and the men seem to be in excellent spirits. We have new Sibley tents with stoves in them. They are much larger and warmer than our old ones and are as comfortable as tents can be.

The Soldiers' Aid Society has on had a quantity of yarn to be converted into socks and mittens for our soldiers. We urge every woman in Lake County to call and take yarn for one or more pairs of socks or mittens. Carrie C. Mathews, Sec.

I had the pleasure of seeing a genuine secesher yesterday. I went down to a house in the hollow a quarter mile from the picket station to get some dinner. I had not been there long when one of the rebel pickets came in to beg the same, for he had no money. There is a law here against picket-fighting, so I was all right. I took pity on the poor fellow. He said he had not had a cent of money since he had been in the service and he had not but one suit of clothes. I paid for his dinner, for which he thanked me, saying he would do me a good turn some time if he ever met me in a bad fix. There is a rebel camp 15 miles from here at, Blue Gap, a very strong place and well-fortified. We shall have to fight hard to get the out of it.

Miss Anna M. Tracy, Sec'y of Lake Co. Soldiers' Aid Society. John H. Miller tells how he distributed the mittens, needle books and socks. He gave the rubber blankets to those in poor health. He asks if it not too much to send him a few narrow straw ticks and blankets or quilts for the sick who are lying on loose straw on the ground. I cannot describe the thrill of happiness that is felt by the soldier knowing that their kind lady friends at home are sacrificing their own comforts and the pleasures of a warm fireside to minister to the wants of the defenders of our country's honor.

Gen. McClellan's refusal to explain the causes of the Ball's Bluff disaster was the subject of very severe comment in Congress last Monday.

One of the things written was that Jeff Davis implies that by ceasing to grow cotton the Southern States will bring ruin on all the interests of foreign countries dependent on that staple. A Battle at Ballou's Gap, Seven Rebels killed, Many Prisoners, Tents, Cannon, & Horses Taken
Extract of a letter to Master Willie Gray dated Romney, Jan. 8, 1863

We got orders to march night before last and left here at midnight. It was very cold and the snow was falling. We were going to Ballou's Gap. There were 3,000 of our men, six cannon and 200 hundred cavalry. When we got there, we were ordered to go double quick and ran down a long hill into a deep valley between two mountains. The battle did not last long, for the Rebels were frightened. We set fire to four mills, a saw mill, a large dwelling house and several barns. After warming ourselves by the burning buildings and eating some crackers, we marched back to Romney, have walked 32 miles since midnight. This morning, my feet were so sore I could not walk. Herbert is not so lame as I am. He broke through the ice in crossing a creek and had wet feet all the way.

E. T. Donaldson, Recruiting Officer, Painesville, needs 20 more men. I know a good many men who would go but their mothers withhold them. Now this is not right. Other mothers in the North have said to their noble boys to go fight for your country and help sustain the best government the world has ever seen.

The Milwaukee News says 8,000 men are shivering in Wisconsin camps burning 150 cords of wood every week to keep from freezing and asks why are they not ordered to Kentucky, to the Potomac, or South, or anywhere where they can be useful? The men are begging for service.

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence from the Seventh; Patterson's Creek, Va., Jan. 20, 1862 Reinforcements are constantly arriving and being sent forward and all troops here are kept constantly prepared for marching. Yesterday, 3 regiments, 29th and 62nd Ohio and 84th Pennsylvania, arrived and pitched their tents two miles about here on the Maryland side. The 67th Ohio arrived today.

Rain has fallen almost constantly for the last week, rendering the wagon roads for the present useless for military purposes. The river is much swollen. Our camp is inundated with mud. With the exception of the interior of the tents, the ground is a slew of mud and of incalculable depth. Travelling on foot is nearly impossible.
So, we lie in our tents day after day, only getting out at reveille and tattoo for roll call. We are hoping earnestly for cold weather. We shall doubtless leave here as soon as the roads become passable. Volunteer

Account of the Battle of Silver Creek. Jan. 1, 1862 a command of 1,000 men under Maj. Hubbard crossed the river at this point in pursuit of the rebels that were tearing up the North Missouri Railroad. We met the enemy on the 8th, encamped on Silver Creek, at Sabers Point, under command of Col. Poindexter, of Price's army. They were in a strong defended position. With heavy timber and undergrowth on all sides and high hills. We charged across the creek in waist deep ice and water; the rebels broke and followed their Colonel up the hill. It was near dark when the dead and wounded were gathered up. We captured 50 prisoners, 60 wagons, 200 tents, 200 horses, shotguns, rifles, revolvers without number. The rebel loss in this engagement is 45 killed, 75 wounded. Federal loss 1 killed, 1 since died of his wounds and 7 wounded. Yours truly, John H. Rosa

Camp Logan Cross Roads, Mason Co, Ky., Jan 21, 1862 (Re: Battle near Somerset, Ky.)

On the 19th at 6:30 a.m., we were aroused by shots from our pickets, stationed about a mile west and between us and Zollicoffer's Camp. We harnessed in a hurry and at a quarter to seven we took our position. By this time, the 9th Ohio, 2nd Minn., and 4th Ky. had got at them and the battle was in full rage—one continuous roar of musketry. Word came that they were retreating and an order came for us to advance and shell them. We ran our horses about a half a mile through the woods to a clear field and took a post on the s.e. corner. We unlimbered and waited 15 mins. A large body of troops from behind a hill advanced towards us on the charge. It was raining and the air was full of smoke. We were not sure they were foes and hesitated about firing. They got within 50 rods and up went the darned rattlesnake flag. We gave them the shells. They were in close order and every shell told on them. The ground was covered with blood and the bodies mangled and torn. They were close upon us about 2,000 strong. We hurried out of that neck of the woods double quick. A little after noon they broke and ran, and we were ordered in pursuit, across the battlefield. Horror, what a sight! You have read many accounts of the horrors of the battlefield but no pen can describe it. The dead had peculiarly pale, white look, different from any I ever saw that had died by disease. We saw our shells had been there.

About 5 p.m. we got to their fortified camp about 8 miles from the battlefield and took a position on a hill and shelled them until dark. We were tired and hungry and had nothing to eat all day. Had then 3 loaves of bread dealt out to each man. Rather a dry hard fare after a hard day's work, but it done very well—we had won a battle and were in good spirits. The rebels left and went over the river, many of them drowned. At 9 o'clock Capt. Kenney, Lieuts. Veits and Southwick, Sergt. Belden and myself went over to the camp. A sight indeed! It covered 200 acres. They had log winter shanties for 25,000 men. We have buried 210 rebels and are not done yet. Besides, they have 300-400 wounded. We have lost 40 killed and 150 wounded.

We still lie here in our muddy camp on the bank of the Potomac, with the enemy but a day's march distant, 15,000 strong.

Rumor has it that our destination is Harper's Ferry and that we are to drive the rebels out of Martinsburg and other points, thus opening the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. A few weeks ago, Lieut. Weed received a letter from Chas. McGraw, a private in Co. D., who was taken prisoner at Cross Lanes, stating that he had escaped and was then at home, and would soon rejoin his company. He got separated from this comrades at the time of the battle and afterward to facilitate his escape, he went to a house and exchanged his uniform for a suit of civilian clothes. He was nevertheless arrested as a Union citizen. The rebels not discovering he was a soldier, did not send him to Richmond with the rest. He feigned illness and was left behind and made his escape to the Union lines.

From the Twenty-ninth: Camp Kelly, Md. Jan. 26, 1862

The 29th Regt. O.V. left Camp Chase, Columbus, O. on the 17th inst. From Camp Chase we marched 4 miles on the line of the National Road. This road is macadamized with broken lime stone. The heavily loaded wagons constantly passing over it grind the fragments of stone to a fine powder. When the rains falls, the surface of the road is covered with a liquid of the color and consistency of light brown paste. At every stop as we marched along, large drops were thrown up sticking to our pants till they were coated from our heels pretty well up to our knees.

In Ohio, the sale of liquor is prohibited in camps. Men or intemperate habits, after weeks of forced abstinence, give way to excessive indulgence of appetite the moment they get a supply of whiskey. Three or four men afflicted with the raging, noisy, insanity of drunkenness are enough to deprive a hundred others of all peace and quietude.

At Bellair we got on Baltimore & Ohio R. R. trains. It was raining hard and the train cars were so leaky it was as if they did not have roofs. We are encamped 6 or 7 miles from Cumberland. The order for the 19th to march into Northern Virginia for a Winter campaign without pay, was promptly obeyed, but not without some dread of the privations to which they would hereby be subjected.

Last week when a fierce north wester drove the mingled rain and sleet down upon the half-frozen mud and swayed the tents to and fro, we were ordered out of our cozy tents to get ready for a march in a half hour with one days' rations. Overcoats and cartridge boxes were put on, arms got in readiness, and haversacks filled with pork and hard bread, the staple food of all the soldiers. We were crowded into freight railroad cars about as close as we could stand and moved eastward. We stopped at South Branch, a station at the confluence of the two branches of the Potomac. Pickets were posted and scouting parties sent out. We crossed the bridge to an old Virginia farm house. We found in a shed 300-400 bushels of corn which we got loaded into the cars. Also, a quantity of oats was gotten from a storehouse. We all returned to Patterson's Creek with a large quantity of much needed forage. We are now ordered to get ready to march with baggage and five days rations. Volunteer -From the Second Cavalry; Camp Federal, Platte City, Mo.; Jan. 31, 1862

On the 15th we were ordered to saddle and remove from our comfortable quarters at Camp Dennison, with 3 days' provisions. We got our horses on cars in Cincinnati, and we were seated in the luxurious cars of the Ohio & Mississippi R. R. We arrived at Bloody Island, opposite St. Louis, on the 17th. Bloody Island was the Western Depot of the Ohio & Mississippi R. R., and formerly the scene of innumerable contests between the early settlers and the Indians. The Mississippi was covered with ice so we had to stop on the island until the river opened. This alone was enough to give us the blues but to make matters worse, all of our cooking utensils, tents, and a portion of our blankets had been forwarded from Camp Dennison to Fort Leavenworth, by which means, we were left out in the cold with nothing to eat but hard bread, raw ham and pork. This was our regular fare from the 17th to the 30th. After laying for two nights in the open air, and in a storm of hail and rain that wet us through, the ice moved off. Late on Monday, we mounted our steeds and were ferried across to the city of St. Louis. We marched 4 miles to Camp Benton. No arrangements had been made for us and we spent another night rolled up in our wet, frozen blankets in the open air. In the morning, we borrowed some tents which we occupied until the 23rd when we marched to St. Charles. The Benton Barracks were built by Gen. Fremont and could accommodate 60,000 men. Notwithstanding the comforts, Camp Benton is very unhealthy. Nearly one-fourth of the troops there are in the hospital. By three days encampment there, the regiment contracted the measles which is rapidly spreading through the ranks. Jan. 27th, we once more took the cars on the North Missouri R. R. and proceeded as far as Hudson City where we stayed one day in order to ship our horses on the Hannibal & St. Joseph R. R. From Hudson, we went by Hannibal & St. Joseph R. R. and arrived at St. Jo on the 30th, then on to Weston. Weston is on the east bank of the Missouri River and about 11 miles from Fort Leavenworth. We fed our horses at St. Jo then marched back 7 miles to Platte City, where we are now quartered.

The officers in Co. G. are all in good health, and Capt. C. C. Smith, of Painesville, is acknowledged by all companies to the best in the Regiment. First Lieut. S. S. Wood, of Chardon, is also much esteemed by the officers and men.

John J. Pike is our Orderly Sergeant, also, from Painesville, and he fills that trying office well.

We are still here in the mud and not likely to move unless it quits raining long enough for the roads to settle. The Paymaster came and left money for the Regiment. Each man is called up in alphabetical order to get his pay. Out of their pay, they pay what is owned to the Sutler (civilian merchant who sells provisions to the army. His prices are reasonable and the man can get most anything like from a general store, except liquor.)

p. 3 col. 3 Death of Dea. Cushing Cunningham
Dea. Cunningham was the only son of Jas. T. Cunningham, who in 1811 came to this country in company with his father and his brothers, Cyrus and Artemus, from Plainfield, Mass., and purchased a tract of land on the East side of Madison. (This purchase was made from Gov. Strong of Mass.) Mr. Jas. T. Cunningham then returned to his family residing in Hilton, N. Y., and commenced preparations for moving west. In the fall of 1813, he had all in readiness for the move west, including the teams. After doing a hard day's work, he was found the following day dead in his bed. The widowed mother and her son, Cushing age 12, with two younger sisters, left to take up their march for their wilderness home in Ohio. Cyrus Cunningham returned to Hamilton to lead them on to their wilderness farm. Young Cushing worked hard to clear the land, chopping the underbrush and burning it. Cushing soon united with the Congregational Church of which he remained a constant member up until his death. When he died, he went to meet his loved ones who had gone before, including a wife of his early manhood, an interesting child of 2 yrs., and an only son who drowned at the age of 10 yrs. He will be missed by his surviving wife, two daughters and two sisters.

"Camp Freeze to Death", Hampshire Co., Va, Feb. 9, 1862

If any our friends still cling to the idea that a soldier's life is not as hard as usually represented, the last vestige of that notion would have been rooted from their minds could they have been with the Upper Potomac Army during the past week while we have been lying out in the snow in the most severe winter weather without a tent to shelter us from the storms, and with only one thin blanket per man to keep us from freezing.

We had camped in a pine forest and made beds out of pine brush and made fires. We had hard bread and coffee for dinner and wrapped up in our one blanket with our feet towards the fire. Somewhat comfortable we were awakened at 9 p.m. by Col. Creighton shouting "Seventh Regiment, fall in line." Rolling our blankets up and slinging them over our shoulders were quickly in line and taking the road at a quick walk. As we trudged along the mountain side through the snow, we thought of the retreat from Moscow, of Valley Forge, and of all the accounts of winter campaigning we had ever read.

After an hour's march, we joined 3 other regiments and continued until 3 a.m. to the Little Cacapon River. Major Casement and the pioneers, set about making a temporary bridge. This took an hour, and the soldiers made fires from the fences along the road to keep from freezing. At last, the Seventh was across the river and again moved forward until day break. Fires were again built and shivering soldiers crowded around them. To add to our misery the dawn brought a chilling rain, that froze as it fell, coating our clothes with ice and forming icicles in our hair. All that miserable day, we stood by the road side in the snow and rain until 4 o'clock when scouts brought word that the rebels had left Romney and burned the two bridges over the Potomac. We marched back to the Little Cacapon and bivouacked upon its banks.

The next morning, the wagons arrived with coffee and hard bread, and after breakfast we marched 5 miles to this place. We stacked our arms and started to build shanties of pine brush. We do not know how long we will be here but are not anxious to move for fear of going from bad to worse. Our tents and stoves are at the railroad just 3 miles off and we cannot understand why they are not brought here.

Yours in hopes of better times, Volunteer

We have been having some nice spring weather since my last; bluebirds and robins have made their appearance. This afternoon it blew up real cool, and tonight it is frozen pretty hard. Last Sunday, I was sent to one of our outposts down the river, and found the roads almost impassable for a team loaded very heavy.

I think in three weeks from this time, the whole force will be across the river and form a junction with General Lander.

I would like to know what has got into the mail arrangements to make it so slow. Before I went home, I used to get a letter from Painesville through in 3 days, now it takes a week for them to come the same distance—it is provoking to say the least.

We have one thing in our regiment that I think there cannot many boast of—that is a bath house where any member of the regiment can enjoy a hot or cold bath for 20 cents. The house will accommodate 6 at a time and each have a separate apartment which contains a square trough 5 ½ long and 10" deep; they are lined with tin. The house stands close by a creek and they have two large boilers for heating the water. It was built by the members of the Regiment and cost them about $100. Today, 15th we have lots of snow—first rate sleighing. Messenger

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence: From the Seventh, Camp Paw Paw, Morgan Co., Va Sunday, Feb. 16, 1862

During our week's stay in the brush shanties at Phillips Cross Roads the weather for the whole time was very cold. Flurries of snow fell occasionally and the wind blew piercing and cold, howling dismally and causing the poor soldiers to shiver around their camp fires.

We had no cooking utensils, so every man made his own coffee in his cup and broiled his piece of salt port on a stick, and this with hard bread, constituted the bill of fare for breakfast, dinner and supper. A good portion of each day was spent cutting logs in the woods and carrying them to our huts for fuel for the great fires that were kept burring all night.

One day last week while yet in our frigid camp, we were much surprised to see the genial and well-remembered countenance our friend, Mr. J. H. Whiting, of Madison, who unexpectedly made his appearance among us on a visit to his two sons in our Company. He remained with us several days. Forward at last. The few preparations for the movement were speedily made: Blankets were rolled up, haversacks filled, cartridge boxes buckled on and in a very few minutes the five regiments were ready to move. In stocking his haversack for 3 days, the soldier first takes care that he has a good supply of hard bread, the staff of life to him. Then he puts in a piece of pork, boiled, if possible, if not raw, and two little bags of coffee and sugar. He fastens his tin tup to the outside of his haversack.

We marched, with a short rest for dinner, until sundown when we came to the welcomed sight of tents ahead, camps of the 1st and 2nd Brigades—a mile west of the village of Paw Paw. We did not stay but kept on until just after dark when a halt was ordered. We were to build fires and eat grub and were to be there for some time. We did not like the prospect of spending the night on the snow and the Sergeant proposed that we should hunt a barn. We set out for a cluster of buildings and found the farm house already occupied by officers; in the rear we found a log cabin with corn stalks on the floor. Some Germans from Co. I had already taken possession but there was still room and we settled down for the night.

When we woke in the morning, we found that we would be staying there for a while and that our tents and baggage would be up before night. Our tents arrived and we pitched our camp on a hill and made ourselves comfortable by scraping the snow from the ground within the tents and putting down boards and hay to lie on. It was nice to be under shelter once more with blankets.

On Sunday night we got orders to march Monday night with 2 days cooked rations in haversacks, and 3 days rations in Company wagons; and we have been in readiness ever since. The storm last Monday was terrible. I was riding to one of our outposts when it suddenly grew dark, and the storm burst, forth accompanied by thunder and lightning. It rained only 15 mins. but the gale continued until midnight. Our telegraph operator was knocked senseless while adjusting his battery. He had his coat off and was bending over when the flash came, and all that saved him from instant death was having his elbow unwittingly in contact with the ground wire. It struck him on the hand and ran out the elbow, making two little holes in his arm and shirt. It was a miraculous escape.

I think the gale will blow out by midnight and then I think we will cross. The only means is a large flat boat. It will carry 125 men or 6 horses and a loaded wagon. There is a wire cable stretched across the river, attached to large poles on either side. To one of these poles is a windlass to tighten the wire or slacken it as occasion requires. Two little wheels run on the wire, having flanges on either side; from either end of the boat a rope is attached to the wheels and one end of the boat is a windlass, and on the upper side of the boat is a board to act as the center board of a schooner. Whichever way they want to go, they head that end of the boat up stream and the board and the current, which is swift, forces the boat along. It runs faster than you could row, and there is no labor to it.

Here we are in Dixie! We commenced river crossing yesterday at half past one and by four o'clock were all over. We had hard work as the wind was high and the boat could not carry a full load. We finally built a platform out into the river to prevent the boat grounding and thus we enabled to load heavier. We reached his place about 1 o'clock in the morning. Some dozen rebels had been here on furlough and left about one hour before we got here; two came and gave themselves up. I walked around this morning to look at ruins of locomotives belonging to the B. & O. R. R. Co. I counted 35 that were ruined. There were 58 but they have taken some away. The railroad buildings are mostly destroyed. The branch tracks are all torn up and the main track in some places is gone. When we came into town, the band stuck up Yankee Doodle, the Star-Spangled Banner and the Red, White and Blue; we soon had an audience and much cheering I have not heard for some time. Messenger

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence – From the Second Ohio Cavalry; Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 28, 1862

Co. G., of the 2nd Ohio Cavalry, has moved several times since my last communication to the Telegraph. We remained at Platte City until the 7th when we, the boys of Lake and Geauga, were ordered to march to Smithville some 18 miles distant. Soon we were proceeding on an icy road with our smooth shod horses. Various mishaps happened as we went along. Here some gallant steed finding it impossible to keep his feet, fell to mother earth, while his rider took "the measure of an unmade grave." For several miles, we led our horses over the icy way. About 3 p.m. we came to Smithville, and finding good quarters, we soon dismounted and tended to the comfort of our inner man. We subsisted by practicing the confiscation principle. When we found a Secesh, whom we knew to be such, we proceeded to his mansion and took what we wished—corn, hay, turkeys, chickens, and sheep, and had we the means of cooking we could have lived on the fat of the land. We were obliged to cook our meat in borrowed pan and hire the fowls roasted by some Union people who lived nearby. We had no bread to eat with the meat; so many being without money, were obliged to take "Hobson's choice," and eat meat or nothing.

Our journey back to Platte City was much easier than our march out where we were ordered on to the premises of a sound Union man. Here we found several of the men whom we had left slightly indisposed, reduced to a bed of sickness. A few words in regard to our hospital and medical facility which graces, or rather, disgraces this regiment. The hospital where the sick were conveyed was a large vacant room, the sick rolled up in their scanty blankets lying upon the rough clumsy couches which lined the room. All diseases were mingled; the dead and dying were lying near each other; the air was foul. Most of the sickness arises from severe colds contracted by exposure and want of proper care. Dr. Taylor refuses to prescribe for a cold and the consequence is the cold settles in the lungs and throat. The men linger for a short time, are conveyed to the hospital and there die. No one is blamed for it and the powers that be regard it as one of the necessary evils connected with an army on the march.

We left Platte City on the 18th inst and rode to Fort Leavenworth, where we pitched our tents and remained until the 22nd, when we started on the march for this city. While at the Fort a detail of 14 men from each Co. was made to form a Battery of Artillery. The men detailed from our company were:

Late on the night of Friday, the 28th ult., when the soldiers were wrapped in slumber, we were aroused by Adj. Molyneaux who, popping his head in at the tent door, shouted, “Sergeant Lockwood, have your cooks up at 3 o’clock to cook three days’ rations, and be ready to march at seven.”

We did not leave camp until 5 o’clock Sat. afternoon. Tents, knapsacks, and baggage were, as on our last marches, left behind, each man carrying besides his arms, 40 rounds of ammunition, three days’ rations, and his blankets. We here, on the Upper Potomac, regard Winchester, as the soldiers in the camps around Washington, do Manassas—as our future battleground. It has been from the beginning of the war, the rebel stronghold in Northern Virginia.

To road was hard and the marching quite comfortable—the only trouble being the necessity of wading numerous small streams, which wet the feet of all who had not good boots.

We continued marching through the darkness. After descending the mountain, at 9 p.m. we reached the bank of the Great Cacapon River. A bridge for passage of Infantry had been made of army wagons, 13 of which were placed end to end close together, reaching from bank to bank. Plank was laid on the boxes making a safe bridge across which troops could pass in double file. This novel bridge was planned by Gen. Lander himself; he having constructed many similar ones during his exploration for a wagon road to the Pacific. After crossing, we kept on for half an hour, then stacked arms and halted for the night. We expected to go forward in the morning but were still in camp at noon; in the afternoon a snow storm came on. Not wishing to spend another night without shelter, we went to work putting up brush shanties, which we had just finished, when we were ordered to fall in line. We were ordered to “countermarch” which meant back to camp. We made it back to our old camp just before dark and there learned the sad news of the death of Gen. Lander, who died on Sun., March 2, after an illness of less than 24 hours.

We left Paw Paw when it was nearly dark and crowded on dirty freight trains. The cars were low and we could not stand and there were too many of us to lie down, so we sat up all night with our legs under us, packed in like negroes on a slave ship. An hour before dawn, we stopped at Sleepy Creek. At noon we moved forward to Cherry River where we were delayed 2 hours. We marched up a hill, stacked arms and proceeded to form a queer looking tent. Just before leaving Paw Paw our regiment was supplied with a very novel article lately invented called “Poncho tents.” These we pitched for the first time last night. Each tent is composed of 3 pieces of rubber cloth, which when separated may be made to serve the purposes of rubber blankets. When put together, two pieces form the sloping sides and one the back of the tent, which when pitched is 6’ long, 4’ high in the center and wide enough to accommodate 4 men. The front is open and a fire in front keeps the interior warm. These “Ponchos” are excellent things and it would be well if all troops could be supplied with them. They are to be used when tents cannot be had to save men from bivouacking in the open air. It rained several hours last night and we kept perfectly dry. To the kind care of our late commander, Gen. Lander, we are indebted for this important addition to our comfort.

We are about 10 miles from Martinsburg and expect to march there tomorrow. Volunteer

p. 1 col. 5 Army Correspondence – From the Mass. Thirteenth; Gum Spring, Va., March 28, '62 We left Winchester on Friday, the 21st at 4 p.m. in the midst of a severe rain storm. We marched to Berryville 11 miles, and bivouacked in a wood. It rained all night, so we did not sleep much. Next morning, we crossed the Shenandoah on a truss bridge and ascended the Blue Ridge Mountain half way and encamped at 3 o'clock. Sunday morning, we started again and reached Aldie at 4 p.m., 18 miles, where we encamped for the night. The road is macadamized but very hilly and the hills are long ones. On Monday, word came that Banks was fighting in Winchester, and to hold ourselves in readiness to march back at a moment's notice. We got the order to start back at 3 o'clock and arrived at our old camp on the Blue Ridge at 3 o'clock the next morning., laid down and slept till sunrise, got breakfast, fell in line and had to wait for them to fix the bridge as one span had given out. Got across at 4 p.m., and had to turn round and march back again, orders having come that we were needed, and to go on to Centreville. I got the Colonel to send me off to Winchester with the mail, and to get a return, as we had not had any mail since leaving that place. I started after sunset and arrived at Winchester at 10 p.m. The next morning, I went to the hospital to see if I could find anyone I knew. The Court House was filled with dead and wounded as was the Regimental hospital. There were a good many Ohio boys but none that I knew. The General Hospital was also filled with the wounded and I found a room marked 7th Reg. O. V. I, however, found none that I knew—but Charley Shepard was there nursing them. I told the boys I was sorry to see them in that condition; they said they did not care, they had paid them for Cross Lanes. That was their battle cry, "Remember Cross Lanes." Charly told me he was in the front rank and fired 23 rounds, not a bullet coming near him. So, you see what spirit was displayed. Next day, we started at daybreak and went five miles to a place called Middleburgh. The folks are hot secesh. At one house, they told us news from Winchester; that they killed 1200 of our men, captured 1400 and lost 300. I must close now. Messenger

From the Second Ohio Cavalry

Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, March 31, 1862

The troops in this District, formerly known as the Department of Kansas, consist of the 9th, 12th, and 13th Wisconsin Regiments, all the Kansas regiments, I think, numbering nine. Clark's Battalion of Cavalry, 1st Missouri Cavalry and the 2nd Ohio Cavalry. One hundred and fifty men were detached from the 2nd Ohio to form a Battery, now at this post, and commanded by Capt. Hollister and Lieuts. Speed, Hubbard, Hadley and Carter.

The 12 and 13th Wisconsin and the 1st Kansas Regiments are now at Lawrence Kansas, preparing to start for New Mexico. The 7th Kansas is now at Humboldt, Kansas, under command of Col. C. R. Jennison. Two Battalions of the 1st Missouri Cavalry are at present in Arkansas with Gen. Curtis and Siegel. The other Battalion of this Regiment is now at Kansas City, lying in wait for the celebrated desperado, Quantrell. The Battalion is commanded by Major Banzhoff; he is brave and fears not to meet the enemy hand to hand. The 2nd Ohio, 9th Wisconsin and Rabb's Battery are not at Fort Scott for the present.

A great portion of us (members of the 2nd Ohio Cav.) feel that we have been greatly misused by being brought into this section of the country, and kept constantly in camp without any chance to make ourselves known among those who dared to rebel against the Government.

p. 3 col. 4 Army Correspondence; From the Seventh; Strasburg, Va., Sunday, March 30, 1862 On Sat., the 22nd, about the middle of the afternoon, the startling boom of distant cannon announced to the camps of the Third Brigade that "something was in the wind." Soon came the expected orders to fall in line and with rapid strides we were splashing through the mud towards Winchester, four miles distant. It was dark before we arrived in the town where we learned from stragglers returning from the fight that a small force of rebels under Col. Ashby had gotten within a half mile of the village, planted Artillery and commenced shelling the camps of Gen. Wallace's Brigade. Our artillery got into position and drove the enemy back. Our brigade was marched into a field near the town and laid on the ground all night to be in readiness should the enemy again attack, but morning came without any alarm, and we were marched backed to camp and dismissed back to our tents with orders to fill our haversacks and be ready to march at any moment. We had not long to wait, for at 1 o'clock we heard artillery again and were again marched towards Winchester. We went straight through the town and out the Strasburg Road, passing the camp of a Connecticut regiment that told us we were too late for the fight, that it was over and the rebels were retreating.

We marched a couple more miles and halted on the slope of a hill to support a battery that was steadily firing on the enemy's position. From here we could see many miles and the battle going on.

Red flags on neighboring farmhouses showed where the hospital had been established to which the victims of the bloody work were to be brought.

Everything indicated that the combat had just begun. Shells were being fired overhead and we were moved to the right out of range. Then Col. Tyler came up and said he was ordered to take that battery with my Brigade. He did not need to ask us if we would do it for he knew we would. An artillery officer rode up and gave directions with regard to the movement. We moved silently and under cover in the woods. When passing through a field, we halted and every man threw off his blanket and haversack that he might have no unnecessary weight to encumber him in the fight. Suddenly the silence was broken by a volley from a body of rebel sharpshooters, who were posted in the woods. They fled after firing and our men double-quick rushed forward with terrific shouts and yells. Our progress was soon checked by an awful volley of grape, cannister and musketry. Instinctively, the men fell to the ground; but when the first volley was over, they rose and returned the fire. Soon all military order was lost, the commands of the officers were scarcely heard or heeded, and every man set to work fighting on his own responsibility. For more than an hour we kept up a constant fire, until our ammunition being nearly expended, we fell back into a ravine and our place in the front was taken by the 29th Ohio, which came gallantly up to our support, and opened afresh upon the rebel ranks. For half an hour longer the battle raged, when just at dark the enemy gave way at every point and made a hasty retreat.

Our gallant Major Casement was in the hottest fire, plainly exposed to the enemy's aim, and though his clothes were torn by bullets, he escaped without a scratch.

When the enemy gave way, we collected our scattered forces and pursued till darkness came on, when we returned to the battle field, stacked our arms, and laid by them. A party was detailed from each Company to search the fields and woods for the wounded, and another to go back and bring our blankets. It was a cold dark night and no fires were allowed lest they should discover our position to the enemy. Our company lost three men: Corporal Abram C. Griswold, and Privates Reuben Burnham and Lewis Carvin. Volunteer

Here we are within 8 miles of the rebel outposts, and rebels all around us. This is the place where the Black Horse Cavalry (Confederate) was recruited after the Bull Run Battle. You cannot tell them from the farmers but when they get a chance, they seem to spring from the ground armed and equipped as Cavalry. They have captured 200 since our forces have been here. They know the country and can hide and our boys have no chance at them.

We left Gum Creek, where my last was dated, on the 29th ult. and arrived at Centerville at noon, then on to Bull Run and encamped on the field where the battle of the 18th occurred. It was a miserable road. To make it available, the rebels had cut saplings about 18 feet long and laid them close together, throwing dirt from either side of the road on top.

On Sunday, I was sent to Washington with the mail and dispatches returning on Monday and overtaking the regiment at Manassas Junction. On the 2nd we came to this place, traveling on the O. & A. Road, as it was much better walking than the road, the distance of 12 miles, our teams not arriving until yesterday noon.

As you ride from Washington to Centerville, on coming in sight of the town, you find six forts all bearing on you from different directions, all connected by a line of rifle pits. Our forces to have stormed them would have had to march at least a half a mile exposed to the enemy's fire.

We suffer here from the want of pure water. I have drunk water that looked as if the hogs had been rolling in it and called it good. The creeks around here are outside the line. As for Springs, they are few and far between. There are a few wells, but they will not water a tithe of the force

p. 3 col. 2 Maj. Casement arrived here Sat. night. He left the 7th and the 29th Ohio Regiments at Edinburg, about 17 miles Southerly from Strasburg, on the Manassas Gap Railroad. The rebels under Jackson were between Mount Jackson and Edinburg, seven or eight miles distant from the latter place. He reports officers and men, who were not wounded in the fight at Winchester, are all in good spirits, and speaks in the highest terms of the bravery displayed by the Ohio boys in the battle. The Major has been quite unwell for some time past, but is improving rapidly since his arrival home, and will soon be all right again.

On Monday evening the Ladies Aid Rooms were crowded with ladies and gentlemen to see and hear Major Casement. He related many interesting incidents of the terrible fight near Winchester in which so many of our Ohio troops were killed and wounded. He complimented our correspondent, "Volunteer," by stating that his account of the battle was the most truthful and correct, as are all his letters, of any army correspondent.

He thanked the ladies for their kind remembrances of the soldiers, who fully appreciated their kindness and efforts to alleviate their sufferings.

The miserable little cow-bell tents which we inhabited while on the Heights and at "Camp In-you-go" on the city Fair Ground, have been exchanged for the more commodious Sibley tents, which admit of proper ventilation, and are provided with small sheet-iron stoves, so that comfort in some degrees is not absolutely out of the question. Over on a blanket, beyond the iron tripod which sustains the center pole, sit four non-commissioned youths representatives of the "Captain's Staff," who are playing euchre. Lest the old folks at home, who may pursue this sketch, might be affected with a spell of "holy horror" from the knowledge that their sons are thus engaged, I will not betray their real names. Dr. Taylor "old Dack" is a useful man in the company and always does his duty. He is a "full team" and worthy of a more elaborate notice. Dake is some 4 inches over 6' in height, and has not an ounce of spare flesh about him. His faded cap has shrunk up and threatens to evaporate and leave him bare-headed; his blouse is much too short for a man of his inches, it terminates midway between his shoulders and his hips, and if it keeps on shrinking, will make a neck tie one of these happy days. Dack wears a beard that would do no discredit to one of the "fiery Huns." Old Nitz

We are still at Warrenton Junction, 13 miles from here. Uncle Sam has established a post office here and I am glad of it as it saves considerable trouble. The R. R. is in very poor condition and takes longer to go to Washington by railroad than by horse. The forts here are in all forms and sizes. The rebel storehouses are here and they are all stocked. I shall never believe any more yarns about them starving, nor would anyone who could see the piles of provisions they destroyed on evacuating this place. They burnt some of the bridges before they got what cars they had loaded over them, so ended up burning everything.

The country from Alexandria to Warrenton Junction presents one grand scene of desolation. Houses, mills & c. destroyed by the torch of friend or foe. All the fences are gone as far as the eye can see as well as the woods.

The weather is hot and the stench is bad. There are about 1500 dead horses lying around Centerville; there were a large number here but they have been buried, still the odor is in the air. The road from here to Warrenton Junction is pretty well lined with dead horses, too; they remain unburied.

I suppose you have heard about the rebels taking up our men at Bull Run and manufacturing various articles from their bones. I heard of one man who had made a spur from the jawbone, and another had made a pair of drum sticks from the arm bones, while others had made rings and other articles. I got this from a man who lives close to the battlefield and has seen the articles. I would like to see all the grog shops in a blaze. These are the sources of crime. They follow our troops everywhere. Why it is allowed I cannot tell. I know there is stringent orders against its use in camp. Messenger

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence – From the Seventh; New Market, Shenandoah Co., Va., Tuesday, April 22nd, 1862

Since the battle at Winchester, we have pushed our lines more than 50 miles southward. We left Strasburg (where my last letter was dated) three weeks ago, and entered Woodstock about noon, driving Jackson's rear guard from the place; they in their retreat, burned two large railroad bridges, one over a hundred feet high. Woodstock is the county seat of Shenandoah Co. The county officers had decamped on the advance of our forces. We made no stop in Woodstock, but pushed on five miles further, driving the rebels across Stony Creek. They burned the bridge after them which checked our progress. The stream is impassable for infantry. We encamped in a pine forest a mile north of the village and there remained 2 weeks, the delay being necessary in order to bring up supplies of provisions, clothing & c. which had to be hauled by teams from Martinsburg.

While in camp, we had skirmishes every day with the rebels, who showed themselves nearly every day on the wooded heights south of Stony Creek. Occasionally, they would bring artillery out of the woods and throw a few shells over to us to let us know they were still on hand. Our batteries replying would limber up and fall back out of range. This kind of target shooting continued during the whole time of our stay near Edinburg. Only a small proportion of the enemy's shells burst and their artillery practice was inferior to ours.

The long-expected advance of Gen. Banks' corps took place last Wed. night. Our brigade was called out at two o'clock, and with our equipment, one blanket, 3 days rations, and 40 rounds of cartridges per man, moved southward to the pike. Col. Tyler being too ill to mount his horse, Col. Buckley, of the 29th Ohio, took command of the 3rd Brigade. There were at least 3 or 4 Brigades ahead of us and we were obliged to move slowly. It was 4 o'clock before we got across the creek and halted on the south bank until day break. The valley seemed to grow more lovely as we advanced, and as we ascended a hill that commanded an extensive view, we could not find words to express our admiration of the surpassing beauty of the scene before us.

At 9 o'clock we reached Mt. Jackson, eight miles from Edinburg, we halted till afternoon to build a temporary bridge for Infantry across a creek south of the town, in place of the fine structure burnt by the rebels. Mt. Jackson is but a small place but it was rendered of importance by being made the base of Jackson's operations. Here the rebels established their hospitals and depots of supplies and here they had their headquarters after their defeat at Winchester.

On leaving Mt. Jackson, our Brigade took the advance and a mile from the town crossed a river on a covered bridge that the rebels had been stopped in the act of burning. A mile south of the bridge was a wide stretch of bottom lands. There it was expected the rebels would make a stand. Moving forward amid skirmishes, we gained the height without opposition, and the enemy were in full retreat. We pursued the rebels as far as New Market, and bivouacked at dark Thursday night near the town. The march had been a hard one, the day being excessively hot, and the men encumbered with their heavy overcoats. It started raining two days after our arrival and has rained ever since—a cold rain chilling the marrow in one's bones. We have had a miserable time, not getting our tents until yesterday and then having to pitch them in mud and water so deep the it is impossible at present to stay in them. The shelters we made of our rubber blankets were flooded yesterday, and many of us have taken refuge in a large barn half a mile from camp, where we lie shivering in our wet clothes.

We are now in the Southern part of Shenandoah Co., 50 miles from Staunton, and about the same distance from Winchester. Johnson has established his outposts about 4 miles from our own. We expect to remain here a week until supplies can be brought up and preparations made for a further advance. The health of our men is generally good, our men having become so toughened by hard service, as to be able to endure almost any hardship or exposure. We hear of reports being circulated at home with regard to the absence of some of our men from the battle at Winchester. The truth is, that several of our best men were sick at the time of the fight. It was through no fault of theirs that they were not with their regiment, and it is not right that they, who have heretofore proved themselves to be true soldiers, should be disparaged on account of such unavoidable absence. New Market, near which place we were camped for some time is a town of about 500 inhabitants, situated in the extreme Southern part of Shenandoah Co. There is but one street in the place, the turnpike road-and the long rows of houses, so uniform in appearance, drawn up in two ranks, the two churches personating officers. The houses are nearly all two-story frames, of a dingy white color, without cornices, blinds, or any attempt at ornament whatever, and stand close to the narrow street, without dooryards, or fences to separate them from the highway.

Moving Camp – On Sunday last we struck tents and marched southward on the pike with baggage and camp equipage. Along the road we saw the usual results of the occupation of the country by armies; fences destroyed for firewood, fields of growing grain trampled down, dead horses lying in the fields, entrails of cattle that had been slaughtered by the troops, rubbish and debris marking the sites of former camps, frames of buildings the siding of which had been torn off by the soldiers to sleep on in muddy weather, and many other evidence of the ravage that accompanies the march of armies.

Sulphur Springs – We marched 4 miles beyond New Market and half a mile through wheat fields and pitched our tents on a grassy slope near a stream of water. There were also springs of soft Sulphur water close by and the spot was one of the best for a camp we had ever occupied. All around us was rich cultivated land of the valley and picturesque. A fine brick house near our camp was erected in 1795. The present owner is a Major of the rebel army and on the advance of our troops ordered his servants to turn the cattle into the wheat fields and destroy everything that could be of use to the Union forces. The cattle were soon converted into beef and issued as rations to feed Uncle Sam’s soldiers.

Our brigade struck tents at 10 o’clock and moved southward on the pike. The day was warm and with the wind being in our faces, we were covered with dust that came in thick clouds from the troops and wagon trains that were in front. Being in the rear, we were obliged to move slowly and by sundown had gone but 12 miles. We passed through Sparta and Mason Springs; just before dark we pitched our tents near Harrison’s Cave, which is 5 miles north of Harrisonburg, the county seat of Rockingham County.

The Cave – Today nearly everyone in the regiment explored the cave near the camp. Following a path, we ascended a hill and midway to its summit, we came to a hole in the ground that looked much like a large well. This we were told was the cave, and accordingly we lit our candles and commenced the descent. Going down perpendicularly some 10’, we turned into a horizontal passage so low that we were obliged to crawl upon our hands and knees. Following this a short distance, we came to another abrupt descent of about 6’ which brought us into a high and narrow gallery, along which we went several yards, and entered a large apartment about 10’ high, 50’ long and 40’ in width. Passing from this apartment, we entered others of larger size and much greater beauty. In many places the arched roof was supported by huge pillars, and the walls seemed hung with tapestry. There were long colonnades, grottoes and niches, halls, galleries and passages innumerable.

After spending an hour in the cavern, we ascended to the upper world and experienced a feeling of relief at coming in the daylight and fresh air. The extreme length of the cave is about a quarter mile. It was discovered about 20 yrs. ago by a dog chasing a fox. As both dog and fox disappeared, the hunters resolved to see what had become of them, and so enlarged the opening by blasting and discovered the cave.

General Shields’ entire division are now encamped near this place. The division of Gen. Williams is at Harrisonburg, with outposts several miles beyond. Volunteer

A Retrograde Movement – On Sunday night we were all startled by the news, so entirely unexpected, that “Stone Wall Jackson,” whom all supposed to be across the Blue Ridge at Gordonsville, was moving on us rapidly with a very large force, supposed to be nearly 30,000 men and had driven our pickets east of Harrisonburg. We were ordered to be in readiness to move at a moment's notice, but tattoo came without any further orders, so we turned in and slept as soundly as if we had been in our peaceful homes far from war's alarms. Those, who were awake during the night, could hear the continuous rumbling of heavy wagons over the road, indicating that the baggage wagons of the advanced division were being hastily sent to the rear, and that a retreat would take place on the following day. At daybreak, we were aroused and ordered to be ready to move at 6 o'clock. At the appointed time, our Brigade, under Col. Buckley, took the road and after marching a mile, halted for 2 hours, a brigade of Infantry and several Batteries passing us and wagons innumerable. There seemed to be no end to the wagons. They had been going all night and still there was a continuous string going by. At last, we got the order “forward,” and moved off in a cloud of dust, halting frequently to allow the wagons that made but slow progress to get ahead. About the middle of the afternoon, we halted within five miles of New Market.

We Make a Stand – We filed off to the right and after going a quarter of a mile through the green fields, stacked arms, unslung our heavy knapsacks and stretched ourselves on the grass to rest. There were two steep hills about a mile apart on opposite sides of the road that commanded the country for several miles. Artillery was immediately posted on these hills, and preparations made to resist an advance of the enemy. Our line of defense stretched across the valley between these two elevations and was held by the first and third brigades of Shields' Division. As regiment after regiment and battery after battery passed us going toward New Market, we felt quite lonesome at being left with so small a force to check the advance of the foe. Far away, we saw a cloud of dust that came nearer and nearer; it proved to be our own rear-guard cavalry. Night came on without any signs of the enemy, but it was reported that he was but six miles distant. Our tents and baggage having all be sent to the rear, we bivouacked Monday night, making sheds of fence rails to shelter us from the rain. Next morning, we learned the enemy only made a feint on our position and had advanced on a road that runs parallel to the one we are now on, thus designing to come in our rear—that a skirmish had taken place between General Sullivan’s brigade and that Gen. Williams’ division had crossed the ridge through Brock’s Gap to support Sullivan and resist the advance of the rebels. It is said that Jackson has been reinforced by eleven Alabama regiments.

Yesterday, we pitched our tents. Today the order is that every man, who is not able to make a march of seven consecutive days, shall report to the Surgeon’s immediately. The talk is that we are ordered to join McDowell at Fredericksburg or at some point south of that place, thence to march on Richmond. Volunteer

I think I was favored very much as this is the third Sunday I have had the privilege of being in this city and attending divine service. When I got back to the old camp last Monday, I found the Brigade had started for Fredericksburg. They telegraphed me but I did not get the message. I overtook the rear guard 3 miles out, as they had to wait the motions of the teams and all, they only marched 6 miles that day. We left the next morning at 6 o'clock and marched 17 miles by 2 o'clock. It was very hot and a number of men were sunstruck. Some of them will not get over the effects of that march if they live to be as old as Methusaleh. I do not think the General did right. If the men had halted for 2 hours at noon, we should have come in at 4 o'clock in good shape—but as it was, not over one-third of the Brigade came in together. Five got outside the rear guard and were captured. Three of our men are missing; they are reported on the rolls as absent without leave. Thus, if they are never heard from their names will bear the stigma of deserters—when it is probably the poor fellows are either prisoners or dead—as we are surrounded by this farmer soldiery and they are not very merciful at times. The wells all along the road at deserted houses are poisoned. So, you can judge what an honorable (?) enemy we have to deal with.

We are encamped at a place called Falmouth, which is opposite Fredericksburg on the Rappahannock. The country for the last 10 miles of our march was beautiful, but there is not much thrift shown by the farmers. Their houses and barns are as a general thing, shabby-looking. They do not seem to be doing much toward a spring crop. The place we are encamped on is owned by a Major Lacey of the rebel army. He is said to be very rich. He owned 150 slaves, and has a splendid house on the bank of the river fronting Falmouth. It is used now by Major Gen. McDowell for headquarters. Messenger

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence, From the Seventh, In Camp near Fredericksburg, Va., Friday, May 23, 1862. Preparations for Marching: We were encamped on Smith's Creek in Rockingham Co. for a week and spent most of the time in tiresome drills and inspections. We have orders to prepare for a 7 days' march. General's staff and all men not able to endure the journey were discharged or sent to the hospitals. Orders came to the effect that all tents should be given up except one for the officers of each company, and three for the field and staff of each regiment. Much indignation was manifested by the soldiers for losing their shelters from storm and sun. The officers protested against it; but the order was from Gen. Shields himself and applying to all forces under his command. The reason given was the difficulty procuring the necessary transportation for as large a quantity of baggage on the long march. First Day's March – At 7 o'clock Monday the 11th, the regiments left their camps and commenced the great march. The Seventh, with a section of Artillery, was the rear guard—a post of honor

when the enemy is in the rear, as he was on that occasion. It was a hot day and we had dust in our faces all day. We went up and down Massanutten Mountain. We crossed the Shenandoah on a long-covered bridge, and at dark bivouacked a mile beyond; having marched 15 miles.

The Second Day – Early in the morning we were on the move. Due to the proximity of a large force of the enemy, the rear guard was greatly strengthened and consisted of the whole Third Brigade with a battery of Parrott guns. We moved slowly down the Valley of the South Branch; delayed several hours by the long and heavy baggage train so at dark we had made but ten miles. Co D. was sent out on picket, no pleasant duty for tired men who need a good night's rest for the fatigues of the morrow's march.

The Third Day – We returned to the regiment in the morning; had not eaten our breakfast before the order to "fall in," and we commenced the march in a drizzling rain that continued all day. The mud on the road was the consistency of cream and over shoes in depth. After a miserable march of 16 miles, we arrived at Front Royal at 9 o'clock, where we halted for the night. The Fourth Day – We were again on the march by 7 o'clock, and by a gradual ascent, after 5 miles, reached the summit of the Blue Ridge. Rain fell in occasional showers during the day and the road was very muddy. We were delayed at one time for several hours by a party of the enemy who skirmished with our advance. We accomplished but ten miles by dark.

The Fifth Day – The rain has ceased at last with a prospect of fair weather, so we commenced our march on Friday in good spirits though the roads were as bad as ever. Seven miles brought us to Gaines' Cross Roads. A force of rebel cavalry, estimated at 800, showed itself on our arrival and a skirmish ensued in which two of our men in the 1st Virginia Cavalry were wounded. We went no farther that night.

The Sixth Day – We had a good macadamized road for our Saturday's march and moved rapidly, the only delay being in crossing the Rappahannock River, which had to be forded. The army crossed at two fords: The infantry and cavalry at one and the artillery and baggage (guarded by our regiment) at another. The water was breast deep and two hours were occupied in crossing. Just after sunset, after marching seventeen miles, we entered Warrenton, the county seat of Fauquier Co. The streets were crowded by citizens and slaves to see us pass. At dusk, we camped a mile east of the town, on the railroad leading to Warrenton Junction.

June 5, 1862

The Seventh Day – We were allowed a rest on Sunday and we needed it greatly, for exposure, long marches, and subsisting on insufficient rations, had nearly worn the men out.

The Eighth Day – We marched eastward at 9 o'clock Monday passing through level country. In the afternoon, we camped at Cotlett's Station, on the Orange and Alexandria R. R. 13 miles south of Manassas Junction.

The Ninth Day – We remained one day at Catlett's Station. There was encamped there a brigade of five regiments of infantry (Maine, New York, and Pennsylvania Volunteers) and a regiment of regular cavalry. These troops were nicely uniformed and had a clean and handsome camp, and seemed greatly astonished at the appearance of us rough, ragged, sunburnt, and fierce looking Western soldiers.

The Tenth Day – We were ordered to march at 6 o'clock Wed. but it took so long to get the baggage train on the road that was nine before we started and then were obliged to move very slowly. The country along the route was the poorest we ever saw. The land was absolutely worthless and would scarcely raise weeds. We marched until ten o'clock at night, being forced to travel this late to find a stream of water to camp by. We marched 16 miles this day.

The Eleventh and Last Day's March – On Friday after a march of 15 miles we entered Falmouth, Stafford Co., the present headquarters of Gen. McDowell and camped on a hill overlooking the city of Fredericksburg which lies on the opposite bank. And thus ended the great march of Gen. Shields' Division. We had traveled a distance of 120 miles, crossed two ranges of mountains and passed through six counties. Volunteer

June 19, 1862

On April 16th, Co's. A and G, under the command of Capt. C. C. Smith, left Fort Scott, and marched in the direction of Nevada, Mo. In the afternoon, we crossed the dangerous ford of the Big Dry Wood, where wagons were upset, men and horses were washed over the falls and a general impression was that a crisis had arrived. No one seriously hurt, however. The unfortunate ones dried their clothes around the camp fires in the woods near the scene of the disaster where we encamped for the night. The next day, after marching for 8 hours through a drenching torrent of rain, mingled with hail and fording another deep and dangerous stream, we reached the deserted village which is the capital of Vernon Co., Nevada City. Here we encamped for the night and slept as well as we could in our wet blankets.

At daybreak, Lieut. Lockwood started with 20 men of Co. G. to break up a nest of "Jayhawkers" in the vicinity of Monte Vello, a village about 18 miles from Nevada. At midnight, Corporal Bruce, Traver and Storrs returned through the rain with several prisoners and reported that the Lieutenant and three of his party had been fired at by 15 or 20 men, whom they afterwards chased into the timber where it was evident that the Jayhawkers were gathered in considerable force. As night was setting in, and a heavy rain falling, it was decided to fall back and await reinforcements.

At daylight, the remainder of our company and a detachment from Co. A proceeded to join the Lieutenant and pushed on to Monte Vello. We entered the town but the Secesh had absconded. On the way back to camp, Co. A. was sent to affect the surprise and capture of a gang of scoundrels 8 or 10 miles above, while Co. G. returned to camp.

In the evening, we got wind of the whereabouts of one Capt. Ball, who ranks as a Lieut.-Col. in the secesh army and a few more notorious characters who were in league with the Jayhawkers. We determined on their capture and accompanied by Lieut. Weyrich, of the State Militia and a scout, we left at tattoo the same evening and rode all night. The night was dark and the guides led us over trackless prairies from house to house. The next day, we returned to camp with our prisoners and horses, having traveled 80 miles without sleeping, and I might almost say, without eating.

We continued to make forays into the country daily and nightly while we remained in Nevada.

At length, we were ordered to join Maj. Purington's command at Lamar, 30 or 40 miles below Nevada, and on arriving there moved on by a rapid forced march to surprise a body of rebels who were reported to be secreted in a large tract of timber known as "Diamond Grove." It was an exciting march through a glorious and romantic, though nearly deserted country, and was replete with thrilling incidents, which I have not time to relate. When we reached the Grove, we found that the birds had flown. We descended upon the establishment of John Hallsell, who was a noted secessionist, and lived on his extensive plantation in the Grove. We took several hundred bushels of apples, his potatoes, chickens and hams. Among the pillaged property was a keg of powder, a bag of coffee and another of salt. That night, we bivouacked, as usual, in the open air, having marched without tents, and the following morning marched by squadrons in different directions, taking prisoners, and capturing droves of horses and cattle. We reassembled at night, and encamped in the woods on Center-Creek, a few miles from Carthage. Old Nitz

You may be surprised to find us now camped near the western base of the Blue Ridge, after last hearing from us way down on the Rappahannock at Fredericksburg. But war is much like a game of chess, in which our moves necessarily depend upon those of our adversary.

The Troops of Gen. McDowell -Gen. McDowell's command composes four Divisions, about 40,000 men, mostly New York and Pennsylvania volunteers, but several regiments from New England, New Jersey and the Western States. There was a great contrast between these troops and the soldiers of Shields' Division. The former were clad in handsome dress uniforms with shoes well-polished and looked as neat and handsome as if they had just prepared for some holiday parade; while our men, prevented by their hard and constantly active service, from paying much attention to their personal appearance, looked very rough, with sunburnt, unshaven faces, ragged blouses, and worn-out shoes—and covered with dust from head to foot. As we marched by the eastern troops came out of their tents and looked at us with great surprise. They had never dreamed that Uncle Sam's army had contained any such hard-looking characters. They gave us the name of "Paddy Shields' Rough," and our boys in return called them "band box soldiers" and "silk stocking chaps."

From Fredericksburg, to Catlett's Station – We were camped near Fredericksburg but two days, on one of which we were reviewed by the President and Sec. Stanton. On the 25th ult., we received marching orders, and much to our surprise, took the same road we had come in on, passing along the river bank, where picturesque groups of Zouaves were lying in the shade and through the narrow-crooked streets of the old village of Falmouth. We marched past worn out tobacco plantations fenced, where they were fenced at all, by a queer contrivance formed by driving stout stakes into the ground at intervals of two or three feet, and interlacing between them small cedar and pine saplings much in the manner in which willow baskets are made.

We did not halt until an hour after dark and passed a very comfortless night on the ground, without blankets, they being in the wagons which were fast in the mud miles back in the woods.

We reached Catlett's Station the next day at dark and there learned that Jackson had driven Gen. Banks from the Valley, and that we would probably return there for another campaign against our enemy.

From Catlett's Station to Manassas – We were again on the march Tuesday morning, our route being northward to Manassas Junction. There were many burying grounds along the road; in one of which we counted 65 graves of men who had belonged to the 10th Alabama Regiment who had died in the months of Sept. and Oct. last.

We crossed Occoquan Creek in the afternoon and at sunset arrived at famed Manassas. We made no halt but turned westward and marched four miles along the Manassas Gap Railroad before camping for the night.

From Manassas to White Plains – We left early Wed. and marched west along a road running parallel to the Manassas Gap Railroad. About noon we passed through Thoroughfare Gap, a deep and narrow gorge in the high range of hills that separates the level country of eastern Virginia from the hilly section along the base of the Blue Ridge, known as the Piedmont region. Passing through White Plains, a small village, we camped after dark, having marched 17 miles.

From White Plains to Rectortown – The next morning (Thursday), we marched 6 miles to Rectortown and there made every arrangement for a permanent camp. The whole four Brigades of Shields' Division were there. We hoped to have a day or two of rest but just at dark we were ordered to move.

Night March Towards the Mountains – There is nothing more fatiguing than night marching, especially if is very dark and the road be rough, which was the case that night. We stumbled along, uphill and down, over rocks and stones, splashing through creeks and mudholes until daybreak, when we halted and slept two hours in a wheat field by the roadside.

Through Manassas Gap to Front Royal – Resuming our march Friday morning, we entered Manassas Gap, which is not, as many suppose a narrow pass, but an elevated valley running through the mountains, of some six or eight miles in length and of an average breadth of half a mile. In one of the villages, we saw the mansion of the famous rebel partizan, Col. Ashby. Descending from the Gap into the Valley of the Shenandoah, we arrived late in the afternoon.

At Front Royal – Our Cavalry (one battalion of the 1st New Hampshire) who were in advance, made a brilliant dash upon the rebels in the town, routing them completely and capturing over a hundred prisoners besides retaking the prisoners the enemy had taken in the previous battle. Our loss was eight killed.

We were near Front Royal until Sunday afternoon, marching and countermarching, lying out in the rain without shelter, subsisting on nothing but hard bread and coffee. Gen. Ord's Division of Gen. McDowell's corps came up and with it, McDowell, himself, who took command of the forces.

From Front Royal to Luray – Our division started for Luray, 25 miles up the valley, on Sunday afternoon, arriving on Tuesday. The men were worn out by constant marching and exposure and to add to their discomfort, it rained almost incessantly.

We have now had a day's rest here at Luray, and expect to go forward tomorrow up the valley to attack Jackson in the rear.

p. 2 col. 3 Letter from Washington (Correspondence for the Telegraph) Washington, June 21, 1862

A week ago, this morning a train of cars reached this city from Front Royal, bringing several of the wounded officers of the Ohio 7th and 20th, and information that a train would arrive that night with several hundred wounded Ohio soldiers from the brave fight at Port Republic. In the evening, several of us Ohio men, received information from the railroad employees as led us to believe the train would not arrive until in the night, perhaps not until morning. So, we separated, with the agreement to meet early in the morning and proceed together to Alexandria in whose hospital we expected to find the men if the train should have arrived.

At the appointed hour Sunday morning, Dr. Norton S. Townsend, Hon. Ralph Lette and myself started per agreement. The Front Royal Railroad, after leaving Alexandria for Washington, crosses the Long Bridge and on its way to the Washington Depot runs along the entire length of Maryland Avenue. On our way to the Alexandria boats, we cross this Avenue. As we approached it Sunday morning, we met young Herbert Smalley, who had started out on a search for me, and gave us the appalling intelligence that the 325 wounded soldiers that we were seeking we still aboard the cars on the track in the middle of Maryland Ave. where they had been left the entire night, without one particle of care or attention, save what had been given in charity and pity by the neighbors!

We hurried to the spot and found 13 rough box cars crowded with more than 300 wounded, dead, and dying men. The men were as they came from the field, their clothes more or less torn from their bodies and exhibiting their ghastly wounds in all horror. Some wounds had been dressed, but the most were yet to receive the Surgeon's first attentions.

We found but a few men assisting but a score of noble women from the neighborhood were proffering every article and delicacy of food and drink that their houses offered and bandages and ice for the wounds. The cars were so high, these women could only reach them by passing articles at the open doors.

Upon our learning the condition and the neglect of these men, Mr. Leete immediately returned to the city to notify the Ohio residents, and soon a dozen Ohio men were on the ground. We soon carried the men from the hot and sultry cars to the shade of the Methodist and Episcopal Churches and their green and shady yards. Towards noon, the ambulances reached the ground and soon after the poor men were in comfortable Hospitals in the care of attentive Surgeons and Nurses. The neglect of these men thro' the night is now the subject of an inquiry by a Committee of Congress, at whose head is Senator Wade.

The Ohio Regiments are reported as having fought with great bravery at this terrific fight. The 29th went into battle with over 400 men. The next day, only 45 fell into line and but one officer of the entire Regiment was left. Capt. Burrige, who has gone home, though wounded severely in the head by a shell, as the Major of his Regiment tells me, fought with distinguished bravery. Capt. Wood, a gallant soldier, has also gone to his home at Warren, shot through the thigh.

The following Lake Co. men are here at hospital.

The 7th and 29th Regiments and now encamped near Alexandria, where they are to remain at present, until somewhat recovered from their recent severe marches and fights. Sergt. Tisdell called on me and reported all the Lake Co. men as all in good condition.

Several steamers have already arrived with the wounded from the terrible battles upon the Peninsula—and the streets are sad with the long line of ambulances. Our loss there for the last week amounting to 20,000—and very doubtful if anything has been gained. It is not for me to sit in judgment upon any man—but there has been guilty and damnable imbecility somewhere and the Loyal People of the country will demand change and reform. It is understood that large reinforcements have already reached James River—and we have hope that the disasters of the past week may yet be gloriously avenged.

During the thunderstorm last Monday, a very handsome barn, belonging to J. A. Babcock, in the west part of this village, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground.

p. 3 col. 3 Dr. Seymour's Visit to the Army and Hospitals in the Shenandoah Valley

I went to Bellair, thence to New Creek, visiting the hospital and from there to Cumberland, then to Martinsburg, which is about 20 miles west of Harper's Ferry. Here I found 104 of Gen. Fremont's wounded just arriving in ambulances to be forwarded to Wheeling. I assisted in dressing their wounds. I found 25 of them were Ohio boys, who expressed much gratitude in seeing an Ohio man, and one sent by the Governor to look after them. From this place, I went to Winchester. At the Academy Hospital, I found Charles Shepherd and the two lady nurses, who were captured with him by Jackson's men. From Winchester, I went to Front Royal, where I found our boys. I had but a short time with them. They arrived at 4 p.m. They were under march for Manassas at 5 next morning. It was my intention to return at once to the division of Gens. Fremont, Banks and Sigel, but Gen. Shields thought otherwise and ordered me to report to him in Manassas in 3 days.

On arriving at Manassas, and after visiting the Hospitals, proceeded to Alexandria and Washington, visiting the hospitals in both places. I then returned to Martinsburg, and went immediately to the headquarters of Gen. Fremont, who received me very kindly and thanking Gov. Tod for having sent an Agent to look after the sick and wounded. He said I would find many in a wretched condition—that in consequence of the forced marches and the necessity of leaving behind their baggage and everything that impeded their progress, they were ill provided for the necessaries of the sick—that he was using every means to remedy the evil—that in 3 days he should have erected field hospital tents with good accommodations for 1,000 men.

After visiting the various commands, I returned to Winchester. Here I visited the 3 regular hospitals, which are in Gen. Banks' Division. These are well conducted. The best were filled with Jackson's wounded. You ask why this is? When Jackson took Winchester, he put his wounded in the Seminary Hospital and when he was driven out by Gen. Fremont, his surgeons abandoned their post, leaving the poor mangled Rebels in this hospital. Of course, surgeons and nurses were sent to them by our commanders. Humanity forbade their removal which accounts for their having the best quarters.

I also found at Winchester 450 of Gen. Fremont's sick, 142 of whom were Ohio boys—in a wretched condition, destitute of everything to make them comfortable. Gen. Fremont told me of these men, who were inside rooms, warehouse store rooms & c. He said some 5 or 6 days before he had sent these men forward to the hospitals at Cumberland, and until the day before, supposed they were there. He learned, however, they had not left; they had received word from Cumberland not to come as they were full and could not receive them. As soon as this state of things was known to him, he dispatched persons with directions to take Mason's house and any other buildings suitable and to make all haste to render the poor soldiers comfortable.

I returned to Cumberland and visited the hospitals there; also, at Claysville and Wheeling. I visited in all 15 hospitals, and saw 565 sick Ohio soldiers—the great majority of whom are not seriously ill, but worn down by fatigue, and exposure and want of proper nourishment. I wish to make honorable mention of Representatives Riddle and Hutchins, and our former townsman, J. R. French, who are untiring in their attentions to our sick and wounded boys at Washington, visiting the hospitals daily.

p. 1 col. 3 General Shields – The nomination of General Shields, as Major General, was rejected by the Senate on Monday in executive session. The Herald says there was not a vote in his favor. The testimony adduced before the committee on the conduct of the war, in regard to the battle at Port Republic, showed in the estimation of the Senators, that General Shields was either insane or totally incompetent. It is said that many of the officers, medical and military, nearest to the person of Gen. Shields for some time past, have been ready to bear testimony to his insanity. This will probably deprive him of any command whatever.

Washington, Saturday, July 12, 1862

A few days since, with Seth Marshall, of your town it was my good fortune to visit the Third Brigade of Shield's Division, now encamped on one of the pleasant hills in the rear of Alexandria. Thanks to a kind Providence, the noble men of this "fighting Brigade," after more than a year's uninterrupted marching through the enemy's country, these men are at length permitted to repose upon their arms, within sight of the Capital, yet safe from the torch of the vandal rebels.

This Brigade is composed of the 5th 7th, 29th, and 66th Ohio Regiments, and a Battery of Artillery. At the hour of our visit, the Brigade was just forming to march to Gen. Tyler's Head Quarters, to listen to speeches from Hon. John Hutchins and others.

After the dismissal of the Brigade, we met the men at their tents. The men of the 7th and 29th, we found in good health and spirits. J. R. F.

p. 2 col. 3 The Surgeons of the army on James River are forbidden to permit soldiers to go home, except those who are wounded. The Army is rallying again for its sterner duties. The calling of Gen. Halleck to the chief command with the association of Gen. Burnside with McClellan, in command on the Peninsula, have greatly restored confidence in the early success of the Federal arms and a more hopeful feeling is rapidly being developed.

What is being done in the way of filling the 7th and the 19th? These gallant Regiments have brought great honor to your section of Ohio, and it would seem the people would be prompt to fill their shattered ranks. J.R.F.

From the Missouri Democrat, July 22, 1862 June 28th, Lieut. Griswold, of the 3rd Iowa Cavalry, with 20 men were attacked while guarding wagons of a foraging expedition. The Lieut. and two men were instantly killed, the former being pierced by seven balls.

Lieut. Alvin H. Griswold, was reared in Madison, Lake Co., where his father, H. N. Griswold, now resides. Some five or six years ago, he came to the south part of Iowa where he soon won the respect of the community and established himself in a lucrative business. At the outbreak of the rebellion, he sent his wife and infant child to his father for their protection, taking upon himself the stern realities of the camp and battle field as First Lieut. of the 3rd Iowa Cavalry, in Gen. Curtis' Division. He fell near Jacksonport, Arkansas, age 27, leaving besides a wife and parents a young brother and four sisters to lament his early death.

Gen. Tyler is to take command of a new Brigade, his old one having been joined to the command of Gen. Geary of Banks' Division, and two days since encamped near Culpepper Court House and now probably marching south.

Major Gen. Cassius M. Clay arrived in town yesterday in good health, and it is rumored he will immediately take an important command.

Very hot here the last 6 days, the mercury ranging at about 100 degrees.

Another bloody battle and the gallant Third Brigade in the thickest of it. The fight between Jackson and Banks, near Culpepper, a week ago have before this reached your reader. It was a short fight, only 2 hours, but fiercely contested on both sides. The post of danger and of honor given to the Ohio third, and all its regiments, the 5th, 7th, 29th, and 65th suffered severely. Col. Creighton, of the 7th, was shot in the left arm which passed through the shoulder into the body and his case may be considered critical.

Washington, Aug. 23, 1862

It was decided to combine the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Virginia and so Pope has had in hand the job of keeping the army at bay while McClennen could bring his men around from the James to the Rappahannock. The rebels, fully aware of the designs of our Government, and knowing well that while McClellan's Army was in transition was their opportunity—have during the entire week pressed their entire Army lately at Richmond upon Pope's line. One column has pressed upon our right flank near Gordonsville, and another strong and resolute has pressed the left flank at Fredericksburg, while along the center large bodies of troops have attempted to cross at fordable places. Burnside's and McCall's Divisions are on the left, Seigel has held the right, and Banks has kept the center unbroken.

Mrs. McAdams, of Fairport, arrived here Wed. morning, and as she bent over the low hospital bed where lay her wounded son and clasped that brave boy in her arms, every man of the 40 or 50 occupying that long ward turned his face to the scene—and through their tears came blessed glimpses of their own homes and mothers. Death of Corporal Picket, Camp Near Culpepper, Va., Aug. 16, 1862

Aug. 28, 1862

Letter from O. F. Gibbs to the father of Corp. Picket.

Friend Picket: It becomes my painful duty to inform you that your son, Burton, is dead. He died on the 14th. His death was caused by a wound received in the Battle of Cedar Mountain on the 9th. He was wounded in the leg and could, no doubt, have been saved if he could have been attended sooner. His wound had bled so much he was exhausted and gradually failed until he died. He exhibited undaunted bravery in both the battles of Cedar Mountain and Port Republic. A young man, by the name of Lindsley, took care of him and was with him when he died.

We were enlisted under the Governor's call for three months' men, and were immediately mustered into the 85th Reg. at Camp Chase; but as that Regiment was only designed to do guard duty within the state those who wished to go into general service were afterward transferred into the 87th Regiment. June 20th we left for the land of "Dixie." We were in Baltimore until July 4th and then were ordered to this place, where we have remained until now, anxiously waiting for something to turn up that would relieve us from the monotonous duties of ordinary camp life.

About three-fourths of all the dwelling houses around here are uninhabited; fences have nearly all disappeared to make fires for the soldiers and everything wears a gloomy and desolate appearance.

Although at quite a distance from any regularly organized rebel force, the signal lights of the guerrillas, seen during the night on the surrounding hills and mountains, remind us that we are in the enemy's country.

Large numbers of contrabands daily come within our lines and none, I am glad to say, are sent back. Two companies of Cavalry stationed here recently went out on a scouting expedition, when they were attacked by a superior force of guerrillas and the most of them taken prisoners. Ex-Governor Dennison was here one day last week, urging us to re-enlist for the war, as our present term is up on Sept. 10th. About two thirds of the Regiment signified their intention to re-enlist and we hourly expect orders to return to Ohio for the purpose of reorganization. W.W.C.

Washington, Sept. 6, 1862

I have been at work at all the Army Hospitals between here and Manassas, have passed through all the Divisions of our Army and spent one day and part of one night inside the enemy's line, assisting in bringing our wounded from the disastrous field of Saturday, beyond Bull Run.

Sept. 11, 1862

I wish simply to relate the fate of a young soldier from Willoughby. At a temporary hospital in Manassas, on Sunday morning, in a deluging rain, and the Rebel cavalry in sight on a neighboring hill, I found several hundred wounded and sick soldiers. Many were lying about in an open field with no protection but their blankets. As I was taking warm and invigorating drinks to these worst exposed men, I found among them quite a young soldier, apparently not more than 18, extremely sick with typhoid fever. I learned he was from Ohio and from Willoughby; his name was Ransom White. I at once took him to the shelter of a tent, provided him with a dry bed, secured the attendance of a physician, and an ambulance to take him to Washington. Yesterday, on examining the list of deaths in the Washington Hospital, I found the name of this young man. He barely survived his journey there. Brave young heart, he died far away from his native home, but among friends. J.R.F.

23rd Ohio in the Late Engagements

A member of the 23rd Ohio from a neighboring town, writing from the scene of the late engagement in Mayland, says that Lt. Col. R. B. Hayes was wounded on the first fire on Sunday and Major Comley thereupon took command of the regiment and made himself conspicuous for bravery, as did all the rest of the officers. Too much, he says cannot be said of the bravery of Capt. Warren and Lt. Jackson, who behaved liked veterans and escaped unharmed. He gives the list of casualties:

Jesse Hill, from Mentor, killed
Samuel Rupert, Mentor, wounded in the leg
Serg't. Geo. E. Tyler, Mentor, wounded in legs and an arm
T. J. Smith, from Madison, killed
Wm. Severance, from Willoughby, killed
Jerry Colby, from Willoughby, killed
Geo. C. Jones, Willoughby, wounded in arm
Marvin Strong, from Willoughby, wounded in head
James Cassady, Kirtland, wounded slightly
We omit the names of killed and wounded except in Lake Co. mentioned by the correspondent.

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence – from the 7th Ohio Regiment; Battlefield near Boonsboro, Md., Sept. 19, 1862

The greatest battle of the war was fought here yesterday and again have our brave ranks been thinned. The 7th, with the 5th and 66th Ohio, were again in the heaviest of the fight. The musketry commenced on the right wing, where Banks' corps were posted, about an hour before daylight; and about half an hour after daylight we marched to the front, where we kept up a steady fire with little cessation till after noon, driving the "gray backs" before us at every point. After 6 or 7 hours, of as hard fighting as this war can boast, being short of ammunition, we fell back a short distance to obtain a fresh supply, and the enemy, not being inclined to follow, the musketry ceased for the time—though the cannonading was kept up fiercely till after dark. The most determined and stubborn bravery was exhibited on both sides, but where numbers are anywhere near equal, our boys are bound to whip! We did it repeatedly during the day, often driving double our number before us, and at such times our tremendous cheers fairly drowned the noise of the firing.

During a lull in the fight, Col. Tinsdale, who was in command of our Brigade, and who was afterward mortally wounded rode up and taking off his hat, cried out, "Boys, you have fought nobly and by the Great God who looks down upon us, you shall have your reward! What the Ohio and Pennsylvania boys can't do, nobody can!" He was answered by deafening cheer, and in a few moments, we were again in the terrible carnage. Our Regiment was under the command of Major Crane, who cannot be too highly praised for his coolness and bravery during the fight. Our regiments went into the fight with about 100 men, of whom 5 were killed and thirty-five wounded, beside several missing. Ephraim Miller, of Madison, is pretty severely wounded, the ball passing through his arm and into his body. Sergt. McKay commanding Co. A, was wounded in the head during the latter part of the fight. Our forces now hold the battlefield. The enemy, I understand, are burying their dead under a flag of truce. Gen. McClellan rode along our lines a short time ago, and was greeted with almost deafening cheers. Every soldier in the army has the utmost confidence in "Little Mac."

p. 2 col. 3 Letter from Washington
Washington, October 11, 1862

Oct. 16, 1862

The readers of the Telegraph may not have all heard the story of Maj. Key, of Gen. Hallock's staff, lately relieved of his commission by Pres. Lincoln, and it is so explanatory of much that has been heretofore unintelligible, that I will repeat it.

A few days after the battle of Antietam, a brother officer asked Maj. Key, why in disregard of all military authorities, which universally assert the wisdom of pressing a broken and discomfited foe, Gen. McClellan neglected to follow the retreating foe from the bloody field. The Major replied that "would have resulted in the total destruction of the Rebel army and that is not in the program. With the Lincoln administration no compromise of this quarrel can be made that would save slavery—and so the war is to be kept along with indifferent results until the final settlement may fall into the hands of the new Administration." Such was the substance of the Major's remark; which was reported to Sec. Chase, who presented the affair to the attention of the Cabinet. The President summoned the two officers to an interview and the Major acknowledged the remark, entered upon an argument in its justification, and expressed great astonishment that he should be called to an account for uttering what he understood to be the well-settled and general sentiment of the leading officers of the Army. The President added to the fellow's astonishment by telling him that he was no longer an officer in the Federal service.

A day or two since, I met with those two noble young Generals of Ohio, Cox and Garfield, early in the field and bravest in many a fight. Gen. Cox has been promoted to Major General; Gen. Garfield has been severely sick, he is better, but far from his normal rotundity.

Twenty thousand sick and wounded soldiers are now in the hospitals of this city and immediate neighborhood. J.R.F.

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence, from the 8th Ohio Regiment; London Heights, Opposite Harper's Ferry, Oct. 8, 1862

When I wrote you last on the battlefield near Sharpsburg, where we were expecting a part in the fight, but were disappointed, the Secesh, taking advantage of the armistice granted them by Gen. McClellan, to get themselves over the Potomac, and, for the time, out of harm's way.

We remained in a piece of the woods in the rear of the battle ground until the second day after the fight, when late in the afternoon we took up our line of march to Sandy Hook. We passed through a little town of Rowersville near the middle of the night.

On the afternoon of the succeeding day, after a long and weary march, which was rendered harder by the tiresome ascent and descent of the Maryland Heights, we came in sight of the blue waters of the Potomac and halted for the night at the foot of the mountain. Next day, we marched and counter-marched, apparently for no purpose, and found ourselves back where we started from in the morning. The next day, we did better, marching through Sandy Hook, fording the Potomac at Harpers' Ferry and marching through the town.

We were obliged to wade, as the bridge was destroyed; the slippery rocks make rather precarious footing. Many capsized before reaching the other bank, and we commenced the ascent of London Heights with light hearts and heavy clothes, reaching the summit at 4 p.m. There being no soil whatever in the vicinity, we finally, after many efforts, stacked arms upon the rocks. To pitch our tents, we placed stone on the edges of them.

The main trouble was the absence of water, for which, we were forced to go to the foot of the mountain, a distance of over a mile and very steep.

Here we camped over a week, it being the first rest we had since our retreat from Culpepper, Va., on Aug. 19th, making in all 40 days march, during much of which time we had neither tents nor blankets and were at times quite hard up for "shingles and pork."

We are now in a pretty good camp, having moved from the top of the Heights, about half way down the slope toward Harper's Ferry. The 7th is now detached from the Brigade and acts as a guard for Gen. Geary, whose headquarters are near our camp.

Nothing more of interest here, that I think of now, except that there is a prospect of our drawing rations of "soft tack" soon.

p. 1 col. 5 The Slaughter of the Children – Mr. Catlin, who spent much of his time among the North American Indians, says that a village of 250 persons, after the chief and his wife had consulted well together over the answer to his question, how many children had died during the last ten years, or within their memory, they could recollect only three: One was drowned, one was killed by the kick of a horse; the third by the bite of a rattlesnake.

A chief of a tribe of 1500 made, at Mr. Catlin's request, like inquiry of the women of his people, and could hear of no deaths of children, except by accident with the memory of any one of them. When living among two thousand Mandans, Mr. Catlin was told that the death of a child under ten years old was exceedingly unusual, and this evidence was confirmed by the very small number of skulls of children to be found in the Indian burial grounds of North America.

The deaths in our chief center of civilization are two children under the age of ten for every three above that age, and this understates the truth. Yet all that has been done for the last 50 years has achieved only this improvement—that the mortality among our children is reduced 2 per cent.

Soon after I wrote you last, we changed our camp from London Heights to Pleasant Valley, a distance of about 3 miles. Here we are told we are to remain all winter. We were there one day and at 11 o'clock on the following night the long roll beat in camps and we were hustled into line, but were afterwards allowed to lie down till an hour before daybreak, when we struck tents, and leaving them on the ground, packed our knapsacks and marched off. Crossing the Shenandoah on the pontoon bridge, we turned to the left at Harper's Ferry, taking the road towards Charlestown which we left at Boliver and crossing the Heights in the direction of Martinsburg, struck the B&O Railroad about two miles out, where we were stationed on reserve picket for what purpose did not transpire. After remaining there for two days, with nothing to eat but parched corn, we marched on Bolivar Heights, where we were agreeably surprised to find our tents already pitched. Since then, nothing worthy of note has transpired. We are nearly drilled to death and have little to write. Herbert (Smalley)

Camp near Munfordville, Ky., Nov. 24, 1862

When I left Painesville, we had received very meagre accounts of the casualties of the 105th at the severe battle of Chaplin Hills, near Perryville. The battle was fought principally on Wed., Oct. 8th. On the Morning of Oct. 18th, ten days after, I arrived in Louisville, the Post Surgeon at Perryville, estimated the final loss of our army would reach 1,000 killed (and dying of wounds) and 2,000 wounded. There was no provision in the vicinity of the battlefield for hospital accommodations for anything like this number. Hospitals, some dozen or more, were already in operation in the school houses, many full. In all the hospitals I have visited (and they are many), I saw nothing of the humiliation of suffering. Every man seemed proud of his wounds. On Oct. 21st, I started for the battlefield. Bragg in his retreat had burned nearly all the bridges on the L.&N. R. R. and its branches to Bardstown and Lebanon, by the latter we must go to reach Perryville. I passed over the branch road on the first train, being detained 20 hrs. at one stream, because the bridge was not completed.

Well, Morgan had been in Boston 24 hours before our train reached it. I saw Fremont's Cavalry start out after him, and they appeared to me as if they didn't want to get him. Before we reached Lebanon, we traveled at night, and every time the whistle blew someone would remark "why does he want to blow that whistle so loud for?"

It's a miracle Morgan didn't get the train.

We reached Lebanon at one a.m. Thursday. No beds, nothing save execrable well water and strychnine. I slept on a newspaper with a saddle

From Lebanon we went to Perryville some 20 miles by pike. I found many waiting for transportation to the battlefield. Sick and wounded soldiers were coming in on the way to Louisville by cars. Trains of army surgeons were going and coming; men were dying. One soldier actually died in the station waiting for the train. He had come from Danville and with others was left during those cold days of Oct. 25th and 26th without food, medicine or attendance.

There was no place to eat or sleep. For the first time in my life, I suffered from want of bread and water, and tried the virtues of a hard board, thankful for a roof over me.

I reached the extreme left to the battlefield (4 miles from Perryville) Friday, Oct. 24th; stayed overnight at the house of a Mr. Williams. The next morning, we left for the battlefield—we traversed nearly the whole of it—some 4 miles in one direction. The battlefield was awful, filled with the graves of the dead and the stench of dead horses unburied. The field of the 105th faced the north. In the rear was Parson's Battery. The 105th saved the fortunes of that day by beating back a flanking regiment, while three other regiments were pouring the hail of lead in them.

I returned to Perryville in the evening, having found the objects of our search, the bodies of Moses Kerr and Eugene Brooks. It was two weeks after the battle and the 1,600 inhabitants of Perryville had fled. Every house, barn, and blacksmith shop was a hospital. There was a lack of medical sanitary stores and food. I joined the Regiment at Munfordville, Hart Co., Ky., on Oct. 30th. They had marched from Perryville to Danville in pursuit of Bragg, and returned to Lebanon Oct. 28th, and reached Munfordville on the 30th. The purpose was the guarding of the R. R. bridge over Green River at this point. Its safety now is important as Rosecrans' immense army are depending on it for daily beans and coffee on the Louisville and Nashville Road. The Cumberland has not risen enough for transportation by boats. The 28th we started a march to Glasgow, Barren Co., where we are now. Chaplin 105th, O.V.I.

descriptive of the recent reconnaissance to Winchester made by Gen. Geary's Division.

Bolivar Heights, Va., Dec. 7, 1862

On the evening of Dec. 1st, we had orders to be ready to march at 5 the next morning, with one day's rations in our haversacks and five in the wagons. At daylight we were off--Geary's Division with twelve pieces of artillery. The weather was fine and the roads in good condition. Our Brigade had the advance and the 7th the front. As soon as we passed our line of pickets, two companies were thrown out to the right and left as flankers, being relieved every six or seven miles.

We reached Perryville, a small town eighteen miles from Harper's Ferry. We had known that a considerable force of rebs had been camped here, but within a few days past, the infantry have moved back to Winchester. We advanced a mile and halted at the roadside. Col. Crighton and Maj. Crane went on in advance to the top of a small hill about three-fourths of a mile distant, when they saw a large body of rebel cavalry draw up in line. The rebels almost immediately charged upon our men, and then began to race toward Perryville; our men to "save their bacon" the rebs to take some prisoners. Our regiment was in advance of anything, but were not in any order having been deployed as skirmishers. We tried to get into line but there was considerable confusion, not from excitement or fear, but because there was no field officer present, and the senior captain, not aware of the fact, was, like all the other line officers, waiting for orders. However, the men got into line in a rough way and fell back a few yards into the woods. Soon as the blue coated Yankees went by us flying, with the greybacks close behind them, and as the rebs came in range, we gave them a volley, and the two pieces of artillery which we had in front fired a few charges of grape. They wheeled and left except for five, who were unhorsed and wounded. None of our men were injured.

It was now 5 p.m. and we had marched 21 miles, several of the way through fields and over fences, and we were glad to rest for the night. In the morning, we moved on cautiously and night found us four miles from Winchester; we made shelter of brush from trees. In the morning, we advanced cautiously until within a mile of Winchester, there still being no sign of the enemy. A flag of truce was sent in demanding the surrender of the town. It soon came back and we advanced in line of battle. We moved on to the works and took possession of them. Our brigade was all marched into one and closed in mass, when Gen. Geary planted the 7th Regiment colors. He made a speech telling us that he learned that 5,000 rebels had been in this place within the last 24 hours. They heard the booming of our cannon and fled from this place, which they might have held. They had possession of this place since August. He told us to make our coffee and then we will march five miles towards home tonight, and try to reach Harper's Ferry tomorrow night.

We marched the next day but it soon commenced snowing and blowing and at 4 p.m. we camped 10 miles from the Ferry. The night was very cold, but we made comfortable huts of brush and straw, or rather, unthreshed wheat, and the next day came into camp.

p. 2 col. 3 The Battle at Ferrisburgh—The Extent of our Disaster-Stupid Exaggerations (for the Cincinnati Gazette); Washington, Dec. 16th

It is well not to readily believe that all is lost because our army has suffered a reverse.

Some people are clamoring for Gen. McClellan to be restored to command! The case is bad enough, but it is unwise to exaggerate our disasters as our victories.

The facts:

We attempted to take rebel works, we made a vigorous and bloody attack on them, ill-judged it would seem, but stubbornly continued from an early hour till nightfall. We sacrificed 10,000 men; lost several of our bravest Generals, and withdrew from the hopeless task.

It was not a defeat for we held our ground; we were not routed as we retired in good order.

For the rest, no one who knew Burnside well, have ever supposed him a great general. His appointment as McClellan's successor was one of policy, not of judgment. Now, let him have a fair trial—not too long, but long enough to be fair. If he is not the man we want, we know we can rely on Hooker.

p. 2 col. 4 Gen. Hooker and his new Commanders of Division.

The new commander of the Army of the Potomac is so well known to the public that but a very few facts in his history need be repeated to refresh the memory of our readers. Joseph Hooker was born in Hadly, Mass., in 1826. He entered West Point in 1833, and graduated in 1837. He distinguished himself in the Mexican war, at the end of which he resigned and emigrated to California.

On the outbreak of the rebellion, he offered his services and was made Brigadier Gen. of Volunteers on April 17, 1861. After recovering from a wound from Antietam, he was made Commanding General of the Fifth Army Corps.
Nov. 14, 1862, he was placed in command of the Center Grand Division of Burnside's Army of Virginia. July 4. 1862, he was promoted to Maj.-
Gen. of Volunteers and on Sept. 20, 1862, was appointed Brigadier Gen. of the Regular Army in place of Gen. Mansfield, deceased.

The House has passed the bill authorizing the employment of negro soldiers and sailors by a vote of 17 to 14. The President can enroll, arm and equip a force of black into the land and naval service as may be deemed necessary, provided that the slaves of loyal citizens in States exempted by the Proclamation, shall not be employed except by the consent of the Governors of those States.

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence-From the 2nd Ohio Cavalry; Camp Chase, Jan. 18, 1862 Barracks Co. G, 2nd O.V. Cav.

The 2nd Ohio Cavalry has probably marched over more territory and endured as many hardships as any Regiment now in the U. S. Service. It left Camp Dennison one of the finest Regiments ever produced by a State—it returned a mere wreck. One-half of the men are resting in their cold, damp graves; others returned, but not as they went forth—sunken eyes and hollow cheeks with tottering steps. Probably, not more than one-half of the Regiment has retained its health. Co. G is now minus 30 men. When Col. Doubleday resigned, the Regiment became demoralized and disorganized. In the eleventh hour, Gov. Tod sent us our savior; Col. Kantz of the regular army. He brought “order out of chaos” and saved us from disgrace.

From the 105th Ohio – Murfreesboro, Jan. 25, 1863

On the 11th we left Nashville for this place, marching 25 miles, not even stopping to eat dinner. We passed a small town; there lay the remains of about 200 army wagons and the carcasses of horses killed in the skirmish at that place; the air in that vicinity is very offensive.

Quite a number of the 105th were taken prisoner on the 21st. They were out for forage. The men (128 in all) were riding in the wagons and about 6 miles from the city, they saw men in blue uniforms and they supposed them to be our outside pickets. When they came up with these men, they were fired upon before they had time to load their pieces. About 20 of the men escaped. The remainder are probably prisoners. The names in Co. D are:

Chubb, Lieut.
Jackson, Stewart
Grover, Alonzo
Gidding, Anson E.
Hall, Henry
Morse, Bliss
Teachout, Marshall
Sills, Joshua H.

Today is Washington's Birthday. Citizens of the North, your very letters to those in the ranks, instead of praying for the restoration of the Union, and in words of patriotism supporting them, now contain hopes for peace at whatever cost it may come. Let me tell you, the men think peace on any terms, except the defeat of the rebels, too dearly bought.

A few days since, some of the boys visited Thompson and today Thompson has visited us. The express this morning brought a large box for the boys; said box was filled with good things, and now the good things are filling the boys.

During the early part of the next month, the 2nd Ohio will leave for Tennessee. It will give a good account of itself there. Old Pokeepsie

Fire -The school building, known as the White School House, near the corner of St. Clair and Erie Streets, and occupied for three schools, was burned to the ground last Tuesday morning. There was no insurance on the school building. We do not know how the fire originated.

A Presentation to Dr. Fuller – Dr. S. E. Fuller, formerly of this village, and who for the past 8 months has been the surgeon of the Wolf Street Hospital, Alexandria, Va., was on the 11th instant presented a case of General Operating Instruments by the staff of the hospital and ladies and gentlemen of Washington City. The Dr. accepted them in an appropriate speech.

From the Army at Murfreesboro – We have been permitted to peruse a letter from Benj. King, son of Mr. G. W. King, who is now in the 1st Brigade at Murfreesboro, dated March 16, 1863. It contains no news of any movement of the army since that already published, but it breathes the same spirit of determination to crush out this infamous rebellion as is manifested in the letters and resolutions heretofore published from our brave soldiers in the field.

All the companies are now mounted on fine horses. Speaking of horses, allow me to describe "Old Nitz" celebrated steed, "Prince Albert." He was once a sorrel but he is now bald-headed all over the sides and breast, and his few remaining hairs are of a dirty, rusty color. To curry him, it is necessary to lean him up against a barn. Nitz leaned up against the steed once and pushed him over. A company order was at once issued prohibiting all men from resting against their horses for fear of a like result. While in the Indian Territory, I saw the lightning during a thunderstorm make three separate and distinct attempts to strike this antique animal. It hit him squarely on the quarters, twice in rapid succession and glanced off like balls from the Monitor. The third streak was coming full tilt, but then turned and went three miles in the opposite direction to strike a cow. The above is fact. Nitz says the steed is gaining. Old Pokeepsie

p. 3 col. 3 The Battel of Vaught's Hill – (Correspondence of the Telegraph); Capt. of 185th Reg. O.V.I., Near Murfreesboro, Tenn.; March 22, 1863

March 18th we (our Brigade) left camp on a four days' scout. We started about 7 o'clock in the morning, well provided with rations and in good fighting trim. The first day not much happened and we waded rivers and creeks with water 2-3 feet deep. When we came to a stream, we would pull off our boots, wade across and then dress up and go on again to the next, and so on. In this manner we crossed 3 streams and marched 12 miles; at night we lay on the ground and slept warm enough with only one blanket over us, the weather being quite warm. Coming near a village called Statesville, one Regiment was sent over the hills to get on the road ahead of some rebels (about 300) we saw, while one Co., of the 105th was to the right of the town, under Capt. Crowell, and I was sent to the left of the town with Co. D—both of us to flank the place and act as skirmishers; while the balance of the Brigade waited in the road in the rear of the town. But the Regiment sent ahead was a little too slow and the Rebels got away with the exception of one man who was killed by our skirmishers. After going about 3 miles, skirmishers were sent out again and we got ahead of the rebels; we took 3 prisoners and having obtained information in regard to the force and position of the main body, we pushed on, over hills and across streams, in hopes to cut off some of the small forces ahead of us. And so, the day passed, we chasing and firing on them at every chance and by this way we got five or six volleys at them. Toward night we came in sight of their main force, that we estimated at about 8,000 cavalry and infantry; but we pretended not to notice them and acted as if we were going to camp for the night right where we were. But as soon as it was dark we started back on another road and went about 3 miles when we stopped for the night. It was about 9 o'clock when we got into camp, so we made coffee and got ready for something to refresh ourselves with, and then turned in as soon as possible, expecting to be attacked in the morning. I got no rest that night as I was on picket. I posted my pickets with instructions to shoot anybody that came in front of them. It was now 11 o'clock; we were quite tired, but knowing our responsibility of trust we renerved ourselves for it and what might come. Morning came at last and no attack yet; so, by daybreak the brigade was in motion again. About 8 o'clock we passed through the village of Milton and at 9, we halted in the road to rest and then we could see the rebels coming after us pell mell. Our Artillery opened on them. Our shells went right among them. In a few minutes, they were thick on our flanks. At this instant their skirmishers commenced firing on ours. We returned fire and the battle commenced. The 123rd Illinois was ordered to the left and the 80th Illinois to the right. As soon as the 80th got in position, a body of rebel cavalry came charging down the hill on them. At this moment the 105th Ohio was ordered up to their support; we reached them just in time. The enemy got within 15 rods when the order was given to fire and we did fire with a will, too; and they seemed somewhat surprised at such a warm reception. They left the field leaving their dead and wounded behind.

In the meantime, heavy fighting was going on to our left. The 101st Indiana had been sent up to support the 123rd Illinois and they were being driven back. The 80th was ordered up as support. They now attempted to flank us on the right. Five companies of the 105th were deployed as skirmishers, under command of Capt. Wilcox and myself, while the balance of the regiment was sent to the left.

The battle was now raging with all its fury. We saw we were engaged with a force at least four times our number and we must fight or be captured; but rebels can't stand Yankee grit and at 12 o'clock they fell back. They fell back beyond the range of our rifles and the fire of small arms ceased; but soon the artillery commenced again. They opened on us with shell and cannister from five guns about one-third of a mile from us. We were frequently covered with dirt from exploding shells; but the rebels finally hauled off the field, leaving us with their dead and wounded after a battle of five hours. We had been engaged fighting Morgan's Guerrillas, the terror of the country. His force was 12 regiments infantry and 2 pieces of artillery. The loss in our brigade was 5 killed and 25 wounded. Morgan's loss was 280 killed and wounded. The prisoners we took admit that this is the worst clearing out Morgan ever got, and I think he will not want to meet us again.

All our boys are feeling first rate, and would just as soon have a fight again tomorrow as not. I see a good many of our Painesville friends here.

Masquerade at Madison – Tuesday night last at Covell's Exchange in Madison was a pleasant party. Most excellent music was furnished by Pete Upson and the Entertainment by Covell was all that appetite or heart could wish.

successful magicians of the age, will open in Painesville in a few days.

We have another appeal for Hospital Stores from which we quote the following:

Prominent among the articles needed that can be sent to relieve the sick are cider, vinegar, kraut, apples, dried and fresh; oatmeal, barley, potatoes and onions. In addition to these we would ask for cabbages. Soldiers' Aid Society

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence – From the 2nd Ohio Cavalry; Camp Co. G., 2nd O.V.C.; near Winchester, Ky, April 13

Sunday, April 5th, the 2nd O.V.C. received orders to prepare to march at noon of that day; by midday we were on our way to Columbus. In Columbus we were paid, and continued on to the depot, where we carried our horses and the train moved on toward Cincinnati, where we arrived at an early hour in the morning. At Porkopolis we were marched to the market house where we received an excellent dinner.

Monday evening, we took the ferry to Covington and went into the barracks at that place, where we remained until the next evening, when we shipped on the steamers "Fulton" and "Boston,". After a pleasant trip by moonlight up the river, we arrived at the pretty little village of Maysville Wed. morning. The citizens received us with many tokens of good will, producing their best provisions and speaking words of cheer as we marched along. That evening we encamped at Lewisburg. The next morning, I was attached to the rear guard and passed over one of the finest sections of the country I ever saw. There was not a foot of level land in any direction, yet there was not an acre which could not be tilled.

Thursday night, we encamped at Sherbon Mills on the Licking River. So far, we had been well received. Slaves with water were posted along the roads giving us a drink, for which we were very thankful. Friday, these evidences of good will grew gradually less, and by night they had entirely disappeared. We encamped at Sharpsburg. Col. Kantz gave an order that all contrabands and escaped slaves should be turned outside the lines, and should not be harbored in any manner whatever.

The old 2nd joined the men transferred from the 8th on Saturday and found them a tough looking lot of men and war worn horses. They have been in service some months under command of Major Purington, and were stationed when we found them at Mount Sterling. We arrived at this village last evening. Our destination is unknown. Old Nitz's antique steed was left at Cincinnati. Old Pokepsie

I thought I would give you a short description of a soldier's life. Just 3 weeks ago yesterday, the order came very suddenly to pack up and be ready to march in an hour. We were to leave our winter quarters and there was a great deal to be left and but little to carry. The regiment marched 4 miles down to the river where a steamboat was waiting for us and in a few moments, we were going down the river at the rate of 10 miles per hour. We arrived at Charleston shortly after dark and were marched into town and quartered in the Methodist Church, where we remained two nights and then crossed the river and camped opposite the city. We were furnished with small wedge tents that could hold four or five men each, and are crowded at that. The wet weather has made us wish ourselves back to our old winter quarters.

During the battles of last week, the 7th and 29th have added new laurels to their old renown. The 29th suffered severely—but I have not been able to learn anything of the casualties of Co. F. I learned that the wounded generally of this regiment, were taken to the Hospitals at Acquia Creek, none of them have I found in the hospitals in Washington.

The casualties of Co. D. of the 7th as far as I can learn:

Killed

Whiting, Sergeant
Tower, Almon Private

Wounded

Shelby, John (his wounds are fatal)
Ferron, James O.
Cone, S. G.
Jenkins, Benj.

Brakeman, Gerry

Hunt, W.

After three weeks of deluging rain, today the sun again shines upon us. Our losses in the recent battles are about 7,000. The rebels acknowledge as loss of "from 18,000 to 20,000."

From the Lower Mississippi, we have news that Gen. Grant has fought and won a victory eight miles from Jackson, Mississippi. If Grant does not commit the common blunder of dividing his army and with a portion of it fighting the concentrated rebel force, the result of an open field fight will result in a Union victory.

Washington Head Quarters from U. S. Grant, Grand Gulf, 3rd, Memphis 7

We landed at Paulingsburg, April 30th moved immediately on Port Gibson, met the enemy 11,000 strong four miles south of Port Gibson at 2 a.m. on the 1st, and engaged him all day, entirely routing him with his loss of many killed and 500 prisoners, beside the wounded. Our loss is about 100 killed and 500 wounded. The enemy retreated towards Vicksburg.

We see in the Telegraph letters from the 7th, 23rd, 29th, 105th and 103rd O.V.I., but none from Kenny's Battery, now Southwick's. Some of your readers may want to hear from us. We are now at LaVergne with the 2nd Brig., 3rd Div., 14th Army Corps, guarding the pike and the railroad from depredations by the barbarians that infest this section.

This town of LaVergne was a beautiful place last summer when we were passing through it on our chase after Bragg. When our army was fighting at Murfreesboro, the rebel cavalry, some of them citizens of LaVergne, came here and burned a supply train of ours, and in retaliation, the Union troops burned the village. The name LaVergne, we are told is derived from the French, and signifies the cedars. In every direction scarcely anything can be seen but cedars.

Here at LaVergne Lieut. Franklin Viets resigned and went home to console the fair and wander fancy free. He has a great heart and brotherly sympathies. Harry D.

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence; Camp Co. G, 2nd O. V. C.; Somerset, Ky, May 8th, 1863

On the morning of April 30th, we marched from our camp, and after swimming our horses over the Cumberland River at the Spring Mills Ferry, we marched towards the interior. The next morning, we passed through the little town of Monticello, and a few miles beyond we came in sight of the main body of the rebels. The 2nd moved to the front but after firing a few rounds, the enemy broke and ran while about 300 of the regiment were charging upon them. The rebels were thrown into the wildest confusion and every man was striving to be the first out of sight. The boys followed them as fast as possible, rushing over rocks, fallen trees, fences and every kind of impediment at break-neck speed, for a distance of eight miles. Night put an end to the pursuit, and the command promptly encamped near Monticello. The rebel wounded were kindly cared for as our own; as one was shot down, the boys forgot their late enemy and only saw the suffering man before them. The dead bodies of 29 rebels were found upon the field, and about 100 wounded.

The next morning Maj. Purington's battalion marched within four miles of the Tennessee line. Everywhere there he heard the enemy was upon the retreat. They fear our arms. We are armed with the Burnside rifle, which is capable of throwing five shots a minute, and Colt's revolving carbines—five shooters, and Colt's navy revolvers and sabers. The rebel prisoners say they do not want to fight us again; we shoot all day without reloading. No man was hurt in the regiment and only 2 horses were shot.

The entire command returned to the Cumberland River and are re-crossing as rapidly as possible. The heavy rains have flooded the river, so that crossing is a slow and dangerous process. For three days, the command has been at work ferrying over. At 2 p.m. on the 6th a terrible accident happened at the ferry. The 17th Regiment New Jersey Volunteers were being ferried over when one of the flat boats, through some mismanagement, filled and sank. It had about 60 men, twice as many as it should have contained; of these 33 were drowned. They were nine months' men and their time would have expired on June 1st.

This comes to you from the Veteran Battery—the one you remember in the "by gone" as Kenny's. Let me remind you how dearly prized good, hopeful, kind letters are from friends at home. You cannot conceive their value to us, who have so little to cheer and comfort.

We had a glorious time, a quiet home-like time here in the camp of Battery C, yesterday. It may be gratifying to some or all of you to know that we respect the Sabbath, to some extent, in practice. The opportunities can only be enjoyed while in camp or garrison. We had built a pretty and commodious hall of cedar to eat in, and there we assembled for reading of a sermon, singing, and mutual good. The closing of service was the election of Haskell and Allan as Chaplains amateur for the next Sabbath. Harry D.

p. 1 col. 7 Army Correspondence – Camp Parole, Annapolis, Md. June 14, 1863 - As a small portion of the 29th O.V.I. are here, and some of your readers being more especially interested in the welfare of the same, I will attempt to inform you of our whereabouts, health, & c. I may give your readers an index to the confused sentiments that now and then occupy the minds of paroled prisoners and soldiers in the army. A soldier's life, let him be where he will, has its pleasure (comforts, very little), its hardships, its happiness and its reverses. We said a soldier's life had its pleasure, it has: It is all excitement—few men can live without excitement. We visit strange places, every nook and corner of the Southern land and its interests for the soldier explorer. If in a settled spot, he goes to work and makes himself useful, he fashions something extraordinary out of the ordinary, he improves upon everything—he becomes an inventor. For instance, from the root of the laurel wood, he fashions pipes of the most exquisite and curious pattern, he goes to bed early or late, just as suits him best and rises accordingly, that is if he is a parole prisoner, otherwise, he goes to bed at taps, and rises at reveille.

The health of the few boys of the 7th and 10th Regts., who are here, is excellent. We do not know when we will be exchanged, but hope it may be soon. Your valuable paper is a welcome visitor to the little log shanty of the parole boys of the 29th Ohio. C.F.W., Serg't. Co. F. 29th O.V.I.

The papers of last evening brought the proceedings of the Columbus Democratic Convention. The men denounce the nomination of Vallandigham, Pugh & Co. as an insult to the state of Ohio and to her soldiers in the field.

On the 10th a portion of the mounted troops of this Department marched upon Monticello. A crossing over the Cumberland River was affected the night previous and at an early hour on Wed. the command moved forward. It was composed of detachments from the following regiments: 2nd East Tennessee, Lieut. Dol. Adams; 7th Ohio Cavalry, Col. Garrard; Cos. A. and F. 45th Ohio, mounted infantry, Capt. Scott; 2nd Ohio Cavalry, Majors Purington and Seward; and two sections of mountain howitzers, Lieut. Lowe—the whole command under Col. Kantz, of the 2nd Ohio Cavalry.

The rapidity of our movements took the rebel General Pegram completely by surprise and we drove his force through Monticello and three miles down the Jamestown Road. Having accomplished our mission and fulfilled instructions, we commenced our return about 1 o'clock in the afternoon and met with but little molestation until we approached Capt. West's, eight miles this side of Monticello, when our rear guard was attacked. The rear was reinforced by the 2nd East Tenn. and the 45th Ohio. The fighting now commenced in earnest, and the firing of small arms was terrific. Col. Kantz now ordered up the whole of his command, and the rebels were slowly pressed back one mile, where they took position behind a strong stone wall and finally forced our boys to fall back about 50 yards. The rebels were now deploying along our flank under cover of the woods. The 2nd East Tenn. was dismounted, and with a shout dashed in among them. They left. It was now dark, and we fell back four miles and bivouacked for the night. Next morning we recrossed the Cumberland and returned to this camp. The rebels sent us a flag of truce to bury their dead and attend to their wounded. They reported a loss of 60. We captured a number of prisoners. Our loss, as far as known was 4 killed, 36 wounded and 6 missing. A number of the wounded have since died. The following is a statement of the losses of the 2nd Ohio Cavalry:

A few days ago, General Forrest getting tired of doing nothing and being seized with a rash fit of bravery, made and advanced on this plan: The movement was a bold one—he drew the pickets in and followed them closely, planting his artillery within a half mile of some of our infantry camps. It was about 10:00 in the forenoon, and we were all astonished by the rapid discharges of the artillery; the shells flew thick and fast, and our camps were moved double quick. Nobody was hurt though a number of trees were struck throughout the camp. It was decided we should evacuate, and Forrest soon got south of the Harpeth with his artillery, losing seven men killed and 22 wounded, while we lost two killed and several slightly wounded. We took 3 prisoners. General Forrest now commands the troops formerly under Van Dorn, together with his own brigade and is one of the most able Cavalry Generals in the South.

A rebel Lieutenant came into our lines Sunday morning; he brought much valuable information and was well posted about matters and things. The southern officers are very reserved to the men and keep all newspapers and general information from the soldiers, but make frequent speeches to them telling them tales of Northern barbarities and rebel victories.

Southwick's Battery is now here with the 2nd Brigade and the 3rd Division. I had slept with this brigade in the fall of '61. The battery was then commanded by Capt. Kenney. Captain Southwick, then a 2nd Lieut. is now in command. Eugene Osborn, then Orderly Sergeant, is now Major and Paymaster. Andrew Y. Austin of Willoughby, then a gunner, has since been 2nd Lieut. in the 23rd Ohio Infantry and fought at Antietam, and has again been promoted to the command of all the artillery in Scammon's Division in the Kanawha Valley. Tom King, of Madison is still in the battery and now has a commission and wears shoulder straps.

The weather is now getting very hot, the summer sun is now over us and we look for nothing but sweltering heat for the next two months and a half, though the nights are still cool. Felix

p. 2 col. 2 General H. E. Paine – It will be recollected that our former townsman, General Halbert E. Paine, brother of Capt. Geo. E. Paine, of this village, in the last desperate engagement at Port Hudson, while rallying his men was seriously wounded. He is now in New Orleans and his wife writes that he is very comfortable.

A correspondent of the Tribune says:

He lay upon the ground near the rebel breastworks for twelve hours. While lying there, his Asst. Adj. General offered to anyone who would carry him a drink of water $2,000. A brave fellow undertook the task and succeeded in cooling the parched lips of the hero chieftain, and doubtless saving his life, but death was his own reward. He was riddled with rebel bullets.

Two men attempted to get refreshment to him and died: E. P. Woods, private of Co. E. Eighth New Hampshire and John Williams, Co. D. 31st Massachusetts. Our loss on this occasion in Paines' command reaching nearly 700.

The old 68th has been eye witnesses of all the battles fought since Gen. Grant's army crossed the Mississippi River. The bombardment of Grand Gulf, the battle of Port Gibson, Raymond, Champion Hill, Big Black and the first eight days siege of Vicksburg. The first that we took an active part in was Raymond, fought principally by our Brigade—the 2nd Brigade of Logan's Division—supported by the 1st. Although we were under heavy fire of both artillery and musketry for about 3 hours, the loss of our Regiment in battle was light; none killed and but a few wounded. The next (at Jackson) we were in the reserve and the victory was so easily won that we got nothing to do except trying to out flank a train of cars that ran into the station after our forces had got possession.

We then turned our course to Vicksburg and were met by a heavy force of rebels at Champion Hill. Skirmishing commenced about 9 o'clock and our division formed in line of battle on the right of Gen. Hovey's and the battle commenced in earnest. We were ordered to fix bayonets and move to the front to relieve the 10th. The order was executed with a good will and in good order, and we soon found ourselves on what we considered an equal footing and face to face with the enemy, and where we could give shot for shot. Our division took 1600 prisoners and 11 pieces of artillery. Our men had to fall back on the left as they ran out of ammunition which gave the rebels a hole to get out at and they left us in possession of the field. Another fight took place the next morning at the Black River bridge, in which our men were victorious.

We then moved on to Vicksburg. I was detailed to go and help plant the siege guns and other batteries. We hauled them up within rifle shot of the rebel forts. The bullets whistled around us as though we had got into a bumble bees' nest, as well as heavy fire from their artillery. As soon as we got some guns in position, we put a stop to their wild career. We soon had their guns all dismantled or silenced and our sharpshooters advanced so close to their works that they dared not show their heads. The next day we were ordered to the front. We held our position for six days, and dug entrenchments and strong rifle pits. We were then relieved by other troops and ordered out to reconnoiter the country to find the whereabouts of old Joe Johnson, who was reported to be advancing on our rear. We found no enemy except about 1,000 cavalry, which we attacked and routed.

Vicksburg is doomed and we are confident it must fall sooner or later, but it is our generals' policy to take it with as little slaughter of our men as possible. While we were occupying the front lines, they sent out a flag of truce on business to General Grant. We ceased firing and they laid down their arms and came into the fort, and lots of them came over into our lines and our boys visited theirs. They met very friendly, shook hands together, traded pocket knives, canteens, and newspapers. The flag finally went back and the boys shook hands again and went back. The losses in our regiment in the recent battles are about 80 killed and wounded.

p. 1 col. 7 Army Correspondence – Southwick Battery; Triune Hills, Tenn., June '63

Since my last, the 2nd Brigade has moved out from among the cedars and graves of LaVergne. Travelling over 14 miles of uneven but pleasant country, we came to this our present place to plant Battery C. among the lofty maples.

Just after we came, a team went to Nashville after stores, and brought back 13 express boxes for the valiant lads of Battery C, sent by the kind friends at "home, sweet home." Imagine the lads of Chester, Kirtland, Willoughby, Painesville, Ashtabula, Saybrook, Geneva and Thompson, all solid sensible chaps and you have the rank and file of Southwick's Battery, ever ready to receive any of life's "goodies" from home. Our hard lot of long weary roads to travel—and the way is still made easy, the burden lifted, when thinking of the considerate love of those for whom we toil and fight. If there is anything that has kept the scurvy from our midst, it is cleanliness and the fruit sent from home in these boxes.

Last Saturday, the 2nd Brigade went after rebels toward Chappel Hill, past the residence of Gen. Stearns, of the Confederate Cavalry. Harry D.

To Keep Butter Cool Without a Cellar

Cover the bottom of a large jar with coarse salt. Put the butter in a bag, place it in the jar and cover it with coarse salt; place the jar in a north room and the salt will keep the butter nearly as cool, through the summer, as a common cellar.

As most of my Co. are from and near Painesville, I thought it best to drop you a line informing you and their friends what part we took in the last great struggle between Lee's forces and the Army of the Potomac. After skirmishing for one or two days, we met and began to concentrate on the 1st of July. We got to the battlefield the evening of the 1st. We found Division in close column, and slept on our arms on the left wing. At daylight, we were changed to the right wing as it was expected the enemy would attempt to turn either the right or left flanks, and if our right was turned, they could get to our rear. The army was divided into two great divisions: The right under the supervision of Maj. Gen. Slocum, while the left and center were commanded by Maj. Gen. Meade. Slocum knew the 12th Corps would protect the right, and in all honor to ourselves and the Army of the Potomac, we did do it. We fought Jackson's old command, under Ewell. The men met four distinct charges by divisions and brigades and repulsed them at every attempt.

The morning of the 3rd, at a quarter before six, we charged to the entrenchments and took them and held them till 8 a.m. when we were relieved by the 18th Penn. Vols., one of the regiments of our Brigade.

I had with me 26 armed men, who went into the night, and this morning finds me with but 17.

The names of the wounded:

McLean, S. Corp
Dowling, Thos. Private Frisbie, Lorin Private
Gray, Ellory T. Private
Hardy, Alpheus W. Private
Sanford, Asa E. Private Willson, O. E. Private

Alonzo Cole was detailed to carry away the wounded. They are at the 12 Corps hospital distant about 2 ½ miles to the rear.

We are still in the entrenchments. After a rest of 2 hours, we were ordered in again, it then being 10 a.m. of the 3rd. Let me add one more to the list of wounded, A. B. Paine, Q. Sergeant. We have not been engaged since about 11 last evening. It is reported that we have 15,000 prisoners and more coming in all the time. Capt. R. H. Baldwin

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Southwick's Battery, NR. Decherd, July 7th, 1863

Here we are stuck in the mud, hungry and tired, but not complaining. Why should we? The enemy has fled from before us ingloriously. On June 23rd, the army of the Cumberland made a break after the rebel host and have ably and vigorously driven it on and on. Buckner has just reinforced Bragg with a Division from Knoxville.

As we came into Tullahoma, unexpectedly and by deftly managed maneuverings of the 3rd Corp of the army, unlooked for by the foe, they were compelled to evacuate in such confusion, that much camp and garrison equipage and 3 siege guns fell into our hands. Friends and family of Southwick's Battery, we are all safe in camp, the enemy supposed to be many miles hence. We have not received a scratch unless it were from a briar bush. We are resting proudly on the honor given us and the rest of the 2nd Brigade, in having the advance and being the first to enter Tullahoma by the Manchester Road.

Tullahoma is a southern village surely; with so few buildings that in the North it would not have a name. For the last 13 days, the army is compelled to halt till the roads are passable.

On the 4th of July, one battery out of each Division of this army fired a national salute. Harry D.

p. 3 col. 2 Army Correspondence; Camp Co. G., 2nd O.V.C., Hickman's Bridge, Ky., July 12, 1863

For several days, all the force of this department has been on the trail of John Morgon, so none of us have had time to write home. But few of those engaged in the East Tennessee raid have had a day of unemployed time in six weeks. Even as I write, we have had orders to be ready to march, and in a few minutes "boots and saddles" may be sounded, then we must up and away.

On Sunday, June 14, detachments from various regiments, all mounted, with one section of Konkle's battery, numbering in all about 1500 men, under Colonel Saunders, left Mt. Vernon, Ky., to cross the rough and barren rocks of the Cumberland Mountains and enter the rebel districts of Tennessee. During the march in the direction of London, Capt. Barnitz was kicked upon the jaw by a horse, which broke it in three places. Few expected he would live, and it was passed along the line that he was killed. Many boys never knew his real worth until they did not have him with them. He has returned and is getting along "right smart" now, and we all hope he will return in a few days and resume command.

After the accident to Capt. Barnitz, Lieut. Millard assumed command of the Co. Monday evening found them near Williamsburg on the Cumberland River. The following morning, the mules were packed, the river crossed and the ascent of the mountain began.

Early Thursday, found them moving around the little town of Wartburg, Morgan Co., Tenn. Here they ate the breakfast of 107 rebels whom they surprised about 7 o'clock. A little firing ensued in which we had one man wounded, Warren Burgess, Co. C. 2nd O. C. and two horses shot. Marching continued, first toward Knoxville then toward London. Some delay occurred in crossing the Clinch River and it was dark when the 112th Illinois commenced to ford the swift current. Missing the ford, they got in deep water and were carried down stream; but little assistance could be rendered, and five were drowned. After a halt to feed the horses, the men were again in the saddle and on the move. It was reported a large enemy force was at London and it was deemed unwise to attempt to destroy the bridge at that place. Their course was now changed to Lenoirs. Two miles from that town, they came upon a rebel camp, from which the birds had flown, leaving two fine rifled cannon and equipment—which were destroyed. After some skirmishing, they entered the town about 8 o'clock, captured a number of prisoners and two new rifled cannons. The prisoners were paroled and cannons destroyed. A large amount of ammunition was in the depot and was burned with the building and a large supply of military stores. Then away they went to Knoxville. Saturday early all moved forward towards Knoxville, Col. G. in the advance. Scarcely had the heads of the advance appeared over the hill just out of the city, when they were greeted by the fire of 13 pieces of artillery, which the rebels had in position. Oliver Hosford of Co. G. was severely wounded and left at a house of a Union lady near Knoxville.

After an artillery duel of about an hour, Col. Saunders withdrew his men, destroying the railroad as far as Strawberry Plains. The bridge across flat Creek was burned during the march. At Strawberry Plains there was another artillery fight supported by infantry. Soon the rebels abandoned their guns and took to the brush. The cannon and camp equipage were destroyed together with a large amount of commissary stores. The splendid railroad bridge 1500 feet in length was burned; 100 prisoners were taken and paroled.

For seven days and nights the men had not slept except in their saddles. They were completely exhausted and many horses had given out and been left by the road. So, they threw themselves on the ground and slept. The harsh sound of "to horse," came long before morning. At daylight their hasty meal was over and the command in motion. At Mossy Creek the advance dropped in upon a rebel hotel keeper and partook of an excellent dinner, which he had prepared for his rebel friends. Another large bridge was destroyed at this place, and a large amount of clothing, sugar, corn, & c. were burned. At 2 o'clock the command turned towards the Cumberland Mountains and commenced their return to Kentucky. All along the way they were attacked by rebels in the mountain gaps. The boys became separated and the mountain was filled with cries for guides. Horses were lost and abandoned. Tuesday morning some reached the little town of Boston. They were over the mountain and safe. Men continued to come in mounted and dismounted, foot sore and tired. At noon Co. G. mustered 10 men; 200 were still in the mountains with Capt. Welch. Their path lost and beset by rebels, they were obliged to cut up their saddles and abandon their horses. Five men in one squad were attacked by rebels, three were killed, one wounded and a prisoner, and one escaped without hat or shoes to tell the story.

The main force at first moved to Lancaster, where they went into camp. Nearly a week had elapsed and many were still absent, stragglers came in daily, having walked over 100 miles. On July 3rd, Co. G. came in and expected a short rest. Vain supposition. Midnight of the 5th, we were ordered to march for Hickman's Bridge. All our camp equipment was abandoned and we do all our cooking in a quart cup and individual coffee pot. Old Pokeepsie

I write to you from camp on top of the Cumberland Mountains. We are camped at University Place, a great summer resort for the wealthy families of the South, and the site of the unfinished "Southern University" designed to eclipse all the schools in America—to admit only those from Southern aristocratic families.

The water for our camp is coming from a fine spring from a rock and is cool as ice water almost. This you would appreciate if you had been in the habit of using water from a flowing stream in this climate.

Our great victories are most cheering to us. As soon as Grant and Banks are ready, we expect to make a concerted rush upon the remaining rebels in this region. The hearts of the soldiers are strong for the work they do, but they need the sympathy and support of friends at home. I cannot bear the thought that the Copperheads should triumph in any portion of the North. Lieut. Cummings, of the 105th

Cleveland was visited with a terrific hurricane last Tuesday afternoon resulting in considerable damage. Quite a number of houses were unroofed, trees blown down, dwellings and fences demolished, and some damage to the shipping in the harbor. The telegraph flashed the news on Saturday of the burning and sacking of Lawrence, Kansas, by the brigand, Quantrell and his guerilla horde, and the cold-blooded murder of defenseless citizens. The massacre took place at midnight and the startled peaceful citizens were sent to their deaths by the bullets of murderers in the glare of their burning houses.

It is a repetition of the scenes that used to be enacted on our borders by the savage Indians. The bodies of the murdered people were thrown into wells and cisterns. The citizens fled into ravines and bushes, while the fiends stood on the banks and fired into them killing and wounding them by the scores.

Quantrel is now retreating towards Missouri burning everything on his route.

Burnside's Army of Central Kentucky is upon its dusty march towards East Tennessee. Before you get this letter, they will without doubt have attacked the rebels at one of the Gaps—Big Creek or the Cumberland.

We have halted here for a few moments to water and rest our horses. We have made severe marches and by tomorrow we will be at Big Creek Gap and the ball will have commenced.

On the morning of the 6th, one of the most terrific cannonading ever witnessed in this Department opened on Wagner, both from our land batteries and the Navy, which continued for 36 hours. This morning about 3 o'clock, a deserter came in from Wagner and informed our men that the enemy was evacuating Forts Wagner and Gregg, and were intending to blow up the magazines. A small reconnoitering party from the 39th Illinois Regiment was immediately thrown forward to ascertain the exact state of affairs. This regiment was the first to mount the parapets and take possession of this long-contested fort. Two other regiments immediately pushed forward and took possession of Fort Gregg, capturing a few rebels, who failed to make good their escape. The marines from the gunboats captured several boat loads on their way to Fort Moultrie. We now have possession of all of Morris Island, and as the rebels themselves acknowledge, the key to Charleston.

It was only when we entered Wagner that we fully realized the terrible effects of our shells upon the forts—dead bodies of men and horses and fragments of limbs, lying around in every direction. Our men are constantly discovering torpedoes, ingeniously fixed for our destruction. One man had his foot blown off and leg shattered by stepping on a torpedo.

The guns in Gregg and Wagner are now being turned on Fort Moultrie and the sand batteries on Sullivan's Island. The iron-clads went in this morning and opened a most terrific fire on these batteries, keeping it up for two hours. Our iron-clads revealing their position by the rapid flashes of their monster guns as they moved about from place to place.

We are having very pleasant weather. The troops are in good health and fine spirits, willing to work or fight, or do anything that will hasten the downfall of Charleston. H. A. P.

Company G., 2nd O.V.C.; Near Knoxville, Tenn.,
Sept. 14, 1863

Oct. 8, 1863

Many are the interesting events which have crowded themselves into the last few weeks of our military life. For today, I will give a short narrative of things as they are. At Williamsburg, Ky., on Aug. 22, the final preparations for the army's advance were made and the ascent of the mountains commenced. Through deep ravines, up rocky bluffs, and over rough unused roads, the men toiled and trudged—mountain torrents roared and thundered around. Supply wagons were stalled and upset, mule drivers were rushing to and fro, making the rocks resound with loud yells and fierce oaths. Cavalrymen were leading their horses up steep paths and along mountain slopes, while man and horse were pulling and toiling at the heavy guns and well-filled ammunition train of the artillery. Long lines of infantry came "gleaming on," while the hoarse braying of pack mules and the sullen bellowing of over eleven hundred head of beef cattle made a splendid base, and assisted much to mark our march a musical one. Days and nights were consolidated and viewed mountain scenery until the heart grew sick, the eyes dizzy and the body weary with toil and travel. A bunch of oak leaves and visionary views of a corn crib formed a day's food for our horses. We were and still are on half rations.

The 2nd of September, we entered the Tennessee Valley and were over the mountains and once more at Lanore. Leaping from our steeds, we made a raid upon a hayloft, but scarcely had we unbridled our horses when the booming of cannon informed us that the ball had commenced at Loudon. With a loud cheer, we were once more in the saddle and thundering down the road, and soon arrived at the scene of action four miles distant, but only in time to view the burning bridge over the Tennessee River, and thick cloud of dust which marked the route where the "greybacks" were running. Hobson's Division had occupied Knoxville, and the Cumberland Gap alone remained in the possession of the rebels.

Here in East Tennessee nearly as large a percentage of the people are as unconditionally Union as in Ohio.

Rapid marches were made from Loudon to Cumberland Gap, via Knoxville, and on the morning of the 9th we were at this famous pass. The 2nd O.V.C. was detailed to cut a road to the top of a mountain peak to the left of the Gap, where it was contemplated to plant a battery and just naturally drop a few shells down among them on the coming morrow. All day long, we toiled with the ax and the spade, and at night we lay in one of the mountain gorges ready to renew our exertions in the morning. About midnight, a dispatch was received that Cumberland Gap had surrendered with garrison, camp equipage, etc. Next morning, we marched through Baptist Gap into Kentucky, and returned by way of Cumberland Gap. We took 2,600 prisoners, 12 guns, 30,000 bushels of wheat and a large number of small arms. On the night of the 7th, Major Chambers, with detachments of the 2nd Tennessee and the 9th Michigan Cavalry ran past the pickets into the Gap and fired the garrison's grist mill. It was a brave act, and caused the immediate and unconditional surrender of the post.

We arrived at Knoxville last evening. We march at 5 tomorrow morning, and the supposition is we are off for a raid. We have had no news and no mail from home since we left Williamsburg. Old Pokeepsie

p. 2 col. 4 Washington Correspondence; Washington, Oct. 4, 1863

The brigade constituted of the 5th, 7th, 29th and 66th regiments of Ohio Infantry, has again been detached from the Army of the Potomac, and this time, undoubtedly, for the remainder of the war. They go now to join other Ohio troops and on other fields to advance still higher the gallant fame of the Ohio soldiery.

Oct. 8, 1863

The Government seems not at all discouraged with the recent partial repulse of Rosecrans, and before many days the Army of the Cumberland will be able to scatter the rebel hordes not gathered at its front and strike a decisive blow at the very vitals of the Rebellion.

Journal of the weather at Painesville for the month of Sept., 1863.

Oct. 15, 1863 Thursday

p. 2 col. 2 Letter from New Mexico – We are permitted to publish extracts of a letter from A. R. Manley, formerly of Menor, now of the 1st Regt. California Volunteers. The letter is dated Fort McRae, N. M., Aug. 18, 1863.

On the 16th at two p.m., a party of eight men (one of the number an agent for establishing a mail line between Fort Craig, N. M. and Franklin, Texas) hastily arrived at this post greatly excited from having been nearly captured by a large force of Apache Indians (estimated at 75 -150) who had taken from them 7 out of 11 mules, the U. S. mail, and other valuables that they of necessity had to throw away in a race of 30 miles over the desert in order that they might themselves escape unhurt.

Immediately upon their arrival, Captain Greene made a detail and with this and 17 men who volunteered to go, he determined to pursue the Indians. The stage with the mules attached and the agent for a guide, returned that evening and the forepart of the night to where the party had met the Indians. Capt. Green found that the Indians had decamped and taken to the mountains with everything of value except the mail, which was scattered on the desert, ordered a halt for the night. Next morning a portion of his details whose mules were not in condition to pursue the retreating Indians further, and those not mounted, returned with the agent to Fort McRae. The balance, 15 men in all and Capt.

Oct. 15, 1863

Greene and Lieut. Fountain continued the pursuit over 30 miles to a crossing of the Rio Grande where they overtook the objects of their pursuit. The Indians were at the water, washing, drinking and filling their canteens and vessels in preparation of continuing their march; and evidently unprepared for an attack. Our party gallantly attacked sending a volley of musket balls among them and rushing on with a tremendous yell. The Indians terrified, made no resistance whatever, but fled in every direction. They crossed the river in the vegetation from 6 – 10 feet high. Our men followed, dismounted and divided into two parties, deployed as skirmishers and advanced into the solid mass of vegetation. Your cousin, George, overtook an Indian and fired at him; the Indian returned fire and while George was in a stooping position was shot just above the right hip and ranging upward and lodged to the right of center in his breast. His comrades soon came up and finished off the Indians and carried George into the shade of a walnut tree. Two men were dispatched to the fort for the surgeon who arrived here between 7 and 8 in the evening.

I left the Fort in company with the Surgeon. When we reached the scene of the conflict (over 30 miles) at 3 a.m. yesterday. The men said George was sleeping and quite comfortable and it was not over 10 mins. since he had taken a drink of water. I sat and waited for him to wake up but he did not awake. We transported his body over 30 miles on a mule litter and buried it by the Fort.

p. 3 col. 4 A Stabbing Affray at Madison – about 7 p.m. on Oct. 3rd, two men, one by the name of Jacob Berringer and the other named, John Groll, both Germans, seeing a man by the name of W. L. Smith at the post Office in Madison, charged him with abusing Berringer's little girl. Mr. W. denied the charge, when Gross struck him and ran. Smith then charged Berringer with stabbing him, took off his coat, stepped forward and knocked him down. B. & S. then advance towards each other when Smith knocked the former down a second time, and stepped back. Berringer got up and struck Smith twice—one in the neck with some sharp instrument, supposed to be a knife, when Smith fell. He was taken into the store of Messrs. King and Drs. Plimpton, Smead and Holbrooke were called in. The wound was on the right side and about 3" deep, clipped off a part of the spinal column. Berringer and Gross were arrested. Failing to procure bail they were put in jail. Smith died from the effects of his wounds.

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Chattanooga, Sept. 19, 1863

Last evening, just as the sun was setting, the saddest sight of our war experience, and the most uncommon of all incidents pertaining to was presented to our view. A flag of truce had been sent in by the enemy to Rosecrans to bring away our wounded. Accordingly, the entire ambulance train went out, and after exchanging drivers with the rebels midway between the lines, went on the melancholy errand. During the time thus employed, there was a stop to all firing between the opposing pickets. Last evening, the train returned heavily laden with the maimed and miserable brave ones. Today another train goes out to finish the sad work. It is my unpleasant duty to tell you of the casualties to this battery.

Chester Belknap was wounded on Saturday, but we think not dangerously. He is now in the hospital and will be sent home soon as will all the wounded. They will be sent home on not less than 20 days furloughs.

On Sunday, we fought desperately and at an exceedingly uncomfortable short range. The 10th and 79th Indiana and Battery C stood to the work till right and left had broken, thus letting in two rebel columns to flank us completely and pour in a cross fire. In the midst of much danger, we took the guns away from the enemy's grasp. By some mishap we left one gun, one entire caisson and two rear parts of caissons in the possession of the rebels. Very many of our horses were shot. Lieut. Gary, at the time in command, deserves much credit for his coolness and masterly style of his management on both days of the fight. The same can be said of Lieuts. King, Turner and Stevens. Those of Southwick's Battery, who were there "to do or die," were heroes every man. Those who are missing and counted as dead, are Sergeant Wilkinson, Darius Gilbert, W. P. Harris, Daniel Horton. The wounded are Olinthus Haskill, S. M. Childs, C. Belknap, A. LeClare, LeRoy St. John, Jos. Chapman, Sherman Hendricks and F. T. Holcomb; H. Sneider and Chevalier, very slightly at present doing duty. Harry D.

The battle has terminated and we now hold Chattanooga to the dismay and mortification of the rebels. Our offices say that such fighting was never known on this continent. Since I wrote my last letter to you, affairs in this section of the country have been somewhat at a standstill as far as active movements are concerned. Forts Wagner and Gregg have been completely Yankee-ised (if the term is allowable), and show a decided improvement, as is always the case whenever the Yankee element is introduced. A new fort, called Fort Gillmore is in process of erection on the most prominent point of Morris Island.

The fleet remains quietly at anchor off the island, not having fired a shot, to my knowledge, since the 8th ult. H.A.P.

On election day the Army of the Potomac was in line of battle facing Lee's advance and several Ohio regiments lost their votes.

As to the armies, east and west, we have all manner of rumors here, as you see by the papers, but outside of the War Department, it is simply known that the armies of the West are consolidated under Grant and Rosecrans is relieved—why we know not.

The Army of the Potomac retreated before an advance of Lee to Manassas and Centreville, and then Lee in turn falls back—and our army again advances to the upper Rappahannock. Why this movement of Lee, and why Meade's neglect of accepting or offering battle is all left to wild conjecture. J.R.F.

Since the fight of the night of the 18th, the enemy has not disturbed us. Gen. Joe Hooker took many prisoners, among whom are four officers and 103 men. He also captured nearly 1,000 Enfield Rifles. His loss is 350 officers and men killed and wounded. G. U. Thomas, Major General

p. 2 col. 2 The news from Chattanooga is really cheering. Gen. Hooker's command at Brown's Ferry, on the Tennessee River, near Chattanooga, was attacked by the rebels at midnight on Thursday, and a severe fight ensued and continued until 4 a.m. The rebels were repulsed with every attack. The result of the engagement removes the rebel obstruction to steamboat navigation to Brown's Ferry.

Hard on Generals – The battle of Chickamauga has been fearfully destructive to General officers on both sides. Thirteen rebel Generals were killed or wounded. One of our Generals was killed. Since the battle, the rebel Generals Bragg, Polk, Forrest and Hindman have been removed from command for failure to do their duty in battle, and on our side Generals Rosecrans, McCook, Crittenden and Negley, are all under a cloud for the same reason.

p. 3 col. 4 Army Correspondence – Camp of the 105th Ohio Volunteers in Front of Chattanooga, Tenn, Oct. 17, 1863

As rest and quietude again pervade the camp of the 105th after a long and wearisome march from University Heights, and a severe and bloody engagement with the enemy yet glorious in its results.

On the 17th ult., our brigade (the 2nd, of the 4th division, 14th A.C.) were on picket duty, and as a military necessity, of course, we passed a sleepless night. In the morning, we were relieved by Johnson's division, of McCook's corps, and after returning to our camp at Crawfish Springs and receiving reinforcements for our haversacks, we were again "on the pad." It was apparent, the enemy's intention was to get between us and Chattanooga. Our onward march was not very rapid at first, as the road was blockaded by several divisions in our front, which often consumed much time. We made out to march about eight miles this night and it was also "not made for slumber." Very early in the morning, we could hear the roar of cannon, and each division as it completed its march went into the fight. The 2nd brigade was in support of Capt. Harris' battery; he was slightly wounded. Lieut. Chubb, of Co. D. was slightly wounded, as was Corporal Canfield, Corporal Teachout and Private Blakslee. We were repulsed and fell back about one mile and formed our line on a hill. Later in the evening, we were again ordered forward, and our whole line was again established the same as prior to the engagement. At about 8 o'clock in the morning, the rebels made the attack, and the engagement soon became general along our whole line. The 105th was ordered forward, bayonets fixed on a double quick and how so many boys escaped the deadly fire of the rebels is thought to be one of God's mysteries. In this charge, the 105th carried off the field a rebel General (Adams) and twenty-eight privates as prisoners. In this day's engagement Co. D. lost Private Vickers, wounded slightly and Private Belden. The latter was assisting in the hospital and that was captured by the enemy. F. C. Back Jr., Private Co. D., 105th O.V.I.

p. 4 col. 4 An economical method of preserving fruit without much sugar is described by the Scientific American.

First obtain a requisite number of common wide-necked bottles, then take the peaches or other fruit to be preserved, peel them, take out the stones or seed, slice them as for eating at the table. The bottles are now filled with this sliced fruit and about an ounce of white sugar is placed on the top in each. The bottles are then placed in a kettle containing water, and held vertical with a frame of slats, then submitted to boiling for about 20 minutes. Each is then lifted, and a cork at once driven into its neck. After this the corks are then covered with a composition of equal parts of hot resin and sealing wax to render the bottle air tight. Fruit thus put up will keep in a cool dry pantry for a year and retain all its original flavor. Peaches, apples, pears, cherries, blackberries, plums, grapes, etc. have been preserved by this simple system.

p. 1 col. 5 A Soldier's Opinion of Virginia – Herbert L. Smalley, well known to the Painesville readers of the Telegraph, a member of the 7th regiment in a communication to the Cleveland Herald writes:

We have left Virginia. Its desert fields, strewn with dead mules and watered by dry creeks have passed from our sight, heaven grant forever. After having tramped almost every road and by-path in the northern and western part of the State, I am of the opinion that it is a blot upon the fair surface of our land. East Virginia is a barren desert, and West Virginia is a "howling wilderness." The Virginian is lean, lank, and half-starved in appearance and looks like he is cheating the grave by living. The old women look like witches in Macbeth and the maidens—no pen can do them justice. Scarecrow put up in cornfields up North, to scare off crows, which for beauty would put these "maids of the mountains" to shame. Their smiles are grimaces, their flaxen hair is tow, their rich brown cheeks are brown with dirt, and their bare feet are as large as the hand of Providence. When asked how far it is to the next house, they answer, "right smart, I reckon." They smoke old blackened pipes and beg of the soldiers for a "chaw" of tobacco.

In West Virginia, the ground does not run horizontally, but is set up on edge, probably in order to enable the farmers to plant both sides of it. There is scarce level ground to pitch a shelter tent on. The inhabitants live in mud huts, eat "corn-dodgers" and cling to the bushes to keep from sliding down hill. They raise a very small number of potatoes and a very large number of children. They are also the bitterest secesh of any of the States.

We have no papers and no letters. In the meantime, camp rumors fly thick and fast.

During the month of September, we marched from Knoxville to Carter's Station, a portion of the army penetrated beyond Bristol into Virginia, over 100 miles up the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad, meeting with little impediment until they arrived at Carter's Station where the rebels were strongly fortified. After shelling them every day, they evacuated their position

Nov. 12, 1863

Burning the railroad bridge over the Watoga River and fell back upon Zollicoffer. A dispatch arrived during the following day containing accounts of Rosecrans' and Bragg's battle in Georgia, and all the troops except one brigade were at once hurried back towards Knoxville.

Col. Carter's brigade, of Gen. Shackleford's division, consisting of 2nd East Tennessee infantry, 7th Ohio cavalry, 9th Michigan cavalry, and 2nd Ohio cavalry, Phillips' and Crawford's Ohio batteries, were left with orders, if pressed, to fall back slowly. Now commenced a game of "hide and seek." The enemy endeavoring to flank us, and we constantly changing position to prevent his getting into our rear. Our horses were kept saddled. At night, the men lay on the ground without cover; their only blanket being under their saddles. About noon on the 5th day of the retreat, we arrived at Greenville, 35 miles from Carter's Station. Here the 2nd Ohio was ordered to remain as long as possible but not to give battle. This was the last of October. The next day our pickets were surrounded and routed and the regiment fell back five miles. At this time, a cold rain was falling and every man was chilled to the marrow. Midnight on the 3rd inst. we were once more on the march, the rebels again at our rear. We passed through Blue Springs and went in camp on Chucky River. At about noon, our picket were attacked, but the rebels found our retreating days were over. We advanced and the 7th Ohio cavalry coming up, we repulsed the enemy and drove him back through Blue Spring. That night, we returned to our camp on Chucky River and the 7th went to the front. For the first time in two weeks, we had an unbroken night's rest; for 5 days we had scarcely removed our saddles. Hiram Faber, of Co. C. was killed and a number wounded.

On the 6th, we made an advance toward Blue Spring, and skirmishing was kept up all day. "All quiet on the Chicky" was the order of the day from the 6th to the 11th, when a forward movement was once more made, and the "affair" at Blue Springs commenced. Troops had been arriving from Knoxville along with a portion of the 9th army corps from Kentucky; this gave us a force of some 25,000 men, commanded by General Burnside in person. Carter's Brigade, of Shackleford's division were the first to action and were the only troops engaged until late in the day. The 2nd East Tennessee and the 7th Ohio went to the front. The 2nd O.V.C. was supporting Philips' battery which together with Crawford's Tennessee battery were throwing shells into the sons of chivalry. The rebels were forced back three miles beyond Blue Springs. The sun was about an hour high when we saw the infantry, nearly a mile to our right, in line of battles, clashing over an open strip of land towards a dense wood, from which the rebels were pouring a deadly fire into them. "There goes the 9th Army corps on a charge!" burst from every lip and all eyes were turned toward them. Then a confused report of rifles, yells and screams, a loud cheer, and all was silent in that direction. The 17th Michigan had taken it by charge. The sun was down, columns of troops were returning, and save an occasional shot from the artillery the battle was over. That night we lay on the field and the rebels were hurrying on the road to Greenville.

Three miles beyond Raytown, we came up with the enemy, and for the next 8 miles a running fight ensued of the most exciting nature. Our Artillery was everywhere. One moment throwing shot and shell and the next, limbered up and rushing up the road with horses under whip and spur. The chase continued 17 miles from Greenville. The rebels marched under cover of darkness to Jonesboro and before light proceeded to Zollicoffer and Bristol.

The 13th we entered Jonesboro' and went into camp. Citizens reported that the rebels were rushing up the road in great disorder. On the 14th, we started for Blountsville, and the next morning met the enemy near that town, and after a hard day's work, fighting on foot, we entered before sundown and went in camp near that place. At an early hour, next morning we took up or line of march, passed through Bristol and entered the sacred soil of Virginia to the extent of about 5 miles. Same night, in the rain in a deep black atmosphere, we were ordered back to Bristol, where we took shelter under the large covered depot. In the morning, a general destruction of property commenced. As a grand "finis" to our advance on Bristol, a match was placed to sixty cars and three engines. The 18th, we were at Zollicoffer, tearing up the railroad and burning bridges. Yesterday, we returned to Jonesboro' and went into camp at this place.

The boys of Co. G. are enjoying fine health—and how can it be otherwise, when the loyal ladies of East Tennessee, will split their last biscuit with them, butter it, and then give them both halves. In every portion of the State, we find the largest proportion of the people to be unconditionally for the Union.

p. 3 col. 5 From the 7th Ohio – Bridgeport, Ala.

Nov. 2nd, 1863

During the few weeks past, the 7th Regiment has been very busy in "changing base." Always in the front, and engaged in every battle in Virginia (with the exception of those before Richmond), they are now transferred to the Army of the Cumberland, and placed in the extreme advance of this Army.

Gen. Geary marched from this place with the 2nd and 3rd Brigades, cross the Tennessee River at day break Oct. 26th. At first it was supposed that the 11th and 12th Corps were to form a junction with Major Gen. Sherman's command, which is now reported near Rome, Ga. This, however, is not the case, as the 11th Corps and the 2nd Division of the 12th marched direct to Look Out Mountain, where they were engaged on the 29th ult. The fight is reported to have been a very severe one in which our loss was heavy.

Owing to the recent rebel raid upon the Nashville & Chattanooga Railroad, the army is subsisting upon half rations. Workmen are now employed night and day in rebuilding the Railroad bridge over the Tennessee River at this place. The bridge is 2,000 feet long and 125 feet high.

If the enemy can be driven from their stronghold on Look Out Mountain direct communications can then be established with the main army.

The removal of Gen. Rosecrans caused dissatisfactions among the troops. Gen. Thomas, his successor, however, is a very popular officer and everything will go as smoothly as though their old commander was still with them.

Gen. Grant has established his headquarters at Chattanooga. His appointment as commander of the Western Department seems to satisfy all.

Our division is encamped two miles from the foot of Lookout Mountain, and are fortifying their position, which is the mouth of a mountain gap. Lookout is held by the rebs who continually shell our troops in the camp about its base. The mountain is directly between us and Chattanooga and communication is held with the forces there by means of a pontoon bridge which crosses the Tennessee River several miles below where the "Johnnies" are posted.

A portion of our division had a "set to" with a division of Longstreet's corps several days ago. The rebs came down from the mountain in the night, and took our boys by surprise, but were persuaded to go back after a short argument. A son of Gen. Geary, of our division, was killed, and Ben. Greene, of the 3rd Brigade was severely wounded in the face. Rations are rather scarce but there are plenty of acorns in the mountains.

The great victory at Chattanooga was at first telegraphed as but a reconnaissance in force, but swelled into a battle and a triumphant victory ending the rout of Bragg's grand army of the Southwest. Gen. Grant not only occupies the whole field around Chattanooga, but he also looks upon Atlanta, the grand rally point of the rebellion as within his grasp.

The latest news from Grant's army is to the 28th. No fighting took place on the front that day. Bragg is reported to be concentrating his army near Dalton, with the intention apparently of making a stand.

Dec. 10, 1863 Thursday

p. 2 col. 3 The Battle of Ringgold – We have at last the details of the engagement at Ringgold, where the 7th Ohio suffered so terribly and Col. Creighton and Lieut. Crane were killed.

A portion of the forces of Gen. Grant, consisting of the corps of Generals Hooker, Palmer and Sherman, started on Nov. 26th—the day after Bragg's defeat at Missionary Ridge, in pursuit of the retreating rebels. Nov. 27th, Bragg's rear guard was encountered at a gap in the White Oak Mountain, below Ringgold, Georgia, covering his retreat to Dalton. Gen. Geary's division made a vigorous assault on the gap and Canty's brigade suffered terribly.

From the N. Y. Herald – The Battle of Ringgold
Supposing the enemy to be in small force, Osterhaus' division pressed forward in line of battle with great gallantry. The enemy opened a musketry fire from the top of the ridge, and brought up four pieces of artillery, that swept the gap and threw their shells into the town and our lines. Our men stood their ground well, but at last had to slowly retire in consequence of the enemy's superior strength and position. The enemy, finding our men falling back, followed them up with great persistency and attempted to drive them across the railroad line by making a charge, but did not succeed.

In this emergency Geary's division, of the Twelfth corps, was ordered into action. Col. Geary ordered Col. Canby's brigade (commanded at the time by Col. Creighton) around on our left, to advance up the slope for the purpose of turning the enemy's right. The brigade got within 30 yards of the crest, the Seventh Ohio being in the extreme advance, when the enemy with a quick movement amassed a superior force against it and succeeded in deliver a cross fire, successfully enfilading their line. Gen. Geary seeing it was of no use for them to remain longer under such a heavy fire, they were withdrawn by his orders. In the advance, the Seventh Ohio lost all of its officers, the regiment coming out of the action under a Lieutenant.

The enemy continued to press our line, two sections of Knapp's Pennsylvania battery were got into position and opened a rapid fire on the right and left of the rebel line. At this time, the Second and Third brigades of Geary's division— Ireland's and Cobden's brigades—were ordered up. Our line then became extended in view of making a grand assault.

Slowly our men advanced and slowly the rebels retired toward the gap and up the mountain slope. After much effort, we outflanked the rebels on the right and left of the hills, gained these and drove the remaining rebels from the gap and held the latter position. The rebels retreated in the most disorderly manner.

Lieut. Cryne, of the Seventh Ohio, was killed instantly. Adjutant Baxter, of the same regiment, was severally wounded in five places.

Death in Gen. Garfield's Family – We are pained to announce the death of a beautiful little daughter of Gen. Garfield, at Hiram, on Dec. 1st. She was 3 yrs. old and the pet of the household.

p. 3 col. 4 Army Correspondence – Chattanooga, Nov. 26, 1863

When I last wrote you, we were to go on picket on Nov. 22nd. All was quiet the morning of the 23rd. We were regularly relieved, returned to camp, discharged and cleaned our rifles, turned over an extra amount of ammunition. Just as we were eating our dinner, we were ordered to fall in, with our haversacks on and with twenty rounds of cartridges. We soon marched out and took our position in line of battle in front of our forts. In our front, 2 or 1 ½ miles distant is Missionary Ridge, and between there and us was a long ridge, on which the rebs had built their first line of works. About one o'clock the bugle to advance sounded for skirmishers, and away we moved, the 41st, and 93rd O.V.I. as one regiment, under command of Col. Willey; Cos. B. and G. of the 41st were Co. C in consolidation and carried the colors.

So rapid was our advance that soon we had caught up with our skirmishers, and they were called in and out of our way. We advanced under a galling fire of musketry until less than 100 yards of their works, when we were halted to let the left of our line come up; but the fire, a heavy cross fire, was too much for us to bear, and we were ordered to take the works in our front. We were the first in the works. The rebs, what we did not kill or capture, ran for their next line—leaving the colors of the 19th Alabama in our possession. We soon had picks at work digging and trimming up their works so as to make them of use to us. We held them until the afternoon of the 25th. While here, we could see Hooker fighting on Lookout from noon of the 25th until late in the night.

But if our task was hard on the 23rd, what shall we call that which we performed on the 25th when we advanced over an open valley and up the steep sides of Missionary Ridge a distance of 1 ½ miles, under a heavy musketry fire, as well as the fire and cross fire, from thirty to forty pieces of heavy artillery; capturing nearly all our artillery and many, many prisoners. I thought I had been under heavy artillery fire at Shiloh and Stone River, but that was nothing compared with this. Missiles of all descriptions came pouring down on us—shot, shell, shrapnel, grape and cannister, with any amount of musket balls for chinking. At the line of works at the foot of the hill, we lay down to rest, under a heavy fire, being completely exhausted with double-quicking, but we only stopped to breathe for a moment before continuing the dash of climbing the hill. When about two thirds of the distance up the hill, and nearly safe from the range of the guns which were doing us the most damage, the rifle ball which had been waiting for me all day, struck me on the shin. I have taken the ball out; it is badly bruised, but I think the wound it has made is slight, and that I shall soon be able to travel again. Our men carried the hill in splendid style. Hazen's Brigade captured 19 pieces, mostly heavy artillery. Hooker captured 12 pieces at Lookout, and it is said the Army has captured in all sixty pieces. Hurrah for our side! I am in Co. quarters with six others of Co. B, who are wounded. We had rather remain here than go to hospital. I can hear artillery firing beyond the ridge, I presume, we are in pursuit of the remnant of Bragg's army. T. F. Hawley flying, ran between the lines and endeavored to hide among the men. However, the fright of the birds and rabbits was more touching. When the roar of the battle reached through the cedar thickets, flocks of little birds fluttered and circled above the field in a state of utter bewilderment, and scores of rabbits fled for protection to our men, lying down in our lines on the left, nestling under their coats and creeping under their legs in a state of utter distraction. They hopped over the field like toads and were as tamed by fright as household pets. Many officers witnessed it, remarking it as of the most curious spectacles ever seen upon a battlefield.

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Chattanooga, Tenn., Jan. 18, 1864

Our company numbered 101 men when we left Cleveland; now there are only 46 all told. Of these but twenty are with the Co. for duty; the rest are in hospitals or on detached duty. Fifty-five are gone. Some have died, others have been discharged, and a few have deserted.

Yesterday, we received two recruits—two little boys from Painesville—and this is why I write. I want to know where the men are? Are there any left or have they all gone? For shame, men of Lake Co., for shame! To allow children to come and fight your battles. This war is yours, not theirs. Think of it. Little boys, only 15 or 16 years old, who ought to be in the school room, and coming here, exposing their tender constitution to the rigors of camp life, and their strengthened minds to its depravity. This fighting is stern, hard work; it requires strong arms and nerved hearts to perform it successfully. We want men here—not children.

The railroad to this place was completed last week, and trains heavily laden with food for man and beast arrive daily. You may be sure this is a welcome sight to us, for we have been on very short allowance for a long time. This place will be the base of operations for the spring's campaign, and, of course, a great supply of rations will be accumulated. B.

p. 1 col. 5 The Rebels Branding Deserters – A German, just from Richmond, describes the manner in which deserters from the rebel army are “branded” at Castle Thunder, Richmond. The culprit is fastened to a large table with his face downward, and a large “D” is scarred upon his posteriors. A plain bar of iron an inch in diameter, narrowed a little at the point, is heated to incandescence and used as a sign painter uses a brush in lettering, only in a very slow and bungling manner. The hot iron is drawn many times through he wound, making it larger and deeper until the victim unable to endure the pain, faints and is carried away. The operation is always performed by old Keppard.

p. 2 col. 3 Telling Speech by Gen. Garfield - Gen. Garfield made a decided hit in an impromptu speech deliver in Congress on Jan. 25th, in answer to Mr. Finck, Democratic member for the 12th Ohio District. Mr. Finck said that we had no right to seize the private property of those in arms against us, nor have we the right to establish civil government in any of the rebel states.

Mr. Garfield could not agree. The Supreme Court had laid down as a rule, clearly and well defined, that when a great rebellion is in operation, the President and Congress may declare we are in a state of war. By the act of rebellion, they have placed themselves beyond the privileges of the constitution. If we want lasting peace, we must put down the guilty cause, which is slavery, and take away the platform on which slavery stands, namely the landed estates of the rebels of the South. It is not the commissioners, such as the gentleman from New York, Mr. Wood, had suggested; it is not by smiles, that peace was to be secured, but by the thunders of war. The rebellion must be met.

Natchez on the Mississippi, by a straight line is 150 miles from the Gulf and 950 from Painesville; situated on a table land 200 feet above the river. It is the Athens of the South and fell into our hands immediately on the fall of Vicksburg last July. The winter has been uncommonly severe, yet many of the trees wear their summer dress. Here live the owners of large plantations scattered for fifty miles along the river and many of their houses are really palaces. Within twenty miles of this town, there are hundreds of acres of cotton and corn yet unpicked on deserted plantations outside of our lines. Outside our lines, guerrillas thread the country and the musket is the law. The Government is establishing central homes all along the river; homes for the fugitives, who are coming every day. The superintendent of the home farm, receives the fugitives, gives them a cabin and a garden spot, drills the old men for a guard and carries on the farm with the able ones.

General Grant in Washington – General Grant arrived on the five o'clock train and went at once to his room at the hotel. His arrival was still, almost entirely unknown—when a few minutes later accompanied by his son, only, he quietly walked into the dining room of Willard's Hotel and took his seat for dinner. He had nearly half finished his dinner before some Western acquaintance happened to be asked, who that Major General was. The moment he glanced at him, he replied, "why that is Lieut. General Grant." Finally, Representative Moorehead, of Pittsburgh, who sat at the next table, rose and announced that the hero of Vicksburg was among them and proposed his health, when the whole assembly of guests sprang to their feet and united in half a dozen rousing cheers. Gen. Grant bowed in an embarrassed way, and took his seat again, and a rush, instantly began from all parts of the hall, and everybody pressed forward to be introduced to him. The General's dinner was very cold before he got an opportunity to give his attention to it.

He had been spending the winter in a visit with several relatives of the family residing near LaSalle. His uncle had risen early on Thursday morning and kindled the fires and it is supposed a spark, carried by the high wind prevailing at the time, was lodged in the shingles of the roof—for a few minutes after a shout was heard from Johnny's chamber, and as his two aunts ran in response, they found the roof in a complete blaze, and the flames spreading down the side of the room in which was the door. The little sufferer was lying insensible on the hot floor and was rescued. Upon bringing him to the fresh air and dashing water on him he revived and gave a clear statement of his terrible experience with the fire. The boy had slight burns on his feet, hands and face which were tended. He slept during the day and by 9 p.m. the little spirit was released from the body.

Milton McFarland, who enlisted as a private, and who has risen from the rank and been honorably promoted to the rank of Orderly Sergeant of the 21st Ohio Battery.

The soldiers of this Battery one and all say, God bless the Sanitary Commission which through its energetic, whole-souled and ever active agent, Dr. Seymour, of Painesville, has furnished us with so many of the necessary articles which Government could not supply. Shirts, drawers, stockings, sauerkraut & c. have been most liberally contributed at times and have cheered the heart of the needy soldier and patriot.

the meeting was read which showed the low rates at which the unfortunate women were paid for work. A brisk workwoman can finish four pairs of drawers containing 1,800 stitches each by constant labor from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. For each pair she received 4 and one-sixth cents. The price for making army knapsacks is seven and half cents; three of which can be made in a day. Shirts, three of which can be completed in a day, on a sewing machine, are made by the women at eight cents apiece.

p. 1 col. 3 A Clergyman's Interview with General Grant

Rev. Dr. Thomson interviewed Gen. Grant in a railroad car in Pennsylvania a few days ago. At Altoona, Pa., as we went to the cars, we found a crowd on the platform and as we took our seat, we learned the reason for it, as someone cried out "three cheers for Gen. Grant," which was obeyed with zest. We were introduced to him and had a very pleasant conversation with him. He is a man of medium height and unassuming manners. His dress was plain and in no respect indicative of his rank. A stranger is struck with his youthful appearance; he seems not over thirty-five years of age. Gen. Grant is a Democrat in the true sense of the word. He is for the people, all the people. He is very modest, seeking to hide from the public gaze. Though called for at every station, it was with difficulty he could be persuaded to step forward and raise his hat; he made no speeches.

In speaking of Gen. McClellan, he attributed Gen. McClellan's failure to no want of ability or education, but to the fact that he rose too rapidly and was intoxicated by his elevation, and afraid to make a bold step lest it should be a false one. Moreover, he unfortunately allowed himself to be manipulated by politicians, and bewildered by the false lights which they held out before him. If such be the view which the Lieutenant General takes, there is ground for hope that he himself will not be the victim of political wire-workers, but will steadily employ his powers in the right direction for the right motive, namely to save the country.

General Grant is hopeful and while he makes no extravagant utterance as General Scott or General McClellan did, he leads us to understand the events are in train for a decisive Spring campaign. He speaks in the highest terms of General Sherman who succeeds him in the Western Department, who he says, has no superior in the service.

G., 2nd Ohio Vet. Vol. Cav. Camp Parole, Md.,
March 30, 1864

Once more the boys of Co. G. have bid farewell to their friends, kissed their mothers, wives, little ones, and sweethearts, and re-entered upon their duties as soldiers.

The Regiment left Cleveland on the 24th and arrived in Cincinnati the next morning about day break, and marched through a storm of rain and sleet, to the Sixth Street Market House, when we were granted the freedom of that city. At noon, we learned that a dinner was waiting for us at the Fifth Street Market House and proceeded there to take some comfort in the shape of cold pork, bread and some villainous coffee. During the afternoon, we received orders to report to Annapolis, Md., to join the Burnside expedition and in the evening took the cars for Columbus, where we arrived next morning. At two o'clock in the morning, we ferry over the Ohio River and enter Virginia, and take cattle cars on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and start off about daylight. We had plenty of raw bacon and crackers. At 8 o'clock in the morning, we crossed the Potomac at Harper's Ferry and entered Maryland. We passed over a beautiful country today. We continued on to Annapolis Junction, where we were switched off, and arrived at this Camp about 9 o'clock, March 17th. From here

our destination is unknown. The 9th Army Corps is fast gathering at this Camp and we will probably soon make a forward movement into Dixie. This camp at present contains 30,000
troops. Old Pokeepsie

On Monday and Tuesday, Gen. Grant gave the grand order to "Forward, march!" We hear that he has safely crossed the river, at several fords, and is moving forward, bearing southeast, evidently striking for the country in the neighborhood of the old Chancellorsville battle. Burnside is in good position as his Reserve—Sigel and Couch are moving down the valley, for co-operation and Butler and Smith, with a splendid force, are moving up the Peninsula. Quite likely they will land at City Point, and look after Beauregard, who is at Petersburg with 30,000 men, enroute for Lee. We have rumor that Hooker, with a good force has also set his face Richmond-ward. At the hospitals here, beds have been prepared for 40,000 men.

The Second Ohio Cavalry left here last Sunday, newly mounted on fine horses, to rejoin Burnside, with whom they are a favorite regiment.

A week ago, last Sunday, we were in our camp on the shore of the Chesapeake, near Annapolis, Md., when an orderly arrived in hot haste from the Head Quarters of the Corps, bearing a package of orders—whereupon the Chief bugler sounded “Officers Call.” Frank Paris, Hillhouse and I together repaired to the Colone’s tent. The orders were for us each to go throughout the land even into Pennsylvania and purchase good horses, endeavoring each to purchase 60 within the week, and rest not, by day or night, until your mission is fulfilled. Then we had an interview with Gen. Burnside in person for more detailed instruction and then hurried to the Depot where a special car and locomotive were waiting. We went to the Junction where we connected with a train bound for Baltimore and Philadelphia and in due time arrived at our destination. Now, after a week of arduous labor, we are ordered to rejoin the Regiment at Washington or wherever it may be. I do not know the success of officers stationed at other points in this state, but have myself inspected, purchased, branded and shipped to Washington from this point, 73 fine horses as ever we seen together in any cavalry regiment. Yesterday morning, just as the sun came up, the men were moving out into the line of march. Just as we were descending from Lookout into the Chattanooga Valley, the sky began to darken and the rain soon came down in angry gusts. But it was of short duration and the clearing up was like our April showers in the North. Now let me remind you of the fact that there is much in the Army of which I am not allowed to tell you. The column with which our Battery was moving yesterday is now in camp at this place, a part of the Chickamauga battleground. Yesterday we passed over the Chickamauga battleground. We moved among the graves and wrecks of human skeletons. On every side as we passed along lay human bones, exposed to the bleaching sun. There is much enthusiasm among the soldiers with whom I have come in contact lately, praising Grant, and having confidence that he will bring the war to a sharp and definite ending by next Autumn or Spring. It is plain to see that our Army is in splendid fighting trim. Harry D.

Today, there is a lull in the almost unceasing cannonading of the past eleven days. Hard marching, sleepless nights, and constant duty, together with the occasional skirmish, has been the lot of the Second Cavalry.

The casualties of Co. G. since we crossed the Rapidan, are as follows: Sergt. Sidney G. Tuller, of Kirtland, right arm amputated on the 8th; Private Eugene Church, Painesville, missing since May 7th; Private John Witheron, Nashville, missing and reported wounded in hand. The boys are in the best of health and spirit and are all confident of success in our march towards Richmond. Old Pokeepsie

p. 3 col. 4 Army Correspondence -Fort Steel, Little Rock, Ark.; May 19, 1864

I left Painesville in company with several others from Lake Co., March 14th and went to Camp Cleveland. On the 17th, we left for this place where we arrived on the 25th—two days too late to join Steele's expedition down to Camden. Our Battery the 25th Ohio, was assigned to Fort Steele, until we could be equipped for the field. This fort is the main defense of the city. We organized a company of Sharpshooters called the Tod Rifles to protect the gunner, I being one of them. Twenty of us were detailed to escort the steamer, J. J. Cadat, to Pine Bluff and back. We reached Little Rock Monday, May 2nd, at 4 p.m. on one of the most beautiful rivers I have ever traveled upon. When we arrived at Little Rock, we found Steele's army coming in. The army was minus 500 wagons, 2500 mules and a vast amount of other property lost or destroyed. Our scouts report the advance of Kirby Smith's force within 8 miles of here, and the main body 20,000 strong, 18 miles off. Our forces are making preparations to give them a reception. Mark Burnham, Private 25th Ohio Battery

Battlefield, near Spotsylvania C. H., May 21, 1864
Fifteen days ago, the detachment to which the 10th Co. Ohio Volunteer Sharpshooters was attached, arrived at the scene of action—and since that time it has been continually under fire. On the 9th our Brigade attacked the enemy near this place, our Co. with the advance, and after a lively fight of about two hours hostilities partially ceased, each party holding his position and throwing up entrenchments. In our engagement on the 9th, our Co. lost 2 killed and 11 wounded, including our 1st Lieut. Blackford who was badly wounded in the head. Warren Belden and Wm. G. Waterman were the only Painesville boys injured, and they were wounded but very slightly. Henry C. Jewett, of Thompson was badly wounded in the thigh and is now in Fredericksburg.

On the 12th we fought the heaviest battle of the war, or rather the heaviest part of the heaviest battle. We were not in the thickest of the fight, but were entrenched on the battlefield for six days after the battle. The scene of the battlefield beggars description; acres were covered with the dead and dying of both parties. Many of the wounded were left on the battlefield two or three days, being too near the enemy to be removed—the dead remaining unburied until the stench became almost unbearable.

On the morning of the 19th, the 9th Army Corps left their entrenchments and moved to the left securing a new position, the 2nd Corps taking their places. The Rebel Cavalry made a raid on our wagon train, and took 20 wagons which were immediately retaken with 900 rebel prisoners. Our forces on the right, took during a heavy engagement a few days ago over 8,000 prisoners at one time. Some come in every day and give themselves up. These that we have taken seem to be well-clothed and armed, but are much discouraged. Our losses have been very heavy—our hospitals are full to overflowing with the wounded and our sick are left to shirk for themselves. What is the Sanitary Commission doing? Thousands of sick are here without care or even sufficient medicine. Tip

We are in a pleasant healthy location, about 3 miles nearly north of Washington, in the neighborhood of the old Bladensburg battleground. The 150th under the vigorous discipline of such officers as Hayward, Frazee, Wizeman and Paddock has rapidly attained to the proud standard of a veteran regiment. The other day, I visited Washington which is scattered over miles along the Potomac, and does not sustain my idea of the capital of a great nation. J. E. W.

p. 3 col. 5 Army Correspondence – Cassville, Ga., May 22, 1864

The mails have been kept back here and not allowed to go home thus far during this campaign till today. And now I hasten to write of the glorious results we as an Army have attained. The enemy has been driven from impregnable positions by flank movement and stubborn fighting, all the way from Ringgold to Cassville; and here we are resting for a day and then to push on after them again. Rebel prisoners tell us that Johnson is scared at our flanking him so much and well he may be.

It is well to talk of starving the rebels but we don't see it, while they have possession of such a splendid country as this through which our Army has driven them. We see sheep, hogs, cattle, poultry, and grain in profusion.

On Friday afternoon Lieut. King's section went into play on the outskirts of Cassville. The rebel guns were silenced and King and his boys stayed. Henry Gilbrath was killed by the bursting of a shell and W. H. H. Mallory was shot through the breast and arm, but still lives.

After the sun had gone down and the moon had risen, our infantry was brought up from the rear and charged into the town, with cheers that seemed to lift the heart of the listeners from their low estate and reassured and satisfied the weary ones who had been so long marching and fighting. We lay down by our guns that night with the sweet moon light for a mantle. Harry D.

25th Ohio Battery – In a letter from Lieut. T. M. Morely, of the 25th Ohio Battery, dated Fort Steel, Little Rock, Ark., May 26, 1864:

The 25th Ohio Battery is all right with 18 or 20 more men than we can carry on our rolls. We arrived at Little Rock on March 25th, three days after Gen. Steel had left with his Army for Camden. Gen Kimball put us into Fort Steel after we arrived at Little Rock. We armed sixty of the men with rifles and with the rest of the men we man the guns of the Fort.

There is a great deal of sickness in Little Rock, particularly among the refugees. A great many families crowd into the same building and sickness is but the natural consequence.

Again, after many days of tiresome duty we are in camp. Tuller, Kellogg, Graham, Church, Noah, and Wilcox have passed from the ring of their earthly hopes. They have fallen on the "sacred soil of Virginia."

During a skirmish May 7th, Eugene Church, of Painesville, was missing. John Witherow was missing at the same time, but has since reported to the hospital, wounded in the hand. Early next morning, Sidney G. Tuller, of Kirtland, was wounded in the arm; it was amputated and he was sent to the Hospital at Alexandria, Va. Yesterday, official intelligence was received that Sidney G. Tuller died June 1st from his wounds. The regiment was almost daily skirmishing and its aggregate loss was severe, but no more of the boys of Co. G were injured until the last day of the month. In the meantime, we were transferred from the 9th Army Corps to the Cavalry Corps, and joined our new friends May 19th.

Early Tuesday, May 31st, found us in our saddles, marching with our Brigade in the direction of Hanover Station and Court House. The Brigade is known as the 1st Brigade, 3rd, Div., Cavalry Corps, Army of the Potomac and is commanded by Col. McIntosh, the Division by Gen. Wilson.

When two miles of the Station our advance drove in the rebel pickets; the regiment was dismounted and skirmished through the woods facing the enemy. We were ordered back and established a skirmish line along the Richmond Road, where we remained until the afternoon when we were relieved by the 2nd N. Y. Cavalry, and went to the rear to feed our horses and prepare coffee. Our fires were blazing nicely and the boys were gathering around them waiting for the "pot to boil" when the unwelcome order came to "mount." A short trot brought us back to our old skirmish line, where we prepared to fight on foot, every fourth man remaining mounted, while the first three linked their horses together and placed them in his care, when they were again moved to the rear.

One battalion of our regiment moved to the front as skirmishers and when the line was complete we were ordered forward. All our regimental field officers, except Major Nettleton, now made a sudden and mysterious disappearance. Major Nettleton never disappears. When we go into action, we can see him and hear him—not cursing and swearing at the men, like some officers I could name, but cheering them on with kind words, clear and distinct orders. If the line wavers before a withering fire, he is there, and it reforms and charges forward.

We had to cross a meadow, cut up with deep ditches full of running water, and girdled by a thick, matted growth of brush, briars, and blackberry bushes—and on the opposite side of the meadow the bluff of Hanover, on which were stationed two brigades of rebels with four pieces of artillery. We were expected to drive them from this position with less than one brigade and half their force. After much fighting, falling back, and retaking our position on the hill, the rebels fell back to the depot. The rebels gave way along their whole line, and commenced a hurried retreat, barely saving their artillery. Loss in the regiment was 35. Before the sun was half an hour high, we were in our saddles marching towards Ashland, on the Richmond & Potomac R. R.—the 2nd N. Y. Cavalry having the advance, the 1st Conn. Cav. bringing up the rear. After a short resistance near Hanover, the enemy retreated, keeping up a running fight. The boys were in the best of spirits. A long train of pack mules, and cooks, etc. was blocking the road and were serious impediment of horsemen and artillery. Gen. Grant's compliments to the rebels were passing along by the thousands. They were strong boxes and on the end of each box were the words 1,000 cartridges, with musket caps for Burnside's rifle.

The advance had entered Ashland when cooks, mules, contrabands and "poor whites" on daily duty at headquarters came rushing past yelling and screeching that the rebels were coming down on our rear. And so, they were. The rebels came from their place of concealment, and attracted by the savory smell of coffee, hams, & C. charged down on the pack train.

Col. McIntosh appeared and drew up in line. Here the Buckeye boys secured a good amount of cartridges and feared not. There was Co. C of the 2nd Ohio Cavalry, ordered to charge up the road and check the onslaught of the rebel host which was driving all before them. And it came to pass, that rebel troops and loyal soldiers mingled together in mortal combat, even hand to hand. In the meantime, the remaining eight companies of the regiment were dismounted and led by Maj. Nettleton, skirmished through the woods in front to the Taylorsville Road and formed in line behind trees, bushes and stumps. We went for the "Johnneys" but we did not go far as every tree had two or three concealed behind it and a long solid column was coming through the timber on our right.

There were ten rebels to the one of us, but we had the advantage in loading, each man probably fired from five to eight shots per minute, and our Burnside carbines got hot in our hands. At this time, it was a strange but true sight to see rebel and Union soldiers firing from opposite sides of the same tree. Maj. Nettleton rode along the line ordering us to charge and drive them back. I do not know if it was his order or our fire which finished the rebels, but I do know they broke and ran; we were masters of the ground.

Almost 3 hours had elapsed since we left our horses; we were choking with thirst, out of ammunition, but victorious. We were told the 2nd Brigade was coming to relieve us and would shortly be there. We waited long but it did not come. Nettleton appeared and told us we must hold that line firm until everything had got safely out of town.

Lieut. Lemry, the only officer visible, gave a command to fall back to the town. Scarcely had we gained our feet when the rebs came out of the woods and once more we enjoyed a storm of lead. Over 2 miles, we double-quickened it to our horses. The sun was down, we were tired, thirsty and hungry. Of the fifteen, who went to the front from Co. G., June 1st, the following were injured:

Chas. E. Kellogg, killed; Capt. Albert Barnitz and 1st Sergt. Solon A. Rand, wounded slightly; Thos. Graham and Marion Noah mortally wounded.

That night we returned to Hanover Courthouse. As we drank our coffee that night, our souls were full of bitterness as we expressed our sentiments on the good men who had fallen and the good men who would fall.

We received our mail yesterday, which would average a dozen letters to a man. Old Pokeepsie

The Army crossed the James River and Wilson's Division of Cavalry is safely over and camped. On the 12 inst., near Old Church Tavern a short time after sundown while we were gathered around our fires, as merry a lot of boys as ever turned out of any town, telling stories, laughing and talking and feeling joy at the blooming prospect of a whole night's sleep, where we were startled by the bugle blowing "boots and saddles." "Lead out" came before we were saddled up, and saddles took a sudden upward tendency. Blankets were quickly buckled on and wool was firm. A few moments more and we were mounted. Out on the dusty road, we joined the long column and commenced a Virginia march. Every few rods, the column would halt, the men dismount, and in a few moments mount again, and thus the night wore away and rosy morn appeared. The whole of the 6th Corps was out of their works and portions of our Brigade were advanced to the front and drove in the rebel pickets, capturing several of them. The rebels were as ignorant of Grant's movements as I was, and a great deal puzzled to find the infantry all on the move. About 10 o'clock, we were again underway and before sundown crossed the Chickahominy at Bottom Bridge, where we lay in line during the night, holding our horses. Every few moments, we were roused from our sleep, and there was a perfect babble of voices during the whole evening. The road was again free of footmen, and again we mounted our steeds and halted at Charles City Court House, Mead's Headquarters. Here a half day's rations were supplied us and we made our first cup of coffee in three days. Our horses had eaten nothing for two days. We again mounted our weary steeds and returned to Bottoms Bridge, where we lay down in line and passed a sleepless night. Early light found us up and doing; the rebels were before us and we must check them. Fighting was brisk on our right, but this line was not attacked. We were ordered to help the right with major Nettleton at head of column. The grass in this field was dry and burning. The guns went to the rear and our horses were tearing among the fire and smoke. Here we remained for more than an hour without support, checking the rebel advance. In Co. G., David L. Osborn was shot through the leg and badly injured. We then fell back and halted again a few miles from Salem Church, near Savage Station. Here we were attacked again during the day but the rebels were repulsed. Another sleepless night. Before daylight, 3 days' rations were brought up from the brigade of the boys of Co. G and the boys lost no time in taking provisions from them—they having had but one meal since the 12th and this was the morning of the 16th. Daylight came and we discovered the rebels had extended a chain of pickets all along our flanks and were trying to bag us. We left just in time and joined the Brigade at Salem Church. At noon the Johnnies seem to smell a mouse and their pickets were taken in on the double-quick. This was probably the first they knew that Grant was over the James River. At dark, we took up our line of march for James River, where we arrived about midnight, took off our saddles and went to sleep for the first time in five days.

On the 17th we crossed the James River and all of Grant's Army was safely on the south side of Richmond, halted, got dinner and made a forced march to within five miles of Petersburg and lay in line of battle over night. On the 18th, we moved back a few miles and went into camp, taking no part in the battle that day. On the 20th, we came to our present camp, which we will leave in a few hours with 10 days' rations.

p. 1 col. 3 Character of Gen. Grant

Grant is a brave man not fearless in all necessary exposure of his person in battle, but cool calculating and clearly administrative in danger. A splendid horseman, and of great endurance, perhaps he is seen to best advantage on the field of battle directing the movements. He is a true man; true in his aims and in act. He is no boaster, no temporizer, no dreamer. His is simply a straightforward actor; between his thoughts, words and deeds there is an exact accordance. He is a generous man, ready to give full credit to his co-workers and subordinates. With such a general, men can work; for such a chief they will do all in their power. He has large and varied talent; the genius of common sense and the power and determination to go ahead which we have lacked more than anything else in this war.

p. 2 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Noon Day Creek, Ga., June 16, 1864

You heard from us last at Cassville. Since then, we have passed through the fiery furnace of battle again. We crossed the Etowah River, came on to Burnt Hickory Ridge and there found the enemy strongly posted and ready to give us battle. Our lines were formed with much loss to the 10th Corps, and under great difficulties to all the other troops coming up; but at last, our works were complete, under short range of the enemy's rifle fire. Beyond Noon Day Creek is Lost Mountain which we propose to help Mr. Sherman & Co. clear of its rebel gew-gaws.

We have the railroad in working order to Big Shanty, four miles south of Ackworth, and there are piling up supplies for our present needs and more, too. It has rained here incessantly for 12 days, making the movement of artillery and trains an impossibility at the present. Since yesterday, the sun has shone warmly and the brisk wind is drying up the mud very fast.

June 16 – The din of war grew momentarily more interesting and presently Allen blew the call "to boots and saddles." The order came for cannoneers to pack up and we knew then that our lines were about to advance. The columns moved up to the enemy's lines last evening, seemingly firm as the immovable rocks, in determination to conquer all obstacles. And indeed, it was done. The first line, of which Lost Mountain forms a part, was found to be evacuated and re-forming in mass of brigade; a charge was made on the second line and nobly carried. The evening came and the moon rose to cast glad light and the conflict ceased. Our Battery was put into position on the ground but just vacated by one of the rebels, and we wrapped our blankets about us and lay down into a cloud of dreams. Harry D.

Fifty-eight of our 100 days is gone. Six more weeks of duty in this delightful theater of service and we turn our faces toward civil life on the shores of old Lake Erie.

The war still rages in fury around Richmond and Grant still slowly presses Lee into his inexorable vice. We have unbounded faith in the success of Grant. His wonderful capacity to execute great operations with his immediate command, and recording a series of unexampled successes on the arc of a circle defended by Lee—no man can doubt that his is the mastermind of the day.

p. 2 col. 2 The Rebel Advance into Maryland – The rebels had invaded Maryland with a force of some 25,000 men, under Early, Breckinridge and the notorious raider, Mosby; had defeated Gen. Lew. Wallace with a force of 10,000 Union troops in a brisk engagement on the Mononacy, near Frederick. A dispatch from Gen. Wallace, Sunday evening, giving information of the safety of Colonel Seward, shows that the Relay House Station, with the Annapolis Junction, and other roads converging to that point, are still free from rebel intrusions, and that the communications between Baltimore and Washington are unobstructed. Troops are pouring into Baltimore. So far as we can judge from the mixed accounts received, we believe the rebels to be in a decidedly bad position for ultimate safety. There is little alarm among the people of Baltimore; business, it is said, proceeds as usual.

p. 2 col. 4 From the 2nd Ohio Cavalry; Camp Co. G, 2nd Ohio Cav. Vet. Vol., near Lighthouse Point, James River, July 6, 1864

The raid, contemplated when I mailed my last communication, has been successfully made and the destruction of rebel government property, railroad, and transportation, was more complete than the most sanguine imagination could have formed in anticipation of the result. For upwards of 30 miles extending past the Danville Junction up to Burksville, there is not one rod of this railroad in running order.

On the 23rd, the whole command reached Roanoke, on Staunton River, and Kautz attacked the rebel garrison at the railroad bridges over the above stream. One bridge was burned and our artillery destroy the other. Our work was done. We were now dodging though byways and obsolete roads, striving to avoid detachments of rebels who were waiting and watching our return; and it is almost impossible to trace our course. The 26th, we marched through Christianville, passed a cold drizzly night near Lewisville, and in the morning marched around a body of rebels who were waiting for us a Lawrenceville. At noon on the 28th, we rested for two hours on Sapony Creek. At sundown we crossed Stony Creek and engaged in a most stubborn Cavalry engagement. All night long, the boys were dismounted, fighting in the timber. Two Battalions of the 2nd Ohio were under fire, numbering less than 330 and of this small squad 41 were killed or wounded. The 2nd battalion was on picket and did not join the regiment until morning. When we came in from picket, we formed our line near Battery C., 4th Regular Artillery. At daylight the rebels again charged our line and were repulsed. When we left Roanoke, Wilson's Division took the advance, Kautz bringing up there rear. When the rebels were repulsed, we were mounted and marched toward Reams' Station. When we arrived at the station, we found the rebels waiting for us with a greatly increased force. We were now six miles from the left of Grant's line of battle, and about the same from Lee's right. About 2 o'clock, we were surrounded by rebel infantry, who were charging and yelling on every side. We were forced back on Kautz and in a few moments were again forced from our position. At length, when resistance was useless, the guns were spiked and the whole remaining force broke up in detachments, leaving over 400 wounded in the hands of the enemy. About 9 o'clock that evening we entered our lines a weary, worn lot of men. We found the Virginia Valley a blooming garden and made it one scene of desolation: Crops were leveled to the ground, barns and granaries were burned. Choice hams were dangling from saddles, preserve jars were peeping from haversacks, and merrily we march through the land of milk and honey.

The weather during the entire raid was excessively warm, and water very scarce. Not a reviving shower to lay the dust, not a cloud to shield us from the sun. Horses became exhausted and fell dead by the wayside.

From the signs about us it is very plain to see that Johnston's army must either fight to the desperate finale of a total slaughter almost, or lay down their arms. It is decidedly wonderful the number of supplies for this army that are peeping up to the very front almost. We have never fared better since coming into the service during an active campaign than now—and we are very much farther from our base of supplies. Lately, and for a long time past, the weather here has been so damp that hard tack has molded and sweet-tempered soldiers soured. Harry D.

After many days of dragging our weary limbs through the mud or dust, and coming up to the front in line of battle having worked under the sound of hissing bullets and shrieking shells—till it seemed no human being could endure more—we are now resting from our toils. We are snugly encamped in a piece of woods about two miles from the Chattahoochee River.

Last evening, along the entire line of works and within hearing of the rebel skirmishers, brass and martial bands were playing, men shouting and singing, mules braying, horses neighing and all conspiring to aggravate the beaten, crest fallen foe. Just as twilight fell, we could hear the cannon booming thunders away in the distance, Atlanta-wards. Sherman seems to be acting in concert with Grant, and not pushing the enemy very fast just now. By and by the strategy will develop itself. Harry D.

Virginia dust is not one of your Ohio little three-inch vapory elements that careen through your streets in stylish undulations and drop lightly down on pleasure walks and shade trees. The average dust here is the dept of three or four feet, although it is sometimes deeper. If we open our mouth, we swallow a sandbar, if our eye, a slough is formed in them. We wish the paymaster would come, or that it will rain; but probably will be satisfied by both. Another of Virginia's peculiar institutions is the blue tailed fly. They bite. While I am writing, a mosquito as large as a bat and a gnat, the size of a Hummingbird, are trying to get in position on the back of my hand. We go off to some shady nook and prepare to sleep on the perpetual motion system, one hand chasing off gnats, the other blue-tailed flies, and the feet thrashing mosquitos. We wake up to find our bodies covered with wood tick. Wood tick is an untamed species of the bed bug family, about the size of a piece of chalk. They belong to the hang-on race.

When we have entered Atlanta, I will write you and tell you. Rebel batteries are constantly throwing steel past our ears, over our head and plunging into the earth at our feet. They are doing very little harm to our troops in the trenches; our cracker line is still unharmed by the enemy so that we have plenty to eat. Since crossing the Chattahoochee, there have been three distinct battles in which we were decidedly victorious. Harry D.

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Near Petersburg, Va., Sept. 3, 1864

The 10th Corps, now under the command of Maj. Gen. D. B. Birney, has lately changed its locality of operations from Bermuda Hundred to the trenches before Petersburg. Our present camp is but a short distance from the advanced line of works near Cemetery Hill not far from the spot where Burnside's mine exploded. Our tents are all protected by stockades, constructed of pine logs set upon end as close as possible, in trenches from a foot and a half to three feet in depth. Were it not for this protection, the rebel bullets, which are coming at all hours, might do us a great deal of mischief. There is continual firing on the picket line in our front by both artillery and musketry.

In regard to this picket firing, there is this peculiarity about it different from any we have had to do with heretofore. Every day some twenty or thirty from each side advance and meet equidistant from the lines and exchange papers, tobacco, pocket knives, coffee & c. while at the same time bullets are whizzing back and forth not ten rods distant to the right or left.

The Johnnies of late manifest a great interest in securing copies of our papers.

Henry M. Hardenburgh, of Co. G. who gallantly distinguished himself in the fight on the 16th, on the north side of the James near Richmond, capturing a stand of rebel colors after a hand-to-hand fight with the color Sergt. of the 10th Alabama, whom he left dead on the field, was shot through the head by a rebel sharp shooter on the 28th ult. while on duty in the trenches, killing him almost instantly.

A man belonging to the 7th Conn. Vol. was hanged this afternoon not 100 yards from our quarters, for shooting a comrade in battle.

Great numbers are returning every day to their Regiments from hospitals in the North, making quite an increase in the effective strength of the force here. The 39th Illinois, since May 16th, has lost in killed, wounded and missing over 400 men, including all of the field and seventeen of the line officers.

A dispatch has just been received from Gen. Sherman announcing the capture of Atlanta.

p. 3 col. 3 Army correspondence – Camp of Co. G, 2nd Ohio Cav. Vet. Vol.; Near Berryville, Va, Sept. 18, 1864

For three days, we have remained quietly in camp. Many are the long marches of the 2nd Cavalry since the unfortunate Aug. 22nd. Night and day our good steeds were under saddle and every mile of the Shenandoah Valley has been thoroughly scouted between Harpers Ferry and Berryville.

He completely annihilated all such silly charges, as this being a Lincoln war, showing from the record that the war was commenced and States seceded months before Mr. Lincoln was inaugurated, all under Democratic rule.

p. 3 col. 3 Atlanta and the 105th O.V.I.

The march of the Army on this last grand glorious campaign is literally marked with breast-works and shotted timbers—both indicating the stubbornness and hotness of the conflict.

At Atlanta, the rebel works consisted of a series extending entirely around the city in a circle of 22 miles. There is first a line of rifle pits, the abatis or trees with the tops outward, then chevaux de frize, or sharp sticks driven into the ground projecting outward, last of all strong earth works and forts at every few rods. Over these works, if properly guarded, flesh and blood could not pass. But Sherman played them a Yankee trick, and Hood was good enough to blow up his ammunition trains and leave. The city is pretty fair, but the country is a great uncultivated wilderness.

I found the 105th encamped about a mile and a half South of the city. They all seemed in joyful spirits after their long campaign and were taking their rest well. The Regiment has been very fortunate: Only four have been killed and 39 wounded. They have, also, enjoyed remarkable health. The Regiment numbers about 500 and has 11 months to serve. A. D. Morton

Extracts from a letter written by Bliss Morse of the 105th Ohio to his uncle, Collins Morse, of this village dated Atlanta, Georgia, Sept. 27th.

My health has been very good and has been through the whole campaign—not missing a day's duty by illness. I can assure you it is pleasant to be out of sound of musketry and artillery constantly day and night.

I don't believe there is a farmer who has used the spade, pick, and ax more than the soldier this last summer; I never worked harder for dear life with those tools than this summer.

Georgia is yet more than half a wilderness; we have passed down along the railroad over 100 miles, where you would expect to see thrift and enterprise, yet we see but few cultivated farms. Farming implements are 50 yrs. behind ours.

Atlanta is suffering the fate of many other Southern towns. The order of Gen. Sherman's requiring the town to be cleared of its inhabitants, leaves many of their residences to the mercy of the boys.

Oct. 13, 186

Our Army is in fine spirits over the many successes and recent victories of Sheridan. How foolish it seems to talk of compromise in the face of such results.

Letter to Sec. of the Aid Society –Dear Society:

I address you thus, because I know that the Soldiers Aid Society is a great blessing to every good soldier; especially to those who are suffering from sickness and wounds in the hospitals. From it they receive almost everything they need. As most of us in hospitals are without money, we would suffer much more if it were not for your persevering efforts which you are making every day to relieve our wants. I have received several things through the kindness of Mr. Taylor, our State Agent. I received 1 shirt, 1 bottle Blackberry Cordial and 1 can blackberries for which I thank your Society very much, as Mr. Taylor told me they were from Painesville. They seemed to me much better since they came to me from my home, which is in Jefferson, Ashtabula Co. Yours respectfully

p. 3 col. 4 Army Correspondence – Camp of Co. G, 2nd Ohio Cavalry; near Cedar Creek, Va., Oct. 18, 1864

Few remain of the Old Second, who marched with us in its palmy days, 1240 strong, led on by Col. Charley Doubleday and his full staff of field officers. Then there was the brass band at head of column, under the leadership of Marble Passworth.

My last communication left us at Dayton, Va., Oct. 3rd. Since then, we have made some long marches and destroyed an immense amount of property in the valley of the Shenandoah. The order came to “saddle up” about noon on the 3rd, and the regiment went on picket. The post of Co. G was at the residence of a Dunkard family. In the portion of the Valley we were in, two-thirds of the inhabitants belong to the religious sect of Dunkards. They are opposed to slavery and to the war, and have taken no active part therein. Nearly every family within our lines, were packing up preparatory to marching North. Government trains returned to Harper’s Ferry loaded with them and their household goods, and none remained but the women and children, the aged and infirm for many miles around.

On Oct. 4th, every house and barn in the neighborhood was fired at the same time. On the 5th, the fire was extended for five miles around. On the 6th, we broke camp and commenced our retreat down the Valley. Flanking parties were burning barns and destroying all the grain in the valley. Towards night, the rebels attacked our rear, but were repulsed, and the 2nd Ohio went on picket down the Timberville Rd., the Division camping in the neighborhood of Brock’s Gap.

On the 7th, the rebels routed the 2nd Brigade and captured a drove of cattle, a large flock of sheep and a few wagons. The 2nd Ohio was thrown to the front and met the onset of the rebels. The Regiment checked the advancing rebels and in a few moments the enemy retired. The next day was a similar fight and that night we passed over Fishers Hill and went in camp four miles from Strasburg. Several more engagements and then camped one night near Fishers Hill. The next day we were on picket until relieved, and the camp moved to our present position on Cedar Creek. Casualties in the 2nd Ohio Cavalry in the late engagements:

Scott, Sept. 30, 1862. Alfred Colwell, of Leroy, and John Nixon, an Irish lad, born at sea, two good-souled boys, were left by us when we marched for Kansas, and died at Platte City, Mo.: Nixon on Feb. 22nd, and Colwell, March 12, 1862. Fifteen men from each Company of the Regiment were transferred into Hollister's Battery. From Squad No. 1, Ben Brookins, John Flannigan and John Weatherby were detailed. John Weatherby deserted the pack April 1st and made a journey over the plains.

Later he enlisted in the army at Columbus and left for the front last winter.

Uriah Helmick died Dec. 6th, and Hiram Pelton, Dec. 31st, 1862, at Fort Scott. Benj. Brookins has since died. B. A. Broughton was discharged from Hospital at Kansas City and returned home, but died in a few weeks. Corp. Wm. H. Robinson, Richard Copeland, and John Flannigan were discharged Feb. 19th; L. O. Benner, Jan. 17th, and Jewet Burdick, April 7, 1863—all for disability and at Camp Chase. Charles Gratz was transferred to the 103rd Ohio Infantry, at Mossy Creek, Tenn, Jan. 1, 1863, and his 3 yrs. having expired, he is mustered out. Spencer Munson having accepted a commission in the 10th Tenn. Cavalry, is still in. Norman. G. Mosher is on detail as Wagoner. Wm. Seeley has been promoted to Regimental Bugler and is now on duty at Camp Stoneman, Washington. Billy McCarty is Hostler for the Adj. John Pike. August Yahns is sick in Hospital at Washington.

Of the old squad, only 4 are now present for duty: Leander N. Batchelder, John E. Bowden, Corp. George Northard, and Old Pokeepsie. The dead all died from sickness and are buried on the green plains of the far west.

Early light on the morning of the 19th, we awoke to the sound of musketry. Amid the hurly-burly of confused reports, we threw saddles on our horses and awaited orders. Firing ceased and an early breakfast was cooked. "To horse" was sounded and Gen. Custar and escort galloped past us down the road towards the left and in a few seconds the two Brigades of the 3rd Division were charging after him. With the exception of the center, where the 6th Corps was fighting, the line was broken and the army routed. Men were now falling back who tried to check the rebel advance and many were staggering from loss of blood caused by wounds. The rebels now pitched the shot and shell into us, nearly every one passing through man or horse. At this time, Gen. Sheridan came charging down the road, and as he passed the men, cheer after cheer welled from their rough hearts and swelled upon the air. Death, which had appeared near, seemed to pass away, and new life danced in our blood. The whole line was reformed as if by magic. We were no longer required to bring up the rear of a defeated army, but were to assist in retrieving the losses of the day.

"Charge! Charge!" cried an aid, galloping by us and off we went past the guns, over fence, and ditches, down upon the rebels massed below. Yelling like demons, the boys struck squarely the rebel front, and after a short contest routed them from the field into the wood, a mile beyond. "Recall" was sounded and the Brigade rallied on its colors and followed Gen. Custar around to the left. The rebel horsemen were again at our front and the 18th Pennsylvania and the 2nd Ohio were alone on the ground. We were told to charge and by the time we would become engaged the support would reach us and we would run them over the creek. Col. Purington led off and, in a column, we charged over the fields. None, who had not enjoyed it, can tell the wild excitement of a cavalry charge. There is nothing to fear, no thought of death in the heart of the soldier. Approaching the rebel lines, Nettleton's battalion was thrown to the front. The Johnneys did not wait for the clash of steel, but put spurs to their horses and made for Fisher's Hill. The 2nd Ohio was ordered back to join the last grand charge of the day on the left of the 19th Corps. Before we reached our destination, the charge was made and the victory complete. We were ordered to return to camp and passed over a portion of the battlefield. The rebel dead and wounded had been carried off, but our boys lay where they fell.

Nov. 10, 1864

The wounded had been robbed of all valuables, the dead stripped of all clothing. After the fight neat headboards lettered and placed on each grave. The rebels were also buried. On the 20th, we passed over this ground and every board had been taken from the graves of our dead.

The morning of the 20th, we followed the retreating rabble as far as Columbia Furnace. The main column had marched all night and were beyond our reach. We returned to camp and pitched our tents; and have remained peaceable and quiet.

Weigh the hams and make a brine, allowing one ounce of salt to every pound of meat, and one ounce of saltpeter to every 25 lbs. Pack the hams closely, sprinkling a little salt on the bottom of the tub, and fill the chinks with stones. Have just brine enough to cover them well, and let them lie four or five weeks. Then take them up, dry and smoke them, wrap them in paper, and pack them down in ashes, in a cool, dry cellar. This will keep the flies from them and prevent them from getting dry and hard. We have used this recipe for 20 yrs.; never had any hams spoil and they are not to salty. They will keep the year round. (E. M.W., Plymouth Rock Iowa)

p. 4 col. 1 Army Correspondence – Head Quarters 2nd Ohio Cavalry; Camp Russell, Va., Nov. 28 1864

Again, there is a lull in the whirl of military events in the valley of the Shenandoah. Nov. 12th a sharp cavalry fight occurred on the Back Road and the 2nd Ohio occupied its usual position the extreme front. Custar's division succeeded in driving the enemy beyond Fisher's Hill, and at night the command returned to this camp. In Co. G the following men are missing:
Garnett, Wm.

William, Abram

The morning of the 22nd, we again packed our saddles and marched towards New Market. The cold rains were flooding the road, and we were, in a very few minutes, wet through. At dark we reached the town of Woodstock, and laying upon the wet, cold ground, we were soon sleeping soundly regardless of the rain. At daylight, we were again marching onward, and at noon entered the town of Mt. Jackson. About two miles on, our advance became engaged with the rebels and the long lines of rebel infantry coming up, we fell back through Mt. Jackson. The 2nd Ohio then became engaged and with the 5th New York, covered the rear of the retreating column. After several hours of hard fighting, the enemy withdrew. We camped at our old ground at Woodstock, and the next day the 24th, we returned to this camp. The loss in the 2nd Ohio was six wounded and missing. The Sergeants mentioned in my last communication have all received their promotions and are now Lieutenants: Lieuts. Tenney, Rand, Wilcox, Madison, and Smith. At Mt. Jackson, and where the bullets flew the thickest, they rode in the front.

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Army of the Shenandoah, Va.; Camp of Co. G, 2nd Ohio Cav. Vet. Vol.; 1st Brig., 3rd Div. Cav. Corps; Dec. 15, 1864

We are not with the army of Gen. Sherman. We have daily mail now, but what is the use of daily mail when nobody writes? One letter among 20 of us today—yesterday none!

Of the old squad but three are now present: Albert Goodsell (now corporal), F. L. Messenger and Chas. Waters, all good soldiers and of constitutions that the wear and tear of hard service cannot destroy.

Old winter has called upon us accompanied by Jack Frost; and the way the snow flew and our tents went up dispelled all thoughts of romance. There is nothing romantic in having one's house blown from over one's head when the snow is falling and still less romance in frozen feet and noses. The snow fell to the depth of ten inches. Geo. Adams, Wm. Wilcox and Joseph Stearns have received their appointments as Second Lieutenants, and S. A. Rand, M. B. Headley, Chas. O. Bush, and B. G. Wilcox have been mustered according to their commissions. Lieuts. Tenny, Millard and Newton are Captains, and so the good work goes bravely on. Few men have fallen during this war whose loss is more regretted than Lieut. James M. Lough, by his comrades in the 2nd Ohio. He was wounded at the head of his company early on the morning of Sept. 19, at the battle of Winchester. His thigh was shattered by a musket ball and after months of pain, he died at Winchester, Va., about Nov. 14th.

p. 1 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Near Savannah, Ga., Dec. 17. 1864

We are 300 miles further from you than when you last heard from us, and during our long march over the empire State of the South there has been more damage done to the Confederate Government than in all the former raiding of the whole war. From Atlanta to Savannah, this land of plenty has been made a desert and a smoking ruin. The march was made by an army of 80,000 men traveling by four roads, burning cotton, grain, railroads, and capturing every horse and mule to be found. All along the route, the slaves have rendered us good service in disclosing the hiding place of rebel goods. Coffee and sugar are about the only articles of food the army has drawn from the commissary during the campaign. We have lived on sweet potatoes, sorghum, fresh pork, poultry and peanuts. For dessert, a little honey now and then. The weather has been very fine and the roads good. No opposition had been made to our progress until half the distance had been traveled, and then only small parties of Cavalry, who would obstruct the road with trees, and fire at our advance.

At last, our army has arrived at the outskirts of Savannah without loss worth mentioning and cannonading from the rebel forts and gunboats has begun. The 2nd division of the 15th Corps charged Fort McAllister yesterday and captured it, taking 22 guns and 200 men.

As I sit here on the limber chest and write, with the beautiful branches of an evergreen oak hanging over me, and from them hanging the picturesque grey moss, I can see as many as a dozen happy faces peering into letters from home. Harry C.

Battery C, 1st O.V.A – P. S. I had almost forgotten to tell you that we have just lost our Captain and two men. After the battery went into position on the banks of the Savannah, Capt. Gary, Lew Hettinger, of Thompson; and Lyman S. Roache, of Washington Co., went over in a boat to an island to look about, and when they came to look for their boat to return it was gone, and in place of it was an old shell without oars. They took a piece of board and tried to scull back, but the current took them in to the rebel lines. A negro came over from the island the next day and told us the captain had been taken and they took his watch and money. We regret the fate of our

There is one peculiar feature about our taking of this city that makes it different from all the other captures of Southern towns. Every citizen remained at home, apparently satisfied with the change of rulers. There is not a sewer in this city that we know of and the roads are not paved.

Feb. 9, 1865

I am sitting on the mound of earth that constitutes a bed, chair, and sanctum. The roof to this room is a shelter tent, white and spotless. I look out from under it as a dog in a kennel with a sort of dumb contentment begotten of necessity. This is almost a sunny South; but through the dense fog of one day, the rain of another, the chilly air of another and the cloud-mantled sky of another, "we can't see it."

We had a pleasant time at Savannah with dancing, croquet, eating oysters, oranges and figs; the time passed very pleasantly.

On the morning of the 18th we crossed the Savannah River, passed over a wide stretch of level land, so level that the eye grew weary with the monotony of view, and through a splendid pine grove. At last, the pines were passed and we approached Hardeeville which had just been taken by the 3rd Division of the 20th Corps. Hardeeville has about 10 houses in it and is a station on the Charleston & Savannah Railroad. Last night, there came a gunboat and steamer up to us, with rations from Savannah, bringing, also, the welcome news that Fort Fisher was taken.

The boys of Battery C., 1st O.V.A. are all well, and eager to keep moving this winter. Please suggest to such that they pray right earnestly; and let the burden of their prayer be that war may cease. Harry C.

We issued a slip on Monday, announcing the fall of Richmond and Petersburg.

Apr. 6, 1865

City Point, April 3, 1865 to Sec. of war from Gen. Weitzel: We took Richmond at 8:15 this morning and captured many guns. The enemy left in great haste.

General Grant started early this morning with the army toward the Danville Road to cut off Lee's retreating army if possible. President Lincoln has gone to the front.

Wilson Station, Va., April 5, 1865 to Hon. E. M. Stanton:

The army is pushing forward in the hope of overtaking or dispersing the remainder of Lee's army. Sheridan's cavalry and the 5th corps are between this and the Appomattox. Gen. Meade and the 2nd and 6th corps are following Gen. Ord. along the line of the Southside railroad. All of the enemy that remains anything like organization have gone north of the Appomattox and apparently heading for Lynchburg. Their losses have been very heavy. The houses through the country are nearly all used as hospitals for the wounded. In every direction, I hear of rebel soldiers pushing for home, some in large and some in small squads, and generally without arms. Our cavalry pursued them so closely that the enemy have been forced to destroy a great part of their transportation, caissons, and munitions of war. From March 28th to the present time, our loss in killed, wounded and captured will not probably reach 7,000 of whom from 1,500 to 2,000 were captured and many but slightly wounded.

We shall continue the pursuit as long as there seems to be any use of it. U. S. Grant, Lieutenant General

p. 2 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Camp 2nd Ohio Cav. Vet. Vol, White House Landing, Va., March 24, 1865

Day is just breaking and the sun will soon shine upon Camp Russell. Fires are burning all through camp, and the boys are gathered around them warming their chilled limbs, and with chattering teeth discussing the prospects of the coming rampage upon the heart of the Confederacy.

Horses saddled and bridled, packed with blankets and forage, stand half-sleeping at the picket poles, all are awaiting the signal for action; now you hear the shrill, sharp notes "to horse." The men leave the fires; horses are led into line, and in a few moments, at the command "mount," this means all leap lightly into the saddle and the command departs.

Winchester town, the city of battles, is reached. Out upon the pike and up the Valley of the Shenandoah, through Newtown until we near Middletown. Every house bears marks of conflict; we marched and passed over the battlefield. The stream is forded and the stony face of Fisher's Hill ascended. Night follows day, and ten o'clock is marked by the hand of time. We leave the pike and enter the open fields, where the oozy earth almost mires our good steeds as they toil onward and up the steep hill before us. The column wheels in line, the men dismount and in the deep darkness tie the horses to twig and bush. Small fires glimmer upon the snow, coffee pots, pails and frying pans are called into use, and in a few moments the boys are eating their supper. Coffee, hard tack and pork, plenty of them. Our hard tack got wet in fording Cedar Creek, and if we don't eat it, Ed. Gould says it will spoil. The coffee is good and about one quart of it will neutralize the dry effect of this salt meat. Supper over, we will cut a supply of evergreens from these trees and after spreading them on the ground, we will place our blankets over them. Now we feed our horses and turn in.

Get up! Reveille has sounded in every camp and it is now four o'clock. Horses want their oats, and breakfast is almost ready. All you have to do is rub your eyes and improve your vision. No dressing to do. Wash your face, saddle your horse, and then pitch into your breakfast. Again, we are marching and crossing the Manassas Gap Railroad up the pike. We pass through the deserted streets of Edinburg and over our skirmish ground at Mt. Jackson, enter the town of New Market, and at night camp near where the 2nd Ohio in Dec. last repulsed the charge of Rosser's cavalry. Up again, March 1st, and marching at early light. A forced and hurried march of 35 miles and we are again in camp in deep wood, 3 miles from Staunton. You, citizen-like, will expect to see the lads gloomy and sad and filled with apprehensions of death and defeat on the morrow. Listen and you will hear the lads speak of bold charges, of prisoners, captured guns and flags. No one thinks of being killed now, and defeat is impossible.

Morning dawns with a storm of rain, hail, snow and sleet, aided by a high wind. A hasty meal is partaken in the wet. "To horse," and the men mount their steeds and the raiders march directly towards Staunton. The rebels evacuated it last night, and again it falls prey to Sheridan without a battle. We pass through Staunton and leave the solid smooth pike on which we have marched since we left Camp Russell, and take the miserable road which leads to Waysboro. The rain is still falling and the road is almost impassable. Thick clay up to the horses' knees strain and tire the animals and many are left by the road side.

You hear rifle shot, the advance has reached and is driving in the rebel pickets. The rebels open fire with their artillery, and the 2nd Ohio is ordered up on the gallop. We turn into the wood; the shot and shell are bursting in the tree tops, and cutting off huge limbs, which fall with reckless crash at our feet. The men dismount, and fastening overcoats and sabers to their saddles, form in line, carrying no weight but carbine and ammunition. (continued next week)

The news of the evacuation of Petersburg, and the fall of Richmond, caused intense excitement here—flags in honor of the victories were run up all over our village. In the evening, cannon were fired on the public square; a band of Martial Music paraded the streets, and a general rejoicing was manifested by all our citizens. Richmond is ours! Let us thank God.

p. 1 col. 2 Army Correspondence – Camp 2nd Ohio Cav. Vet. Vol.; White House Landing, Va., March 24, 1865

(concluded from last week)

We will join the line mounted by a ravine where the soft mud reaches the boot tops of the men, they march in column and the line is formed behind a small hill which covers them from the enemy. “Forward.” The line moves and the horses spring onward. Ten paces and the line is under fire. Beyond a low meadow, the rebel line is formed on a steep hill covered with brush and wood. The air is filled with small shot, muskets and carbines rattle and roar. On the left, you see Col. Nettleton mounted on the roan horse leading the men forward. Look to the right and you see the horse of Lieut. Robinson spring upward in the air and fall. Still more to the right, Capt. K. H. Tenny leads his battalion; the men give the 2nd Ohio yell and dash to and up the hill; the rebels are routed. The rebels fly from their guns and 7 pieces of artillery are captured by the 2nd Ohio. The 2nd Ohio has done all the fighting, routed the enemy and now the mounted men are let loose upon the rebels. The enemy is running so fast in their flight that many of them jump in the Shenandoah and are drowned. At the river, the boys halt and commence to return. Before sundown the 2nd Ohio has brought in 450 prisoners, 7 pieces of artillery, 14 ambulances, 65 horses, 24 mules and 200 stand of small arms. Through rain, mud, and darkness the march is continued. Rockfish Gap is secured and found filled with rebel supply wagons. At midnight, Greenwood Station is reached and the command goes in camp. It is raining too fast to cook, so we will roll up in our blankets and sleep. Don’t mind the wet ground and rain. A soldier never catches cold; shake, the mud and water off in the morning and you will be all right.

This is March 3rd. The rain has ceased and the column is marching on Charlottesville. The roads have not improved and the 2nd Ohio marches slowly in the advance, eighteen miles and the city is entered. The citizens do not appear much displeased at the entrance of the detested Yankees and there are more smiling faces than frowns. The mansion on that high bluff on the right is Monticello, the home of Jefferson. We are living entirely on the country and will enjoy ham and flapjacks. Tomorrow, we will destroy the Lynchburg Railroad; on the 6th will evacuate Charlottesville.

For us there is no rest. A mountain gorge and the worse road we have yet passed over is before us. The night is freezing cold and our wet clothing chills our limbs. Fires are burning all along the road and the men during the continual halts gather around them. Wagons are mired in the mud and are burned, horses and mules sink to their necks and are shot; contrabands—men, women and children are following the army and are numbered in the thousands. For them there is no rest; to fall behind the guard will insure capture and slavery, if not death. March 7th and yet the command keeps on its way; you are hungry, weary and sleepy. The long column files from the road and moves in camp near Nelson Court House. The Regiment is ordered out as picket, and another sleepless night is enjoyed. Another day arrives and passes. New Market on the James River at the mouth of the Tyer is reached, the canal ruined and then we go in camp. March 9th at 4 o'clock in the morning we march and make huge gaps in the canal and let its waters rush into the stream. The cotton factories at Scottville are burned and midnight finds us in camp, four miles out on the Columbia Road where we remain until March 12th, making preparations for a long raid in some unknown direction.

Forty-two miles are marched and night finds us on the Gordonsville railroad at Fredericks Hall. On the 14th, we take up the march again.

Meeting Early, capture his 300 and his staff and force him with one man to ford the South Anna while we cross at and hold the bridge over the river. Next day a direct march is made to Ashland. The 2nd Ohio charges the town and routing the rebel force follows it to within seven miles of Richmond. The 2nd New York relieves us and we return to Ashland. The 1st Brigade occupied Ashland until the whole command was over the bridge across the South Anna where the town was evacuated and the bridge burned. Soon after Picketts Division of rebel infantry charged in to Ashland and occupied it. The South Anna was forded and the command camped near General Burnside's old headquarters.

Over good road we make short marches and on the evening of the 16th camp at Mungonick on the Fredericksburg Road. Night of the 17th finds us at King George Court House and at noon on March 18th we enter our lines at White House Landing, Va., being 20 days since we marched through Winchester.

March 28th, before Petersburg, Va. We arrived here yesterday and once more hear the roar of artillery. In a few days, we will again be off upon a Sheridan raid. Old Pokeepsie

From Battery C., 1st O. A.; Fayetteville, N. C., March 14, 1865

I will write a short notice to let our friends know we are well, happy, and hopeful. Sherman's army is neither demoralized nor lost, mud bound, nor lazy; but the happiest, sauciest, bravest mass of men that ever trudged the road. From Savannah to Columbia, from Columbia to Winsboro, from Winsboro to Fayetteville, we have carried "this merry joke of war" to the doors of its originators, and they have found no laugh in it. For a moment we look at the miseries, tears will start in our eyes, the heart grown tender, the strong manhood is shaken—but it must not be. We are at war with these people. War is cruel, and you can't refine it. Harry D.

p. 3 col. 4 The Funeral Train – Arrival of the Remains of the Late President at Cleveland
The remains of President Lincoln arrived at Cleveland from Buffalo at seven o'clock Friday morning and were escorted by a large procession to the building prepared for their temporary deposit. All places of business were closed, and national salute of 36 guns was fired, and half hour guns were fired until sunset. As at all other places, immense crowds of grief-stricken people were assembled, and from the opening till the closing of the rooms to the public, an uninterrupted train of mourners was constantly passing before the bier to take a last look at the face of their dead President. A procession proceeded to the Park (from Euclid Street to Erie, down Erie to Superior and thence to the Park). In the park a building had been especially erected for the reception of the remains. It was 24 by 36 feet; the roof was of pagoda style and the rafters were covered in white cloth. The catafalque consisted of a raised dais, four by twelve feet on the ground, the coffin rested on this dais about two feet above the floor. On the four corners stood columns supporting a canopy. The columns were draped and wreathed with evergreens and white flowers, black cloth falling as curtains and fringed with silver, were caught and looped back to these columns. The floor of the dais was covered with flowers and a figure of the Goddess of Liberty was placed at the head of the coffin. The number who witnessed the remains of the President during the day was one hundred and eighty per minute. Two rows constantly passing, one on each side of the coffin.

Of course, we have shouted for joy that Richmond has fallen and Lee's army nearly or quite nearly dispersed. The evenings now are moonlit, mild and beautiful and this is a great help to us bringing rest, joy and contentment.

Matters pertaining to our individual welfare and interest, Gen. Sherman has looked to with a fatherly solicitude, as he ever does and for that we love him as a man and confide in him as a chieftain.

Another campaign, with the weariness of the march, the dangers in the toil is before us.

Harry D.; Batt. C. 1st O.V.A. 20th Corps

Fort Schuyler, N. Y., May 4th, 1865

After four years' service in the field, I find myself in a comfortable and well-kept hospital at last. My feelings are strange. Last Sat. evening, six hundred of the 20th Corps men, who were not accounted fit to travel, were put aboard the best cattle train at Raleigh and put through to Morehead City, on the N. C. coast, and there transferred to the U.S. Hospital Boat, "Spaulding," for New York City. At meal times they gave us dish water, labeled soup, with coffee so strong it gave us the St. Vitus' dance and bread with four sours to one meal and not much elevation in it. At last, we cast anchor in N. Y. harbor. When I last saw the boys of Battery C. they felt well and happy. They go around over land via Richmond and Washington and perhaps you will greet them at home by June 15th.

p. 3 col. 3 Army Correspondence – Quarters 2nd Ohio Cav. Vet. Vol.; near Petersburg, Va., May 7, 1865

Our campaign is finished. They tell us the rebellion is crushed and that we have fought our last battle. It seems impossible that the war which we have engaged in for the past four years is now a matter of history, and that the men who have served their country so long and well are so soon to be disbanded and ordered to their homes. Home! How many changes have occurred there!

Since breaking camp at Winchester on the morning of Feb. 27th, Sheridan with his Cavalry has been constantly on the march., The raid down the Shenandoah Valley into East Virginia and on Charlottesville, was concluded by our arrival before Petersburg on March 27th; and on the 29th, we commenced the last grand forward movement of the Army of the Potomac. March 31st, we were in the severe engagement at Dinwiddie Court House; and April 1st fought at the desperate battle of Five Forks. Continual fighting and skirmishing continued until April 6th. On the 11th we began our return march and arrived in camp at Petersburg on April 19th. On the 24th the report of Sherman's blunder (surrender agreement that he reached without approval with Gen. Joe Johnson) reached us, and Sheridan at once put his cavalry in motion. We marched to Scottville near the North Carolina line, where we received official information of Johnston's surrender, and May 2nd returned to Petersburg. The Telegraph has not been received for the past six weeks by any member of Co. G. Sergt. George Northard is dead. At Five Forks, April 1st, the severest action the 2nd Ohio was ever engaged in, he was wounded in the knee, and has since died in hospital. He entered the service on Aug. 22, 1861, and up to the time of his wound, never missed an action when the 2nd Ohio was engaged.

Privates Mead and Foster have received severe wounds—the former lost an eye; the latter was shot through the body. They were last heard of in a Hospital at City Point. Our Captain, Albert Barnitz, has been mustered as Major, and now commands the second battalion of this regiment. Sergts. Albert Clapp, Luther M. Tuttle, Edwin Joyce, N. H. Fisher, Albert Capron, W. Randall and Robt. N. Traver, have received Commissions as Second Lieutenants.

Gen. Grant, on his way to Chicago, met with an impromptu reception at Cleveland, on the evening of the 9th, that was enthusiastic beyond description. The General was nearly smothered with wreaths, shook hands with as many as possible, made no speeches, and went his way, leaving the Clevelanders exultant and rejoicing.

p. 2 col. 2 How He Did It – Gen. Sherman found no difficulty at all feeding his large army as he passed down from Chattanooga to Savannah and up again towards Danville, and this has been ascribed to his knowledge of the Southern country as he had resided in it before the war. The General, it appears did not depend upon any such experience. He carried with him a copy of the census of 1860, in which the population and the productions of every county are recorded, and on this information, he was able to direct his course best, with reference to provisioning his army without taking supplies with him. That information was just as good to him as sending corps in advance of his march to establish provision depots for the support of the army.

p. 3 col 2 The 60th Ohio Infantry – This gallant regiment has returned from the war, and was paid off on Saturday of last week. Although the last 3-year regiment recruited in this State, it reached the front in ample time to participate in several of the most sanguinary struggles which have characterized the rebellion of the last four years. The regiment was raised at different parts of the State, and organized at Camp Chase, Columbus in the spring of 1864. Companies G and H were raised in the northern part of the State and organized at Cleveland, as the 9th and 10th Independent Companies of Sharpshooters, many of the latter Company being from this place and vicinity. The companies were subsequently transferred to the 60th Ohio Infantry much to their disappointment. On May 6th, it was in the battle of the Wilderness. From this day forward, till the evacuation of Petersburg, April 3rd, 1865, the regiment was under fire almost continually. They have born themselves nobly through 30 pitched battles and many fell before the foe.

Horse Thief – On Monday, Sheriff Benjamin arrested Frank C. Gansberg, the man who stole Mr. Stockwell's horse and buggy last Friday. In default of bail, he was committed.

p.1 col. 5 Horrible Murder Near Cleveland – A murder was committed at Bedford, Cuyahoga Co., last Wednesday. Six or seven years ago, a man named J. W. Hughes, a Manxman, settled in the city as a practicing physician. He lived on Ontario St., was well-known and had a family. He knew Mr. Thomas Parsons who had several daughters. He passed himself off as a single man and engaged the affections of Miss Tamsey Parsons, the second eldest daughter. Taking her to Pittsburg, he married her. Six weeks later the family discovered the Doctor had another wife; followed him to Pittsburg and had him arrested and indicted for bigamy. He was sentenced to Allegheny Penitentiary and through some unknown agency was pardoned after five or six months.

He returned to Cleveland last spring and commenced business in an office on Ontario St.

Aug. 17, 1865

Some three or four weeks ago, he sent his first wife home to the Isle of Man. On Tuesday evening about 8 o'clock, at the carriage stand, corner of Bank and Superior streets, Dr. J. W. Hughes and a man named Russell, who keeps a saloon on Ontario St., hired a carriage to Bedford. He obtained an interview with Miss Tamsey Parsons and endeavored to prevail upon her to forsake her home and go with him. She refused to have anything more to say to him and left him. About 2 o'clock in the day, he called upon her again and met her in the back garden. She refused to go with him and he shot her in the head, twice.

The citizens of Bedford and Newburgh turned out en masse, joined by several returned soldiers, who were well armed, in search of Hughes. They found him and he surrendered at once.

The trial of Wertz, the Andersonville prison keeper, has commenced, and the public interest centers upon an investigation that will give to the country in an authentic form, not only a history of the fearful sufferings of our brave soldiers in the prison pen at Andersonville, but will trace the cause of the horrors and will show a studied and carefully devised plan on their part to weaken the force of the Union armies by rendering all prisoners of war unfit for further service in the field.

He has a splendid farm of one mile square, a comfortable dwelling, a large stock of cattle and horses, and an income of $3,000 a year, free of income tax. He is loyal to the core and still regrets that his offer to the government to raise a battalion of Chippewa soldiers and go South and fight the rebels, was not accepted.

Painted there is a Palace Façade in the old Venetian style of architecture, with balconies and windows, each with a large laurel wreath encircling the armorial escutcheon of the United States. p. 4 col. 4 Taming Bees – When bees are full of honey they will not sting and are harmless as kittens. They will fill themselves with honey when frightened. Smoke of rotten wood, tobacco, cotton, rags or dry corn cobs will frighten them. With the mouth, first direct a little smoke to the entrances of the hives and then into the slats or homes of the honey board and directly on the bees. You cannot harm the bees with a reasonable amount of smoke. Now remove the honey board and blow smoke upon the bees to keep them below the tops of the frames. Keep them below until they are full of honey. In from 5 – 15 minutes, most bees will be gorged; they will look plump. When in this condition the frames of the comb may be taken out, examined and returned. Follow these directions and you will find not trouble in taming and handling any hive of bees.

Preserving Grapes over Winter – Mr. F. J. Boying, of Lancaster, Ohio, has been very successful in preserving grapes during the winter in the following manner:

On a clear, dry day, he gathers perfectly ripe and sound bunches, and lays them carefully in stone jars, holding one or two gallons each. The jars are then set in the ground, in a trench deep enough to allow their tops to be 8” or 10 “beneath the surface. Some boards are then laid over the jars, and the trench filled up over it. Grapes packed in this way keep perfectly until the first of March.

Recipe for Plain Cake – Two cups sugar, 1 of sour milk, 3 of flour, 2 eggs, 4 spoonful butter; teaspoonful soda. Season to your taste. Put all the ingredients together and beat up quickly.

p. 2 col. 2 Ashtabula Telegraph -Dysentery and Death are prevalent in our midst. One of the victims, whose departure occasions more than a passing interest, is Mrs. Hattie S. Curran, who died Sunday night after a brief illness of one short week, born with Christian fortitude. Mrs. C. was born and raised in this town and her many estimable qualities of heart and mind had endeared her to a large circle of friends. To know her was to love her. She will be missed in many circles of loved friends who were gladdened by her cheerfulness and sunny manners.

p. 1 col. 5 Mormon Domestic Life – The marrying of two or more sisters is very common; one young Mormon merchant in Salt Lake City has three for wives. There are several cases of men marrying both mother (widow) and her daughter or daughters, taking the “old Woman” for the sake of getting the young ones but having children by all. Consider, too, how these children of one father and many mothers, the latter often blood relations, are likely to become crossed again in new marriage, in the second and third, if not in the first generation under the operation of polygamy. It is safe to predict that a few generations of such practices will breed a physical, moral and mental debasement of the people most frightful to contemplate.

In many cases, Mormon wives not only support themselves and their children, but help support their husbands. Thus, a man of limited income who married 3 or 4 women, makes his home with No. 1, perhaps, and the rest live apart, each by herself, taking in sewing or washing or engaging in other employment to keep her establishment and be no charge to her husband.

He comes around once in a while to make her a visit.

p. 2 col. 3 The Ravenna Democrat reports the death of Judge Darius Lyman, one of the old settlers and a prominent lawyer of Portage, who frequently represented the county in the Legislature. He was the anti-Jackson candidate for Governor in 1832 and lost. He died in Cleveland at the home of his son-in-law, Mr. Otis, at the age of 76 yrs.

Death of Mrs. E. T. Wilder – Mrs. Wilder, wife of Judge E. T. Wilder, formerly of this village, but who has resided at Red Wing, Minn., for the last 8 or 10 yrs, died. She must have been past 50 yrs.; her remains are on the way here for interment.

p. 3 col. 5 Ed. Telegraph: The life and death of Mrs. Allen, who resided in Kirtland, has been the main topic of inquiry and conversation. For years she lived aside from the world, and she has been almost an entire stranger to all her relatives, with the exception of her aged mother, who she loved with true devotion. She was industrious and willing to work for wages far below the regular prices and deprived herself of the necessities of life. A young 15-year-old girl lived with her and she intended to leave at least one-half of her property to this "illegally" adopted girl; but nothing was ever written. It is hoped Mrs. A's relatives will give unto this neglected girl what Divine Justice demands of them.

Horace had been helping his father build a cattle shed of logs until about 4 o'clock p.m., when he brushed the mud off his hands and said, "Father, I believe I will not work anymore today, I am going up to Mesopotamia to get married tonight; won't you go up?" Father said he guessed not, it was too far. So, Horace washed up, put on this best suit and went on foot to Mesopotamia to be married.

Eight Hour Day vs Ten Hour Day

Much has been said of late about the benefits accruing from an eight-hour system of labor as compared with the old ten-hour system. The mechanic should be allowed to complete his day's work in eight hours and it is necessary that he should spend the remaining of his waking hours in the improvement of his mind, the care of his family &c. There is a class of people in your midst who are obliged to work from fourteen to sixteen hours every day and sometimes eighteen hours.

In Painesville dry goods' merchants open at 6 or 7 a.m. and close at 9, 10 or sometimes not until 12 o'clock at night. The life of a store clerk is confined entirely to the walls of our stores. I do not know of a single place as large as Painesville where the stores are not promptly closed at six o'clock. Dry Goods Painesville

At several places, the ladies kissed the naval hero but only shook hands with the unconditional old chieftain. "This," said the General, "is easily explained. The Admiral is so old that the young ladies don't hesitate to kiss him, but they don't like to take such liberties with a young man like me."

p. 4 col. 1 Fall Fashions from New York – What to Wear and How to Wear It

Hats: Evening hat is of white material, Catalan shape, and trimmed with purple velvet. The strings are edged with white lace, and there is a purple and white flower on the top, with a smaller flower in the center of the bandeau.

Another of green velvet, trimmed with a necklace of velvet, with jet ornaments and a fall of white lace in front.

Another style is a white bonnet, trimmed with a row of fringes across the upper part of the crown, made of marabout and pearls, white marabout across the back, and pearl pendants around the entire edge.

Another pretty style is the black velvet, trimmed with jet and velvet and made in a new shape—a cottage style in the front with a wide crown, closely fitting at the back of the head.

A hat of white marabout trimmed with pink velvet is tasteful and attractive.

The Marie Stuart style is made of blue royal velvet with long blue strings, a white lace barbe passing around the front and falling in long ends over the blue strings; a cluster of crystal pansies forms the inside trimmings.

The hat known as la incoryable is of white royal velvet, adorned with mauve flowers with crystal pendants, a velvet band covered with white lace forming the inside trimming.

p. 3 col. 4 Pioneer Reminiscences by I. C. H. (I. C. Hodges)

On July 17th (next issue year 1820 is added) with my father's family, I left New England for the then far, far West. Our locomotion was 4 oxen and 3 horses attached to 3 wagons. On July 26th, we passed through Painesville, having been 40 days making the journey. Painesville at that time had 3 hotels: One where the American House now stands, kept by Calvin Cole; one nearly opposite owned by Gen. King, and run by C. Bronwnell, afterwards known as the Standing Witness; the other on the North Side of the park, where M. E. Williams was always prepared to entertain both man and beast; the house is still standing. There were 3 small stores; One on the site of Parmly's hardware Store where Reid & Latimer would sell a yard of cotton cloth for a bushel of wheat; one where Wilson & Morse are now located, where Hamet & Tracy would exchange a pound of tea for 10 bushels of corn; the other near the present Post Office where Algernon Sydney Gilbert would exchange his goods for pork at 2 cents per pound, or whisky at 16 cents per gallon. Hull & Menely carried on the tailoring business near Gilbert's Store. Mr. Merrill, where the Griffith Block now stands, furnished people with jugs, jars, earthen milk pans, etc. Mr. Knight sold small nails where the Carriage Factory is located. Dr. J. H. Mathews, S. Rosa and Dr. Harmon were the physicians. S. W. Phelps, S. Mathews, and N. Dillatson were attorneys. There was but one frame meeting house on the Western Reserve at that time, that was located at Euclid. The Erie Canal was not half completed. The country on the north side of the main road from Painesville working, the cradle caught in the grain and his foot caught causing him to stumble and strike his foot with full weight upon the upturned edge of the scythe, severing the two arteries of the foot and cutting it completely to the bone. He was alone and too far from help to be heard. He bound up his foot with straw and bound a band tightly about his ankle. He started walking crawling for his house, fainting several times. He was heard by Squire Barnes, who came to help and called some Irishmen from the railroad who ran to his assistance They carried Mr. W. to his house. Dr. D. p. 1 col. 5 Letter from Capt. C. Graves describing a trip on the lakes.

p. 2 col 1 The Earthquake – We did not feel it in Painesville last Thursday but other places east and west did. In Cleveland, in the second, third and fourth stories, the shock or vibration was most unpleasantly perceptible. It was violent enough to make the occupants of the upper stories quite seasick and faint. In stores, goods were thrown from the shelves. The shock occurred at half past 10 a.m. and was felt at Montreal, Saint Catharine's, and Quebec, Canada; New York City, Schenectady, Troy, Portland, Me.; Albany, Boston, Detroit, Cincinnati, Conneautville, Titusville, Meadville and many other points.

All will remember to have read or heard, of the great earthquake of 1821, when New Madrid, on the Mississippi, was wholly destroyed, and we believe houses not only thrown down, but entirely swallowed up.
