Mr. Litz has always taken an active interest in public affairs in his county and state, and is a strong Bryan man, and a firm believer in the righteousness of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America camp at Bassett.

JOHN D. RICHARDS.

John D. Richards is one of the earliest settlers in this part of the state of Nebraska, and during his long residence here has closely identified himself with the history of this region. He has succeeded in building a fine home and ranch, and has an enviable reputation as a citizen. He first came to this locality during the time the big cattle men were trying to drive out the smaller ranchmen, and when he first arrived here he thought it was about the worst place to which he ever emigrated.

Mr. Richards was born in Canton, Ohio, September 26, 1848. His father, Adam Richards, was also a native of Ohio, by trade a wagonmaker and farmer, and with his wife and family of seven children, moved to Williams county, Ohio, when our subject was ten years old. There he was reared and educated, starting out for himself when but fourteen years of age, by enlisting in the One Hundred and Eighty-second

Ohio Volunteer Infantry and served until the close of the war. He was one of those who, in the campaign in Tennessee under "Dad" Thomas, saw a great deal of hard service all through the war and he was mustered out at Camp Chase, Ohio, after the declaration of peace. When the war was over he went to the lumber woods in northern Michigan, where he worked for two years, going thence to California in 1870. He lived there for about three years mining and ranching and then traveled north to Oregon, where he engaged in cattle and horse raising, continuing in this for eight years. From there he went to the Big Horn basin in Wyoming, where he took up ranching for a time, carrying a large herd of cattle and horses. He then moved to Sioux county, Nebraska, in 1888, engaging in cattle and horse breeding at that point and also started farming, but he quickly saw that would not pay and discontinued that branch of agriculture. In 1890 he located on Gordon creek forty miles south of Merriman in township 29, range 38, which place he still holds, and of the nine hundred and sixty acres of this property about five hundred and sixty acres are good hay land. He also owns a ranch of one thousand one hundred and twenty acres north of this tract in township 31, range 38, on which he runs about five hundred head of cattle and a number of horses, using the south range in the winter and the north range during the summer season. About one hundred and forty acres of his land is seeded with alfalfa, and from this he cuts three or four crops each year, making a profitable addition to his income. He has a valuable estate, well improved, and after the rough times he went through on the frontier, is prepared to enjoy the balance of his time in a pleasant home surrounded by comfort and plenty.

Mr. Richards was never married but has a sister who keeps house for him. He is entitled to a good sized pension, but has never applied for it, not needing any aid from the government. Two brothers were also in the army with him. In political sentiment he is a Republican, and a member of Brewer post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Gordon.

WILLIS D. SMITH.

The gentleman whose name heads this review is a prominent old timer of Deuel county, Nebraska, being one of the very first settlers on the table land. His home is on section 18, township 12, range 44, where he is the owner of a fine estate, and is held in the highest esteem as a worthy citizen and leading public-spirited man.

Mr. Smith was born in Lawton, Van Buren county, Michigan, on August 20, 1859, and grew up in that state. His father was Geo. P. Smith, who settled in Deuel county about 1886, was a homesteader and prominent citizen, holding the office of county judge about the years 1890-'91. He died here February 13, 1905. Our subject settled in Nebraska in 1883, living for a short time in Saunders county, later in Saline and Phelps counties, and finally came to Deuel county in the spring of 1886. He at once filed on a homestead on section 12, township 13, range 45, went through pioneer experiences on the place, but proved up and sold out in 1896. He is now located on section 18, township 12, range 44, the home place containing one thousand and four hundred and forty acres, part of which is his father's old homestead, which land he has bought, all of which is well improved, with about seventy-five acres under cultivation. During late years he has been extensively engaged in the stock raising business, and at the present time is running about one hundred and fifty cattle and a bunch of horses, and is called one of the wealthy and most successful men of his locality.

Mr. Smith was married in Phelps county, on November 10, 1884, to Miss Emma J. Beadle, who is a native of Pennsylvania. To them have been born the following children: Maud, wife of George Peters, now living in Cheyenne county; Minnie, who is a school teacher in the public schools of Deuel county; Mabel, Maggie, Annie, Grant D., William McKinley, and Ray, all of the latter living at home and assisting in the work of carrying on the ranch. The family have a comfortable and pleasant home, and all are well liked in the community. Mr. Smith is active in local affairs, serving at the present time as treasurer of school district No. 39. He is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge, and venerable consul of the Modern Woodmen. In political faith he is a Republican and takes a leading part in county and national politics.

WILLIAM SOUTHER.

William Souther, one of the best known of the old settlers of western Nebraska, is a business man of more than ordinary capacity. He has conducted numerous large enterprises during his career, and is possessed of wide experience and a character of the highest integrity. He has done a great deal toward making the town of Crawford what it is today, aiding in every way possible in promoting its commercial development, and is one of the solid and substantial citizens of Dawes county.

Mr. Souther was born in Fryeburg, Maine, in 1854, of old American stock, his father having been John W. Souther, a lumberman of that country, and his mother Miss Katherine Cameron, from Vermont. Our subject grew up in his native state, as a young man attending Bowdoin College for some time, at Brunswick, Maine, and is an alumnus of the different literary societies there. After completing his education he went into the lumber woods of Maine, where he spent ten years, also did farming, and for a year was in the Wisconsin lumber districts. In the spring of 1883 he went west to Oregon and Washington, where he engaged in the sheep business, and spent three years in that region. In the spring of 1886 he became superintendent for the New Hampshire Cattle Company, and ranched with them up to 1893, this being all cattle business. He next became interested in the mercantile business in Crawford, and also in Lusk, Wyoming, and while at the latter place was in partnership with John H. Barron, the two building a syndicate block in Crawford, and for three years were extensively engaged in the mercantile work. In 1891 they were burned out at Crawford and lost a large amount of money, then for a time Mr. Souther was associated with the firm of Pratt & Ferris, a large cattle concern, with headquarters at Big Red, Wyoming, and at the same time was interested in the sheep business in that state. Mr. Souther has made Crawford his home town more or less ever since coming west, and that city claims him as one of their leading men. He has a large ranch near Crawford, one thousand three hundred and forty acres, with nearly five hundred of it under irrigation, and on this place he feeds a large number of cattle each year. Besides his different enterprises in the west, including a wheat farm in North Dakota, Mr. Souther has large lumbering interests in Maine, which net him considerable property.

In 1892 Mr. Souther was married to Miss Mabel Graham MacIntosh, of Ypsilanti, Michigan. Mrs. Souther is a daughter of Charles MacIntosh, a carriage-maker there. To Mr. and Mrs. Souther have been born the following children: John Barron, Susan Page, Grace and Mabel.

Mr. Souther is a strong Republican, active in party politics.

LEOPOLD MOELLER.

Leopold Moeller, one of the leading agriculturists of Box Butte county, is a resident of township 28, range 49, where he has improved a large farm and enjoys the comforts of life. He is a man of industrious habits.

held in the highest esteem by his associates.

Mr. Moeller was born in the Kingdom of Prussia, Germany, May 20, 1855. His father, John Moeller, was a farmer, who lived and died in his native land. The mother came to America in 1889 with our subject, and died here March 19, 1895.

Leopold Moeller has served in the army in Germany for three years, and worked out as a servant for a rich man in that country, spending fifteen years in that business. Two brothers came to America in 1883, and our subject decided to follow, and landed in New York in 1889, at Castle Garden, coming directly to Nebraska, locating on a government claim in Box Butte county near where his brothers had settled, and the same year he arrived here was married to Miss Alexandrina Kahlenberg, a native of Hesse, Nassau, Germany.

Mr. Moeller had a good start when he landed here, as he had brought $1,100.00 with him, and he filed on a homestead on southeast quarter of section 8, township 28, range 49, put up a sod shanty, bought a team of oxen and an old breaking plow and lumber wagon, then started farming. He drove to this locality from Hay Springs, which, at that time, was the nearest railroad point. The first year he lived here hail destroyed all the stuff he had planted, and the first crop he raised was in 1891, when he received a fair yield. After that the drouths caused severe losses each year and the only thing he was able to raise for feed was the Russian thistle for his stock, besides a few corn stalks and potatoes for his family. He found that it was useless to try to farm, so started in the cattle business, at first on a small scale, but kept gradually spreading out in this line, buying more land as he grew better able, and is now owner of six quarter sections, operating besides this a section of leased school land. He runs over a hundred head of cattle and just enough horses for farming purposes, and his entire ranch is well improved with good buildings, etc. He has one hundred acres cultivated, and is considered one of the well-to-do men of his locality.

Mr. and Mrs. Moeller have a family of two children, Frank, aged seventeen years, and Johannah C., thirteen years old.

Politically, Mr. Moeller is an Independent.

MICHAEL B. O'DONOGHUE.

Michael B. O'Donoghue, residing on section 29, township 22, range 14, Garfield county, Nebraska, on his Kincaid homestead, was born in Newmarket, Cork county, Ireland, September 27, 1835, grew up in that country and on account of the Fenian troubles of 1860 and '65, in which he held a prominent part, was forced to leave his native land. The young men of his neighborhood were all organized for the cause of the republic of Ireland, and, as is well known, this movement was a complete failure, and those who escaped after the government got after them, were very fortunate, and the ones who were caught received sentences of from five to fifteen years in prison. Our subject was smuggled out of the country by friends on board the American vessel, the Jeremiah Thompson, the second officer in charge of the ship being a Mr. West, who was a good friend of his. The ship landed in New York in the fall of 1865, and our subject went at once to Boston, where he worked at his trade as a tailor until 1880, and when an Irish colonization society was formed about this time in that city, he joined that body of men and all came west, many of these persons being well known throughout this region by the older settlers. They settled in Nebraska in April of 1880, and our subject took up a timber claim of one hundred and sixty acres in township 24, range 14, one year later homesteading a quarter section adjoining his original tract, making three hundred and twenty acres which he proved up in due time. After the Kincaid law had been passed he took up one hundred and sixty acres more under that act, making a total of four hundred and eighty acres which he owned but has since sold his old farm, only retaining his Kincaid homestead. From the first he engaged in grain raising, also the stock business to quite an extent during the early days, but of late years he has not kept very many cattle, as the government land became scarcer, nearly all of it having been settled on and fenced in. During the first fifteen years Mr. O'Donoghue was in this state he had thousands of acres available for pasture for his herds, but all has been taken up by homesteaders. He relates many interesting anecdotes of the early times in this region when wild deer were plentiful, but as the settlers came in very rapidly the country became quickly cleared up and the wild game was killed off in large numbers. In the '80's many beavers and plenty of otter were seen in the vicinity of Cedar Creek, which stream heads near his land and empties into the Platte river near Cedar Rapids. There were large hordes of Indians in this region when our subject first located here, but neither he or any of the other settlers had any serious trouble with them. Mr. O'Donoghue has worked hard and faithfully since coming here and accumulated a nice property. When he left Boston he was a poor man, but through industry and good management is now independently well off, having a fine farm, also a good substantial bank account. He is enthusiastic in his praise of this country as an agricultural region, and what he has accomplished is a fair sample of what any poor man willing to work can do in this region.

Mr. O'Donoghue was married in 1858 to Ellen Noonan, born and reared in the same county in Ireland with our subject. Five children were born of this union, two of whom are now living, named as follows: Ellen, wife of H. H. Johnes, a prominent farmer of this county. Kate, wife of E. Johnson, a carpenter of Omaha; Julia (deceased), who was Mrs. Jesse Ishmeid, of Oregon; Mary (deceased), and one who died in infancy. The family are all devout members of the Catholic church of Erina. Our subject is a staunch advocate of the Independent party and has always taken an active interest in affairs of his locality. He served as justice of the peace when he first came here after the organization of Garfield county, and has always acted for the best government for the good of the community. A picture of the "Homestead Ranch" of Mr. O'Donoghue appears on another page of this volume.

ALLISON S. GRAEFF.

One of the most important farmers of Cherry county is Allison S. Graeff, who is a leading old settler in this locality.

Mr. Graeff was born near Stroudstown, in Berks county, Pennsylvania, November 12, 1855. His father, Solomon Graeff, and his mother, Lavina (Unger) were of Pennsylvania-German stock and who reared a large family of children, all trained to assist their parents with the hard work always found on the farm. At the age of twenty-one years our subject started out for himself to seek a home in the far west. He came to Richardson county, Nebraska, in November, 1876, but in March following he returned to Woodhull, Henry county, Illinois, where he remained for ten years. The first two years he worked as a farm hand, then he went to farming on rented land. It was here, in 1880, that he was married to Miss Celinda Onderkirk, daughter of Richard Bond Onderkirk, a native of Germany, and who married Frances Thurman. Five children have been born to this union, named as follows: Arthur, Oscar, Gussie, Luella and one that died unnamed. The first three named are the only ones living at present.

In the spring of 1886 Mr. Graeff came to Cherry county and located on section 35, township 35, range 28, building a sod house in which the family lived for several years, going back to town in which through the usual drouth periods in which he lost several crops both by drouth and hail. However, in 1906, Mr. Graeff suffered a much greater misfortune than any mere property loss could ever be, in the death of his youngest child, Luella May, who was accidentally killed in a runaway on September 6, 1906. This sad affair was a heavy blow to Mr. and Mrs. Graeff, and the more so because it might have been avoided. In 1901 a fire occurred in which he lost his stable and sheds with their contents. When he came to Cherry county his capital was a team, wagon, one cultivator, a plow, but with this small equipment and in spite of all the hardships that a pioneer has to contend with he has prospered and now owns a fine farm of nine hundred and sixty acres, with good buildings, well, windmill, and other improvements. His farm is all fenced and he has about two hundred acres of good land under cultivation.

Mr. Graeff has watched the growth of Cherry county almost since its start, and his name will occupy a prominent place in the history of this community. During the Indian outbreak in 1891, he remained on his farm, being one of the very few who did not flee the country.

Our subject is a Democrat in political views and was reared a member of the German Reform church. Mrs. Graeff and the children are members of the Methodist church. Arthur is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Valentine.

JAMES H. HARVEY.

James H. Harvey is a native of Hampshire county, West Virginia, where he was born in 1848. He was a son of Gazaway Harvey, also a native of West Virginia. Our subject's mother's name before marriage was Junkins. She was of Irish descent, her father having emigrated from Ireland when he was a boy six weeks old.

James H. Harvey came west with his father's family in 1852 to Iowa, where they were among the earliest pioneers of the state where the son was reared to manhood. October 10, 1863, he enlisted in the Ninth Iowa Cavalry, Company going south with his regiment to St. Louis and on into Arkansas, continuing through the campaign in the south country with his company. saw lots of hard and active service and mustered out on February 3, 1866, after which he returned to Iowa where he remained for years.

In 1880 the subject of our sketch came west, locating in Loup county, Nebraska. His brother Benj. J. Harvey, was in Loup county at the time, and was one of the first settlers on the Loup river; he still lives here with his family.

James H. Harvey located on a homestead, built a sod house and lived in it for three years and then built a better home. He has worked hard at the development of his farm and now has four hundred and eighty-one acres of first-class bottom land, improved in nice shape, with good buildings, fences, etc. He is especially proud of his fine orchard of numerous kinds of fruit trees, apples, plums, cherries and a variety of small fruits.

On another page will be found a picture of Mr. Harvey's ranch.

James H. Harvey and Miss Kittie B. Taylor were married August 15, 1883, and have a family of six children: James C., John L., Nellie, Harry, Ruth and Wm. McKinley. Mrs. Harvey's father, Edward Taylor, was one of the pioneer settlers of the county, and the city of Taylor, the county seat, takes its name from her father.

Our subject has been public spirited and has taken an influential position among his fellows, and is universally respected by all who know him. He held the office of county commissioner for one term and also other offices in his district. Mr. Harvey is very genial and hospitable and always extends the kindest and most courteous treatment to all comers.

SAMUEL H. NESBIT.

Samuel H. Nesbit, a well-known citizen of Brown county, Nebraska, is a prosperous and well-to-do farmer of his community. His home is in section 22, township 29, range 22, where he is extensively engaged in stock and grain raising. Mr. Nesbit was born in Lewis county, Missouri, September 1, 1870, a son of Adam and Martha (Ramsey) Nesbit, natives of Virginia and Kentucky respectively. The father, a farmer, settled in Lewis county, Missouri, with his family in the early days, and here our subject, the sixth of nine children, was reared, receiving his education in the common schools of his native county. He lived with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age, and in the spring of 1892 came to Brown county and entered a mercantile establishment in Ainsworth, clerking for this concern the following five years. He then went to Colorado and spent a year and a half in that state, three months of this time on the geodetic survey, five employed in a flouring mill and the balance of the time in the dry goods establishment of Moore and Beckens at Grand Junction. He returned to Nebraska, going to Oakdale, Antelope county, working in a mercantile establishment for a short time, before returning to Missouri, where he again followed clerking, in which he had become proficient. In 1900 he returned to Brown county and, in company with two others, purchased the farm on which he is at present residing. The place consisting of four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land and three hundred and twenty acres homestead property, was but slightly improved and he began erecting substantial buildings, house, barn, granaries, fences, etc. In 1907 he built a large, commodious barn and the year following erected a comfortable two-story addition to the dwelling. He is very successful in his farming enterprises and successful in his breeding and care of cattle of which he has a fine herd. In this ranch he had associated with him two partners, A. O. Smith, of Bassett, Nebraska, and O. B. Ripley, at Dayton, Oregon, the property being under the personal supervision and management of Mr. Nesbit, who has lately purchased the interest of Mr. Smith. The land is devoted to stock and grain raising, two hundred acres being under cultivation.

On June 6, 1900 Mr. Nesbit was married to Miss Elsie B. Dillon, who was born near Oakdale, Nebraska, where she was reared and educated. Miss Dillon's father, A. B. Dillon, comes of American stock; he is a farmer and as time permits plies his trade of mason. He is prominent in fraternal circles and has served as deputy grand master of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which order he is a prominent member for the past few years. Mr. and Mrs. Nesbit are the parents of two children, namely: Burniece D. and Marvin.

Mr. Nesbit always does his share towards the advancement of the commercial and educational affairs in his locality, and is highly respected by all who know him. In politics he is Democratic and fraternally a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; together with his wife he has attained the Degree of Honor of that organization.

NELS THORSTONSON.

Nels Thorstonson, who for the past twenty-five years and more has resided in Cheyenne county, Nebraska, has during this time acquired a fine property as the result of his industry and good management. He is widely known in his locality as a worthy citizen and progressive farmer, and occupies a pleasant home in Potter precinct and is in the front ranks of the leading residents of his community politically and socially.

Mr. Thorstonson was born in the county of Eidsskongen, Norway, August 29, 1861. After passing his boyhood in his native land, receiving a common school education and the training of the children of the middle class in that country, at the age of twenty years he left home to seek his fortunes in the new world where everyone has an equal chance to gain a home and competency. Sailing from Christiana, November 26, 1881, to Hull, England, he crossed that country and emigrated at Liverpool on an American line steamer. When half way across the Atlantic a furious storm arose lasting for six days, during which the passengers were locked in the hold. The breaking of a propeller compelled a return to England, and after repairs they proceeded on their voyage, which in all lasted six weeks. After landing in Philadelphia, he came directly west to Nebraska, and located in Sidney, whence he walked through a blizzard to section 12, township 14, range 52, where he filed on a homestead, and here he has resided ever since, bending every effort to gain a comfortable home and competence for his old age. Part of the house in which he now lives is the first building erected on his homestead after arriving here, to which he has added, making a large and comfortable home. He endured all the pioneer hardships and privations in developing his farm, but stuck to the work bravely and gradually improving the ranch and adding to his acreage until he is now proprietor of an entire section of good land, situated on Lodgepole creek, comprising one of the valuable properties of the county. He cultivates only a small portion of the place, engaging on a large scale in cattle raising, running one hundred head annually, and also keeps seventeen horses for farming purpose. A hundred acres of the section are irrigable, for which Lodgepole creek supplies an abundance of water. Mr. Thorstonson has been very successful, and has also been one of the leading men of his community in political and school affairs.

Since Mr. Thorstonson came to this country he has lost both of his parents, but returned to the old country in September, 1899, visiting his aged mother for three months in the old home. He was married August 30, 1885, at Potter, Nebraska, to Miss Benthine Peterson, who is a native of Denmark, born April 18, 1859, coming to this country when a woman of twenty-four years of age. Mrs. Thorstonson's parents are also dead, her mother passing away in 1908.

Our subject and his good wife are the parents of three children, all at home, named Fendlay, Hilma and Palmer. Potter is Mr. Thorstonson's home.

Thorstonson's nearest trading point and mail station. He has held the office of commissioner for several years. He is a Republican in political views, was reared in the Lutheran church and joined the Modern Woodmen of America at Potter.

HOKEN OLSON.

He has devoted his life to agricultural pursuits, is well versed in his chosen calling and has met with success. He is highly esteemed as a citizen, and has gained the confidence of his fellowmen by his uprightness and honest dealings.

He grew to manhood in that country, following farm work, and at the age of twenty-five struck out for the United States to seek his fortune, leaving his parents in Sweden, where they spent their entire lives, both having since died. Our subject landed in America in April, 1881, and located at first in Henry county, Ill., but only remained one year then came to Nebraska, stopping at Kearney. He spent some time in both Phelps and Buffalo counties, finally locating permanently in Deuel county, which was then called Cheyenne county. Mr. Olson paid taxes in Cheyenne county, proving up at Sidney, Nebraska. In April, 1885, he took a homestead on section 18, township 14, range 44, started to build a home, and proved up on the land in due time. He bought an additional tract later on, and is now owner of four hundred and eighty acres, having about one hundred acres cultivated and the place all improved in good shape with a complete set of good ranch buildings, fences, etc. He runs quite a number of cattle, and is one of the progressive stockmen and farmers of his locality. During the early years of his residence in Nebraska, Mr. Olson passed through all the pioneer experiences in getting his farm started, and has seen every side of frontier life. He has gone through good, bad and indifferent times, but has prospered, and is now in a position to enjoy the fruits of his labors, having a pleasant home and valuable estate, all of which has been gained by his own efforts.

THOMAS J. JOHNSON.

Among the old timers of western Nebraska who have been an important factor in the development and growth of that section of the country, the gentleman above named deserves a prominent place. Mr. Johnson is a native of the state of Nebraska, born in Omaha June 25, 1857. His father, Honorable Harrison Johnson, was a native of Hillsboro, Illinois, of old American stock, of Dutch-Irish descent, who lived in Council Bluffs many years, when it was known as Kanessville, prior to moving to Omaha. While here he hauled all the brick used in building the Union Pacific general offices. He served in the legislature of Nebraska, representing Douglas county for two or three terms and was well known in political circles throughout the state, and a leader in the Democratic party in eastern Nebraska. He was an old settler in Brown county, coming here in 1881, taking up a homestead on Plum creek, near Johnstown, where he served as the first postmaster here, at what was called "Evergreen Postoffice." He was one of the men who helped to open up this country for settlement, and run a land locating agency for some years. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Minerva Hambright, was a native of Lexington, Kentucky, where she was reared, educated and married. In a family of ten children our subject was the only one to locate permanently in Brown county, where he and his father and one brother, Harry, settled in 1881. The first named taking up a homestead in section 5, township 30, range 23. There he put up a log house and lived in it for seventeen years, going through the drouth periods and suffering heavy losses through failure of crops, etc., and for three years he supported his family by hunting grouse, deer and other game. He still takes hunting trips into the west and has many trophies to attest his skill with the rifle and fowling piece.

In 1899 Mr. Johnson bought fifty good grade heifers on time, and in this way got a good start after the dry years. The first year after starting in the stock business he raised thirty-six calves, and he now turns off a carload of cattle and one or more of hogs each year, running at the present time from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and sixty head of cattle, one hundred and sixty hogs and thirty horses. He now has a ranch of two thousand four hundred acres, all fenced. Four to five hundred acres of this is cultivated and the rest in grass and hayland, all of which is deeded land except a Kincaid homestead of six hundred and forty acres. A view of the place will be found on another page.

On January 1, 1884, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Lura B. Stevenson, born at Kenton, Ohio, in 1867. She is a daughter of Charles W. Stevenson, an old soldier, carpenter by trade and old settler in Howard county in 1871 and in Brown county, in 1882. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, named as follows: Eva M., Thomas J., Jr., Bessie E., Charles W., William C., Maud L., and Helen G. Mr. Johnson has been a stanch Republican for many years past, and is active in all local party affairs. He is a prominent member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of Johnstown lodge, having been delegate to the state convention at Lincoln, and an alternate to the national convention at Peoria, Illinois, in 1908. Mrs. Johnson and daughters are members of the Royal Neighbors. The family all belong to the United Brethren church of Johnstown, in which they take an active interest.

ALBERT B. PERSINGER.

Albert B. Persinger, one of the leading old settlers of western Nebraska, went to that locality when it was in its most undeveloped state, and has remained to build up a fine property and become recognized as one of the substantial citizens of that part of the country. He resides in Chappel precinct, Deuel county, and is one of the largest landowners in that county, owning and controlling four thousand five hundred acres, in and around section 4, township 14, range 46, Deuel county, and ranges over fifteen thousand acres.

Mr. Persinger was born in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, on May 7, 1851, and lived in his home county up to the age of twenty-five years. During his young manhood he followed newspaper work, and was publisher and editor of several papers in Alabama, among them the Northport Spectator, published at Northport, the Mountain Eagle, published at Jasper, the Birmingham Iron Age, and others. Later on he became agent for the Drake line of steamboats, running from Tuscaloosa to Mobile, and remained at that work for a number of years.

He came west in 1876, locating at first in Weld county, Colorado, where he was engaged in ranching for a time, then came to Sidney, Nebraska, and starting a grocery and grain business, both wholesale and retail, principally for the Black Hills trade, and continued in that enterprise for about five years, building up a good trade, his patrons coming from many miles around. During the early years here Mr. Persinger passed through all the experiences of the western life, meeting with good, bad and indifferent times, but through it all stuck to his purpose and has built up a comfortable home and fortune by his strict business dealings and integrity. On his ranch he runs five hundred head of cattle and fifty horses.

Personally our subject is a genuine western man, broadminded and of good judgment in all respects. He is at present occupying the home ranch alone, his wife having died in 1901. The daughter, Mary E., is the wife of Dr. George H. Searcy, recently located at Spokane, Washington. In political views Mr. Persinger is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in the affairs of his home community, also in state and national politics. He is well up in the Masonic order, holding membership in the blue lodge at Chappel and the chapter and commandery at North Platte.

ANSON NEWBERRY.

This gentleman has worked long and hard, and denied himself many things in days gone by that he might become prosperous and thoroughly oned among the leading citizens of Cherry county, Nebraska, the scene of his early struggles and long labors, where he now holds the esteem of all who know him. Mr. Newberry is now living retired in Cody, where he owns a fine residence and enjoys the comforts and happiness of a pleasant home.

Mr. Newberry is a native of Grant county, Wisconsin, born September 11, 1848. His father, James Newberry, was a farmer of American descent, and our subject was raised in the country where he had plenty of hard farm work to do. At the age of twenty-one he came west, locating in Madison county, Nebraska, taking up some farm land. He put up a sod shanty and lived in this for some time, and remained in that county for thirteen years, going through grasshopper experience and losing three crops through these pests. Mr. Newberry came to Cherry county in 1885, settling along the Niobrara River, southeast of Cody. Here he built a log cabin with a sod roof, and started in the stock business, living on that place for two years.

He went north of Cody, where he lived on a ranch of six hundred and forty acres. He built up this place, putting up good farm buildings, three wells and three windmills, and remained on the ranch up to 1902. He was very successful in his enterprise there, and sold the place for a good sum then moved to Cody, where he bought his present home, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres adjoining the village of Cody, on which he has erected a neat and comfortable dwelling. When Mr. Newberry first came to Cherry county he drove through the country from Madison county with a team and covered wagon, driving a bunch of cattle. He had come all the way from Wisconsin to the latter county in the same way, and so his experience was not altogether new, although they encountered much hardship and discomfort from the mode of travel. When they first struck Madison county the region was swept by a three days' blizzard, a chilly reception, causing them much suffering.

Mr. Newberry was married, in 1871, to Miss Jane Snider, born in Columbus, Ohio. Her father, a native of Germany, came to America when a young man, taking in marriage Julia A. Sears, of Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. Newberry four children have been born, two of whom, John J. and Melve, are living, the remaining two, Julia A. and Laura Belle, having died during childhood.

Mr. Newberry has always been foremost in every enterprise which tended to the development of the resources of the section in which he chose his home, and well merits his high standing and the success which he has attained. In political sentiment he is a Republican, and fraternally affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Modern Woodmen of America.

WILLIAM B. McQUEEN.

William B. McQueen, one of the prominent business men of Hay Springs, Nebraska, is a gentleman of exceptional business ability, and well known throughout Sheridan county as a worthy citizen. Mr. McQueen was born in the south of Scotland in 1855. His father, James McQueen, was a shoemaker who for many years had made the village of Balmaclellan his home and his family of nine children was raised there. Our subject was the fourth member in order of birth, and received a good education, after leaving school going in one of the mercantile establishments in Manchester, England, where he learned the dry goods business thoroughly. He then was employed as a traveling salesman.

for a wholesale dry goods house for some time. In 1881 he left his native land and came to the United States, after landing in New York striking out at once for the west, settling in Neligh, Antelope county, Nebraska. There he taught school, part of the time farmed, and clerked, remaining in that locality up to 1889, and in that year came to Rushville where he helped organize the First National bank. He was made cashier at the beginning and held that position until 1890. He proved up on a homestead in Antelope county, and the family lived in a sod shanty there for some time.

Mr. McQueen first came to Hay Springs in 1890, and was one of the organizers of the Northwestern State bank, with officers as follows: President, Charles Weston; vice-president, L. J. Schill; cashier, William B. McQueen. The bank did a large business from the time of its establishment, and in 1904 erected the home building, which is one of the finest to be found in this section of the country. The front is constructed of South Dakota sand stone, and the style of architecture is especially attractive. It has tile floors, electric burglar alarms, the most modern fixtures and everything is in the very best shape. The clearings for the fall of 1906 amounted to about twenty thousand dollars per day. Capital stock and surplus is forty-five thousand dollars; also connected with the Gordon State bank of Gordon, and the Union bank of Rushville, Nebraska.

Mr. McQueen was married in Scotland June 8, 1881, to Miss Jessie McKeand, and on their wedding day the young couple set out for the new world. Six children have been born to them, namely: Madge, Anna, Josephine, Wilma, Charles W., and Jessie, all of whom were born and raised in Nebraska. Mr. McQueen is a Republican and has always taken an active interest in all local party affairs, attending numerous conventions, although he has never sought any office.

DOLEN & BOWEN.

The above firm, composed of James C. Dolen and T. J. Bowen, are among the prominent residents of Marion township, Franklin county, Nebraska. They are engaged in the ranching business, and own one of the best ranches in the vicinity, consisting of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres, on which they run a large bunch of cattle and hogs. These gentlemen have built up a fine property, and through good management and industry have been most successful in their enterprises here. James C. Dolen was born in Missouri in May, 1858, and came to Gage county, Nebraska, with his father, Benjamin Dolen, in 1863, from Kentucky. When they settled here there was only one house in Beatrice, and very few settlers in the vicinity. The uplands then were not of much account, and the pioneers all settled on the streams, the earth in the higher land showing great cracks from the drouths. Along in the eighties the rains filled all the lagoons and good crops were produced, as they have been in these latter years. Benjamin Dolen was one of the men largely instrumental in building up the locality, and took a prominent part in driving out the Indians from these parts and in the Indian wars here, remaining in Gage county where he farmed up to 1904.

Mr. T. J. Bowen is a native of southern Ohio, born in 1852, and also came to Gage county, settling there in 1895. He had formerly lived in Kansas, where he was in the stock business. He married Miss Harriett Dolen in 1882, and they have a family of four children, named as follows: James and John, who have assisted their father in the work on the ranch, but are now moving to Kansas where they purchased eight hundred acres of land and will start a ranch for themselves. The third son, Shelby, and one daughter Dena will remain with their parents.

Dolen & Bowen located in Franklin county in 1904, buying the Caster ranch from L. P. Whiting, located in the vicinity of section 15, Marion township. This is a splendidly located ranch on the head of Lovely creek, fed by bountiful springs, and with good pasture land for a large herd of cattle. They feed annually about five hundred cattle, and from four to five hundred hogs. In March, 1906, they sold one shipment of three hundred and five cattle, and on the day these were shipped there were thirty-seven carloads sent from Franklin to the different markets, showing what an important live stock center this county is.

The firm has built a nice two-story residence, and have plenty of good barns, hog pens, and all necessary buildings, with all the ranch fenced and cross fenced. They are doing well, and are among the prosperous and progressive citizens of this locality.

F. M. HALL.

F. M. Hall, familiarly known as "Matt" by his intimate friends and associates, is one of the representative farmers and ranchmen of Sioux county, Nebraska, and a prominent old timer of that region. His home is on section 32, township 33, range 55, and he is a gentleman of sterling character, and well merits the rich measure of success which has come to him by virtue of his industry and good management.

Mr. Hall is a native of Hardin county, Iowa, born in 1867, on a farm. His father, Samuel Hall, was of American stock, a farmer all his life. Our subject was raised in his native county until he was nine years of age, when the family settled in Webster county, Iowa, where he grew to manhood, receiving a limited schooling, and putting in all his time on the home farm. In 1887 they came to Sioux county, Nebraska, our subject being nineteen years of age, settling in Hat Creek valley, where the father filed on a homestead and tree claim, and Matt assisted in developing the place into a good farm. Their first dwelling after locating here was a tent, in which they spent several months, then they made a dugout, next a slab house, and finally put up a comfortable log house. Our subject started out for himself about 1893, taking a homestead on which he proved up in due time, and later filed on Kincaid homestead situated in section 32, township 33, range 55, where he has built up a good home. He spent two years in Missouri, engaged in farming, making the journey from Nebraska to that state with a team and covered wagon, and returning to Sioux county in the same way in 1896. He has steadily improved his ranch since that time, adding more land to his original claim, so he is now proprietor of one thousand four hundred acres, all fenced, with one hundred acres irrigated, and plenty of hay, alfalfa and pasture. He has put up all good buildings, and has a splendid supply of running water from Spring creek, which runs through the ranch. His chief business is stock raising, in which he has met with remarkable success.

Mr. Hall married, in 1893, Sarah Rickard, whose father, Lewis Rickard, is a well-known farmer and an old settler in this county. Her mother's maiden name was Elizabeth McMillan. Seven children have been born to our subject and his estimable wife, named as follows: Nellie, Floyd, Frank and Edward, living, and Claire, Ralph and Ruth, deceased.

Mr. Hall takes an active interest in all local and neighborhood affairs, and has held the office of county surveyor for four years. He is a Republican politically, and lends his influence for good government.

EPHRAIM H. CANNON.

The gentleman above named, residing in Phelps county, is one of the most intelligent and industrious farmers whose methods have helped in a marked degree to the success of the industry.

to make western Nebraska farming a success, and consequently, to enhance the value of all lands in his own and other sections of the state. Mr. Cannon comes of thrifty and energetic stock, the Cannons having settled in North Carolina in the early days, later in Kentucky and next to Missouri, then Alabama, where our subject was born. When he was an infant his parents moved to Illinois, where he grew up and received his education. As a young man he followed farming for twenty years, residing on eighty acres in Logan county, Illinois, and it was there he learned that work and plenty of it goes with the making of good crops; that shallow ploughing will produce better crops of winter wheat, also corn, than deep ploughing, as the first four inches contains the richness and substance of the soil, and if one turns up the deep layers the grain is started in the poorer soil with the best hidden below. When the root first leaves the kernel it is strong and pointed, and will burrow into the hard subsoil, and if there is too great a depth of loose soil the root becomes softer so it will not penetrate the subsoil but sprout out on top of it, hence, becomes an easy prey to drouth.

Comparing his twenty years of farming in Illinois with the same period here, Mr. Cannon would not exchange his acres here for the same land there, where in Logan county it is selling for $150 to $200 per acre, and as for a place in which to bring up his family, he states that Nebraska is far ahead of Illinois. Tenants who were tenants there twenty years ago are still in the same condition, and no better off than they were then, and many are worse off. Three years ago Mr. Cannon paid a visit back to his old home, and saw three section men working on the railway at $1.15 per day, who twenty years ago were renters and with the high price of land there young men have no chance, and even the sons of rich farmers were glad to clerk or get a job on the railway, as they cannot buy land and do not wish to start at the bottom but like to keep up in the style their parents have reared them in. On the other hand, every one of the farmers who came to Phelps county at the time our subject did are now rich men, owning farms worth from $8,000 to $30,000, and have reached a success here they could never have attained had they remained in Illinois. In 1886 Mr. Cannon paid $2,250 for the one hundred and sixty acres he now lives on, and $4,000 for the adjoining one hundred and sixty acres, and today could easily get $32,000 for the land but has no desire to sell. It is as fine a farm as any one could wish for, and he has a fine resi-barns, orchard and grove as there is in this part of the country, with every convenience known to modern farming, and it is situated only three miles from Holdrege. He has raised a good many thoroughbred cattle, and has done a great deal of feeding all the time. He is now enabled to enjoy the ease and comfort of an industrious, well-spent life surrounded by a family of ten children and a host of warm friends. Mrs. Cannon died in 1903, greatly mourned by her devoted family, and they had the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in their sad loss. There are the following children in the family: A. S., C. W., and J. H. Cannon, who are following in their father's footsteps, and own nice farms of their own; A. B. Cannon is now renting a farm, but intends buying one soon; Frank O. and Roscoe are both at home assisting their father on the farm. The daughters are Katie, Mrs. E. F. Moon; Nellie, now married; Mary, now married, and Minnie, all at home.

MILO CORBIN.

Milo Corbin, who holds an enviable place in the farming community in the vicinity of section 2, township 31, range 55, in Sioux county, has done his full share in the development of western Nebraska since locating here and has become widely known as a prosperous agriculturist and a gentleman of sterling character.

Mr. Corbin was born in Knox county, Illinois, in 1876. His father, John Corbin, was a farmer and followed that occupation during his lifetime. He married Emeline Carroll. Both are now deceased, and the couple were among the early settlers and homesteaders in Sioux county, where our subject was raised and educated, remaining with his parents and assisting in the farm work during his young manhood. They went through regular pioneer experiences and suffered from hardships and privations which fell to the lot of the early settlers in this region, and on account of being unable to raise any crops during the first several years they were forced into the stock business and were very successful along that line of work. In 1897 Milo left home and started for himself, filing on a homestead on which he proved up in due time, and remained on that place up to 1905, then came to his present location, which is situated eight miles east of Harrison, in section 2, township 31, range 55, and is now owner of three hundred and sixty acres, all good farm and ranch land.

He has improved it in good shape, putting up good buildings, fences, etc., and engages principally in the cattle and horse raising business.

Mr. Corbin is numbered among the well-to-do young farmers of his locality, and has gained his possessions through his own unaided efforts, by dint of industry and good management. During the early years he worked out as a freighter, making many trips into the Black Hills, also worked in the mines and on the range as a cowboy, going through all the experiences of a frontiersman, camping out on the plains in all sorts of weather, etc.

In 1901 Mr. Corbin was married to Minnie Phillips. She is a daughter of Jacob Phillips and Lavina (Shinn) Phillips, who were among the earliest settlers in Kansas. Her father still lives in Kansas, but her mother is dead. Mr. Corbin and his good wife have a family of five sons, sturdy fellows, who bid fair to become as good farmers and energetic ranchmen as their father. They are: Clarence, aged seven years; Ralph, aged six years; Cecil, five years; Melvin, aged two years, and Orvel, aged six months.

Mr. Corbin is thoroughly up-to-date in his methods of farming and operating his ranch, and is also popular in his community as a genial associate and worthy citizen. In political sentiments he stands firmly for the Republican party.

GEORGE P. BOARDMAN.

Among the younger residents of Keith county who have come to the front in a remarkable manner through industry and faithful effort, the gentleman above mentioned holds a prominent place. Mr. Boardman is engaged in the mercantile business at Paxton and is a young man of more than ordinary ability, highly esteemed by all with whom he comes in contact.

George P. Boardman was born in Lake county, California, June 2, 1880. His father, Oscar T. Boardman, was of American birth, a school teacher by profession; his wife was Viola Lapham in maidenhood. Our subject grew up in California, the family living in a number of different localities during his boyhood, much of his time being spent on a farm. He came to Paxton, Nebraska, in 1899, and worked as a clerk for two years, then attended Hastings Business College, and returning to the town resided for six years on a homestead northwest of Paxton. "BAR S CROSS" RANCH, RESIDENCE OF GEORGE W. BURGE.
Section 4, Township 32, Range 30, Cherry County, Nebraska.

1908 he bought his present mercantile establishment, carries a complete line of goods and has built up a successful trade. He takes an active interest in all local affairs and has done much to aid in the upbuilding of the commercial resources of the section.

Mr. Boardman was married June 17, 1902, to Miss Grace Rice, a native of Springfield, Massachusetts, daughter of Elisha Rice, deceased, a prominent old settler in Keith county, whose sketch appears in this volume on another page. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Boardman—Dorothea, Deborah and Terry, the two youngest deceased. The family have a pleasant home and are among the well liked residents of their community. Mr. Boardman is a Republican in politics and a member of the Presbyterian church at Hastings.

GEORGE W. BURGE.

George W. Burge, who may be found at home on section 4, township 32, range 30, is one of the leading ranchmen of Cherry county, Nebraska, and has more than local standing as a farmer, stock dealer and a general business man of acknowledged ability and trustworthiness. He has made his way to the front by industry, thrift and honesty, common and familiar, but as necessary today as ever.

Mr. Burge was born on a farm in Fulton county, Indiana, September 12, 1865. His father, John Burge, was a very successful stock buyer and farmer and removed to Custer county, Nebraska, in 1880, where he died in June, 1907. He married Polly Phipps, a native of Indiana, on the banks of the Tippecanoe river. She died in Indiana in 1879, before the family moved west.

George W. Burge was the third child out of a family of seven children born to his parents, and was reared on the old Indiana farm, where he became thoroughly familiar with hard work and ready to apply himself to any respectable labor. His education was secured in the common schools of his native community, and was supplemented by a wide and keen observation of men and affairs. Starting out in life for himself when only fifteen years of age, he was employed in a printing office at Westerville, Nebraska, for two years which was published the Custer County office er. His next work was clerking in which he was engaged at the time marriage in 1885 to Miss Agnes Steadman of James S. and Katherine (Stuart) Boardman.

They were old settlers in Cherry county, and are familiar figures at the gatherings of the pioneer settlers, few having been here prior to their coming. Mr. and Mrs. Burge are the parents of a family of four children: Gordon, Kathryn, Ruth and Arleen. For three years after his marriage George W. Burge and his father were engaged in a general mercantile business; the son retired and went into farming. He had already secured a tree claim in Cherry county, and to this he added a homestead entry in 1888. On the homestead he made a sod house which served as the home for the family until after he proved up in due season. About 1892 he bought a farm on Wamaduzza creek, which he later sold and came to his present location in 1902. Here he has a Kincaid homestead of four hundred and twenty acres, together with some fourteen hundred acres of deeded land fronting for three miles on the Niobrara river. Two hundred acres are under cultivation—four hundred acres in hay land, one hundred and fifty acres in native forest and the rest in range. The entire place is fenced and well improved. He has a substantial and attractive dwelling, supplied with running water and other buildings of superior character. There is a promising orchard of one hundred apple trees, with various kinds of small fruits growing on the place. He has on his ranch some six hundred head of cattle, with the necessary supply of other stock. He is a Republican in his political affiliations, being a frequent delegate to the county conventions of his party. When the postoffice near the mouth of the Snake river was established in 1903 the department elected to name it in honor of Mr. Burge. A fine view of the family residence will be found on another page.

GEORGE W. BEAMER.

George W. Beamer, one of the leading citizens and old settlers of Cherry county, Nebraska, resides in La Vaca precinct, where he has a fine farm and home.

Mr. Beamer is a native of Erie, Pennsylvania, born January 24, 1850. His father, also George Beamer, was born in Bavaria, Germany, and came to America at the age of twelve years, settling at Erie, Pennsylvania, coming to Fayette county, Missouri, in 1854. There were ten children in his parents' family, of whom George was the eldest, and the age of twenty-two he started out for himself, following farming in Kansas and county, Missouri, living most of the time in Kansas before locating in Nebraska. In 1887 he settled on the place which he still occupies, in section 31, township 31, range 37. He has a section of deeded land adjoining the Kincaid homestead of three hundred and twenty acres, half of this large tract being good farm land and the balance in hills, devoted to hay and pasture land. When he came here he had practically no capital to start with, and walked from Gordon to where he staked his claim, the first year using a cow and a horse as a team with which to haul sod and rock with which to build his house, and he was obliged to haul all the water for the household supply from a distance of two miles. He had a hard time in getting started, and met with a sad misfortune in the death of one daughter just one week after moving into their new sod house. The dry years caught him when he was trying to get ahead and this kept him back considerably, as his crops failed and he also went through the grasshopper raids the first year he settled here. He now owns a fine piece of property and is well satisfied with what he has done since locating here, and glad he stuck to it.

Mr. Beamer was married July 4, 1874, to Miss Luella Graham, a native of Sigourney, Keokuk county, Iowa, born in 1856. To Mr. and Mrs. Beamer the following children have been born: William, Estella (deceased) and Clara.

During the years Mr. Beamer spent in Kansas he saw harder times than he ever saw in Nebraska, and thinks this country far ahead of any place in which he has ever lived. He is a strong Bryan man, and first, last and always has been a free trader and states that he would be more than satisfied if he could see William J. Bryan at the head of the nation.

WILLIAM A. JAMISON.

William A. Jamison, one of the pioneers of this locality, who came to Brown county when it was in the first stages of its development, has by his praiseworthy example and honest dealings with all with whom he came in contact, become known throughout the community in which he resides as a citizen of true worth. Mr. Jamison was born in Le Clair, Iowa, January 27, 1861. His father, William W. Jamison, was a miller by trade, who married Wealthy Ann Pike, of German ancestry. Our subject is the second member in a family of six children, and came to Nebraska with his parents in 1867, the family settling as pioneers in Saunders county, where his father took a homestead, living there until 1875. They then moved to Linwood, Nebraska, where the father worked at his trade in a mill at that point in order to support his family. At the age of sixteen our subject started out for himself, following farm work for the next seven years. In 1884 he came to Brown county, locating on a homestead in section 6, township 31, range 21. Here his first dwelling was a log stable which he built himself, and in which he lived until he was able to put up a better house. He had nothing to start with, and went through many hard times in getting his home established, but he worked faithfully, remaining on this homestead for six years, then moved two miles south to another farm, on which he lived for four years. Here the dry years struck him and he lost everything and found himself eight hundred dollars worse off than nothing when he stopped to figure up, so he gave up this place and in 1895 moved to his present farm in section 32, township 32, range 21, starting all over again. He went to work with a will, good crops came to reward his labors, and he has since had good success in all his undertakings. His farm, fronting two miles on Niobrara river, now consists of two thousand six hundred acres, all adjoining, with good buildings and all improvements necessary to facilitate in the operation of a model farm. A thousand acres are under cultivation, on which he raises bountiful crops of wheat, rye, oats, corn, millet and alfalfa, besides quantities of prairie hay. He engages in mixed farming and stock raising, of which he has made a pronounced success. When he first came to Brown county he drove here with a team and covered wagon containing his household goods, spending three weeks on the road, being subjected to many hardships and privations on the way. After starting he had bad luck and became heartily discouraged and was about to leave the country, but determined to give it another trial, and now he is very glad that he decided to remain, as he has done better here than he might have at any other place.

Mr. Jamison was married in Cass county, Nebraska, February 14, 1884, to Miss Ella Osborn, born at Eight-mile Grove, near Plattsmouth, Nebraska, April 29, 1862. Her father, Mansfield Osborn, who married Polly Russell, was a farmer and one of the early settlers in Nebraska, and among those who helped drive the Indians out of that part of the state. He had also seen service in the United States army, and was honorably discharged at Fort Randall, Nebraska, settling in eastern Nebraska about 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Jamison are the parents of four children, who are named as follows: Irvin H., Malvin, Olive A. and Dell K., all born and reared in Brown county, Nebraska. The family is highly respected and enjoys a wide acquaintance in the community in which they reside. Mr. Jamison is universally esteemed as a friend and associate, and well deserves his enviable reputation as a citizen. Politically he is a Democrat and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America camp at Ainsworth. A picture of Mr. Jamison's place will be found on another page of this volume.

SAMUEL M. WOODWARD.

Samuel M. Woodward, proprietor of a fine farm in Cherry county, Nebraska, is one of the oldest settlers in his locality, and has been closely identified with the development of the agricultural resources of this region. His fine estate bespeaks thrift and prosperity, and he is classed among the progressive and energetic farmers of his community, and well merits his high standing as a citizen.

Mr. Woodward was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, November 28, 1848, and reared there until he was twenty-one years of age. His father, Louis B. Woodward, was a native of Illinois, and he was a steamboat captain, running from Pittsburg to St. Louis. His mother was Miss Matilda McMillan, a native of Pennsylvania. Our subject is the younger of two children, and struck out for himself at the age of fourteen years. His father's death occurred at this time, and he was compelled to help support the family. His first employment was in a rolling mill, and the next few years were spent in this work and running machinery in a big box and trunk factory and planing mill. In 1869 he came to Columbus, Nebraska, and after a time there he went into Butler county and settled on section 18, township 16, range 2, remaining here until 1885 engaged in farming. He was one of the earliest settlers there, and when he landed there he paid the Union Pacific railway ten cents a mile for transportation. The nearest trading point at that time was Schuyler, Colfax county. In 1885 he came to Cherry county and took up his present farm as a homestead. Besides this he was entitled to eighty acres which he afterwards took up, and has since added to it until he now owns eight hundred and twenty acres of land, including five hundred and sixty acres of homestead land. Part of this is hay land, and much of it can be cultivated. This farm is located in sections 5, 6 and 7, township 33, range 40, Cherry county. He is engaged principally in the stock business and keeps about seventy-five head of cattle and ten horses. A view of the residence and surroundings is shown on another page in this work. He was never affected very much by the drouth periods, as he was not at that time engaged in farming to any great extent, but while still in Butler county for five straight years he lost nearly all his crops through the grasshopper raids, and it took him some time to recover from the loss he sustained by these pests.

In 1873 Mr. Woodward was married to Miss Minerva Witherbe, of Welsh descent, born in Iowa. They have one son, Avery M., who is now assayer for the Homestake Mining Company at Lead City, South Dakota. This son married Margaret Phillips, of Salt Lake City, and they have one daughter named Irene. Avery M. Woodward is prominent in musical circles, is leader of the orchestra and secretary of the Black Hills Musical Association.

Mr. Woodward takes an active interest in local affairs and has served as assessor for about fourteen years, and was census enumerator in 1900. In political faith he is an active Republican.

WINFIELD SCOTT.

Winfield Scott, who enjoys a pleasant home and owns a valuable farm in section 21, township 22, range 15, Garfield county, is one of the well known old residents of this part of the state of Nebraska. He has gained an enviable reputation as a progressive farmer and worthy citizen, and is highly esteemed for his strict integrity and honest dealings by all with whom he has had to do.

Mr. Scott was born near Sterling, Illinois, in 1859, where he lived on a farm until he was a boy of nine years, the family then emigrating to Iowa, settling in Fremont county. There he grew to manhood, assisting his parents in carrying on the farm, and in this way gained a thorough knowledge of agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Scott came to Nebraska in 1883, homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres of land in Garfield county, later bought one hundred and twenty acres adjoining, and has lived here ever since, devoting all his time and energy to the development of his farm and building up his home. He spent but a short time in Iowa. He raises oats, corn, wheat and rye, and is also engaged to some extent stock raising, dealing mostly in cattle and hogs. During the first years here he experienced his greatest difficulty in getting sufficient water, but several years since he has had deep wells dug, and now has a splendid supply of good clear water for his domestic and farming purposes. One well is one hundred and forty-seven feet deep, which is much less than the average depth of the wells in his locality, and from this he obtains all the water he can use. Mr. Scott is of the opinion that this is the best state for the man with limited capital to settle in, as his chances for success are much greater than in the east, where the land is much higher and the cost of living greatly increased. He has never had a total failure of crops, and there has not been a season in which he did not make some money, although, of course, some years were much more successful than others, but taking it altogether, one year with another, he has received a fair average crop. When he landed in Nebraska he was a poor man, but he has worked hard, and through good business judgment in his ventures he is now in comfortable circumstances, and is positive that had he remained in the east all his life he could not have accumulated the property that he has in the west. Mr. Scott is a plain, everyday farmer, well read and intelligent, and takes especial pride in his home life and is well thought of by all who know him.

In 1887 Mr. Scott was married to Miss Edna Watson, born and raised in Nebraska, a daughter of C. F. and Malinda (Williams) Watson, who came to Nebraska in 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Scott are the parents of six children, who are named as follows: Bertha, Wallace, Walter, Hiram, Edith and Jesse, who form a most interesting and intelligent group. In political sentiment Mr. Scott is a Republican but has never devoted much time to politics or held any office.

SAMUEL A. WINSLOW.

The gentleman above named, numbered among the leading old timers of western Nebraska, resides on his fine farm in section 35, township 35, range 35. Mr. Winslow was born in the town of Fremont, Sullivan county, New York, December 3, 1841. His father, Moses Winslow, was a farmer, musician and stone mason, who followed all three pursuits at times, and died when our subject was a boy, leaving a family of nine children, he being the eighth member in order of birth. He assisted in the support of the family until twenty years of age, then enlisted in Company H, Fifty-sixth New York volunteer infantry, and was sent south with his regiment, going first to Washington. This was in the spring of 1861, and later in the spring of 1862 he saw service with the army of the Potomac, taking part in a number of engagements, beginning at Savage Station and ending at Malvern Hill. In the same year he was taken sick, having contracted typhoid fever, securing his discharge from service, went to Wyoming, Jones county, Iowa, where he followed farming for a time. In 1883 Mr. Winslow moved to Charles Mix county, South Dakota, where he settled on a homestead, living in a sod shanty and going through pioneer experiences until he had paid out on his claim, returning his homestead rights. He remained there for five years; then came to Nebraska and located in Cherry county, taking a homestead along the Niobrara river. Here he built a log house and lived for fifteen years, building up a good home and farm, and in 1903 sold out and located on his present farm, in section 35, township 35, range 35. When he took this place it was excepting a sod hut, entirely unimproved land, and he went to work establishing a home, erecting good buildings, fences, etc. His ranch contains about eight hundred acres, one hundred and sixty acres of which is meadow land, and all under fence. He has one of the best farm houses to be found in this section of the country, beautifully finished and double plastered, with the outside cellar of arched stone. In 1908 he erected a commodious barn which, with other buildings, makes his farm equipment complete.

Mr. Winslow was married in Iowa November 11, 1869, to Miss Addie Miller, daughter of John T. and Charlotte (Morris) Miller. Three children have blessed this union, named as follows: Len, Cora M., wife of Charles O. Goodrich, and Fred M., and Mr. and Mrs. Winslow are grandparents of twelve children.

Mr. Winslow has served his community as justice of the peace and acted as precinct committeeman for the Republican party for some years. He is with his family a member of the Methodist church.

GEORGE W. MESSENGER.

To be called a "leading old settler" is much praise to accord a citizen of any community, and this term when applied to the gentleman herein named, means more than is ordinarily meant when applying the term. Mr. Messenger has been a resident of western Nebraska for the past twenty-five years, and has built up a valuable estate and incidentally gained an enviable reputation as a successful agriculturist and worthy citizen. He resides in section 4, township 32, range 47, where he enjoys a comfortable home and pleasant surroundings.

Mr. Messenger was born in Knox county, Ohio, in 1833, on a farm. His father, William H., was a native of Ohio, a mechanic by trade, and later became a pioneer in Iowa, where his death occurred near Weldon, in Washington county. Our subject grew up on a farm in Ohio, where he early learned to do all sorts of hard farm work, going from Ohio to Madison county, Wisconsin, staging across the latter state to Galena City, then down the river to Muscatine and again staging to Iowa City, as that was the mode of transportation at that time, railroads not being so much in evidence in those days as at present. There he went through pioneer experiences with his parents, and became thoroughly familiar with the frontiersman's life. He learned the carpenter's trade and followed that work from the time he was a mere boy, working as a cabinetmaker, furniture manufacturer, also as a millwright and wagonmaker at different times. He still has a number of farming tools which he uses that were made with his own hands while doing carpenter work in Iowa. In the spring of 1885 he moved to Dawes county, Nebraska, settling at Bordeaux station, and lived there for a few years following his trade. He bought his present farm, where he began as a stock raiser and ranchman, putting up his own buildings, house, barns, etc., and devoted all his time to improving his place. His ranch now consists of about twelve quarter sections of land, largely in hay and pasture, and he has every convenience for the proper operation of his farm. He has built a fine house, planned and executed by himself, of commodious size, the new addition being thirty by sixteen while the older wing is thirty by fourteen, fitted with every convenience, and it is the best built ranch house in the county. At the head of the ranch near Bordeaux creek is a spring which he has stoned up, and as this is very near the house, makes one of the finest clear water springs in the locality.

Mr. Messenger's ranch is one of the finest in Dawes county, all in the best possible shape, supplied with plenty of timber, fruits, such as apples, cherries, pears and small fruits, also different nut-bearing trees—walnuts, chestnuts, etc. He has a park on his place in which is a herd of eleven elk which he keeps as a curiosity, and they attract many visitors to the ranch. While Mr. Messenger lived at Bordeaux station he was engaged in different enterprises, buying and shipping large quantities of wood, etc.

In February, 1860, Mr. Messenger was united in marriage to Miss Anna Barrows, daughter of a prominent merchant at Windham, Johnson county, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Messenger are the parents of three children, two of whom, Orval and Edyth, are living, while William died in 1895.

Our subject is an Independent voter, always supporting the best man up for office.

ANDREW BERGMAN.

Andrew Bergman, who was born in Sweden in 1852 and is now living in peace and plenty on his handsome and well appointed farm in Kimball county, Nebraska, is well entitled to the rich measure of success that has come to him through hard work and thrift. He has worked hard and faithfully for years and is now reaping the legitimate reward of honest effort and industry.

Mr. Bergman grew to the age of thirty years in his native land, coming to America in the summer of 1882, locating first in Brooklyn, New York, where for three years he followed his trade of stair building. He came to Nebraska in the spring of 1885, and took up a homestead on section 18, township 16, range 54, also filed on a tree claim, and immediately began improving the place. He lived on his old homestead for some time, then purchased railroad land and ranched for a time. He was one of the first settlers in this part of Cheyenne county, now Kimball county, and his intention was to build up a good farm, in which he has succeeded admirably. He put down the first well in the locality, passed through all the early Nebraska times, often meeting with losses and failure of crops, but stuck to his original purpose, and is now prosperous, and one of the most highly esteemed men of his county. He has fifty acres of his farm cultivated, raising good crops, and runs a large bunch of cattle and horses, being one of the old-time stockmen of the section. In 1907 our subject came to his old homestead and erected a new house and built up a good home. During the first years our subject lived on his homestead he got only two crops in nine years. He had never put his hand to a plow or even put harness on a horse before he settled on his farm, having spent his time previous to this working at his trade. He had only four hundred and fifty dollars with which to make his start, but he has done well at ranching and has made a success. He had but one young cow when he started ranching and from that small start he has raised all his herd. For the past ten years he has sold on an average of one carload of cattle each year. In 1907 he sold one hundred and twenty-five head of full grown cattle and fifty-seven calves, these being mostly the offspring of his first cow.

May 4, 1883, Mr. Bergman married Hannah Sjoblom in Brooklyn, New York. Miss Sjoblom was a native of Sweden, coming to America the preceding year. She was the third daughter in a family of four girls. Her parents came to America in 1887 and both died on our subject's homestead here. Mr. and Mrs. Bergman are the parents of seven living children, namely: Edwin A., Eric D., Elmer O., Carl E., Clarence Grant, Mabel Florence and Jessie G., all living at home. Two sons, Eric D. and Elmer O., are teachers in the public schools of their county, and all are most interesting and intelligent children.

Mr. Bergman is a loyal Republican and takes a commendable interest in the affairs of his community.

H. D. WOLF.

H. D. Wolf occupies a foremost place among the energetic and prosperous farmers of Deuel county, where he owns a valuable estate. He has developed this farm by energetic labors supplemented by honest dealings, and is one of the highly esteemed men of his community. Mr. Wolf has passed through all the early Nebraska times, and is widely known through the western part of the state as having done much toward the upbuilding of the agricultural and commercial interests of the region.

Our subject was born in Germany on April 11th, 1849, making that his home until he was twenty-three years of age. He was the second member in a family of seven children, three of whom later came to America. His father and mother spent their entire lives on their native country, both now being deceased. He left Germany in 1872, coming directly to North Platte, Nebraska, after landing in this country, and lived in Lincoln county for one year, then went to Julesburg, Colorado, and was connected with the Union Pacific Railroad company there, also at North Platte, Ogallala and other points in the state, coming to what was then called Cheyenne county (now Deuel county), in the spring of 1878. He was in the employ of the Union Pacific Railway Company for about nine years, working as section foreman for the greater part of that time.

Mr. Wolf finally homesteaded on section 18, township 13, range 45, proved up on his claim, and has since removed to section 17, which is his present location. He has acquired a ranch containing two thousand seven hundred acres, and is engaged principally in the stock business, running three hundred head of cattle, and about sixty horses. He farms fifty acres, raising some grain, etc., and has large tracts of hayland and pasture for his stock. He has a complete set of substantial ranch buildings and improvements of all kinds. Mr. Wolf is classed among the oldest cattlemen in the western part of Nebraska, as there were but very few ranches started in the region when he located here. He is one of the genuine old-timers, and is numbered among the wealthy and progressive men of the locality. Mr. Wolf was married at North Platte in 1875, to Mary Erickson, who was born in Germany, and came to America about 1869. They have an interesting family of six children, named as follows: Edward C., married and living at Big Springs, Nebraska; Frank H., married, residing at the same place; Dora A. and Nettie I., both at home; Minnie, wife of Robert McGrave, living in Big Springs, and Ella M., now Mrs. F. H. Hendrickson, living at Chappell.

Our subject takes an active interest in local affairs, and is a member of the school board in district No. 7. A portrait of Mr. Wolf will be found on another page of this volume.

ALBRO L. HODGE.

Albro L. Hodge, one of the prominent early settlers in western Nebraska, is proprietor of an extensive farm in section 19, township 32, range 51, Dawes county, who has been an important factor in the development of the financial resources of his region and is widely and favorably known throughout that section. He is an active public-spirited citizen and his services to his county in many matters have been invaluable and of such a character as to be universally appreciated by all.

Mr. Hodge was born in Lee county, Illinois, in 1856, on a farm seventy-five miles from Chicago. He is of American blood, and his father, Andrew J. Hodge, was a farmer by occupation. When our subject was nine years of age the family moved to Shenandoah, Page county, Iowa, where they settled on a farm and lived there for eight years, he working at home, and afterwards ran a bus line for a time. He also was employed by the American & Pacific Express Companies for five years, and ran on express routes from Burlington to Council Bluffs. In the spring of 1887 he came to Dawes county, Nebraska, landing here on March 23d, and located forty miles south of Crawford, in Box Butte county, where he lived for two years proving up on a pre-emption. He built a sod house and went through pioneer experience, the country being but thinly settled and neighbors were few and far between. He next moved to a farm south of Glehn, Sioux county, on Deep creek, and remained on it for nine years, starting with no capital but his strong hands and willing heart, and succeeded in building up a good home and farm, which he sold at the end of that time for five thousand dollars. He engaged extensively in stock raising and mixed farming, and at one time had a whole township fenced. About 1901 he bought his present farm of three hundred and twenty acres in Dawes county, located in section 19, township 32, range 51, paying for the land one thousand dollars, and it is now worth many thousands. He has this rented out at present, and lives on his "Kincaid" in Sioux county. He has two hundred and ten acres irrigated and the place in A-1 shape, with good house, barns, granary, etc., all put up by himself as it was entirely unimproved property when he purchased it. He has been burned out twice, at one time losing his barn, and the other his house and furniture, and this was a serious set-back to him. He has had his share of pioneering, having opened up four different farms, and knows well the little discouragements that come to the settler in a new country, but has never given up, and his present prosperity is evidence of his determination and perseverance. Mr. Hodge now lives on his Kincaid homestead in Sioux county, two miles south of Glen postoffice, which he is improving rapidly with buildings; has a large saw mill on the place and quite a lot of fine timber. He has been active in local affairs in his community, and taken an active interest in politics, being an Independent voter.

In 1888 our subject was married to Miss Gertrude A. Miller, daughter of Benjamin H. and Lucy Paine Miller, who were old settlers in Dawes county, and who owned and operated a fine farm there for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Hodge are the parents of five children, who are named as follows: Addie, Russell, Hazel, Myrona and Grant. The family are highly esteemed in their community, and have a host of warm friends.

H. E. CULBERTSON.

Among the highly respected and industrious residents of the city of McCook may be mentioned the name of H. E. Culbertson, master mechanic of the McCook Division of eight hundred miles of railway, from Hastings, Nebraska, to Denver, Colorado, comprising the Nebraska and Kansas branches, one of the longest on the system. Mr. Culbertson was appointed in September, 1906, and is a thoroughly capable official.

Mr. Culbertson is a native of Chicago, born in 1871. He is a son of Christian Culbertson, who came to the United States from Norway about the year 1865. He was raised in Chicago until about nine years ago, and came to Nebraska in 1881, the family locating at Hastings, Adams county. He was left an orphan at the age of six years and has made his own way in the world since he was nine years old, always having lived among strangers and never knowing the blessing of a parent's love from that tender age. He started in the railroad business in 1892. He began with the Burlington & Missouri railway, working as machinist helper, and from that obtained the position as night round-house foreman, following this for four years, then went to firing for the road. Next he was a locomotive engineer for five years between Hastings and Denver. He always took a deep interest in the work and devoted his entire attention to whatever he was engaged in doing, educating himself for better positions as he went along. He now holds the record as the youngest man in railway circles occupying the position of master mechanic. Every item in the way of mechanical operation is under the master mechanic's direction, and this includes engines of all kinds,—steam, gas, and electrical. For about two years he was road foreman of engines for the McCook division under R. B. Archibald, up to 1906, when he was appointed to his present position. He was general secretary for the B. L. E., of the C. B. & Q. Ry.'s entire system for the years 1905-6, and is a prominent member of the B. L. E. at this point. He is a young man of the right kind of ambition, full of his work and conscientious in its accomplishment, and one who when in one position studies diligently to fit himself for the next step which opportunity offers. Hence, with each of his rapid advancements he has filled the place with all his energy and industry, natural and acquired ability. He is ever of a pleasant and obliging disposition, which makes him popular with his superiors and beloved by those who are under him without any attempt on his part, for he is frank, just and straightforward in every action, looking every matter and man in the eye with courage and confidence which win him every battle. He is a young man who wins the eye and thoughts of those who are head of great concerns, and who recognize right stuff when they see it.

Mr. Culbertson was married in 1894 to Miss Eva Way, daughter of J. S. Way, of Hastings, Nebraska, a pioneer settler of Adams county, Nebraska, locating there in 1872, where he engaged in farming and stock raising. He was very successful in both undertakings, and became one of the leading men in his community, serving his county as supervisor on the county board for some years. He came west from Pennsylvania with his wife, also a native of that state, and they now reside at San Dimas. Mr. and Mrs. Culbertson have four children, namely: Harvey, Henry and Harold and Eva. The family is highly respected, and have a host of friends and acquaintances, and a pleasant and comfortable home. They are members of the M. E. church, and well liked in religious and social circles in their community. Mr. Culbertson is a member of the Maccabees in McCook, and takes a commendable interest in all educational and political matters.

He sailed from Bremen Haven and after a voyage of two weeks, landed in New York, January 16, 1868. He first settled in Chicago, remaining there ten years where he was employed by the Burlington railroad; he then went to Champaign county, Illinois, spending about two years on the John Alexander farm. From Champaign county he went to the southern part of the state and later he took a trip to Memphis, remaining there but ten days, and returning to Chicago, he again entered the employ of the Burlington, and remained one year.

He made a trip to Nebraska in 1875, and was very much impressed with the conditions existing, but did not permanently take up his residence here until 1877, first locating in Saline county, and ten years later came to Cheyenne county, arriving in April of that year. He filed on a homestead in section 24, township 13, range 48, and has made that his home ever since, constantly improving his farm and adding to his acreage, so that he is now proprietor of over one thousand two hundred acres of good farm and range land. He has three hundred and twenty acres under cultivation, and runs a large herd of cattle and horses. He has done exceedingly well since coming here, and is considered one of the well-to-do and progressive citizens of his section. His ranch is well supplied with good buildings of every description, and all necessary improvements. Mr. Vacik was married in Chicago, October 11, 1874, to Mary Cervenka, who was born in Bohemia on the 4th day of July, 1854, and came to America with her parents in 1868; her father, Paul Cervenka, married Annie Skopeckova, and is now living in Saline county, Nebraska. #### JOSHUA CROSS.

The above named gentleman has for the past quarter of a century been closely identified with the farming and commercial interests of the western part of the state of Nebraska, and has watched the development and growth of this section from the early days. He resides in Bassett precinct, Rock county, where he has built up a pleasant, comfortable home through his energetic efforts and strict integrity.

Mr. Cross is a native of England, born on the north coast of Yorkshire in the fall of 1857. He is the sixth member of his father's family of twelve children, and was reared on his father's farm, where he was obliged to do all kinds of hard farm work. On reaching the age of twenty-three he left home and started out for himself, embarking at Liverpool on the Simasia for the new world, and after a voyage of nine days, landed in Quebec, whence he came across the border and west to Bureau county, Illinois; here he remained for one and a half years, working out on farms, after which he went to Cass county, Iowa, and farmed there for three years. He was not satisfied with conditions there, and moving to Nebraska, locating in Rock county in 1884, where he settled on a pre-emption in section 35, township 30, range 19. Here he built a shanty and batched it for a short time, then married. Soon after starting on this farm he was burned out, losing his barn, filled with hay, a corn crib, some hogs and about one hundred and twenty chickens. This was a serious drawback to him, and it was some time before he recovered from this loss. Then he took a homestead in section 34, his present location, and since he has been here he has been successful in all undertakings. He now has a farm of four hundred acres, eighty of which are cultivated and the rest in grass and pasture. He engages principally in stock raising and dairying, and at present milks thirty cows, finding a ready market for his cream in Bassett. He has good buildings, and his place all fenced; on a portion of it he has planted a fine grove of trees which are growing splendidly.

Mr. Cross married Miss Effie Cormaney, whose father was an old settler in Rock county; they have been blessed with seven children, who are named as follows: Pearl, Merle, Bert, Alta, Charlie, Frank and Lizzie. The family is well regarded in the community and they enjoy a pleasant and happy rural home. In politics Mr. Cross is Democratic.

WILLIAM R. BOWMAN.

William R. Bowman, a prominent business man of Hay Springs, Nebraska, is a man of great energy and untiring industry, owing his present success to these characteristics and his sound business judgment. He is the proprietor of the leading drug store of the above town, and is well known as a worthy citizen of his community.

Mr. Bowman was born in Boone county, Indiana, in 1865. His father, William Bowman, was a leading physician and old settler in Stanton county, Nebraska, coming here in 1869, where his family of ten children, of whom our subject is the fifth member, was raised and educated, attending the Stanton common schools. At the age of twenty-one he started out for himself, learning the pharmacist's profession, and became a registered member of that body of workers in 1890.

In the spring of 1889 Mr. Bowman came west to Sheridan county, and there clerked for W. H. Smith at Hay Springs, remaining in the employ of this firm for several years, up to the spring of 1898. He then took up a homestead twenty-five miles southeast of Hay Springs and proved up on this, building a sod shanty in which he lived for some time. In 1898 Mr. Bowman bought his present drug store, and since taking this place has increased the stock and built up a good trade, running a thoroughly up-to-date store. He has installed a telephone exchange, putting this in during the year 1903, extending all through the town of Hay Springs.

Mr. Bowman was married in 1892 to Miss Bertha Curtis, daughter of Volney Curtis, an old settler in Box Butte county, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Bowman have one child, Gladys, born in this county. Mr. Bowman is actively interested in local public affairs, and in 1898 was elected county coroner and re-elected for two successive terms. He has also served as justice of the peace for some years. In politics he is a Republican.

OSCAR KARLSTRUM.

Oscar Karlstrum, residing on section 6, township 14, range 58, Kimball county, Nebraska, is one of the enterprising and prosperous agriculturists of that region. He has met with marked success since locating here, has a pleasant home and valuable estate, and enjoys the esteem and respect of his associates.

He came to America in 1885, settling in Phelps county, Nebraska, on arriving in the United States, and spent one year in that vicinity, then came to Kimball county (which at that time was part of Cheyenne county), homesteading a quarter section on southwest section 6, township 14, range 58, and which is now his home ranch. He proved up on the land and built it up in good shape, later buying other land in the vicinity and now is proprietor of nine hundred and sixty acres. He has put on this ranch good improvements, with substantial buildings of all kinds, and has nearly one hundred acres under cultivation. A large part of the place is used as hay-land and pasture for a herd of sixty cattle which he is running at the present time and will send to market later. Every appointment of the ranch is first class, and bespeaks his careful management and thrift in its operation. On September 7, 1887, Mr. Karlstrum was married in Cheyenne, Wyoming, to Miss Mary

JOHN CASTEK.

John Castek, one of the prominent and successful farmers of Dawes county, Nebraska, comes of Bohemian stock, and is a worthy representative of the best traits of his race and blood. He was born on a farm in Moravia in 1863. His father was a carpenter who lived and died in his native land. Our subject grew up there until he was sixteen years of age, then came to America, landing in New York city in June, 1880, and came west at once to Colfax county, Nebraska, following farm work in the eastern part of the state for several years. In the spring of 1886 he moved to Dawes county, locating on his present farm, in section 31, township 31, range 48, and there built a dugout and batched for awhile. His first team were oxen, and he owned a half interest in a plow and wagon, with which the farm was broken up and crops put in. Soon after coming here the drouths struck the section, and as he was unable to raise anything on his land he tried to sell out, offering his place for two hundred dollars, but even at that price could get no buyer so was compelled to stay. He kept on trying to improve his farm, and in '89 had the finest prospects for a good crop and was getting ready to harvest, when a hail storm struck the region and completely ruined his crop. The next year he took out hail insurance and mortgaged his team to pay the assessment, and was again hailed out, but when he tried to collect damage, he was unable to get a cent, but he kept on carrying insurance for several years, but for some reason dropped it one year, and that very year he was again completely hailed out, having this experience for four years altogether. During late years he has raised good crops, and he has plenty of hay and pasture for his cattle of which he keeps a large number, most of the time having two hundred head, besides running them for other farmers. He has about nine horses and his range is admirably adapted to stock raising of all kinds.

In 1889 Mr. Castek was married to Miss Anny Potmesil, and she died June 16, 1896, leaving a family of two children, Francis, born August 14, 1892; and John, born September 6, 1894. In 1898 Mr. Castek was married again, to Miss Jennie Kratochvil, born in Bohemia, daughter of Joseph Kratochvil. Mrs. Castek came to America in 1895 together with a sister, they coming to Chadron, Dawes county, Nebraska.

Mr. Castek spends all his time on his ranch building up his home, and is one of the well-to-do and progressive agriculturists in the county. He is a Republican, and keeps well up with the time in politics locally. He is a genial, whole-souled gentleman and is full of social qualities that bring him many friends. On another page of this volume will be found a picture of their residence and also portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Castek.

GEORGE A. FENDRICH.

The above mentioned gentleman is one of the early settlers of Box Butte county, Nebraska, who foresaw the prosperity which attended that region and remained to enjoy the results of his many years of hard labor, and is now one of the most highly respected citizens of the community. He is the owner of a valuable estate, and farms on an extensive scale, residing on section 10, township 28, range 49, where he has erected a fine frame house, making him a comfortable and pleasant home.

George A. Fendrich was born in Prussia, Germany, in 1871. He grew up in that country and came to America in 1881. After landing in New York city he went west to Carroll county, Iowa, settling on a farm and lived there for five years. From there he moved to Box Butte county with his parents, driving from Hay Springs overland, the father filing on a homestead in section 10, where they built a sod house, planted a grove of trees, and began to farm. The first few years were very successful, but just as they got nicely started the dry years struck them and several crops were lost completely, and they had a hard time to make a living. Our subject left home several different times, first going to the Pacific coast: and worked in Spokane a couple of years: then into the Klondike region, where he did very well, and returned in 1900 to Nebraska, bringing back with him quite a snug sum of money. He spent two winters and three summers in the Klondike, but has always retained this county as his home, and has now put him up a fine residence. George also spent about one year in Memphis, Tenn., in the street car business. His father died in 1899, and he then returned home and since that time has remained with his mother, carrying on the homestead. Their ranch consists of one thousand two hundred acres, one hundred and forty acres of which is under cultivation, all of it well fenced, and he is engaged in stock raising, dealing exclusively in cattle and horses. Mr. Fendrich's mother keeps house for him, and they have a pleasant and comfortable home, and are highly esteemed by their neighbors. The mother is about eighty years old, but is quite active in spite of her advanced age.

Mr. Fendrich is classed among the oldest settlers in this part of the state, is one of the leading men of his township, and takes an active and commendable interest in public affairs.

ED. L. WILLITS, DECEASED.

Ed. L. Willits, late of Alma, Nebraska, was a well known resident of Harlan county, and one of the leading citizens of the above city. He and his father, Wells Willits, were two of the first settlers in Alma, and foremost among its business men. Wells Willits came to Alma in July, 1878. At that time there were only two houses there, and he at once invested in property in the town site, purchasing two hundred and seventy-five lots in all, and in December of that year bought forty acres of land adjoining the town, and platted this. The following year he began to sell off these lots. During the spring the town began to boom and started to grow rapidly, and he was able to dispose of a great deal of his property at good figures. He took up a homestead near the town, and up to his death bought and sold property, and also farmed his ranch, and was counted one of the most prosperous and successful men in this locality. In 1879 Ed. L. Willits moved to Alma and established the firm of Willits & Co., and carried on a large general mercantile business until the time of his death. This was called "The People's Store," and was the pioneer store of town. In 1881 his father joined him in this enterprise, and they also started the Alma Creamery Company, and carried that on for many years. Ed. Willits was also the founder and first president of the Harlan County Bank, established in 1900.

Wells Willits, our subject's father, was born in Wayne county, Indiana, in 1827, and at the age of twenty-one years located in Mercer county, Illinois. He attended Knox College at Galesburg, and in 1854 opened a general store in New Boston, Illinois, carrying on this business for twenty-one years, also operated a pork packing business for eighteen years. In 1878 he closed all his interests out and came to Nebraska, locating in Alma, and his son Ed entered his father's employ at an early age, and thus secured the training that fitted him for his successful career in later years. Eli Willits, his grandfather, was born on the Hocking River, in Ohio, and settled in Wayne county, Illinois, with his father, Jesse Willits, on a farm in 1812, and remained there up to 1833, when they removed to western Illinois, locating within four miles of the Mississippi river. Mr. Willits always took an active interest in public affairs, working hard in the early days to get the county seat at Alma, and also bent all his efforts and influence in trying to get all the rights and advantages for Alma during the railway fight. His widow and one son, John Metz Willits, reside on the homestead at Alma. His eldest son, Lee Conklin Willits, who lived at Los Angeles, California, died September 23, 1907.

In May, 1882, our subject was married to Miss Blanche Conklin, of Alma, daughter of I. J. Conklin. She died in 1897, leaving one son, Lee C. Willits, above mentioned. Mr. Willits was married again in 1898 to Miss Rebecca Metz, daughter of Joseph and Mary Frances Metz, of Alma. One son, John Metz Willits, was born May 14, 1902. Mr. Willits, our subject, died October 8, 1903. The family is highly respected and esteemed in the community, and in his death had the sympathy of the entire population. Mr. Willits kept all his business affairs moving during the hard years of 1894-95 and '96, giving employment and good wages to over thirty-five people in his store, creamery and bank, and also on his several large farms. He will always be spoken of as the best citizen and most capable business man of Alma's pioneer days. Mr. Willits was a Mason, and a prominent member of the order of the Eastern Star.

has been at the head of it ever since. He has branch offices at McCook and Moorefield. W. H. Cowgill is the state agent for the State Insurance Company, and they have local agents covering every portion of Nebraska. This company does over $150,000 per year here, and the real estate end of Mr. Cowgill's business cannot be estimated, during the time that Mr. Cowgill has been in business.

Mr. Cowgill is the owner of a goodly quantity of large farming interests in this and adjoining counties. He came to Nebraska thirty-three years ago, locating in David City, in November, 1874, where he engaged in the real estate business. In 1904 he was one of the organizers, and is now president of the Phelps County Telephone company, which has a capital of $50,000 paid in. This company took over the Independent telephone lines. #### AUGUST BASCHKY, DECEASED.

August Baschky (deceased), who during his life time made an enviable record as a farmer and ranchman, the result of his own toil and economy, was born on a farm in Prussia, Germany, in 1846. His parents passed their lives in the old country, the father having been a prominent farmer. Our subject's early days were spent in his native country, where he received his education. Realizing the possibilities the new world offered the ambitious young man, he decided to seek his fortunes in this country, and in April, 1872, landed in America, settling in the state of Illinois. Here he employed his time tilling the soil.

In 1876 Mr. Baschky was united in marriage to Miss Jessie Froelke, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth (Becker) Froelke. Her parents were both born in Germany, the mother in Hanover, but came to this country before marriage. After his marriage, Mr. Baschky spent some time farming in Illinois, but in 1882 came to Madison county, Nebraska, and farmed there for two years. In 1885 he came to Dawes county, driving from Chadron, and at first locating four and a half miles northeast of Crawford. His first home in this part of the country was a dug out, his second a log cabin. During the years of hardships which confronted the early settlers in this western country he made his living logging and working out. His first years were trying ones indeed, he having had the misfortune of losing several horses and crops. In 1896 he moved his family to their present location in section 16, township 30, range 50, where he erected a substantial and commodious home and barns. Here he had three hundred and twenty acres of deeded land, although his ranch altogether comprised an area of 760 acres, containing several acres of good timber land, and 160 acres of which are under cultivation. Through years of adversity and prosperity he held the hands of the plow, working out for himself a comfortable home, and giving his energies to the upbuilding of the locality in which he lived.

The marriage of Mr. Baschky was blessed with eight children, viz: Joseph, born December 8, 1876; Peter (deceased), born May 18, 1879; Louis, who follows the occupation of railroading, born March 3, 1882; Elizabeth (deceased), born March 9, 1884; Julius, born January 8, 1887; Edward, born January 26, 1889; Patrick, born February 13, 1894; and Veronica, born April 16, 1896. Joseph, the oldest boy, now runs the farm. A family group portrait will be found on another page.

During his life time Mr. Baschky enjoyed the respect and confidence of a host of warm friends, and his career will stand as an excellent example for any youth to follow. He passed away November 6, 1906.

JENS PETER KRESTENSEN.

Jens Peter Krestensen, who came to Box Butte county, in the early days of its settlement, and who has striven through many failures and hardships to establish a home and accumulate a competence for himself in the new western country, is now proprietor of a valuable estate in section 7, township 26, range 50. He has always taken a commendable interest in local affairs, serving his township as road overseer, and lending his best efforts at all times to advance the best interests of his community.

Mr. Krestensen was born in Denmark in 1860. His father was born, lived and died in Denmark, following the occupation of a farmer all his life, and our subject was reared on the home farm until he reached the age of twenty-two years, then came to America and settled in AUGUST BASCHKY (DECEASED) AND FAMILY.

Omaha, Nebraska, where he remained for a year. He came to Box Butte county in the fall of 1889, and soon after coming here he started working on the new C. & N. W. railroad, which was being built through this section and into Wyoming. During the time he followed this work he had a good chance to become familiar with the rough life of a frontiersman, experiencing many hardships and privations in the thinly settled regions through which the road was to be built.

After finishing his work on the road he returned to Nebraska and filed on a pre-emption in township 26, range 50, and while starting his farm, worked out a good deal of the time in different livery barns at Nonpareil and Alliance, constantly improving his place as he was able, and finally proved up on the land.

In the fall of 1890 Mr. Krestensen made a trip to his native land, and while there was united in marriage to Miss Mattie Jensen, a native of that country. After spending a short time visiting in the vicinity of his boyhood home, he and his bride returned to this country, and came back to Nebraska and began farming in section 7, township 26, range 50. Their first house was a rude shack and they lived in it for about a year, then erected a comfortable sod house and occupied this for a good many years. Mr. Krestensen's farm now consists of over eight hundred acres of good land. He farms one hundred acres of this, raising fine crops of small grains, and the farm is all fenced and fitted with a complete set of good buildings. He is engaged principally in the stock business, raising cattle and horses for the market.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Krestensen, who are named as follows: Magnus, Clara and Anene, all in school in this district at the present time.

WILLIAM E. MINSHAL.

William E. Minshal, widely known in Cheyenne county, Nebraska, as a gentleman of first-class business ability and one of the foremost old settlers of that region, is proprietor of a flourishing meat, flour and feed store in Lodgepole, which enterprise he has carried on since 1903 with marked success. He has passed through all of the pioneer times in western Nebraska, and remained to see the prosperity which has come to those who came to the state in the beginning of its civilization, and is one of those who has aided materially in its upbuilding.

Mr. Minshal was born in Walworth Wisconsin, on June 17, 1849. remaining in the age of seventeen years in that region. At that time the family moved to Johnson county, Missouri, and settled on a farm, where they resided until the spring of 1878. Our subject worked for the Union Pacific railway for about a year and a half, at Sidney, and then started in the grocery business, following that for over a year. He moved to Lodgepole in the fall of 1881, locating on a ranch in section 13, township 14, range 47, and there engaged in stock raising, building up a good ranch. He later took up a homestead in section 24 and owned this until a few years ago, when he sold it at a good profit, and purchased a good ranch of six hundred and forty acres, comprising section 14, township 14, range 47, devoting this to the raising of cattle and horses. Mr. Minshal was married February 21, 1875, in Missouri, to Rachel Brown. Mrs. Minshal was born in Keokuk county, Iowa. Five children have been born to our subject and his good wife, named as follows: Charles, married and living in Cheyenne, Wyoming, employed as a machinist in the Union Pacific shops. Bertha, married to Dave Douglas, now living in Denver, Colo. George, now residing in Cheyenne, Wyoming, while Mabel and Rachel, the last two daughters are living at home with the parents.

Mr. Minshal takes an active interest in state and county affairs, and is one of the leading men of Lodgepole. Politically he is a Democrat and a member of the Methodist church.

MRS. LYDIA MILKS.

The management of an extensive tract of land has fallen to the lot of the lady above mentioned, and the prosperity apparent is evidence of her ability and good judgment. Mrs. Milks is one of the early settlers in Brown county, where she has spent the best part of her life in building up her farm and home. She has had the care of a family of children, and exerted her energies for their support and education, and is now the owner of a valuable ranch.

Mrs. Milks was born in Olin, Jones county, Iowa, in 1864. Her father, John Bothwell, was a native of Scotland, and her mother of Yankee stock. She was raised and educated in Jones county, attending the common schools and later moved to Nebraska, locating in Cherry county in May, 1885. She married B. W. Milks. The home was ninety miles south of Valentine. Their first dwelling was a house built of sods, with a sod roof, and in this place all but their youngest child was born. They proved up on the homestead, remaining on it for twelve or thirteen years, and in 1899 moved to Lakeland, Brown county, settling on a ranch on Moon Lake, where their children would have a better chance to attend good schools. Mrs. Milks lived on this ranch until 1905, and she has had the entire management of the place, the ranch comprising one thousand one hundred and twenty acres, stocked with horses and cattle, and improved with good buildings. There was a fine grove of trees on this place, the grove including twenty-five acres, which added greatly to the value of the ranch.

At first this place only contained three hundred and twenty acres, and it was added to gradually and improved, until a comfortable home has been built up, which at present is under the management of Mrs. Milks' son and daughter, she now living on three hundred and twenty acres of land located near Ainsworth, which she purchased after getting the ranch established and running in good shape. She has improved this property until it is now one of the most valuable in this locality, the farm being used for a dairy and hay farm. Mrs. Milks deserves much praise for the success which she has attained through her own unaided efforts, for many years doing a man's work in running the farm, besides raising her family of children and directing their education. Few men have accomplished as much as she. Her family consists of eight children, as follows: Clyde D., Clarence L., Burney B., Gertrude May, Vera E., Lillian T., Percy L., and Gerald R.

JAMES H. LYON.

James H. Lyon, the popular and efficient postmaster of Harlan, Nebraska, is well known throughout Cherry county as a successful and prosperous farmer and business man. He is a man of sterling character and has an extensive acquaintance, universally esteemed and respected in his community.

Mr. Lyon was born in Marion county, Ohio, April 7, 1847, of German descent. His parents were settlers in Virginia, and when our subject was eight years old came to Iowa with their family of ten children, where they farmed in Wapello county. In 1864 he enlisted in the army and served a year and a half under General Steele near Little Rock, Arkansas; he was mustered out at Duvall's Bluff and returned to his home and assisted his father in the farm work. In 1869 he started on a farm for himself in Wapello, renting land on which he lived for a number of years. He was a settler in Iowa long before the Burlington road was built through that section of the country. In 1883 he moved to Osceola county, Iowa, and farmed for two years, then came to Nebraska, driving through with a team and wagon. He stopped in Holt county from spring to fall and then came on and located near where his present home is situated, taking a pre-emption. When he had filed on his place all he had left was three dollars in money. They were about the only settlers in the locality, and from September 11th to November 16th, his wife never saw another white woman.

He went to farming, breaking up his land and putting up a rough log shanty, and had pretty good success until the dry years came along. He often had hard times through the drouth periods and at times both he and his wife were compelled to work out in order to make a living. Their house was shared with another family part of the time, and all were obliged to pick up bones and haul them to Gordon, receiving eight dollars per ton, to obtain money with which to buy flour and other provisions. After the first few years they had better luck and raised good crops, sticking bravely to it through many discouragements and hardships. He and his son together own two thousand acres of land now, and run sixty head of cattle and about forty horses.

In 1868 Mr. Lyon was married to Miss Esther J. Anderson, daughter of James M. and Nancy J. (Tilford) Anderson, both natives of Indiana, where Mrs. Lyon was born and reared. One child was born to them, Walter, who married Ida V. Miller, and is living on a homestead near his parents' home.

Mr. Lyon was appointed postmaster of Harlan in 1905. He is one of the public-spirited citizens of his county, a Populist and Bryan man.

CHARLES R. RUSSELL.

Charles R. Russell, who is engaged in ranching on a large scale in section 11, township 23, range 28, is one of the pioneers of Thomas county, Nebraska. He has a wide acquaintance and is universally respected and esteemed.

Mr. Russell was born in Sheridan, Lucas county, Iowa, in 1868. He is a son of Irvin W. Russell, of whom a sketch appears in this volume. Charles grew up in Iowa, reared on a farm, and in 1887 came to Nebraska with his parents, the father settling on a homestead, and for two years after coming here our subject helped him open his farm and ranch, the family going through the usual pioneer experiences. They came ahead of the railroad, and Charles Russell was one of those who saw the first train pull into Thedford, and has seen every change which has taken place in the region since that time, watching it grow from practically raw prairie land into its present highly improved state, and has himself been an important factor in this success. He took a homestead about 1890 and begun a farm and ranch for himself, "batching" it for four years, also filed on a pre-emption two miles east of Thedford. In all he has proved up on a homestead, pre-emption and tree claim, and has met with splendid success in his ranching ventures. He finally came to his present location, having a ranch of nine hundred and twenty acres, all deeded land, lying along the Middle Loup river. He purchased his father's old ranch and now operates that place. He has planted a fine fruit orchard, having apples, cherries, wild plums, grapes, strawberries, gooseberries and raspberries, and altogether has seven acres of fine trees on the place, furnishing an abundant supply of fruits for his own use and which he finds a ready market for in his locality. He has fifty acres of good clover, large pastures, and engages principally in stock raising, running a large bunch of cattle and some horses. He has a valuable property and is one of the substantial citizens of his community.

Mr. Russell was married on February 14, 1892, to Miss Nannie D. Edwards, daughter of James A. Edwards, an old settler in this section. To them have been born three children, namely: Ethel M., Charles R., and Vera Dell.

Mr. Russell was a resident of this township when the first Sabbath school was started. He has done his share as an old settler, taking a leading part in township affairs, and has served in different capacities, acting as assessor for several years and holding other offices.

BERNARD DENAEYER.

Prominent among the progressive ranchmen of Cherry county is the gentleman whose name heads this personal history. He has been a resident of Nebraska for the past twenty years or more, and has done his share in the development of this section, building up a valuable estate in section 34, where he has a pleasant and comfortable home.

Mr. Denaeyer is a native of Belgium, born in the village of Junet, November 14, 1865. Here he lived until coming to America with his parents in the fall of 1878. Sailing from Antwerp in a vessel of the Red Star line, he landed in New York November 14th, the voyage of two weeks, and shortly after the mining region near Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. After a family settled in Pennsylvania.

working for about a year and a half at McDonald station and Smithton. Mr. Denaeyer started for the west, finding work in the mines at Collinsville, Illinois, Pittsburg, Kansas, Gold Hill, Missouri, and What-Cheer, Iowa, for a time working at Marhah, Colorado. On his way eastward he stopped in Cherry county and took up a claim which he later abandoned. After journeying for a time in Kansas and Missouri mining towns, he returned to What-Cheer, where he followed mining some seven or eight years. In 1899 he started anew in Cherry county, taking up a homestead in section 2, township 31, range 26, to which he has since added through the Kincaid act, and now is proprietor of eight hundred acres, mostly low hay land. He cuts about four hundred tons of hay each season, and of this he bales two hundred tons for sale and finds a ready market for his product. He has improved his farm with good buildings, fences, and planted trees, and it is one of the best tracts of land in the locality. He has had rather bad luck with his stock since settling on this place, losing $1,000 worth of horses in 1905, and two years previous had lost cattle worth the same amount. One year after paying two dollars per ton for bailing hay he could not sell the product for enough to pay the bailers.

Mr. Denaeyer was married in Iowa, September 25, 1884, to Miss Della Bohy, a native of the same village as her husband, she having come to America with her parents, Emanuel and Dorie (Heck) Bohy, in 1881. Six children have been born to them, named as follows: Barney, deceased; Julia, wife of Henry Ormesher, living near Valentine; Annie, Della, Ida, Bernard, Jr., all except the latter born in Iowa.

The family is highly respected in their community, and have many friends and acquaintances who often enjoy the hospitality of their pleasant home. Mr. Denaeyer devotes his whole time to his home, and has never had leisure to take any active part in political affairs, although he votes the Independent ticket. Mr. Denaeyer's parents have retired from active life, have sold their ranch and are now residing near Valentine. One of the interesting illustrations in this work is a view of the family residence, which is shown on another page.

HON. HENRY MOHRMAN.

Honorable Henry Mohrman, who enjoys the comforts of a pleasant rural home in the township, is one of the best known men in Franklin county. He is one of the old settlers in western Nebraska, and his labors here have been many.

become a part of the state's history. His life has been one of many experiences, and he is honored as a public-spirited citizen and leading resident of his county. Mr. Mohrman was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1863. He came to America in 1868 with his mother and rest of family, the family settling in Nemaha county, and afterwards moving to Richardson county, where they bought a farm for twelve dollars per acre. Both parents are now deceased, the father's death occurring in 1868 at the age of forty-three, and the mother's in 1901, aged seventy-seven years.

In 1886 our subject started out for himself, renting a farm in Richardson county, remaining there up to 1892, when he bought the one hundred and sixty acres where he now lives, having added to this farm until he owns at the present time four hundred and eighty acres. In 1905 he erected a fine residence on the estate, and he has one of the most valuable places in the vicinity, engaging in mixed farming and stock raising. He has thirty head of thoroughbred shorthorn cattle, nearly all raised by himself, beginning in 1898 with one high grade cow of the imported Daisy strain. These animals are all fine stock, and he has had splendid success with them, selling the calves at weaning time at from forty to sixty dollars each. He keeps about a hundred hogs, and raises quite a good deal of wheat and corn. His wheat has reached as high as forty bushels per acre, and corn up to sixty. He has some fine alfalfa fields, and farms under the most improved methods, obtaining the best results possible. Mr. Mohrman was married in 1895 to Miss Anna Kruse, daughter of John and Fulke (Minits) Kruse, of Macon township, who came to this locality in 1886 from Province Hanover, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Mohrman have the following children: Mary, Fred, Natie, Annie, John and Martha. Our subject himself was an only son, but he has one sister, now Mrs. August Lunzman, of Nemaha county, Nebraska. The family are members of the Lutheran church. In 1894 Mr. Mohrman was elected on the Republican ticket to represent the people of his county in the state legislature of 1895.

He has held different local offices in his township, and is one of the active men in public affairs, taking a keen interest in party politics.

FERDINAND WOLLESEN.

Ferdinand Wollesen, a prominent old timer of Dawes county, has done his part in the up-building of his section, and has through hard work and constant effort succeeded in establishing a comfortable home and well-tilled farm, which is located in section 14, township 32, range 47.

Mr. Wollesen was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, in 1843. His father, Christian Wollesen, was a teacher all his life, spending all his life in his native land. Our subject was raised and educated in Germany, living at home until he was sixteen years of age, then learned the miller's trade and followed that work there for five years. He then travelled all over Germany, engaged in different enterprises. When he reached the age of twenty-two years he entered the German army and served for two years. In 1868 he left his native land and came to the United States; after landing in New York city, came west to Davenport, Iowa, and there followed farming for about six years, then went to Tama county and farmed for a time. He next railroaded on the F. E. & M. V. railroad.

He came to Nebraska in 1887 and worked on the section, acting as foreman at Andrews for one year, then settled in Inas, Wyoming, where he ran a boarding house for six years. He returned to Nebraska, and purchased his present farm in 1892. Since settling here he has devoted most of his attention to the stock business, and has been very successful in building up his ranch and home. He owns a thousand acres located near the head of Little Bordeaux creek, and has good buildings, fences, etc., with everything in good order about the ranch. He farms one hundred and twenty-five acres and raises good crops, and is progressive in his stock raising and farming operations.

In 1881 Mr. Wollesen was married to Mrs. Christian Peters, of German descent, and who came to America with her parents in 1863, settling in Gladbrook, Iowa. Mr. Wollesen has one son, Carl, aged twenty-six, and three step-children, William Peters, Henry Peters, and Chris Peters.

He has a wide reputation as a successful and worthy citizen.

Mr. Haase is a native of Galena, Illinois, born in 1863. He is a son of Edward Haase, now associated with his son in business here. He was reared at Galena until he reached the age of eighteen. He came to Nebraska in 1881, located at Kearney in 1883 and clerked for four years, then established a general grocery and queensware store, and has built up a large business in that time, his trade extending all through Buffalo and the adjoining counties. He carries a large and complete stock of the finest goods, and has gained his patrons through his honest dealings and strict attention to business. He served on the city council for one term, and has for a term of three years served on the school board. In 1905 he was elected city treasurer, and is now county treasurer having run a large number of votes ahead of his ticket. In politics he is a Democrat, and at the last city election was the only man on his ticket that was elected to office. He has been a member of the Masonic lodge since 1896. He has been master of blue lodge three years, high priest of chapter and eminent commander of Knights Templar.

Mr. Haase was married to Miss Mary L. Carson, May 21, 1888, who was a native of Iowa. He has six children—four boys and two girls: Gilbert, Jr., Hazel, Raymond, Donald, Howard and Marie. The family are active members of Baptist church.

JOHN E. WALKER.

John E. Walker, father of Walker Brothers & Company, owners of extensive ranching property in Cherry county, Nebraska, resides on section 33, township 35, range 35. Mr. Walker is a native of Ontario, Canada, born April 1, 1849. His father, Peter Walker, was a farmer, who came to the United States in 1854 with his wife, who was Martha Snell, a native of New York, and their family of children, when our subject was a child five years old. They settled in Clayton, Iowa, and there John E. was reared on a farm, receiving a common school education, and early learning the work of carrying on a farm in assisting his father.

In 1874 Mr. Walker came to Butler county, Nebraska, and purchased a tract of railroad land, where he went through grasshopper experiences, hail storms and drouths. He spent eight years in that locality, then becoming discouraged, left the place in the spring of 1885 and moved to Sheridan county, driving over the country. Butler county by team and covered wagon was a familiar mode of travel to him. This was driven from Iowa to Nebraska when located in Butler county. He had been over this section of the country the year previous, and had selected a homestead six miles northeast of Gordon, in section 4, township 33, range 41, where he put up a sod house and began the work of establishing a home and farm. Here he had hard times at first, as the dry years followed and he met with heavy losses in the failure of crops, but he proved up on his homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, and improved the place with good buildings. He came to his present ranch in 1900, having sold his holdings in Sheridan county, and here established a stock ranch, raising cattle and horses. This ranch contains eighteen quarter sections, all of which he and his family control, and he has one of the best equipped and most valuable ranches in this county.

Mr. Walker has always been active in promoting the best interests of the community in which he lives, and has done his share in the building up of its resources. He is a man of wide experience, and a first-class business man and successful stockman. He takes an active interest in politics, voting the Republican ticket, and is recognized as one of the leading citizens of the county. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and chief patriarch of the encampment at Gordon; with his wife, he is also a member of the Rebekah degree.

While living in Iowa our subject was married to Miss Elizabeth Miller, daughter of Casper Miller, a native of Germany. The mother dying when she was an infant, she was reared in the village of Frankville, Iowa, where the father was a blacksmith. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have four children, named as follows: Charles L., Wayne W., Ese L. and Evva M., the last named being a teacher of Cherry county.

WILLIAM DARROW.

Energetic efforts and intelligence go hand in hand in the building up of one's fortune, regardless of the vocation to which they are applied. One of the well-developed and highly improved estates of Dawes county is that owned and operated by William Darrow, who resides in section 33, township 32 and range 51, and is the possessor of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of land. The comfortable circumstances of this gentleman have been brought about by the exercise of judicious labor and painstaking care, and every appointment of his place bespeaks thrift and good management.

Mr. Darrow is a native of Livingston county, New York, born in 1847. He is a son of William and Nancy (Weller) Darrow, and was reared and educated on his parents' farm, attending the common schools while assisting his father in performing the usual hard work required on a farm and he grew up used to plenty of labor. His father and mother both died in New York state.

In the spring of 1880 our subject came west and located in Cedar county, Nebraska, and was among the pioneers in that section, where he remained for four years, then moved to Dawes county. He drove through the country with a team and wagon from Valentine, camping out at night under his wagon, and was two weeks on the road. He immediately located on a homestead in section 33, township 32, range 51, and now has the distinction of being the only homesteader still living on his original homestead, who settled here as early as 1884. He put up a log cabin the first summer and lived in that for a few years, constantly building up his place and adding improvements, buying adjoining lands when they were for sale cheap, and is now proprietor of a farm of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres. He is extensively engaged in stock raising, doing but little farming.

Mr. Darrow was married in 1871 to Miss Helen Porter, daughter of George and Nancy (Buckley) Porter, farmers near Stafford, Genesee county, New York. Mr. and Mrs. Darrow are the parents of three children, who are named as follows: George, Lewis and Minnie.

Mr. Darrow is a man who has always been active in public affairs in his locality, and takes a prominent part in all matters which tend to the betterment of conditions for the people. He was elected county commissioner on the Republican ticket in 1903, and re-elected in 1906, now serving his second term. He has held various local offices, and is one of the leading old timers of the region, highly esteemed by his fellowmen.

ISAAC ROBBINS.

Isaac Robbins, whose residence is located in section 34, township 31, range 49, Dawes county, Nebraska, where he owns a fine and well appointed ranch which he has reclaimed from the wild prairie, and where he is known as an earnest and hard working cultivator of the soil, and withal a most upright and honorable citizen, was born on a farm in Brown county, Ohio, in 1849. His father, Hiram Robbins, who was a farmer, was a native of the state of New York. His mother, Barbara (Stotlar) Robbins, who came of Dutch stock, was born in Pennsylvania.

Our subject was one of the pioneers of Illinois, the family having moved to that state in 1853. They settled on a farm in Mercer county.

Here he was reared and educated, assisting his father in the work of building up and improving their farm. In 1872 he left his home to seek his own fortunes, and for two years worked in Illinois.

In 1874, Mr. Robbins and Miss Mary Deborde were united in marriage. She was a daughter of George and Martha (Brush) Deborde. Her father was a farmer, of French descent, born in Kentucky. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Robbins was blessed with eleven children, nine of whom are living: Nellie, Hattie, Albert, Ora, Alvie, Oliver, Edyth, Edna and Lloyd. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Robbins moved to Hardin county, Iowa, where he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres. Here he remained for seven years, devoting his time and attention to his farm. It was in 1888 that he came to Dawes county, Nebraska, where he took a homestead in section 34, township 31, range 49. The first season here our subject lived in a log cabin. He put up a building of a story and a half, sixteen by twenty feet. During the drouth periods, which were so common in this section of our country, he made a living by working out. One season his crops were destroyed by hail, but his faith in western Nebraska remained unbroken, and the success which he has met goes to show that his judgment was not in error. He now has a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres of good land and has over two hundred and forty acres under cultivation. Altogether the family own one thousand two hundred and forty acres of land. He has erected a comfortable house, substantial barn and sheds, and has a good well and wind mill. The ranch is well fenced and cross fenced.

From the time Mr. Robbins first came to this locality he has watched with interest the growth and development of Dawes county, and has taken a lively interest in all local affairs. In politics he is an independent voter. Every responsibility resting upon him as a man and a citizen has been faithfully met, and he has a host of friends who wish him well. A family group portrait is presented on another page of this volume.

children, our subject being the eighth in order of birth. He grew up in his native state, and at the age of nineteen came to Nebraska, locating in Hamilton county, where he took up a pre-emption. He built a sod house, or rather shanty, and lived in this vicinity for the following fourteen years, going through all the rough pioneer experiences, suffering from the drouth periods, grasshopper raids, etc. His first teams were oxen, and he used them for a number of years in breaking up his farm and doing all his work.

In 1884 Mr. Bray first came to Sheridan county, settling on a homestead twelve miles south of Hay Springs. There he built a dugout and started with absolutely no capital, remaining until he had proved up on his claim. Here he went through another series of hardships and discouragements in the loss of several crops, and saw many hard times, but he persevered and eventually built up a good home and farm. He has six hundred and forty acres, with one hundred and ten of this under cultivation, and a good set of farm buildings, fences, etc. He moved to Hay Springs in 1902, and for a year and a half was in the hotel business, then established a hardware store, handling implements and also grain. He has an elevator with a capacity of fifteen thousand bushels. He has built up a good trade in his hardware store, occupying a large building and sheds, and has associated with him in this enterprise R. E. Montgomery.

In 1877 Mr. Bray was married to Miss Catherine Moore, daughter of Jacob Moore, an old settler in Nebraska, who came here from Iowa, in 1875. Two children were born to them, named Jessie and Nellie. In 1879 Mrs. Bray died. Mr. Bray married the second time in 1890, taking in wedlock Miss Elizabeth Parrish, and one child resulted from this union, namely: Blanche, aged sixteen years.

Mr. Bray is a Republican and an active party man. He was twice elected county commissioner, the first time in 1898, and the second time in 1901.

GUS. NORBERG.

Gus. Norberg, prominent as an old settler in Phelps county, Nebraska, is one of the enterprising business and professional men of his locality. He is well known throughout this section of the country as an attorney of note, and has done his full share in the upbuilding and development of the commercial and educational resources of this region.

Mr. Norberg was born in Henry county, Illinois, in 1853. He is a son of E. U.

(Brita) Norberg, the former having been a native of Sweden who came to America and settled in Michigan in 1842, then to Henry county, Illinois, two years later, in company with the Bishop Hill colony of Swedes, who joined interests on the community plan and were obliged to disband in 1862, their success being impeded by bad management.

E. U. Norberg was a man of good education, a college graduate in Sweden, and he was appointed secretary of the colony and had charge of the grain department, strongly opposing the management which resulted in disaster to the members of the colony.

In 1883 our subject came to Nebraska and settled in Holdrege, where he opened a law office and began his practice in this locality. He has built up an enviable reputation as a shrewd and capable attorney and has the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen. From 1887 to 1891 he held the office of county attorney, elected on the Republican ticket, and has always been an active public-spirited citizen of his community. Mr. Norberg was educated at Urbana University of Ohio. He was admitted to the bar at Chicago in 1883, and has practiced ever since.

Mr. Norberg is an active member of the Knights of Pythias, and was grand chancellor for that order in Nebraska during 1897.

JOHN M. DELATOUR.

John M. Delatour, one of the younger members of the business community of Deuel county, Nebraska, was born in Helena, Arkansas, on August 27, 1874. Mr. Delatour's father and mother, with their three children, came to Furnas county, Nebraska, in 1882, the former trailing cattle into Box Butte county in 1884, taking with him our subject, then a boy of ten, and both worked on round ups in western Nebraska, coming to Deuel county and afterwards settling on Blue Creek, in Cheyenne canyon, where the father and son, with some helpers, pre-empted a school section. In 1887 the whole family came to Deuel county, where they were among the first comers. The section was very sparsely settled, the country utterly wild and unimproved land, and all mail, provisions, etc., had to be hauled from North Platte, these being extremely long and tedious trips. Also, they afterwards were compelled to get their supplies from the Old Wolf Ferry, in Keith county, previously hauled there from Ogallala. Father and sons remained in Deuel county and carried on the ranch, gradually getting in the stock business, and succeeded in building up a fine pro-

erty, our subject starting in for himself in 1898, situated on Blue creek, near the home ranch. He left his ranch in 1908 and removed to Oshkosh, Nebraska, where he engaged in the real estate and loan business in partnership with A. B. Wynes, under the firm name of Delatour & Wynes, and they are doing a nice trade in farm lands, etc., throughout their part of the state.

Mr. Delatour remembers distinctly the killing of practically the last buffalo by the Pine Ridge Agency Indians, which occurred at the Gusher Spring, which lies at the big bend of the Blue creek. Gusher Spring is a natural spring which throws a large volume of water, and is an old camping ground of the Indians. Our subject is a most interesting talker, and can recount many tales of interest regarding life here as he has found it, and of the early days. His father is still living on Blue creek, but the mother died in 1897 at Ogallala. Three brothers also reside in Deuel county, two of whom are ranch owners and the other now holding the office of county clerk of the county.

Mr. Delatour was married to Minnie B. Taylor, at Ash Hollow, Deuel county, on October 18, 1899. Mrs. Delatour is a native of Nebraska, a typical western woman and of most charming personality. They have two children, Lucy, born April 28, 1901, and John J., born July 3, 1907.

VALENTINE WOHLHETER.

Among those who have braved the storms of adversity and hardships of the early western days and have passed through many hard and bitter experiences in building up a home for themselves in Nebraska, the gentleman whose name heads this review stands among the foremost. He is now comfortably situated and has made a success by virtue of honest endeavor and strict attention to his work. Mr. Wohlheter resides in section 12, township 33, range 55, Sioux county.

Valentine Wohlheter was born in the village of Rencenheim, Germany, in 1838. His father followed farming as a career, and he grew up in his native land, learning to do all kinds of hard farm work as a boy, living at home until he was nineteen years of age, then came to America, landing in New York city in July, 1857. He came west, locating in Illinois. During the second year of the Civil war he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Volunteer Infantry, was sent south with his regiment, and saw hard service in Tennessee, at Vicksburg and Memphis, was with General Sherman all the way to Washington and took part in the grand review. At the close of the war he returned to Illinois and made that his home for about a year, then went to Elgin, Iowa, and engaged in the mercantile business, operating a general store for thirteen years. He did well and accumulated quite a little property, but decided to try farming, and bought a place and farmed up to 1888, when he left Iowa and came to Nebraska, taking up a homestead, filing on his claim in August of that year. His family joined him in the late fall, and he put up a dwelling, half dugout and board shanty, and they started their home in the wilderness. During the first few years he met with bad luck in the loss of crops, and so gradually worked into the cattle business, doing little farming. His sons worked at railroad construction and on the ranges and helped their parents all they could, and so they managed to get along fairly well, but in eight years only was able to raise two good crops.

Mr. Wohlheter settled on the place he now occupies in the fall of 1896. Here he has a ranch of one thousand six hundred acres, part of which is owned by his sons, and they have made it one of the best ranches in the region, having it all fenced and fitted with good buildings and improvements of every kind. Hat creek runs through the land, and a fifty-acre tract is under cultivation.

Mr. Wohlheter was married in 1868, to Miss Caroline Sorg, who was born in France, where her father was a prominent merchant, the family coming to the United States in 1848. The mother, whose maiden name was Fredericka Cochler, was also born and reared in France. The family settled in Iowa, where Mr. Sorg followed farming, also carried on a mercantile business at Elgin, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Wohlheter are the parents of two children: Leonis, born in 1869, and Eugene, born in 1873, the latter now having charge of the home ranch and assisting his father in its operation. He is married and has two children, Vera and Helen.

HENRY OLSON.

Henry Olson, prominent as an old settler of Deuel county, Nebraska, and a well-to-do farmer and business man, enjoying the highest esteem of his fellowmen, is an energetic man of integrity and progressiveness. He was one of the first settlers on the table land here, and has passed through all the old Nebraska times, helping in the development of its agricultural and commercial resources, deserving a foremost position in the ranks of Deuel county's public-spirited citizens.

HENRY OLSON.

Mr. Olson was born in Sweden and reared there, coming to the United States in 1881, settling at first in Saunders county, where he spent about four years, then came to Deuel county, landing in this region on the tenth of May, 1885. He at once filed on a homestead on section 29, township 14, range 44, proving up on a quarter section, later bought an additional quarter in the locality, now owning in all nearly four hundred acres, of which about one-half is devoted to farming, raising small grain, etc. He has a number of good horses, and has a well equipped farm, with every convenience, having two complete sets of farm buildings, also wells, fences, etc. When a youth in Sweden our subject learned the carpenters' and builders' trade, and since coming to this country has worked considerably in this line. He has erected many houses in the county, and helped to build some of the first dwellings in Chappell, when that town was started.

While still living in Sweden, Mr. Olson was married to Miss Bento North, their marriage occurring on March 5, 1880, and together they came to the new world to establish a home. To them were born two children, Alta, who married James Maffat, now living on section 30, township 14, range 44, their farm joining Mrs. Maffat's father's place. They have one child, Harold, a lad of two years. One son, Edward Wilhelm Olson, is living at home and assists his father in carrying on the farm. Mrs. Olson died on the homestead on January 27, 1893, and her death was a deep loss to her family and friends, who esteemed her immeasurably as a model wife and mother. Mr. Olson has seen much of the hard side of life on the western plains, but has worked faithfully and has reaped a fitting reward for his labors in the accumulation of a comfortable property, all of which has been gained through his honesty and individual efforts. A portrait of Mr. Olson will be found elsewhere in this work.

WILLIAM A. CONNELL.

One of the prominent and successful agriculturists of Keya Paha county who came to this section when the country was in the first stages of its development, and who has watched its growth from its early days, is to be found in the person of William A. Connell. He resides on section 28, township 33, range 17, where he has built up a pleasant and comfortable home.

Mr. Connell was born in St. Louis, Missouri, August 23, 1851. He is a son of William F. Connell, one of the best known shorthand writers in that city, and a native of Washington City, born of Irish-American stock. The our subject, Sarah Hopkins, was a Virginian, and he is the only child of his parents. He was raised and educated in Washington until nine years of age, then the family moved to Mineral Point, Wisconsin, where he grew up and at the age of fifteen went to the pine woods and followed the lumbering business for nine years. While working at that he was severely injured and was obliged to quit the business, so took up farming, going to Shelby county, Iowa. There he took an eighty acre farm and operated it for four years, at which time he wandered to Texas and traveled all over that country, returning north, and settling in Nebraska, in 1883. He located in Keya Paha county, close to the Niobrara river, and began building up a farm. His first house was a sod shanty, and he lived in this for twelve years. He had a hard time in getting started, and suffered much loss during the dry years, and was hailed out several times. For seven years his crops were failures nearly all the time, and when not a total loss he only secured enough to enable him to make a scanty living. He stuck to his farm, however, and when the better times came, gradually made improvements and got into stock raising, which he found more profitable than farming at that time. He purchased his present home in 1905, comprising one thousand four hundred sixty-eight acres, part of which lies along the river, and on this he has put up good buildings on the "table" one mile from the river and has made it a very valuable property.

In the year after coming to Keya Paha county Mr. Connell was married to Miss Floretta F. Lowe, born in Middlebury, Wisconsin, a daughter of Henry and Ann (Adams) Lowe, the former a native of England and the latter of Prince Edward's Island. Her parents were old settlers in this county. From this marriage six children resulted, namely: Frank C., Jessie F., Robert Harrison, Lorena, Charles H. and William A. R., all of whom are living, and the family is highly esteemed in the community.

Mr. Connell is a Republican and was elected county commissioner in 1891, in 1903 and again in 1906, serving in that capacity at the present time. He is a member of the Royal Highlanders at Brocksburg.

GEORGE M. ANDERSON.

George M. Anderson, who was for three years the president of the Newport Mariaville Telephone Company, an institution organized and very largely built by him, is one of the most representative farmers of Kirkwood precinct, Rock county, Nebraska, and as a local three and one of the most representative farmers of Kirkwood precinct, Rock county, Nebraska, and as a local and faithful worker in the interests of the Democratic party has many friends over the state.

Mr. Anderson was born on a farm in Athens county, Ohio, January 29, 1859, and was reared to an agricultural life, to which his parents, Humphrey and Frances (Brown) Anderson, were also born and bred. Of the children born to his parents, he is the eldest of three who are now living. He has three half brothers. Humphrey Anderson, the father, died September 1, 1906, at his home in Missouri. When George M. Anderson had reached the age of twenty-three years he left his Ohio home and was engaged in farming for about four years in Guthrie county, Iowa, where considerable success attended his efforts. He was married in Ohio, January 5, 1881, to Miss Lydia Daniels, whose parents were English born and bred. Eight children have come to bless this union: Herbert, Carl and Harl, twins; Roscoe, Eugene, Arthur, Chester and Marcus. The mother died October 7, 1907, leaving the family disconsolate.

In 1886 the Andersons moved still farther to the west, and journeyed from their Iowa home to a new location in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, being twenty days on the way, and bringing with them seven head of cattle. Making a pre-emption settlement on what seemed a desirable location, they put up a sod house, in which they were at home for the ensuing four years. In 1891 Mr. Anderson was attracted by the rush to South Dakota, and thought he might do well there as it seemed to promise relief from some of the troubles that attended him in Keya Paha county. Accordingly he went to Gregory county, South Dakota, where he remained until 1895, but the loss of three successive crops by repeated drouths proved too much for his endurance, and he returned to this state, having hardly more with which to start anew than his unbroken courage and good strong arms. After making his land entries, and building a sod house, he found himself with less than ten dollars, and winter rapidly advancing. That fall he worked for fifty cents a day and was glad to secure employment even at that low wage. The passing of the years has worked him well, and today he is reckoned among the most solid and substantial citizens of the county. In 1895 he bought his present farm, and today is the proprietor of a landed estate consisting of five hundred and sixty acres, on which he has erected good buildings and has secured an ample supply of farm machinery. A view of the residence with its accompanying buildings is to be found on another page. He is working somewhat from an exclusive grain farming to stock raising as well, and is seeking to develop diversified interests, believing the farmer best off who can turn in the most directions to meet the fluctuations of a varying market. He has served his precinct as assessor for four years; is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Newport and the Ancient Order of United Woodmen of Mariaville, in which he is financier and his management of the funds of the order is highly praised by his brother workmen.

THEODORE P. GREEN.

Among the leading citizens of Cherry county, Nebraska, the gentleman herein named occupies a prominent place. Mr. Green resides in section 27, township 32, range 39, where he has a fine farm and pleasant home.

Mr. Green was born in Lincoln county, Ohio, May 29, 1846. His father, George W. Green, was a Virginian, a farmer by occupation, and in 1851 moved to Champaign county, Illinois, where he lived for twelve years with his family, consisting of his wife and eight children, of whom our subject is the seventh in order of birth. There he was reared and educated, coming to Nebraska with his parents in 1864, where they took up a homestead in Sarpy, about twenty-five miles southwest of Omaha. When Theodore was eighteen years of age he started out for himself, following farm work part of the time and learned blacksmithing at St. Joseph, later taking up the machinists' and finally the carpenters' trade. In 1870 he rented land and opened a farm for himself in Sarpy county, remaining on it for six years, then went to California, working on the Petrie ranch for five years. At the end of that time he returned to Sarpy county, again taking a farm, working as a carpenter part of the time, and in 1885 moved to Cherry county, locating eight miles east of Gordon. He lived on that place for two years and a half, then moved to another place two miles east of that place, where he remained for a short time. Four years were spent in Douglas county and in Omaha and then he returned to this locality, settling on his second homestead, but he could not make a living during the dry years, so changed his filing for land situated on Rice creek. He later sold that and bought land near, and in 1904 took up his present place of six hundred and forty acres, one-fourth of which is deeded land. This is partly farming land, with plenty of grazing and hay land. He cuts about fifty tons of hay each season, and engages principally in farming, although he keeps a large bunch of horses.

Mr. Green was married February 5, 1887, to Miss Cynthia Crabtree, born in Livingston county, Illinois, in 1867. She is a daughter of John M. Crabtree, who served as lieutenant in the Black Hawk war. He married Nancy M. King. Mr. and Mrs. Green have a family of five children, who are named as follows: Cora L., now Mrs. Frank Sweet; Melvin E., Della L., Leonard L., and Mary Alice, all born and reared in Nebraska.

Politically, Mr. Green is an independent voter, with a leaning toward the Bryan party in national affairs. He is also prominent in educational matters in his locality, and has been school director since coming to Nebraska.

G. B. EDMUND ESTLER.

The pen of the writer lingers lovingly over the story of the bright and capable young men who have come to this country from foreign lands with scarcely the endowment of the speech of its people, and by grim determination and sheer pluck have hammered out for themselves a fair name and goodly possessions in the course of a few years. Their only possessions were a strong right arm and an honest heart, and over and over again, ten thousand times, is the story told in the lives of the German settler of the western states.

G. B. Edmund Estler, a prosperous and successful farmer of Sioux county, Nebraska, presents in his own career an excellent example of this story. He was born in Dresden, Saxony, Germany, in 1876. His father was a piano-maker in his native land. He married Louisa Wolters, born and raised in the same locality with him in Saxony. The couple came to the United States with their little family in 1878, settling in Kansas, where they were among the pioneers. Our subject spent his boyhood in that state, and remained there until he was nine years of age, then went to New York city, where he began working in a grocery store as a clerk and errand boy, following that occupation up to 1898, then again struck out for the west, this time locating in Sioux county, taking up his present farm as a homestead. He filed on this land March 10th, of that year, and was the seventh settler to take up a claim in that vicinity. He had very little start his farm with, and after his arrival bought two horses and a cow. During the first eight years he had a hard time to get along, making but little more than a bare living. He had several crop failures caused by drouths, and was also haled out in 1900, but stuck to the place through all the hard years, and eventually succeeded in establishing a home and building up a good farm. The place is situated on section 1, township 31, range 55, and his residence is in section 1, townshi

55. His ranch now contains three hundred and twenty acres, all of which is fenced, and he has sixty acres under cultivation. He has erected good buildings, drilled deep wells and has wind-mills with supply tanks which provide plenty of good water for all purposes on the farm. His home and ranch is one of the well-kept and most pleasant places to be found in his locality, every appointment showing good management and painstaking care in its operation. In 1903 he had the misfortune to be burned out, losing a barn filled with feed, and other property to the amount of $300.

Mr. Estler is a public-spirited citizen and active in local affairs, having served as road overseer for two terms. In politics, he is non-partisan.

WILLIAM SIGEA.

Through exceptionally good management and persistent labors the gentlemen above named has acquired a well developed farm, and is enabled to enjoy the comforts of modern farming. He is of a progressive nature, and has had a wide experience and every detail of the work on his farm is carefully looked after and personally supervised by him. He resides in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, where he is highly respected as a worthy citizen.

Mr. Sigea is a native of Hillsdale, Michigan, born July 29, 1859. His father was a baker by trade, who was born in Germany and came to America about the time of our Civil war. He settled in Hillsdale with his wife, who was Mary Stroub, also a native of the fatherland. Mr. Sigea was killed by Indians near Denver, in 1861, while freighting on the plains. The mother of our subject died when he was fifteen years old, and he lived with his stepfather until he reached the age of twenty-two, the family having moved to Iowa, locating near Council Bluffs. Seeing that his stepfather did not intend to give him an equal share as promised he left home and in 1881 went to Minnesota and engaged in the livery business at Fergus Falls, continuing in this for three years, then moved to Pottawattamie county, Iowa, where he spent two years, following farming as an occupation. In 1886 he came to Nebraska and settled in Keya Paha county. He shipped his belongings to Bassett, bringing a few farm tools with him, and went to work on a farm, putting up a house built of rough logs, topped with a dirt roof. Here the family went through all the hardships of a pioneer life, losing two through the drouths, and often becoming heartened, but he stuck to his farm, grad adding to his possessions, and improving the place with a comfortable house, fitted up with all modern conveniences, and a fine set of farm buildings. He is the owner of nine hundred and sixty acres of deeded land and has built up a good home and valuable estate. In June, 1907, Mr. Sigea built one of the largest and finest barns in Keya Paha county, with concrete basement stables, an ornament to any farm. The dwelling, with its outbuildings, furnishes one of the illustrations of this work.

Mr. Sigea was married near Crescent, Nebraska, April 24, 1884, to Miss Annette B. Paris, whose father, a native of France, was a miller and shoemaker by trade, who settled near Crescent in 1876, where he lived at the time of his death, February 7, 1887; the mother, Eliza Selzer, was of German blood, and is now residing in Keya Paha county. Mr. and Mrs. Sigea have had four children: Millie A., born in Iowa and wife of Clarence A. Lambert, living on an adjoining ranch; August, Clarence and Clinton, the three younger children being born where they now live.

In political sentiments Mr. Sigea is a Democrat, and he affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Woodmen fraternity at Carnes.

BEN LITZ.

Among the old settlers in Nebraska who braved the hardships and privations of a pioneer life in order to carve out a name and fortune to bestow upon their posterity, the gentlemen above named occupies a foremost place. He has succeeded in building up a comfortable competence, and is highly esteemed by his fellowmen.

Mr. Litz is a native of Monroe county, Indiana, born on a farm February 28, 1867, the third member in a family of seven children, all boys. He remained at home until he reached the age of seventeen years, when he took upon himself the burden of his support. The father died in the early seventies; the family settled in Lucas county, Iowa, in 1884, but only remained there for two years. In the fall of 1885 Ben Litz came to Nebraska and took a homestead in section 28, township 30, range 19, in Rock county, and "batched it" for a short time. He at once put up a sod house, and lived in that for the following five years. When he first came here he had very little to start with. His mother moved here with him, but she soon after died, leaving him alone. He remained on that place and proved up, and afterwards sold his holdings there, settling in section 14, his present home, where he has had bountiful crops and now has a farm of four hundred and eighty acres, improved with a neat cottage residence, a good set of farm buildings, and sufficient fences. He is engaged principally in stock raising and dairying, finding a profitable enterprise in shipping cream to the cities east. His farm is worth, at a conservative estimate, $15,000, but he is well satisfied with his home and does not care to sell. The place has increased in value wonderfully since he first came here, as at that time it could have been bought for $1,000. He has planted a fine grove of trees, and everything on the whole farm bears evidence of good care and good management in its operation.

In the fall of 1892 Mr. Litz was married to Miss Kate Likins, whose parents settled in Rock county prior to the completion of the railroad to the region; the family experienced all the pioneer privations that befell the early settlers in this section of the country. Her father, Samuel Likins, endured many hardships to establish a home for his family in the west. Shortly after coming, their horses were all stolen by the Indians, necessitating the father's walking a hundred and fifty miles to Niobrara City for the family's supply of flour, which he carried on his shoulders that long and weary way. This is but a sample of the fortitude and endurance of the pioneer. Mr. and Mrs. Litz have a family of three children, namely: Lena, Leonard and Nettie. In politics our subject is a Democrat and is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Bassett.

THOMAS W. HULL.

Thomas W. Hull, residing in Grant, Nebraska, is one of the well known "old-timers" of Perkins county, and has been a potent factor in the development of the agricultural resources of that locality. He is now engaged in the real estate business and is a leading citizen in commercial and political affairs in his town.

Mr. Hull was born in Bureau county, Illinois, in 1856. His parents were of American stock, his father being a carpenter by trade and a prominent pioneer of Perkins county, settling there in 1885. He was among the first homesteaders in the section, later served as county judge for two terms, and at his death, which occurred in 1906, there was a feeling among the residents of his community that they had lost one of the foremost pioneers. Our subject grew up in Illinois, assisting his father in carrying on the farm, and attended the common schools. At the age of twenty-five years he started out for himself. He came to eastern Nebraska, and farmed there for about four years, then moved to what is now Perkins county, then known as Keith county. He settled on a claim seven miles south of Grant, and there followed stock raising, farming, and during the first years worked at whatever he could get to do to make a living and make money to improve his homestead. He lived in a sod house for several years, and followed a typical frontier life. In the fall of 1891 he was elected sheriff of the county and was re-elected at the expiration of his term, and during that time moved to Grant, but later returned to the ranch and made that his home up to 1906, then went back to town to live. He succeeded in acquiring six hundred acres, then sold his holdings, after improving it in fine shape. In the real estate business he has built up a good patronage, handling land all over the county, and promoting the public good in every way possible.

Mr. Hull married Miss Martha E. Hannah, a native of Illinois, in 1881. They have one son, Roy, who is now grown up and married, and is in business at Grant, Nebraska. Politically Mr. Hull is an Independent.

GEORGE W. SNIDER.

The subject of this sketch, George W. Snider, is regarded as one of the most successful of the old settlers. He was born in Clark county, Illinois, on a farm near the town of Westfield, in 1846. His father, David Snider, was a native of New Albany, Indiana, and was of American nationality. His mother, Sophia Evinger, was born in Indiana and her people were Germans. Mr. Snider's father and mother both died in Illinois. He lived on the farm in Clark county for many years, at times working out for the neighboring farmers when a boy, dropping corn in the old fashioned way and getting twenty-five cents for planting ten acres. When he grew older he was employed to plant thirty acres and was paid one dollar and fifty cents for the work. This was regarded as very good pay at that time. He often carried eggs to town, selling them for three cents a dozen. In those days the people were obliged to pay one dollar and twenty cents per gallon for kerosene. Mr. Snider took charge of the home farm when he was fourteen years old and managed it as successful as a man of mature years. Two of his older brothers went to the war in 1861. He remained on the farm until he was twenty-one years old, leaving it at that time to go into the grocery business at Westfield, Illinois, his home town, with W. A. Snider. They conducted this business for eight years, all of that time he postmaster. In 1876 he went to Charleston, Illinois, and, taking H. E. Bradley, his brother-in-law, for a partner, again opened a grocery store in that city. He conducted this business for ten years, making a success of this as he had with the other store in Westfield.

In 1888 he left Charleston for Terre Haute, Indiana, at which place he engaged in the furniture business, which he conducted for several months. After selling this business he went to Madrid, Nebraska, where, in February, 1889, he became a partner and cashier of the Bank of Madrid, which position he held from 1889 to 1896, giving great satisfaction to the officers and stockholders of the bank, which was one of the strong financial institutions of Perkins county. He was also prominent in politics while in Madrid, holding the positions of notary public and village treasurer. He always voted with the Republican party and at one time he was instrumental in carrying an election for his party, which would otherwise have been defeated. He was one of the men who foresaw the great possibilities of the region and was actively connected with a county fair association which did much to build up the town of Madrid, where he held an interest in a creamery and flouring mill in 1889.

He later became interested in real estate and helped to lay out the town of Wauneta, in Chase county, Nebraska, in 1888, and moved to that town in 1900, engaging in the stock business. He has platted an addition to West Wauneta and done much to improve the town. This town has electric lights and, through the efforts of Mr. Snider and other enterprising citizens of the town, will soon have an up-to-date water plant installed, as the best water power in Nebraska is on the Frenchman river within the town. He also sold farm machinery and buggies. He remained in this town for about eighteen months, leaving it for Denver, Colorado, where he stayed for a short time and then went to Glenwood Springs. He remained here about a year in the hope of benefiting his wife, who was in poor health.

In 1902 he came to Ogallala and, with Mrs. Jennie Forsythe, a sister-in-law, and Malcolm McClain, he established the first state bank in the county. Mr. Snider was president of this institution for several years, selling his interest in 1905. He then went to California for recreation and travel, remaining there for about a year. He established and was interested in a grocery business at Los Angeles, California, which is now owned by a nephew. In 1906 he returned to Ogallala, becoming interested in the real and insurance business in which he was successful. He is also interested in the and chattel loan business, which, with his farms, has occupied all his time.

Mr. Snider has taken a leading part in the politics of his county and state and is regarded as one of the most progressive citizens of the county, in the development of which he has taken so prominent a part. He has held several offices of trust and has always given entire satisfaction to those whom he has served. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he is one of the trustees, also a member of the Masonic fraternity, and has served as a notary public since 1889. During the panic of 1893 our subject's bank and the banks of two of his competitors were the only ones that kept their doors open in that part of the country. After the panic he was instrumental in helping to secure aid to Perkins county's poor people.

On March 12, 1874, Mr. Snider married Dora M. Fisher, daughter of W. W. Fisher, of Charleston, Illinois. Mr. Fisher was a prominent business man of Charleston. In 1876 our subject moved to Charleston and March 12, 1876, a son named Harry E. was born to Mr. and Mrs. Snider and on March 1, 1879, the little one was called to join the angels above. Mr. and Mrs. Snider were father and mother to a nephew of Mrs. Snyder, George W. Kennedy. They took him to their home when he was nine years old and sent him to school until he was a young man and then set him up in business. He is post master and owns a large store at Colegrove, California, near Los Angeles.

In 1900 Mrs. Forsythe, a sister of Mrs. Snider, was left a widow with a little girl one year old. Mr. and Mrs. Snider took them to live with them and Mr. Snider has looked after their interests ever since, and has been a father to little "Marie", who thinks as much of him as if he was her own father. They all have a beautiful home at Ogallala, where our subject spends his time looking after his farms of five hundred acres, loaning money and selling his lots at Wauneta; does odd jobs in insurance and real estate business, is enjoying good health and takes life as easy as he can.

OSCAR STARR.

Oscar Starr, one of the old-time settlers in western Nebraska, resides on his well-improved farm in section 4, township 33, range 35, Cherry county. He has always done his full share in the upbuilding of the community in which he lives, and is highly esteemed as a man of sterling character and strict integrity.

Mr. Starr was born in Vernon county, Wisconsin, June 4, 1866. His father, Comfort Starr, was a farmer by occupation, and one of the pioneers of eastern Nebraska. He drove in this state with a team and covered wagon containing his household goods, in 1876, locating in Butler county, where his death occurred in the fall of 1878. Our subject settled in Cherry county in 1887 and remained there up to the early spring of 1908, when he moved to Mt. Vernon, Washington. He had nothing to start with, and took up a homestead on Niobrara river, his first building being a log shack. He got a team of bulls and began to break up his farm, batching it for the first two years. He gradually built up his place and proved up on it, and then moved down on the river bank. After getting started he added to his acreage, and now has a ranch of six hundred and eighty acres, one hundred of which is cultivated. He has good buildings, plenty of water, and has made a fine place of it. He has seen many hard times, and often became discouraged during the drouth periods and other failures of crops.

Mr. Starr was married in 1890 to Miss Hattie Maybee, daughter of William Maybee, a pioneer in Holt and Cherry counties. Mr. and Mrs. Starr have a family of seven children, named as follows: William, May, Lovie, Roy, Laura, Murray and Cora.

Politically Mr. Starr is a staunch Republican, and has held numerous local offices, and was serving as justice of the peace at the time of his removal to the coast. He is always active in affairs of interest to his community, and lends his time and influence to the betterment of home conditions. Mr. Starr has always been an enthusiastic huntsman, and has been all over this part of the country and the reservations in South Dakota, camping out for weeks at a time, and has brought down some fine specimens of game of all kinds.

LOUIS N. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Louis N. Hollingsworth, a leading old settler of Buffalo county, who has gained an enviable reputation as a progressive agriculturist and worthy citizen, resides on his fine farm on section 8, in Center township, where he has a pleasant home. He has been a resident of this locality for the past twenty years, and is closely identified with the history of the development and growth of the agricultural and commercial interests of this region.

Mr. Hollingsworth is a native of Iowa, where he was born in 1857. He was raised there, on a farm, and spent about all his life in Iowa, until 1887. In 1887 he came to Buffalo county from Green county, Iowa, and here purchased the eighty-acre farm he now lives on, and has added to this farm other lands adjoining until he now owns two hundred and forty acres. During the first years he met with much discouragement in the failure of crops, but since 1895 he has raised splendid crops, his wheat averaging twenty bushels per acre, and for the last four years thirty bushels, one piece containing ten acres going as high as forty bushels per acre. This Wood river bottom land cannot be beaten any place; there is no sand, and all is good rich soil and no wash-out. In addition to his farming operations Mr. Hollingsworth feeds a good many cattle, during the winter running twenty-five head of fine Hereford milch cows. He has a fine large barn with ample stable room for his horses and cattle. Our subject considers that the splendid alfalfa produced here, with corn and all kinds of grain, makes Buffalo county one of the best farming sections to be found. He is one of the best and most careful farmers in the county, and his opinion is of weight in giving a statement of this kind. Mr. Hollingsworth and family occupy a fine residence, which is situated on a rise of ground from which is obtained a commanding view of the Wood River valley for miles east and west, the town of Kearney, a distance of seven miles, being plainly visible.

Mr. Hollingsworth was united in marriage in 1882 to Miss Jane Downs, who was raised in Madison county, Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Hollingsworth the following children have been born: Verlie, Louie, Walter, Frank, Ethel and Roy. They are graduates of the Kearney high school, and have been of great assistance to their parents in the farm and domestic work. Louie is now teaching; Roy is in high school, and Frank and Ethel are attending the State Normal.

JOHN ANDERSON.

John Anderson, residing on section 13 on the banks of Bordeaux creek, is well-known to all in this part of Dawes county as a man of sterling character and strict integrity in word and deed, who has aided in the development of his community from the time of his settling here, in 1891, and he is one of the public-spirited citizens of his precinct. Mr. Anderson has built up a good farm and has a pleasant and comfortable home.

Our subject is a native of the village of Schleswig, Germany, born in 1851. His father was a laborer all his life, working out in his native province at whatever he could find to do, and was able to support his family in fairly good shape, giving his children an opportunity to attend the school and each learn a trade, as is the universal custom in that country. Our subject learned the stone cutter's trade and worked at that for four years in his native land. In 1883 he came to America, and after landing in New York city, came directly west to Bryant, Iowa. He had been married in Germany and brought his wife with him. After locating in Iowa he went to work for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company as a section hand, and after a couple of years was promoted to the position of foreman, taking charge of Sec. No. 76 at Bordeaux Station, and he continued at railroad work for several years. In 1891 he filed on a homestead in section 13, township 32, range 47, built a house of logs and started a farm. He had not much to begin with, but owned a cow and calf and two horses, and managed to break up a little ground and put in a crop. The first years he had hard times in getting along, being put back considerable by the drouths, although he never had but one entire failure, while others in his vicinity lost everything. He was often able to when a fair crop when his nearest neighbors' crops were utterly ruined, so he gradually succeeded in building up his farm, and added more land to his first quarter, until he now owns one thousand five hundred acres altogether, all of which he has fenced, and one hundred and twenty acres of it under cultivation. He has erected a good house and commodious barns, and keeps everything about the place in first-class order, showing good management and thrift at every turn.

Mr. Anderson's wife was, prior to her marriage, Katherine Peterson, born and reared in Germany, where he married her in 1879, and they have one living child, Harvey Henry, aged twenty-seven years. They have lost three children, Hartwig, Jennie and a baby, not named.

Mr. Anderson takes an active part in local affairs of his community, and has done his share in building up the schools and bettering conditions generally in his locality. He has been school treasurer for fifteen years, and also school director for one year. Politically he is a Democrat, but votes an Independent ticket.

FRANK P. MORAN.

In giving to the public the life history of the gentleman above mentioned we are submitting the name of one of the oldest settlers of Grant county, Nebraska. He came to that region when it was in the first stages of development, and in no small degree aided in its up-building, giving liberally of his personal help and promoting its growth along agricultural, ranching and stock-raising lines.

and commercial lines. Mr. Moran resides in section 35, township 22, range 36, where he is owner of a pleasant home and valuable estate.

Frank P. Moran was born in Marion county, West Virginia, on July 9, 1852. His father, Robert, was a colonel in the Civil war, and had a brilliant record as a soldier. Robert Moran, the father, was the owner of a large tannery in Marion county, West Virginia, and a prominent man in his community. He married Sarah Pride, also a native of that state.

Our subject was reared and educated in his native county, spending most of his boyhood years on the home farm. At the age of twenty-one he left his parents' home and worked out for five years near home, and in 1879 came west to Nebraska, landing at Columbus, Platte county, on February 18th of that year. He located on his father's ranch and started in the cattle business, also begun farming, living on the ranch for eight years, and did exceedingly well. He was married in Platte county, in 1884, to Mary A. Snyder. Her father, C. J. Snyder, was an old settler in that vicinity and one of the first homesteaders there.

In 1886 Mr. Moran came with his family to Grant county, arriving here in the spring of the year. He filed on a homestead in section 34, township 22, range 36, and also took up a tree claim adjoining, all located eighteen miles south of Whitman. In coming to that region in Grant county he teamed all the way from Platte county, Nebraska, his nearest postoffice after settling here being North Platte, a distance of eighty miles. He did his trading at North Platte for quite awhile.

His first buildings were of sod, and he began ranching, having fair success, and was able to improve his place to some extent. He planted many trees during the early years, and now has one of the finest groves in his county, his residence being surrounded by a fine grove, making it one of the most sightly places in the vicinity. Mr. Moran's ranch consists of one thousand one hundred and twenty acres, all deeded land, and on the place is a valley two miles in length and half a mile wide, making the finest pasture imaginable for his stock.

Mr. Moran had a family of twelve children, as follows: Alice G., born in 1884, Leslie R., 1888, Sarah E., 1890, Vera L., 1891, Robert P., 1892, Milford G., 1897, W. J. Bryan, 1899, Dorothy B., 1901, Victor M., 1904, and Vernon D., 1906. They are a very bright and intelligent group, and form one of the most happy family circles to be found in many days' travel. Two children, Clarence and Otho, are dead. A picture of Mr. Moran and family will be found on another page.

Our subject is active in local political affairs, also takes a leading part in school matters, and has held office in his township for many years.

JAMES S. SCOFIELD.

James S. Scofield, numbered among the pioneers of Dawes county, Nebraska, has built up a fine farm and ranch in section 14, township 31, range 51, surrounded by the comforts of life and esteemed by his associates. His father located there in the early days, and by thrift and good management became owner of well cultivated tracts of land, and in whom the citizens found worthy support.

Mr. Scofield is a native of Harrison county, Iowa, born in 1868. His father, Eugene Scofield, was born in New York state, of old American stock, and was a pioneer in Dawes county, coming here in 1885 and settling on the farm our subject now owns, located in section 14. The family came here from Iowa, where they lived for several years, the father having run a milling business there. After arriving here they put up a log cabin, finishing it with a sod roof and dirt floor, and went through all the pioneer experiences. They first engaged in the cattle business and continued in that almost exclusively up to 1893, and since then have run a sheep ranch. The ranch comprises one thousand eight hundred acres, and this is kept up in the best possible shape, improved with good buildings, fences, etc. The father died here September 13, 1891, aged fifty-three years.

Our subject was united in marriage in 1898 to Miss Minnie Darrow, daughter of William and Helen Darrow, who came to this county as a pioneer and have one of the fine estates in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Scofield are the parents of three children, namely: Theron, Esther and Myrtle, the latter now deceased.

Mr. Scofield has always taken a commendable interest in local public affairs, and has aided materially in the development and growth of the commercial and educational conditions here. He has never sought public preferment, and is deservedly held in the highest esteem by his fellowmen.

PETER P. SHADE.

Peter P. Shade, one of the best known pioneers of Nebraska, is proprietor of an excellent farm adjoining Ainsworth in Brown county.

Mr. Shade was born in Fayette county, Illinois, July 6, 1849. His father, William Shade, was a farmer by occupation, and came to Illinois from Pennsylvania in the early days, bringing with him his family of two children; five children were born in Illinois, of whom our subject is the youngest. He was reared and educated on his father's farm and started life for himself at the age of twelve years, learning the shoemaker's trade at Moweena, which occupation he followed for six years, and then went back to farming. At first he begun on rented land in Moultrie county and worked this for several years. In 1873 he came to Nebraska, locating on a homestead in Adams county, near Hastings. He had practically nothing to start with, and the first five years were very hard ones for him. The first year he settled here his crops failed, being utterly ruined by the grasshopper raids, which devastated the entire country round. The same condition of things existed the following year. His first house was a dugout, and in this he lived for some years, then built a sod house and kept at work improving his farm, trying hard to overcome the discouragements and hardships which he encountered.

He remained on this homestead until the fall of 1884, and then sold out his holdings and came to Brown county, settling on a farm three miles east of Ainsworth. He proved up on this, erected good buildings and continued to reside there until October, 1907, when he sold and invested in a twenty-four-acre tract adjoining Ainsworth, where he has built a fine house and barn, fitted with all the necessary improvements for running a model farm. He has planted one hundred and thirty fruit trees and a number of forest trees and evergreens.

On October 21, 1870, Mr. Shade was married at Sullivan, Illinois, to Miss Mary E. Dieter, a native of Medina, Ohio. She came to Christian county, Illinois, with her parents in 1865, the family settling in this locality. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Shade, of whom but one is now living, Maude E., a graduate of the Ainsworth high school, now the wife of Ralph Carpenter, living four miles south of Johnstown.

Mr. Shade has done his full share as an old settler, and is recognized as one of the leading residents of the county in which he makes his home. He is a man whom it is not easy to forget if once met with, being above the ordinary in intelligence and individuality of character. He has the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen, and his name will figure prominently in the history of Nebraska. In politics he is a Democrat.

HENRY J. DAVIS.

Henry J. Davis, classed among the substantial and prosperous farmers of Court House Rock precinct, Morrill (formerly Cheyenne) county, is an old settler in western Nebraska, and has passed through all the old Nebraska times, good, bad and indifferent, remaining to enjoy the prosperity which has come to those who spent many years in helping develop the agricultural resources of that region. He has acquired valuable property by his labors and good management, and enjoys comfortable surroundings and an enviable reputation as a citizen.

Mr. Davis was born in Oakland county, Michigan, January 15, 1856, and grew to the age of five years, then with his parents moved to Saratoga county, New York, where they lived for about nine years. The family then came to Stephenson county, Illinois, remaining there but a short time, then into Hardin and Franklin counties, Iowa. The father, William Davis, was a farmer, and followed that calling in Iowa up to 1887, at that time coming to Nebraska, settling in Cheyenne county, where he took up a pre-emption. This is now our subject's home ranch. Both his father and mother, who was Julia Valentine in maidenhood, are now deceased, the mother's death occurring in this county in 1894, the father following in 1901.

Mr. Davis has a fine ranch, engaging almost exclusively in running cattle and horses. He has plenty of pasture for his stock, also meadows and groves, with a good set of buildings on the place.

Mr. Davis was married in Webb City, Webster county, Iowa, in 1893, to Miss Emma Gaudy. His wife died in Sidney in the fall of 1895, leaving one child, Vera, now attending school in Iowa Falls, Iowa. In political faith our subject is a strong Democrat and is active in local affairs.

JERRY FERREL.

• One of the highest tributes to be paid a citizen is to say that he is a leading old settler. During the many years of his residence in a community he has been placed in communication with many of the inhabitants of his home neighborhood, and his career has been open to their criticisms one way or the other. The gentleman above named is classed among the pioneers of Sheridan county, Nebraska, and as a resident of Hay Springs, former agriculturist of enterprise and integrity he has passed favorable criticism and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen.

Mr. Ferrel is a native of Wayne county, Iowa, born June 23, 1861. His father, John Ferrel, was a farmer and early settler in Iowa, having taken up a tract of government land there in 1852. In a family of nine children our subject was the sixth member, and he together with his brothers and sisters grew up on the frontier, where he early learned to do all sorts of hard farm labor, during the winter months attending the country schools. He left home at the age of twenty-two and came west, locating in O'Neil, Holt county, Nebraska, where he followed the carpenter's trade there up to 1884. At that time that section was a tough country, full of rough characters who made that their headquarters during the pioneer days of that region.

Mr. Ferrel came to Sheridan county during June of the latter year, driving through from O'Neil with a team and covered wagon, settling on a pre-emption situated three and one-half miles west of Hay Springs. Here he built a log house and batched it, going through the usual pioneer experiences, freighting from Bordeaux saw mill to Pine Ridge Agency, South Dakota. He remained here proving up on his claim, and spent the year of '85 working at his trade in Pine Ridge Agency, and the following year in this work at Hay Springs. After this he clerked in a hardware store for eighteen years, learning the tinner's trade and mastering every detail of the hardware business, and also establishing a furniture store here, which he owned and managed for twelve years. He sold out his holdings in 1906, and brought back his energy and industry is now seen in his fine farm and home. He has six hundred and forty acres with about three hundred acres under cultivation and all improved in good shape. He has raised all kinds of grain including wheat, oats and corn and has always made a special business of raising cattle and horses of the best registered breeds. Mr. Sawyer imported the first Percheron stallion into this country.

Ever since coming to the county, Mr. Sawyer has taken an active interest in all that pertained to the welfare of his adopted state and he could be counted among the progressive citizens. Fred, his oldest son, has lived with his father for the last thirty years and is an up-to-date agriculturist and stockman having grown up with the country. Frank, Fred and George, the three sons, came to the county with their father.

GEORGE A. JANSSEN.

George A. Janssen, a leading old settler in Nebraska, resides on his well improved farm situated in section 25, township 35, range 29, Cherry county. He was born in Hanover, Germany, November 5, 1855, where his father, Gerhard Janssen, conducted a meat market his entire business career, dying there in 1865, when our subject was ten years of age. From that time he has made his own way in the world, first being apprenticed to a baker; he mastered his trade there, working at it for six years, until 1876, he left his native land and came to America, settling in Grundy county, Iowa, where he resided one year. He then went to Sioux City, where he lived for three years, employed at his trade for a few months, followed by farm work in Bremer county. In 1886 he came on to Nebraska, settling in the homestead where he now resides. He built a sod house, part of which still remains, and lived in this for twelve years, batching it a short time. His first work was done with a yoke of oxen with which he broke and cultivated the land, but the dry years came on and his crops were completely destroyed two years in succession, producing not even enough for seed. By perseverance he met all difficulties and succeeded in a marked degree, adding to his farm gradually, until now he is proprietor of six hundred and forty acres of good land, one hundred and fifty of this cultivated and the balance in pasture and grass land. Mr. Janssen has a comfortable residence and a large barn. He has a fine house, twenty-two by sixteen, built partly of concrete, as are chicken house, tool house, hog house and other buildings, all constructed by Mr. Janssen's own hand. There are a number of other commodious buildings of frame construction, making a well equipped farm. Being well provided with concrete houses and yards Mr. Janssen engages in poultry raising on a large scale. He has a fine grove of mulberry trees, also a nice cherry orchard and other fruits, with everything kept up in the best possible condition.

He has had severe losses since coming to these parts, in 1890 losing his barn and contents, including four horses, farm machinery, hay, grain, corn, etc., by fire, and the following years lost his crops through hail storms, but he was never disheartened, still persevered and is now satisfied with what he has accomplished.

In 1888 Mr. Janssen was married to Mrs. Johanna (Holm) Bolmiera, a native of Bremen, Germany, she having two children by a former husband, namely Fred and Johannes. Mr. and Mrs. Janssen have a family of five children, named as follows: Lizzie, Wilhelm, Mary, Lonnie and Johanna.

Mr. and Mrs. Janssen are members of the Lutheran church.

A view of the residence of Mr. Janssen will be found on another page in this work.

LEROY D. TICE.

Leroy D. Tice, one of the leading old settlers of western Nebraska, has a fine farm in La Vaca precinct, Cherry county, and is a worthy citizen of his community. Mr. Tice was born in Marion county, Iowa, May 6, 1856, and raised on a farm there, his parents settling in that region in 1844. He lived at home until he was twenty-seven years old, then went to Oregon, where he spent two years carrying chain on the government survey; returning to Iowa and farming his father's place up to 1888. He came to Nebraska, locating on section 2, township 31, range 40, the place which he now occupies. He was farming during the dry years, but not to any very great extent, so did not suffer any very heavy losses, and has never had a total failure of crops since coming here. He has bought only thirteen bushels of seed wheat in all the time he has been here, which is a very good record. He has added to his land constantly, so that he now owns eight hundred and eighty acres of deeded land, besides a homestead. Of this he farms about one hundred acres, and on the balance runs some fifty cattle and half as many horses. His place is well kept, improved with good buildings, all fenced, and is one of the valuable estates in this locality. In the summer of 1907 he erected a large concrete block house supplied with bath and running water, and he also has a water system for irrigating garden and lawn.

Mr. Tice was married in 1884 to Miss Katherine Griffin, daughter of James Griffin, born in Ireland, and who came to America when a young man, her mother also being a native of the Emerald Isle. Mr. and Mrs. Tice have three children, namely: James D., Edward D., and Mary A.

Mr. Tice thinks this is one of the finest countries he ever saw, and is contented to make his future home here. He has always done all in his power to help in building up the region, and takes an active part in school and local affairs, for the past sixteen years serving as school director. He is a Democrat, and a great admirer and supporter of the peerless leader of Nebraska.

JOHN A. WILSON.

John A. Wilson, a prominent farmer of Box Butte county, resides on section 21, township 27, range 47, and conducts personally his well improved ranch of about two thousand acres in accordance with modern methods and scientific principles. He is a constant and thorough reader, and applies the information thus obtained to practical use in the operation of his large estate.

Mr. Wilson was born in Harding, Shelby county, Ohio, on September 23, 1859. His father, Hiram Wilson, was a grandson of Col. Wilson, an early settler in that county, who located on government land in 1700. Prior to her marriage, our subject's mother was Curtis Kelsey, born and raised near Rutland, Vermont, daughter of a prominent politician who was a state official in Vermont for many years. Our subject grew up in central Iowa, where his parents had settled in 1867 and lived as pioneers. His schooling was very limited, as the nearest school from their homestead was eight miles away. At the age of twenty-one years he left home and struck out for himself, farming on rented land for several years, but became convinced that this was unsuccessful and gave it up. During this time he had given much time to the study of agriculture and had put it to practical test on his farm, receiving second prize for some potatoes which he exhibited, also securing first prize for corn in Boone county, Iowa.

In 1885 Mr. Wilson came to Nebraska and filed on a pre-emption situated eighteen miles northeast of Alliance, leaving his family in Iowa until he found a home for them, and the following year, in 1886, they joined him there. He had built a sod shanty and began to break up land for crops with his team of horses, and also used these for hauling supplies from Hay Springs, following the usual custom of travelers of that time, in camping out at night under his wagon. His first crop was sod potatoes and corn, and he also worked out in the neighborhood of his home in breaking up land for other settlers in order to make a living for his family. During the dry years he went through many hard experiences, some seasons not being able to raise even seed for the following year from all he had put in the ground, and during these times he made a living by buying eggs through the country and selling them over again at the nearby markets. He had to borrow money to carry this business on, and kept at it for five years, his egg sales sometimes running as high as four hundred dollars a month. As the times grew better he did well, was able to purchase more land, buying in both Box Butte and Sheridan counties, and re-selling much of it, making considerable money through these speculations. In 1893 he began raising blooded horses, and has owned some of the finest animals in Nebraska. Mr. Wilson now owns a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres of deeded land, and besides this he controls two thousand acres, engaging on a very large scale in the cattle business. He has the place well improved with fine buildings, several miles of fence, and everything necessary for conducting a model ranch, cultivating about one hundred acres.

Our subject is also the inventor of a pitman for use on mowers and binders, which take up lost motion, and this has been considered by experts to be a great success. He is besides this, the owner and inventor of a recipe used for the treatment of all kinds of wood which prolongs its usefulness for many years. Wheels which have been subjected to this treatment never need their tires set.

Mr. Wilson was united in marriage in 1880, to Miss Emogene F. Schadle, daughter of Joseph N. and Mary (Smith) Schadle, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Wilson had the sad misfortune to lose his wife, while undergoing an operation at Lincoln, Nebraska, April 16, 1908. A child was born of this union, a daughter named Eva F. Wilson, who still remains her father and is helping him with a devoted and filial affection that is truly commendable. The family are well known and highly respected.

teemed in their community and enjoy one of the most pleasant homes in their locality.

Mr. Wilson was elected postmaster of Box Butte postoffice in the early days, now changed to Marple postoffice, and has served in that capacity for many years. He has been connected with the mail service here since 1886.

CHRIS. HANSEN.

Chris. Hansen, whose fine ranch in Box Butte county is a credit to his locality, is a man of untiring energy, and is classed among the substantial agriculturists of the community in which he lives. He has cleared a large portion of wild prairie land for cultivation, and become the owner of a ranch of over one thousand four hundred and forty acres. He is a thorough farmer and up-to-date business man.

Mr. Hansen was born in Denmark in 1865, son of a farmer and miller, who died when our subject was five years of age. Chris. was reared and educated in Denmark, being apprenticed to a blacksmith when a young boy, following that trade in his native country for a number of years, and in 1884 came to America, landing in New York city June 8th of that year when nineteen years of age. He went to Canada shortly after arriving here, there being employed on the Canadian Pacific railroad in the Rocky mountains, helping lay that road across the Columbia river. He spent about a year and a half in the west, and while in that region passed through many exciting and interesting experiences with the Indians in that country who were very hostile to the whites at that time. After getting through with that work, Mr. Hansen went to Omaha and worked at ice business one winter, then bought a pair of horses and did teaming, also railroaded near Omaha. He next went to Blair, Nebraska, settling on rented land and did farming for a short time, coming to Box Butte county in 1888, and taking up a pre-emption on which he proved up in due time, also filed on a homestead after proving up on his pre-emption. He still occupies the pre-emption, which is situated in section 7, township 26, range 50, and his first buildings were of sod, beginning as all of the pioneers did, with a very small capital and going through the drouth periods when he lost a number of crops, when he was hardly able to raise enough for feed for his few head of stock and provisions for his family. He had one cow and a few chickens, and these helped furnish him with food. He kept at his farm work, and after a time did well, raising good crops and improving his ranch, and he now gives most of his time to stock raising, only cultivating about one hundred and forty-five acres, on which he raises small grain, potatoes, corn, etc.

In 1887 Mr. Hansen was united in marriage to Anna Mary Peterson, also a native of Denmark, who came to this country in the spring of that year. Four children have been born of this union, who are named as follows: Hans, Marie, Elinora and Grace, all born and reared in this county.

Mr. Hansen is classed among the oldest settlers in this section of the state, and has always taken an active part in neighborhood affairs from the early days of its settlement. He is well acquainted all through his precinct, and has served as township assessor for five years. Politically he is a Populist.

JOHN M. DYER.

The gentleman whose name heads this review was born in Cass county, Iowa, August 31, 1858, and is a son of John Dyer, a blacksmith and farmer, of American stock; the mother was Mary A. Porter prior to her marriage. Of a family of nine children our subject is the second member, and he was reared on his father's farm, following the plow from the time he was thirteen years old and being accustomed to all kinds of hard work. He struck out for himself when he reached the age of twenty-one, following farm work. For four years he farmed, on rented land, living at home. About the year 1883 he established a mercantile business at Reno, Iowa, in partnership with R. F. Breen, and they carried this on for two years being moderately successful, then disposed of the store and come to Nebraska, locating in Keya Paha county, settling on a farm in section 30, township 33, range 18, and began improving this land. He also operated a blacksmith shop which he ran for twelve years. His first dwelling was a log house, and later built a sod addition to this; he took up a homestead in section 14, township 33, range 18, where he lived for ten years in a sod house. During these days he worked at all kinds of things, driving ox teams and working out by the day, and remained on this place up to 1897, when he bought his present farm of about one thousand three hundred acres, with an equal amount under lease; he has never sold a foot of land that he has ever owned. He has been engaged largely in stock raising and has done an immense business in this line. He has improved his ranch, putting up a fine large three-story house, besides substantial farm buildings, including granary, corn cribs, sheds, barn, etc. His place is located on the Niobrara river, and he has over two hundred acres of timber. About sixty-five acres of his farm is cultivated, with two hundred acres of bottom hay land.

Mr. Dyer was married in Keya Paha county July 28, 1885, to Miss Belle Charlton, daughter of John H. and Hettie (Baird) Charlton, who were old settlers in Keya Paha county. Mr. and Mrs. Dyer have a family of six children, who are as follows: Beulah, John Burnie, Ward M., Hattie Hazel, Audrey E. and Marvel H. Their eldest daughter is one of the successful teachers of the county since the fall of 1906. They are a happy family, and all enjoy the most robust health, never having had occasion to call a physician in their home. Mr. Dyer is a man pre-eminently fitted to enjoy a home and family, and they are well known as a devoted family, well liked by everyone who knows them, and are esteemed citizens. In politics Mr. Dyer is a Populist. In the Ancient Order of United Workmen lodge at Carnes he served as the first master workman on the institution of that organization there. Mr. Dyer takes a commendable interest in all politics, both local and state in his party. He has been an attendant at the state and county conventions for many years past.

R. V. BEACH.

Among the men who have played an important part in the development of Deuel county, none are held in higher esteem than the man whose name heads this article. The life of Mr. Beach has been a busy one, and he has served his fellowmen as soldier, teacher, preacher, farmer and as a government official. We present a portrait of him on another page.

R. V. Beach was born in Delaware county, Ohio, October 29, 1842. In 1847 his father and mother, with the family of six children, removed to Illinois. Here our subject grew to manhood, and it was while living in Illinois that the great Civil war broke out. Mr. Beach, who was but twenty years of age, like thousands of other patriotic young Americans, quickly answered the nation's call and enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in 1862. Mr. Beach saw much active service and participated in the siege of Vicksburg, then later he participated in the campaign in Western Tennessee and then in Mississippi. It was in Gunter and Town, Mississippi, June 11, 1864, that he was captured by Forest's and Lee's forces, and was immediately hurried to Andersonville prison. In Andersonville he experienced all the horrors of that awful place; later he was transferred to Savannah prison, then to Millen prison and still later he was transferred to the military prison at Florence, South Carolina, having been confined a total of nine months. The experience of Mr. Beach while in the several southern prisons would fill a volume in itself. The darkest page in the career of the short lived southern confederacy is that wherein is recorded the treatment accorded the unfortunate soldiers who were taken prisoners of war. Mr. Beach was mustered out as a paroled prisoner, at Springfield, Illinois, July 1, 1865. Two brothers of Mr. Beach were in the Civil war and both came out without injury other than that which comes from exposure and hardship undergone in the service.

After the war our subject returned to Illinois, where he entered Grand Prairie Seminary, remaining in school for one year. After leaving school, he went to Linn county, Iowa. He remained in Iowa one year, teaching one term of school, then in the spring of 1867, he went to Delaware county, Ohio. In Delaware county he taught school one term, then returned to Illinois. He remained in Illinois until the fall of 1870. Mr. Beach was ordained a minister of the gospel at Oswego, Illinois, where he remained and served as minister in the Methodist church for a little over one year, then, in the fall of 1870, came to Nebraska, settling in Butler county, where he homesteaded and proved up on a claim. He lived in Butler county until coming to Deuel county in 1887, where he located on a farm; there he followed preaching, teaching and farming. Mr. Beach has taught fifteen terms of school and has served as county superintendent of schools of Butler county. He owns a fine farm in section 10, township 12, range 42, consisting of eighty acres.

In the spring of 1906, Mr. Beach was appointed postmaster of Big Springs, and at once removed to that place and has since resided there.

Mr. Beach was married at Aurora, Illinois, October 10, 1870, to Miss Melinda M. Edwards, born in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Beach are the parents of four children, as follows: Blanche E., married to B. C. Kemp and living in Big Spring; Ethel R., deceased; Madge the wife of O. B. Bower and living at Chappin Warren B., who is serving as assistant master at Big Spring. Mr. Beach is well and favorably known

Deuel county as a man of sterling character, and during his life as preacher, teacher, soldier, farmer and lecturer, has accumulated a vast amount of experience that has rounded out his education and he is today one of the best posted men in western Nebraska.

F. H. PORTER.

F. H. Porter, editor and proprietor of The Holdrege Citizen, the leading Republican paper of Phelps county, is well known and highly esteemed by all throughout this region. He was born in Oswego county, New York, in 1860, and reared there and made it his home until 1870.

In 1872 Mr. Porter came to Nebraska. He graduated from Doan College at Crete, Nebraska, 1886, and went into the newspaper business in 1887, buying The Western Wave. The Holdrege Citizen was started in 1884 as a Republican organ, and in 1886 this was absorbed by the Citizens Publishing Company, a stock company, with Eric Johnson as editor. In March, 1891, our subject acquired the paper and job office, and in March of 1897 absorbed the Political Forum. The Holdrege Citizen is a weekly paper, a strong advocate of the Republican party policy, and a general local family paper. It has a large circulation, and is one of the most reliable newspapers in the county. The job office in connection with the paper is an up-to-date plant, fitted with all modern appliances and equipment for neat and prompt service, and Mr. Porter gives his special attention to this branch of the work. He has always been one of the foremost citizens of his region, and a useful and worthy member of the community in which he lives, standing for the advancement and betterment of his home county at all times.

Mr. Porter sold his interest in The Holdrege Citizen October 1, 1908, and at the present time is unemployed. He was married April 24, 1890, to Miss Luella C. Alsworth, who was born in western Iowa. Her father, Samuel C. Alsworth, was a pioneer of Nebraska.

URIAH BROMWICH.

Uriah Bromwich was born in Chicago, Illinois, in 1853, and at that time the present great city was but a mere village. The father, Uriah, was a merchant in that small metropolis and died there in August, 1854. He was a native of England. Our subject's mother, Jane (Bullis) Bromwich, was born in London, England.

Uriah Bromwich was taken to Wisconsin and when he was five years old the family moved to Freeborn county, Minnesota, where he was reared and educated on a farm, remaining till he was twenty-five years of age. Our subject was on the frontier for years and was within thirty miles of New Ulm at the time the terrible Indian massacre took place at that town. There were but few white families in the country in those days and our subject had many dangerous and trying experiences.

April 9, 1876, in Minnesota, Uriah Bromwich and Miss Ellenora Fay were united in the holy bonds of wedlock. The bride was a daughter of Nathan Fay, one of Loup county's pioneer settlers, whose biography appears in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Bromwich have four children living—Arthur, Willie, Retta and Joy. They have lost three children—Walter D., Elva J. and Nathan E. They reared one adopted child, Eva Body.

Mr. Bromwich drove through to Nebraska from Minnesota in a covered wagon in 1879, locating in Loup county on a pre-emption claim, on which he proved up and took a homestead in Custer county, where he now lives. The country was new and the nearest railroad town was Grand Island, one hundred miles distant. Our subject had learned the blacksmith's trade, and he followed this occupation for the first three years. His first building was a sod shanty and he lived in this until he became able to construct a comfortable log house. Farming operations were pushed as rapidly as possible and the family reaped good crops on the sod. Mr. Bromwich remembers that excellent watermelons were grown on new breaking. But the good years were followed by bad ones and it was discouraging indeed to experience the total loss of crops on one hundred and fifty acres in 1890 and almost total loss in other years, with again complete failure in 1893. One of the most disastrous visitations was July 9, 1904, when a tornado swept over the country. It destroyed his large barn and seriously damaged his house. The storm seemed bent on destroying everything on his farm, the windmill was torn down and machinery was scattered over acres of his land. His binder was lifted bodily and hung up in a tree eight feet from the ground, but strange to say the machine has been in use ever since and has done good work. One horse was injured. Many articles were actually twisted out of all resemblance to their former shape, and lumber and trees were shattered into splinters. The storm performed many curious freaks that cannot be accounted for—some barrels almost empty and directly in the path of the tornado were not moved at all, and splinters of lumber and trees were driven into the sides of the house where they can still be seen. This was perhaps the most terrifying experience in our subject's life. But Mr. Bromwich has accomplished grand success in spite of the many distressing hardships of his farm life and early pioneer days. He has a lovely farm of three hundred and sixty acres, well improved with good frame house, barns, sheds, well and windmill and fences. He cultivates about one hundred and forty acres. Mr. Bromwich stands well in the community and is favorably known as a man of push and enterprise.

ALBERT B. SUMMERS.

Among the representative pioneers of western Nebraska, the gentleman above named occupies a prominent place, and he has spent many years of his life in this section and has succeeded in building up an enviable reputation and competence through his strict integrity and good business judgment, and is recognized as one of the wealthy and influential residents of Garfield county, well known and highly respected by all. Mr. Summers lives in section 19, township 22, range 15, where he has a nice home and is surrounded by many good friends and kindly neighbors.

Mr. Summers was born in Michigan, January 15, 1862. He is the son of David and Caroline (Aldrich) Summers, of German descent. Our subject spent a number of years at Detroit, Michigan, where he was a student in the commercial college. In 1882 he first came to Nebraska, took up a claim of four hundred and eighty acres of government land, consisting of a pre-emption of one hundred and sixty acres, the same amount of homestead land and a timber claim of one hundred and sixty acres. He immediately set to work to develop his farm, and on the whole met with great success in all his ventures. He has since added another one hundred and sixty acres to his farm, now owning in all six hundred and forty acres of good land. He farms along modern lines, and is an up-to-date, progressive agriculturist, engaging to quite an extent in stock raising. He has a large part of his land devoted to the culture of small grains, raising corn, wheat, oats and barley. He has occasionally met with failures during the dry years, losing several crops, but altogether considers himself very fortunate in his farming operations. His place is well improved with good buildings and well supplied with good water, having deep water wells with three hundred feet of supply tanks and a number of windmills to pump the water to different parts of his farm and for household use. Every corner of the place shows good management and industry, bearing evidence to his energy and thrift. He is of the opinion that this state is far ahead of the state of Michigan, taking the expense of living and labor into consideration, and that it is away ahead of any state in the Union for the average farmer who is obliged to begin on a small capital.

Mr. Summers was married in June, 1899, to Miss Ida M. Erington, a native of Ohio, who settled in Nebraska with her parents in 1892. Her father now owns a fine farm in Garfield county, located fifteen miles northeast of Burwell. Mr. and Mrs. Summers are the parents of five children, namely: Gladys, David, Eldon, Ethel and one who died in infancy. The family are members of the Christian church and highly esteemed members of society in their section.

Politically Mr. Summers is a Democrat, although he has never devoted any time to taking an active part in politics. On another page an interesting picture is presented showing the family group and scenes on Mr. Summers's property.

JOHN A. BAIRN.

John A. Bairn is a native of the province of Elesburg, Sweden, born near Gottenberg, January 16, 1859. His father was a farmer by occupation and lived and died in Sweden.

John A. Bairn was reared in his native land, remaining there until 1881 when he came to America, by the usual route from Gottenberg to Hull, England, and thence to Liverpool, where he embarked, landing in the city of Quebec after a voyage of eleven days. Coming westward he located in Rice county, Minnesota, where he remained engaged in farming until 1885, when he removed to Deuel county, Nebraska. When he came, the country was new and there were very few settlers, and these were widely scattered. Our subject settled on land three miles north of the North Platte river, near the Keith county line. His first house was built of sod and for several years he lived alone in this primitive dwelling. After five years he proved up on his homestead.

stead and in 1900 bought his present farm in section 4, township 15, range 41, and commenced making improvements. In spite of the serious hard times and the varying fortunes of pioneer life Mr. Bairn has made a splendid success. He constructed a good stone home, has good barns and general improvements and has established himself on a prosperous plane of life. His early years here were full of hard work and worry to support the family and to make his farm grow in value and importance. Now he has a splendid ranch of six hundred and forty acres, including a recent Kincaid homestead, cultivating about fifty acres and giving the rest of his attention to the stock raising business. Mrs. Bairn has a fine tract of three hundred and twenty acres, watered by Clear creek, improved with a good stone house and substantial barns.

John A. Bairn was married in 1887 to Miss Emma Johnson, a native of Sweden. This marriage has been blessed with seven children: Charles Oscar, Annie Henrietta, James Adolph, John Arthur, Carl Edward, Tekla and Clara.

Mr. Bairn is one of the staunch Republicans of the county and has been influential in the movements of his party. He has exhibited a keen interest in local affairs and he has held local offices in both Deuel and Keith counties. He has always been public-spirited and progressive and as a leading old settler has contributed a large share to the material advancement of the locality in which he lives. The family was reared in the Lutheran church.

WILLIAM SCHAPER.

For over thirty years the citizens of Kearney county have had in their midst a worthy citizen in the person of the gentleman above named. He has been identified with the development and growth of this section of the state of Nebraska from its beginning, and has succeeded in building up a good home for himself and an enviable reputation, highly esteemed by his fellowmen.

Mr. Schaper was born in the province of Saxony, Germany, in 1843, and came to America in 1870. After landing in this country he came to New York, and three years later to Illinois, locating in Chicago, where he spent a few years, then to Nebraska in 1874, settling in Liberty township, this county, where he took up a homestead of eighty acres and also a tree claim. He proved up on these and since then has added to his acreage, purchasing three hundred and twenty acres in sections 21 and 22, one hundred and sixty acres in section 34, also eighty and one hundred and sixty besides this, so he is now the owner of six hundred and forty acres, all well improved. He is assisted in his farming operations by his sons, William and Otto, and they have one of the most valuable estates in this region. In 1902 Mr. Schaper moved into the town of Minden, he having purchased the opera house block here in 1899, containing offices and stores. This has a frontage of sixty-six feet, one hundred feet deep, built of solid brick, and the opera house seats eight hundred people. Mr. Schaper also owns and occupies a fine residence in Minden, and he devotes his time to his home and the management of his property here. His sons run the farm, on which they produce grain and alfalfa, raising large crops of wheat and corn. The father is a successful, solid, typical German business man, level-headed and industrious, and his sons are equally successful and respected with their father in the community.

Mr. Schaper was married in 1873 to Miss Betty Miller, a native of Germany, who came to this country January 10, 1871. Mr. and Mrs. Schaper have three daughters in their family, besides the two sons mentioned above.

MURRAY S. STARR.

Murray S. Starr, for the past quarter of a century a prominent resident of western Nebraska, lives on his finely improved estate in section 4, township 33, range 35, Cherry county. He is numbered among the old-timers of this region, and is well and favorably known throughout this section of the country as a man of sterling character and a successful and prosperous agriculturist.

Mr. Starr was born in Vernon county, Wisconsin, February 11, 1868. He is a son of Comfort Starr, an old settler in eastern Nebraska, and a brother of Oscar Starr, whose sketch will be found on another page of this work. Our subject was reared in Nebraska, and came to Brown county in 1883. He followed farming as an occupation from his early boyhood, starting at work for himself at the age of eight years, receiving two dollars per month doing light chores for a farmer. In 1895 he took up a homestead in Brown county and proved up on it, remaining there for seven years, having previously come to Cherry county in 1888, and together with a brother engaged in breaking prairie, then took up another homestead in 1893. In Brown county he witnessed the drouth periods, and did gardening to make a living for himself and his family, building up his place and working hard until he had proved up on it. Two years were spent in Washington county, and then he returned to this section, where he has secured four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land, three hundred and twenty acres of which lie in the hills south of the Niobrara river. The home place lying along the Niobrara river has one of the finest groves of large cottonwoods to be found in the county. He has it in first-class condition, improved with a good set of buildings, fences and all the farming machinery for use on a model farm, and owns one of the valuable estates of this region.

Mr. Starr was married in Brown county to Miss Maud Wilson, July 2, 1893. She is a daughter of F. M. Wilson, one of the pioneers in Brown county. Her mother was Lucy Ann Fager. Mr. and Mrs. Starr have a family of three children, as follows: Orval, born May 6, 1894; Gaynelle, born January 20, 1896, and Lloyd, September 27, 1902. Mr. Starr with his family is a member of the Methodist church, while politically he supports the principles of the Republican party.

EDWARD A. MACUMBER.

Among the prosperous young farmers of Dawes county, Nebraska, the gentleman whose name heads this personal review deserves much praise for his strict attention to duty and perseverance in establishing a comfortable home and valuable property through hard and persistent efforts. Mr. Macumber is still a very young man, but has already gained an enviable reputation as a worthy and substantial citizen of his community and commands the respect and esteem of all who know him.

Mr. Macumber was born in Madison county, Iowa, on a farm, in 1875. He is a son of John Macumber, an old settler in Dawes county, and both parents were of American blood, the father being reared in Madison county, Iowa, and the mother in Mercer county, Illinois. Our subject grew up in Iowa until he was about eleven years of age, then the family came to Dawes county, where they have since resided, Edward remaining at home with his parents until he reached the age of seventeen, then started out for himself, working on ranches in the vicinity of his home and leading a cowboy's life here, also in South Dakota and Wyoming. He came to his present farm about 1899, and it had but few improvements then, but he has built it up in good shape and has a fine ranch and home, owning in all a tract of three hundred and twenty acres. Twenty acres are in alfalfa and he raises splendid crops of this grass and runs quite a herd of stock each year. The place is located on Bordeaux creek, in section 34, township 33, range 48, and is a very valuable piece of property.

Mr. Macumber was united in marriage in 1899 to Miss Maggie Richardson, daughter of A. J. Richardson, who came to Nebraska as foreman of a big cattle company in 1882, and made this section his home from that time on.

Our subject is active in local affairs, and has served on the school board in different capacities. Politically he is a Democrat.

RICHARD S. BLACK.

Richard S. Black, whose extensive farming operations mark him as one of the well-to-do and energetic citizens of his locality, resides on section 31, Lake township, Phelps county. He was born near Rushville, Schuyler county, Illinois, in 1849, and reared there. In 1863 he enlisted in the Sixty-second Illinois Infantry and served up to the end of the war. He was in the army of Arkansas, Tennessee and Louisiana, under General Steele, and at the battles of Little Rock, Memphis, Tennessee, and many large actions and smaller skirmishes, and during all the time he served as a soldier was in actual service. He was twice wounded, once at Memphis, Tennessee, and once at Fort Gibson, Indian Territory.

After the war our subject returned to Schuyler county, where he farmed up to 1878, then came to Nebraska in 1879. His father was John L. Black, who was also a native of Schuyler county, and was the first white child born in his township. His father, Richard S. Black, came from Kentucky, where he was one of the first settlers in that locality. From his experience in both states, our subject states that Nebraska is by far the better country for farming and stock raising purposes. The crops are as good here and the land easier farmed than in Illinois. Mr. Black has kept ordinary stock for farm purposes. He has a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, taken in 1881, where he still lives, and owns one hundred and sixty acres in Harlan county. He has a fine large farm residence on his place, commodious barns and all things necessary for his stock, etc., a beautiful orchard and grove and well kept lawn fully planted with flowers and shrubbery. It is one of the prettiest homes in the vicinity, and everything bespeaks prosperity and care.

Mr. Black was supervisor of Lake township, and as such on the county board for eight years. He has filled all local offices and served on the school board ever since the organization of that body. He is a Democrat and takes a keen interest in local and county politics.

Mr. Black was united in marriage in 1876 at Rushville, Illinois, to Miss Harriet A. Dunlavy, daughter of James Dunlavy. Mr. and Mrs. Black are the parents of eight children, who are named as follows: Howard, a farmer, who resides in Harlan county; Claude, of Harlan county, also a farmer; Atwell, farmer, residing in Harlan county; Richard S., the fourth of this name in direct line. One daughter, Clara, is the wife of Hall Elliott, of Harlan county; Katie and Ruth, all living at home at the present time, and Mamie, who is married to Henry Talmage. Our subject's mother was Nancy Peckenpaugh, of Illinois, whose parents were pioneers of Schuyler county, Illinois.

JAMES C. WOOD.

James C. Wood, who is a prominent farmer of Dawes county, is a worthy representative of the agricultural interests of this part of Nebraska, residing on section 27, township 29, range 50.

Mr. Wood was born in Oxford county, Ontario, Canada, forty miles east of London, July 5, 1846. His father, James H., was a farmer of English descent. The Wood family originated from three brothers—one who settled on Long Island, another in New York and the third in Pennsylvania. Our subject comes from the family which settled on Long Island. His mother, Mary S. (Underwood) Wood, was a native of Canada.

At the age of nineteen years he left his home and came south into Fayette county, Illinois, where his father purchased a farm. Here his mother died and shortly afterward he came west to Iowa. In 1879 he settled in Furnas county, Nebraska, and was one of the pioneers of eastern Nebraska. He farmed there for a while, and in 1880 went into the mountains of Colorado, where he purchased a ranch, returning three years later to his old home in Nebraska. Some time later he took up a homestead in Dawes county, locating on the Niobrara river, where he did some irrigating. He is now the proprietor of a Kincaid homestead, comprising an area of four hundred acres of good land. He spent two years with the Burlington Railroad Company in the capacity of a carpenter and two years running a steam pump, taking an active part in constructing the Burlington road into Dawes county.

Mr. Wood was married July 5, 1887, to Miss Jennie Vincent, daughter of Hiram and Mary Ann Vincent, of Iowa. Mrs. Wood's father was a farmer in Iowa, of American stock. The Vincent family was formerly from Indiana. Mrs. Wood taught school several years in Iowa and taught some in Furnas county, Nebraska.

Since taking up his residence in Dawes county Mr. Wood has always been identified prominently in local affairs, having served as road overseer, and has also held the office of assessor for three years. He will ever be referred to among the prominent old settlers of Dawes county as one of their worthiest associates. All of his neighbors speak well of him. He is strictly Republican in politics.

Mrs. Wood has been a great help to Mr. Wood in farm work as well as domestic work, she being an expert in handling farm machinery always taken an active part in the Sunday schools of the district and is a leader in the literary societies. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are in the possession of one of the oldest books on record in this part of the country, the Life of Christ, dating back to 1723. Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Wood will be found on another page of this volume.

ROBERT KITTELMAN.

Robert Kittelman, an able representative of the farming community, is an old-time resident of Box Butte county, Nebraska. He has developed a fine farm, is a man of energy and thrift, who by his strict integrity has become one of the highly esteemed and respected citizens of his locality.

Mr. Kittelman was born in Germany in 1856, the son of Wilhelm Kittelman, a tailor by trade. His mother was Anna Farson, and both parents came to this country in 1883, the mother dying in 1902, while the father is still living in Alliance, Nebraska. Our subject grew up in Germany and served for three years in the German army, coming to the United States in 1881, two years ahead of his parents, and after landing in New York city came directly west to Cuming county, Nebraska. The first nine months he worked on a farm, then began railroading, and continued at the work up to 1885, at that time settling in Box Butte county. He and John O'Mara were the first white men to settle in this region, and they took up homesteads in section 33, township 27, range 47, on which our subject lived for some years and later located in section 34, township 28, range 47, putting up a dugout in which he and his family, consisting of wife and two sons, lived for a number of years. His first team was a pair of oxen, and with these he broke up land and planted crops, remaining on the place for thirteen years, and during the early days made a living by teaming from Pine Ridge hauling timber and fuel, and during these trips was obliged to sleep out nights on the ground under his wagon. Many times he has camped out on the snow-covered ground in the severest weather.

In 1899 Mr. Kittelman settled on his present farm, and he has a ranch of six hundred and forty acres here, two hundred and fifty of which is used for farming purposes, and all of it fenced and improved with good buildings and everything necessary in the way of machinery and tools for conducting a model ranch and farm. Besides this deeded land he controls five quarter sections of leased land, keeping a large portion of it for pasture and hay land, and runs quite a herd of stock—about eighty-seven head of cattle and twenty-six horses. In 1903 a large barn, 136x16 feet, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. This was filled with farming implements, including three sets of double harness, a large number of chickens and geese, etc., and was a severe loss to our subject.

Mr. Kittelman was married in 1882 to Miss Ernestine Shrother, and of this union thirteen children have resulted, ten of whom are living and named as follows: Rinehold, Moritz, Anna, Robert, Gernhard, Willie, Eda, Paul, Pauline and Clarence, all born and raised in this county. Adolph, Gustave and Bronu are deceased. Mrs. Kittelman died here May 1, 1907, and in the same year our subject was married again, taking as his second wife Mrs. Marie Gaylor, a widow, native of Germany, who came to America in 1894. Mrs. Gaylor was mother of two children before her marriage to Mr. Kittelman—Anna, aged fourteen years, and Otto, twelve years old. On another page will be found a picture of the family and ranch property.

Mr. Kittelman has done exceedingly well since locating in this region, but his cash when he landed here was thirty-seven cents. He is enthusiastic regarding the opportunities of this section of the country, and, although he has passed through many bitter experiences, still thinks that it is the best place he ever struck for a poor man to build up a good home and lay by a competence. He has been one of the leading men of his community since coming here, assisting in local affairs, and has held school office for a number of years. Politically he is a Republican.

JOSEPH BARKER.

Among the early settlers in western Nebraska who have watched the growth of this section from the time it was practically a vast wilderness, and who has given liberally of his time, money and influence in building up the region, the name of the gentleman above mentioned deserves a prominent place. Mr. Barker came here when he was one of the few settlers in Dawes county, and has seen the country grow from a wild region to its present prosperity, and is proud of the fact that he has been a part of this growth.

Mr. Barker was born in Carbon county, Pennsylvania, in 1853. His father, Solomon Barker, was a farmer, laborer and teamster, and his family had lived in Pennsylvania for generations. Our subject was reared and educated in his native state, living at home until he was sixteen years old, then struck out for himself. He had worked in the coal mines driving a mule team from the time he was eight years of age, and was well versed in the hardships and experiences of this life. He learned the blacksmith's trade after leaving home and worked at that for ten years, then quit that work and for three years ran a hoisting engine. He was employed by one mining company, the Cox Bros. & Company, for eleven years.

In 1883 Mr. Barker left the east and came to Nebraska, locating in Gage county, but only remained there for six months, and in the fall of 1884 he landed in Dawes county, teaming from the former place and camping out nights along the road. He settled on section 28, township 31, range 51, and started to build up a home, his family following him here the next year, they coming by stage from Sidney, and during this trip their stage was attacked by highwaymen. Their first building was a log house without a floor. His start was a very small beginning, as he had only fifty dollars in money, no team nor tools, but he managed to get along and proved up on his homestead, later taking a homestead in section 23, township 31, range 51. He had a dugout on the latter place, and the family through many hardships and privations, got out never became discouraged and finally succeeded in building up their farm in good shape. In 1896 Mr. Barker went to Cambria, Wyoming, and there worked at his trade, employed by Kilpatrick Bros. & Collins, remaining there for a time, but returned to Nebraska and located on his former homestead on Ash creek. Here he has plenty of natural timber, good water and every kind of wild fruit, and has a fine farm and home. He owns seven hundred and sixty acres, farming sixty acres of this, and has the rest in pasture. He is engaged in stock raising to quite an extent, running about forty cattle and twelve horses.

Mr. Barker was married in 1877 to Miss Fannie Wenner and they had one son, Charles. Mrs. Barker died September 23, 1903, and her death was sincerely mourned by her husband and son and a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

On March 3, 1907, Mr. Barker was married again to Mrs. Mary J. Barker, daughter of William and Alice Casebier, old settlers in Nebraska, who came here in the early days, the father being a freighter. One child has been born to this union, Clayton F. Mrs. Barker had one child by her first marriage, Joseph W., and she was the widow of Charles Barker when our subject married her.

Mr. Barker has always taken an active interest in local affairs, has become identified with the new party movement and aided in the organization of the new forces, although he does not seek public office. He is held in the highest esteem by his associates, and is one of the solid and substantial men of his community.

AUGUSTUS L. SISSON.

Among those who have contributed largely to the prosperity of Brown county, Nebraska, and whose patient industry and well directed energy have brought individual competence, may be mentioned August Sisson, whose estate lies in section 6, township 30, range 21.

Mr. Sisson is a native of the state of Ohio, born in Geauga county, August 27, 1850. His father, Lorenzo Sisson, was a farmer, of American stock, and died in 1870 while the family still lived in Ohio. After his death Mrs. Sisson moved to Shelby county, Iowa, with her three children, and remained there for several years, then came in 1880 to Brown county, Nebraska, where the family was one of the early settlers in that state. Our subject is the second of his mother's children, and during his boyhood years learned to do all kinds of hard farm and dairy work, in which they were engaged. In 1880 he purchased a small farm in Shelby county, Iowa, but within the year sold this out and came to Brown county, where he settled on section 29, township 31, range 21. He also took a pre-emption, and the first building he put up was a log house with a dirt floor. He immediately began cultivating his land, and bought a drove of thirty head of cattle, of which he lost twenty-eight head in the winter of 1880-81 from the storms and severe weather which prevailed throughout this section. The family went through many hardships and privations during these first years, being compelled to live on nothing but hulled corn for one whole week. He spent his time in cutting cedar posts and hauling them to Long Pine, where he sold them, in this manner obtaining money to buy provisions. Although he went through very hard times here he stuck to this farm until 1891, and then bought the Boone creek mill and the farm on which it was located. He went to work improving the farm, putting up buildings and fences, and began operating the mill, grinding flour, feed, etc., and for a time did a large business, but when the dry years came he had a hard time to get enough to do to pay for running it. In the early days there were no railroads near his farm, and in 1880 he was obliged to make a trip to Oakdale, a distance of one hundred and twenty miles, to get a load of corn. He made the trip there all right, but on his return journey he was almost home when the wagon tipped over into Oak creek, losing the whole load. In the spring of that year Jasper Stanley, who was an employe, made a trip to Atkinson, a distance of fifty miles, for a load of corn, consuming seventeen days for the journey, such was the condition of the roads. When he got as far as Boone creek on his return journey the river had risen so high that he was unable to cross with the team. He hitched the team securely, as he thought, and swam across the stream with a sack of flour on his back, but before he could recross the creek his horses had broken loose and got at the corn and ate so much that two of them died. About this time supplies had gotten very low at home and he was obliged to make a hasty trip for another load of feed to keep them going. These are only two out of many incidents and difficulties which beset the early settlers in this locality, but they were all brave-hearted and sturdy people, and it took more than these trifles to discourage them. Mr. Sisson is now the owner of a six hundred and forty-acre farm and engages in both farming and stock raising. The residence burned December 4, 1907, and he immediately built a modern home on the north side of the creek. This new house is supplied with running water and other modern conveniences.

On February 25, 1872, Mr. Sisson was married to Miss Minnie Swett, born in Iowa, a daughter of Alanson Swett, an old settler in Nebraska, a sketch of whose life will be found on another page of this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Sisson are the parents of eight children, named as follows: Ada, wife of Philip Parsons, of California; Frank, Ralph, Edyth, wife of Arthur Toliver, of Ainsworth; Arthur, Lee, Marie and Carl.

Mr. Sisson has been a member of the reform parties in politics. He is a gentleman of intelligence and a public-spirited citizen, esteemed and respected by his associates.

C. F. SNYDER.

C. F. Snyder, who occupies a prominent place among the younger members of the farming community of Kimball county, is proprietor of a valuable estate. He is associated with his brother, W. J. Snyder, and they are among the progressive and well-to-do worthy citizens of their locality.

Our subject was born in Otis, Laporte county, Indiana, July 20, 1876, and lived there until he was seven years of age, when the whole family came to Nebraska, settling in Douglas county. W. J. Snyder, his brother, was born in Laporte county in 1878. There the father bought land and built up a good farm and home, still residing on the place, the mother's death having occurred in Omaha in 1908. Our subject remained in Douglas county up to 1895, helping his father on the home ranch, then located on a farm in Washington county, which he operated up to 1902. At that time he came to Kimball county and purchased the Newell ranch, situated on section 30, township 15, range 57, this place containing in all five hundred and eighty acres. He also purchased the old Fred Baker place, containing three hundred and twenty acres, using the two as a stock ranch. He has been very successful in his enterprises, having a fine bunch of horses of about one hundred head; also runs a large herd of Hereford cattle, owning some very fine animals of both kinds. A large part of his ranch is used for hay and pasture, and besides this he has a dairy farm in connection with his other stock raising business, having a good income from this source. Mr. Snyder purchased the L. C. Kinney ranch of six hundred and seventy-seven acres, which is situated on sections 1 and 31, townships 14 and 15, ranges 57 and 58, which is now the home ranch. The large ranching business is managed jointly by our subject and his brother, W. J., the latter born in the same town with C. F., and who has followed practically the same career with his brother. He was married in Omaha, July 29, 1906, to Miss Marie Blaze, and they have one child, Roger Charles. Our subject was married in March, 1896, at Omaha, to Miss Rosa Bauer, who was born in Germany and came to America two years previous to her marriage. They have three children, Harry, Minnie and Annie.

W. F. Snyder, the father of C. F. and W. J. Snyder, was born in Germany, August 9, 1843, and came to the United States when about seven years of age, his parents settling in Michigan City, Indiana, where they raised their family. He came to Nebraska, locating in Douglas county, and was one of the pioneers of that section. He was married at Laporte, Indiana, on August 30, 1875, to Miss Minnie Rogert, and had three children, all boys, the subject of this review being the eldest of the family. The youngest son, H. A. Snyder, is now a resident of Omaha. W. F. Snyder was a soldier in the Civil war, enlisting in Company K, Eighty-third Indiana Infantry, as a private, on October 8, 1862, going as a substitute for his father, who was unable to fill draft. He served under Sherman and was mustered out at Fort Schuyler, New York Harbor, on the 29th of May, 1864. He made Douglas county his home up to 1908, then came to live with his sons on their ranch. He is a sturdy old gentleman, still hale and hearty, and is a representative western ranchman. Since coming west both our subject and his brother, W. J., have taken an active part in developing the country. They are both well and favorably known and are among the progressive citizens of the county. Our subject is now postmaster of Bushnell. He is also serving as constable and has been a member of the school board since 1902. W. J. Snyder is now road overseer.

RICHARD GREENLAND.

Richard Greenland claims nativity in the state of Pennsylvania, where he was born on a farm in Huntingdon county in 1856. His great-grandfather was born in Ireland. His subject's father was Ezra Greenland, of Pennsylvania. His mother, Elizabeth (Maddon) Greenland, was also of Irish ancestry, born in Pennsylvania.

Richard Greenland was married March 15, 1883, to Miss Mary Adelle Harvey, daughter of Benjamin Harvey, an old settler of Loup county, Nebraska, of the days when the Indians still roamed the prairies. Mr. and Mrs. Greenland have had seven children, only two living, Frank and Albert.

The subject of our sketch was reared on a farm in Pennsylvania, doing farm work and receiving only a limited schooling. At the age of twenty he left his native state and came west to Chicago, where he remained for a short time and then he came to Omaha, Nebraska, where he worked out for two years. In 1878 he went to Ogallala and commenced ranching, working on various ranches in western Nebraska. He had a number of years of experience as a cowboy, camping out and roughing it in many sections of the west. In 1883 he settled on his present farm, a homestead, put up a sod shanty, and, with practically nothing, commenced laying the foundations of the splendid ranch home he now occupies. He has six hundred and forty acres of deeded land, with good improvements, and he meets with fine success in farming and stock raising. He has one of the finest groves of forest trees that can be found anywhere in the county, some of the trees being planted by our subject twenty-one years ago. Mr. Greenland came to this country in a very early day, first in 1874, and took a pre-emption claim on the North Loup river, in Loup county, and remained for several months. Later he was taken sick with typhoid fever and was obliged to give up his claim. He is among the earliest pioneers of western Nebraska and has witnessed the wonderful growth of the state with pleased interest. Mr. Greenland is an independent in politics and he believes in supporting the men and party that represent those principles which conduce most to the general good. He was county commissioner for three years, being first elected in 1890.

He has held other offices and has proven capable and trustworthy, winning the respect and confidence of the community in which he lives.

FRANK J. HIPPLE.

Frank J. Hipple, who may be truly classed among the self-made men of Cherry county, is proprietor of a well improved ranch in Minichaduza precinct. He has devoted his entire time and attention to the building up of his home and has met with pronounced success, well meriting his present prosperity.

Mr. Hipple was born in the village of Stolzenhagen, province of East Prussia, Germany, December 14, 1865. His father, John Hipple, was a farmer there, coming to America with his family of three children, our subject at that time being the youngest, and fifteen years of age. They sailed from Hamburg in the White Star liner Cassius, landing in New York city January 8, 1881. They immediately started for the southwest, settling in Little Rock, Arkansas, near where the father still resides, at Subiaco Convent, not far from Spielerville. Our subject studied two years at Koenigsberg, in the old country, with the view of entering the priesthood, as his brother has done. At the age of twenty-two he started in for himself, engaging in cotton raising for seven to Valentine, Nebraska, whence he drove to Georgia and filed on a homestead the

At the age of twenty-two he started in for himself, engaging in cotton raising for seven to Valentine, Nebraska, whence he drove to Georgia and filed on a homestead the ing week. He at once put up a dugout and began to break up his place. On reaching here he had only sixteen dollars, and of this he paid fourteen dollars in land office fees, which left him a capital of two dollars for his start in life. He worked out for a year to maintain himself in provisions. He afterwards relinquished on that place and filed on his present homestead, situated in section 34, township 35, range 30, Cherry county. Here he has established a good ranch, containing nine hundred and sixty acres, half of deeded land and half of Kincaid homestead, while his wife also owns four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land. In addition Mr. Hipple holds a lease on a half section of school land. His place is located on the Minichaduza creek, and he engages principally in stock raising, running from one hundred to two hundred head of cattle, fifty horses and other stock. Of late years he has been able to raise fairly good crops of grain, cultivating about one hundred acres at times. During the drouth periods he became discouraged with this branch of the business after losing four crops in succession. A view of the family residence and surroundings will be found on another page of this work.

Mr. Hipple was married December 24, 1900, to Mrs. Tillie De Bords, whose parents, Herman and Julia Hanson, were natives of Norway and early settlers in eastern Nebraska. Mrs. Hipple, a native of La Salle county, Illinois, was the first of her parents' children born in America. She was first married in Sioux City, Iowa, March 25, 1886, bearing two children, Lulu and Clarence.

Our subject is active in all matters of local importance and does all in his power to aid in the educational and commercial advancement of his locality. He has held school office at different times. Politically he is a Republican and in religious faith a member of the Catholic church.

DOMINIC HAAS.

Many a brave pioneer has come to the western plains with nothing but a strong heart and willing hands, and from a start of nothing has carved out for himself a fortune and home, and is now prepared to enjoy the remaining years of his career in comfort and plenty, surrounded by his family and a host of warm friends, esteemed and respected by all.

Dominic Haas was born in Luxembur Germany, in 1864. His father, Peter, was farmer, and spent his entire life in Germany, but his wife, who was Margaret Bartholome, came to America, where she lived with her sons, our subject and his brother Peter, who is associated with him in the ranching business, the mother's death occurring in Sioux county in 1889. Dominic and Peter were raised in their native land, and when reaching manhood struck out for the new world, bringing with them their mother, landing in New York city in 1889, and came directly west to Nebraska, locating in Sioux county, taking as a homestead what is now his home ranch, situated in section 7, township 33, range 54. Their first team was a pair of oxen, with which they broke up land and put in sod crops. The first dwelling was a log cabin, and they worked hard to improve their place, and had a hard time in getting started, losing several crops, but soon gave up trying to farm and worked into the stock business, both he and his brother working out in the vicinity of their home at railroad construction and on the range in order to lay by a little money. At the same time he put up good buildings as he became better able, fenced his land, and little by little improved his place, although they suffered many hardships and privations during the early years. They now have seventeen hundred and twenty acres, situated on Hat creek, cultivating about forty acres, and well stocked with cattle and other live stock. His brother Peter is now in the east taking medical treatment and hopes to return soon.

Mr. Haas was married in 1904 to Miss Kate Birnbaumer, whose father, Joseph, was a prominent farmer and old settler in Iowa. Her mother was Eva Weber, of Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Haas are the parents of two children, Nick, aged two years, and John, aged one year.

Mr. Haas has always been active in local affairs, and helped in establishing the schools of his locality, doing his full share in aiding the progress and promoting the general welfare of his community.

EDWARD L. SCHMIDT.

Edward L. Schmidt, one of the most energetic and successful farmers of Sioux county, Nebraska, resides on his fine farm in section 21, township 32, range 54. He is a young man of good business judgment and has won an enviable reputation in his community as a prosperous farmer and worthy citizen.

Mr. Schmidt was born in Kearney county, Nebraska, in 1877, on a farm. His father, Edward Schmidt, was a well known farmer and old settler in that county, coming here from Germany in 1869 and locating in that region, filing on a homestead in section 21, township 7, range 14, in Kearney county. Our subject's mother was Pauline Brown, a native of Russia, born of German parents. Edward grew up on his father's farm and assisted his parents in the work of carrying on the home place, living there until he was twenty-one years of age. He left home in 1898 and started for himself, coming to Sioux county, where he homesteaded his present farm in sections 20 and 21, township 32, range 54. Here he started farming in a small way, building a little shack in which he lived for a couple of years. During the first year he lost what few crops he put in through the dry weather, but after that was very successful in raising fair crops of small grains, potatoes, etc., and has done very well in his farming operations since then. His farm consists of four hundred acres, sixty acres of which is under cultivation, and he has forty acres of good timber land, which is each year growing more valuable. He has built up a good home, has good barns and improvements on the place, and from a start of almost nothing has accumulated a nice property and is now able to enjoy the fruits of his labors.

In January, 1906, the Unit postoffice was established on Mr. Schmidt's farm, and he is now serving as postmaster, also conducting a general merchandise store, handling a line of groceries, etc.

Mr. Schmidt was married in January, 1900, to Miss Lissie Klahn, born in Germany, daughter of Carl Klahn, one of the early settlers of Kearney county, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt have a family of five children, namely: Emma, William, Carl, Tillie and Mary.

JAMES H. MONAHAN.

Among the progressive and energetic younger members of the ranching community of Grant county who have contributed wealth and prosperity of that region, the most place is accorded the gentleman named. For many years past he has been engaged in the building up of an extensive ranch, and while doing this has also gained an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen and active public-spirited gentleman.

Mr. Monahan resides in Hyannis, where he is well known politically, having held the office of county treasurer for one term, receiving his election in 1897. He has also served as county commissioner, elected in 1903 and re-elected in 1906, still serving his county in that capacity, and proving a most efficient and popular public official.

James H. Monahan was born in Fremont county, Iowa, in 1872. He was reared on his father's farm, the latter being a native of Ireland, who came to this country while a young man, settling in Iowa as a pioneer. When our subject was a boy of fifteen the family came to Nebraska, settling eleven miles northwest of Whitman, James securing employment on a ranch as a cowboy, following that work for several years and gaining a wide knowledge of frontier life, becoming thoroughly familiar with the country all through western Nebraska. In 1897 he made a permanent settlement on section 4, township 24, range 37, Grant county, and began to establish a ranch of his own. He worked hard and faithfully, and succeeded splendidly, now being proprietor of a fine ranch containing thirty-one hundred acres, all deeded land, and besides this he operates two quarter sections of school land which he uses as a range. He has erected good buildings on the place, including a commodious dwelling, barns, sheds, etc., and every cent he is now worth has been accumulated through his own untiring efforts and good management, as he had absolutely nothing to start with. For a time Mr. Monahan ran a store in Hyannis, during 1895 and 1896, and is well known in that town as a good business man and substantial citizen.

On November 3, 1907, Mr. Monahan was married to Cora McCawley. Her father, John McCawley, a prominent citizen of Grant county, is a leading politician, now occupying the position of county judge. He married Edna Hagan. Mr. Monahan has one child, Earl, aged eight years, and reared in this county. The family occupy a foremost place in the social and school affairs of their township, and are popular members of the community. He is a Republican in political views.

CHESTER H. BRITTON.

Chester H. Britton, whose upright and honorable career should be an encouragement to the young men of the present generation, as they can see what thrift and industry, has esty and integrity can always accomplish, was born in Dubuque, Iowa, in 1861. His father, Major L. Britton, who was a native of New Hampshire, was a printer for several years, but gave this up to follow the occupation of farmer. His mother, Martha (Brasher) Britton, was born in America of German parentage.

Our subject was reared on his father's farm in Warren county, Iowa, where he attended the common schools, at the same time assisting his father in tilling the soil. At the age of twenty-one years he left home, and with the money his father gave him he rented a farm and made a start for himself. He spent three years in farming his place but this first venture proved a failure, and he lost all he had. Not discouraged by these reverses he came west in March, 1886, and took up a claim in section 7, township 30, range 50, Dawes county, Nebraska, on which he later proved up. His first building in this new western country was a log cabin. Soon after this he took a homestead in section 12, township 30, range 51, where he erected substantial building and greatly improved the claim. From time to time he secured adjoining land, and now has one of the best ranches in Dawes county, comprising an area of seventeen hundred and sixty acres, which he fenced and cross fenced, which is situated on the high tableland. He cultivated two hundred acres, and has several acres of good timber land. His present residence is very substantial and commodious, and he has fine barns and sheds in which to house his stock, two wells and wind mills, and a cistern. In 1891 he built a saw mill. His mill was destroyed by fire, but not discouraged by this disaster he rebuilt, and now has a very good mill.

Mr. Britton engages extensively in stock raising, making a specialty of cattle, horses and sheep. For the past fourteen years he has been engaged in the threshing business, having a steam power machine for which he paid $3,000 and threshes from seventy to one hundred thousand bushels of grain each year. Our subject has witnessed the periods of drouths which are so well known to the early settlers in this western country, but he has had the good fortune of never having what could be called a complete failure of crops.

Mr. Britton and Miss Nannie McIntosh were united in marriage in 1882. Her father, Daniel McIntosh, was a farmer and a native of Scotland. Her mother was Nancy (Dowd) McIntosh. Three children blessed this union, Howard, Charles and Nannie, deceased. Mrs. Britton died in 1890. Several years after Mr. Britton contracted a second marriage with Miss Minnie Hayden. She was reared in Dawes county, her father, Belemis Hayden, having settled here in 1887. Burt and Clarence were the two children born to this union.

As a man who figures prominently in matters of local interest Mr. Britton stands well, for he has always taken an active interest in the improvement and development of Dawes county. He was one of the men who were instrumental in the organization of the Farmers Independent Telephone Company, in which he is a stockholder, and of which company he holds the office of president. Considering the little capital he had to work with and his small start, his friends consider that he has done wonderfully well, and that his career in Dawes county is to be regarded as a marked success. He is a Republican in politics.

Engravings in connection with this sketch are part of the interesting illustrations in this work.

JESSE W. GARNER.

Among the younger "old settlers" of western Nebraska we mention the name of Jesse W. Garner, who resides on his valuable estate situated in section 3, township 33, range 35, of Cherry county.

Mr. Garner was born in Wilkes county, North Carolina, October 11, 1870. His father, Isaac Garner, was a farmer and homesteader in Cherry county, coming here in 1892 from North Carolina, where he was reared and served in the southern army under impressment, his sympathies being with the north. Our subject's mother was Miss Adelaide Caudle, of old southern blood, and he was the second member in her family of four children. When he was seven years of age the family came to Dodge county as pioneers, and there he was reared and educated, attending the country schools. When twenty years old he moved to Cherry county, and was here throughout the Indian troubles of 1890-91, witnessing many exciting incidents of that time. He located on a homestead west of Cody, and also took up a tree claim near there, batching it for six years and leading a regular pioneer existence. His first buildings were all of sod, and he started in to build up his farm, on which he proved up, then left the place and moved to his present farm in 1902, located on the Niobrara river. Here he has established a fine estate, and has improved the place with good buildings, fences and up-to-date machinery. He has one hundred and twenty acres cultivated, and altogether operates eight hundred and eighty acres of land, engaging in ranching and stock raising. Together with his brother he owns upwards of two thousand acres of valuable farm and ranch lands.

Mr. Garner was married in 1896 to Miss Rosa Maybee, daughter of William and Rachel (Mapes) Maybee, pioneer homesteaders in Cherry county. Mr. and Mrs. Garner are the parents of three children, namely: Lee, Roxy and Rose. The family is highly esteemed in their home community, and are popular and well liked by all who know them.

Mr. Garner is a Republican, active in local political circles, and lends his influence for the principles of that party. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

ORON B. BOWER.

Oron B. Bower is a well known resident of Chappell, where he has spent many years of his career, and has helped in a marked degree in the upbuilding of that region. He was born in Greenville, Pennsylvania, in 1867, his parents settling in Transfer, that state, where he lived until he was thirteen years of age. His father was a cooper by trade, farming also part of the time, and in 1880 came with his family to Nebraska, locating seven miles from Grand Island, where they lived for five years, then they came west to Big Springs, homesteading in Perkins county. Here they went through all the experiences of the early pioneers in the region, having sod house and dugout experience, and made that their home for a number of years. They were obliged to haul the water supply for domestic purposes a distance of seventeen miles, and were the first family to dig a well in the neighborhood.

Our subject lived at home until he was thirty years of age, when he took a homestead in the vicinity and proved up on it, later proved up on a tree claim and pre-emption, as did his father also, each using all three rights. In 1897 Oron moved to Big Springs, but as the times were very hard owing to unfavorable crop conditions he was compelled to go to work on the section, and followed that for three years, again going back to farming in 1900, taking a farm near Big Springs, on which he lived for two years. In 1902 he went to Burg, following farm work there for about four years, locating in 1906 at Chappell, where he purchased a livery barn and began up a business. He has improved the and increased his patronage greatly since ing the place, having a good barn with ment floor, the only one so constructed in western Nebraska fitted with modern appliances. In equipment and service this barn is not surpassed anywhere. He also owns the Chappell dray line and has licenses for two teams, doing a profitable business. In 1909 he put in automobile service, which makes this barn up-to-date in every particular.

Mr. Bower was married in 1897 to Miss Madge S. Beach, daughter of Riley Beach, a prominent old settler in Deuel county, a sketch of whom appears on another page, locating there in 1886. He is now postmaster at Big Springs. He is a veteran of the Civil war and well known in political circles in the county and vicinity. Our subject has a family of four children, namely: Lloyd, Russell, Margaret and Randall. They have a pleasant home and are popular members of their community. A portrait of Mr. Bower will be found elsewhere in this volume.

HENRY EHMKE.

Henry Ehmke for many years past has been one of the most successful agriculturists of Cheyenne county, Nebraska. He opened up a farm from wild prairie land and has been intimately associated with the development of that region, and by his untiring perseverance and integrity has gained a valuable property and enviable reputation as a citizen and farmer.

Mr. Ehmke was born in the village of Doerwerden, Hanover, Germany, September 2, 1845. He grew to manhood in his native country, following farming during his younger days, and when about forty years of age came to America. Sailing from Bremer Haven on the "Emms" August 27, 1884, after a voyage of fourteen days he landed in New York and came direct to Nebraska. After a fortnight in Omaha and three months in Columbus and an equal time in Grand Island, he came to Cheyenne county in the spring of 1885. He at once took up a homestead in section 4, township 15, range 50, and has made that his home ever since, owning at the present time over three hundred and twenty acres in the vicinity, which is devoted to farming and stock raising. He has about one hundred and thirty acres under cultivation, and runs quite a large herd of stock. He has put up good buildings and improvements and has his ranch in the best possible shape. Mr. Ehmke has always been an active supporter of every movement for the benefit of his county and state, and has aided in every matter of local importance.

with a livery barn and began up a business. He has improved the and increased his patronage greatly since ing the place, having a good barn with in true public spirit, and is one of the substantial and helpful men of his locality.

During our subject's boyhood in his native land he enlisted in the Hanoverian army in 1866 and served for about five years, taking part in the action of Hanover against Prussia in that year and again during a two years' service in the German army in the war against France in 1870-71. During his career as a soldier he participated in twenty-one battles.

Mr. Ehmke was married at Columbus, Nebraska, in 1884, to Miss Carrie Ensminger, a native of Germany, who came to the United States in 1878. Seven children were born of their union, named as follows: Mary, married to Emmet Sanders, now living in Cheyenne county; William, Wilhelmina, Henry, Margaret, Carrie and Herman, the last six all living at home, and are of great help to their parents in carrying on the extensive farm.

THUE P. JENSEN.

Among the prominent citizens and representative farmers and ranchmen of Dawes county, Thue P. Jensen occupies a foremost place, as he has spent many years of his life in this section and has built up a good home and an enviable reputation as an energetic worker and good business man. He resides in section 11, township 34, range 48, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Jensen was born in Denmark in 1862. He grew up on a farm, and when eleven years of age was left an orphan and from that time on made his own way in the world, working on farms in the vicinity of his native town up to the time he was twenty years of age. In the spring of 1882 he came to America, and after landing in New York city went to Wheeling, West Virginia, where he spent one year. He next settled in Clinton, Iowa, there doing any kind of work that came to hand, but only remained for six months, then went back to Wheeling, where he obtained employment in a nail mill in that city. In the spring of 1884 he went to Cleveland, Ohio, and there worked in a stone quarry for three years. In 1887 he came west again, locating in Dawes county, and here took up eighty acres as a pre-emption, and proved up on the land, living in a dugout which he built, for some time. This was a small hut, 14x14, but he was reasonably comfortable in it, and after being here a while he took up a homestead and proved up on that. His first team after coming here was a pair of small ponies, and with these he broke up his land and used them for all purposes on his farm. He next settled on a rented ranch in section 12, and remained for two years, and after that kept moving around constantly, although always living in this part of the county. In 1898 he settled on his present homestead, situated in section 11, township 34, range 48, which was then only partly improved property, to which he has since added a comfortable house, barns and other farm buildings. His ranch now consists of three thousand acres, all deeded land, and besides he operates some leased land. The ranch is all fenced, and is on the White River, which supplies all the good water he needs for his stock and every purpose. He farms about one hundred acres, raising small grains, and also a large piece of alfalfa.

Mr. Jensen was married while living in Cleveland, in 1886, to Miss Signa Johnson, and they are the parents of six children, namely: Annie, Willie, Burt, Mark, George and Nellie.

BEERS BROTHERS.

The Beers Brothers are among the well-known old settlers in Dawes county, Nebraska. The father of the family, Abel Beers, was born in Easton, Fairfield county, Connecticut. He was of English stock, his ancestors coming from Sheffield, England, in 1636, settling in Connecticut, where Abel was reared and educated, and was married July 4, 1851, to Miss Sarah H. Bearsley, who was born in Easton, of American stock. Ten children were born to the couple, and they were named as follows: Isaac, Gladden, Ida and Alfred (who died in infancy), Leslie, Eva, Nellie, Lillyetta, who died at the age of twenty-eight, May 9, 1891; Noah and Charles, all of whom were born and reared in New England. The father was a farmer by occupation, and was a general handy man—mechanic, shoemaker, etc., as well as a good writer and composer, and he had written and published two books which were widely read.

In 1877, the father and one son, Leslie, came to Parker, South Dakota, landing <sup>there</sup> in January of that year, and settled on a <sup>home-</sup>stead on which they lived for seven <sup>years,</sup> proved upon the land, also owned considerable property in the town of Parker. While in that section of the country they went through many pioneer experiences, handling ox teams, freighting, etc., and "batched it" in a sod shanty, which they put up on the place. In 1884 both came to Dawes county, Nebraska, teaming out from Valentine, and located on section 26, township 32, range 51, and at once built a small frame house on the homestead. The following year all of the family came west to join them except three sisters and two brothers, and as a family all worked together in building up the farm and home. They got along well and had a good start and things running smoothly until 1888, when in some way their stable caught fire and burned up, together with fifty tons of hay, and this was a serious setback to them, although they did not give up courage, but went right on, as in those days the settlers were not easily discouraged. They lived on this place for thirteen years, and during this time each one of the boys took up homesteads and proved up on them, in this way adding to their original holdings, and they next bought and moved to section 24, township 31, range 51, on West Ash creek. Here they have built up a splendid farm, have plenty of pine, ash and cottonwood timber, and good water the year round. They have put up a twenty-five horse power saw mill, and are also building a feed mill on their farm now. They have a ranch of over a thousand acres, and it is one ties in the county.

The father died December 21, 1901, and the of the best improved and most valuable proper-mother died May 16, 1908, while on a visit east, and left his three sons partners in the ranching interests, namely: Charles, Noah and Leslie.

In 1903, on March 15th, Charles Beers was united in marriage to Miss Dorothy M. Patterson, whose father is an old settler in Sioux county. Besides farming, Charles followed the brickmaking business for twelve years at Chadron, Nebraska; Casper, Wyoming; Cripple Creek, Colorado; and Edgemont, South Dakota. He has three children, Charles Lester, Dorothy S. and Alice W.

Noah Beers was married January 7, 1906, to Miss Sadie C. Benson. All of his time has been given to the farm.

Leslie has traveled all through the <sup>Black Hills, and for a time was night foreman</sup> storage battery plant at Lead City, <sup>South Dakota.</sup> He has lately resigned that <sup>position</sup>.

and is at home on the farm. It may be truly said that the Beers Brothers are "hustlers" and are destined to make splendid success of their business.

BERT L. GENUNG.

The gentleman above named is one of the prosperous farmers of Keya Paha county, residing on section 18, township 32, range 18, in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, where he has built up a comfortable and pleasant home and enjoys the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends.

Mr. Genung was born near Hastings, Mills county, Iowa, September 10, 1875. His father, Lewis T. Genung, is a prominent attorney in Hastings, of American stock, and a man of wide repute as a politician, well known in Democratic circles for the past twenty years. He now resides at Glenwood, Iowa. He has held county offices at various times, and was a nominee for congress in 1896. Our subject was reared and educated in the town of his birth and resided there until he was twenty-six years old, when he came to Keya Paha county in 1901. Here he took charge of the "L T" ranch, located in section 18, township 32, range 19, which is a tract of land comprising seven thousand acres, all fenced, thirty-five hundred of this being deeded land and the remainder leased. This is located on the Niobrara river, and extends back for six miles. When Mr. Genung came here the place was utterly without improvements, and he went to work in building up the farm, put up a number of buildings, including two houses, and a good, substantial set of farm buildings. One hundred and sixty acres of this is cultivated, but he engages principally in stock raising, and through his good management and hard labor he has made this property one of the most valuable estates in the section. The ranch was at one time headquarters of "Doc" Middleton's gang; here he lived for some time, and several caves have been found in the vicinity which were used by him and his companions as hiding places for themselves and stolen stock.

On September, 20, 1899, Mr. Genung was married to Miss Minnie Fisher, who prior to her marriage was a school teacher in Iowa. Her father, George Fisher, was a farmer and old settler in that state; her mother was in maidenhood Viola Carey. Mr. and Mrs. Genung have two children: Mabel J. and Louise Ruth. Among the younger members of the farm ing community around Carnes Mr. Genung is recognized as a rising agriculturist, who through his progressive methods will become one of the prominent and influential citizens of this locality. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN D. SHARP.

John D. Sharp, one of the old-timers of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, resides on his pleasant farm in section 21, township 35, range 24, which he has made his home since 1903. Mr. Sharp has been a resident of this county since 1884, formerly living on section 33, in the same township and range, where he made substantial improvements.

Mr. Sharp was born in Richland county, Wisconsin, April 17, 1856. His father, William C. Sharp, was a farmer, and an old settler in Nebraska, coming here with his family in 1865, settling in Cuming county, where our subject grew up familiar with all the hardships and the rough life of a frontiersman's existence. His mother was Miss Margaret Ingram before her marriage; she presented her husband with a family of seven children, John D., being the second member. He started out to make his own way in the world when about twenty years of age, farming on rented land in Cummings county. He worked this for a few years, and in 1884 came to Keya Paha county, having previously been all through the region as far west as the Black Hills country and being favorably impressed with the conditions which he found. He was familiar with the country before it was made a state, and from its earliest beginning has taken part in the history of its upbuilding and rapid growth, giving his aid in every way possible where he saw a chance to improve the agricultural and educational opportunities. After locating in Keya Paha county he took up a homestead in section 33, and proved up, building a house, planting trees, etc., and during the first years often had a hard time to get along and make a living, as the dry years came on and he lost several crops which put him back considerably. He moved to his present ranch in 1903, where he has five hundred and sixty acres, all fenced, with good buildings and other improvements, and here he is engaged in stock raising and mixed farming, and has done well here. He has five acres of forest trees nicely growing and half an acre of orchard of apples, plums, cherries and crabs. On another page will be found a picture of the place.

Mr. Sharp was married in Cuming county, November 4, 1879, to Miss Nellie Smith, daughter of Ezra Smith, a farmer and old settler in Keya Paha county, formerly of Cuming county and originally from Michigan. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Sharp was a school teacher in Cuming county, where she met the man who afterwards became her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp have a family of four children, named as follows: Ray L., Blanche, Alta and Rex W.

Mr. Sharp has always taken a commendable interest in local public affairs in his community, and has added strength to every worthy movement in the interest of his locality. Politically he is a Populist.

CHARLES P. BRESEE.

Charles P. Bresee, residing in Rushville, Nebraska, was born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1861. His father, David Bresee, was a gunsmith, and an old soldier, his death occurring in 1876, in eastern Nebraska. He was of Holland Dutch stock, and his wife, who was Mary Ann Lavrick, was of English descent, born in Canada. When our subject was sixteen years of age he came to western Nebraska with a party of prospectors and miners, going to the Black Hills. He was with the first outfit, traveling with wagons which went over the Black Hills trail, and he saw all of this country, including Sheridan county, long before any white man now living had made a permanent settlement here. On this trip they traveled along the old trail which runs through Gordon, Pine Ridge Agency, South Dakota. He remained in the Black Hills for two months, and in 1879 again came here, prospecting, mining, etc., also going through Idaho, Wyoming and the Dakotas freighting. For six years he followed a frontiersman's life and tells many interesting occurrences in connection with his early experiences here. In 1884 Mr. Bresee settled on a homestead near Gordon, remaining until he had proved up, then went on a ranch in Cherry county for two years. He first came to Rushville in 1889, where he began in the grain business, and he built the first elevator in this country, which is now owned by Nye, Schnider, Fowler & Co.

For one year, Mr. Bresee was engaged in the milling business in Gordon, and then opened up a real estate office here. During 1892-'93 he witnessed hard times, as did all the settlers here. He has been in this line of work since that time, and also handled loans up to 1903, when he helped organize the Maverick Loan & Trust Company, of which This concern he is secretary and treasurer. firm has offices at Gordon, Hay Springs and Rushville, and have an extensive patronage all through this section of the country.

In 1885, Mr. Bresee was married in Butler county, Nebraska, to Miss Anna N. Edgar, whose parents were early settlers in Wisconsin. Five children complete the family circle, named as follows: Almeda, Frank, Gertie, Alvin and Marjorie.

Mr. Bresee served his county for two terms, from 1895 to 1899, and in 1905 was elected a member of the state senate on the Republican ticket.

EDWARD A. HOPKINS.

The gentleman named in this personal history is well known in Rock county as a successful business man and worthy citizen. He has made Nebraska his home for many years, and at present resides in Long Pine precinct, where he is numbered among the leading men of the locality.

Mr. Hopkins was born near Elgin, Kane county, Illinois, January 8, 1861. His father, Richard Hopkins, was a farmer, a native of England, now living in Guthrie county, Iowa. Our subject is the second child in a family of three, and was reared and educated in Iowa where his parents moved when he was a small boy. He assisted his father in the farm work, and early became accustomed to all kinds of hard labor, attending school during the winter months. He started in for himself at the age of twenty-two years, coming to Nebraska in 1884, locating in Bassett. He filed on a homestead in section 14, township 31, range 19, and began improving his farm, on which he later proved up and secured title. For two years he clerked in the post office at Bassett, and then settled on his farm permanently in 1887. The place was entirely unimproved, but he persevered, finally attaining success in all his undertakings; gradually adding to his land, he is now the owner of five hundred and eighty acres of well improved land, with good buildings, a fine orchard, and beautiful grove of trees surrounding his house. He has endured hardships, particularly during the dry years, when his crops were utter failures, and he was most on the point of giving up the place, but persevered and eventually won success. We present a view of the home and grounds elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Hopkins was married June 3, 1885, to Miss Mary Castle, daughter of Zera and Sussanna (Stevens) Castle; her father was a carpenter by occupation, and came of an old American family. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins have four children, who are named as follows: Stella, Fred, Ruth and Blanché, all of whom were born on the farm where they now reside.

Mr. Hopkins has always taken an active part in all local affairs, assisting materially in the betterment of conditions in his locality, and done his full share toward the development and growth of the community where he has chosen his home. He is an Independent voter, and has held the office of assessor and census taker in his locality. When he first settled in Bassett, it was a town of about a dozen buildings, and it is now a thriving business center. He holds membership in the Bassett lodge of Workmen.

CYRUS N. ROYSE.

Cyrus N. Royse, who, as a land-owner of Rock county, Nebraska, has done his share toward the development of the agricultural resources of that region, is a widely known and universally respected citizen. He is a man of wide experience, and his good judgment in matters of business and integrity have placed him among the prosperous men of his township.

Mr. Royse was born in Washington county, Indiana, in 1855. His father was a farmer and both his parents were of American stock. The family included six children, four boys and two girls, and our subject was the youngest member. He was reared and educated in Indiana, the home of his birth, and during his boyhood years he was taught all the hard work to be found in carrying on a farm, and from the time he reached the age of thirteen he has done a man's work. His father died when he was fifteen years old, and he had to get out and hustle in order to assist in the support of the family, and pay off the mortgage on their farm. He left home at the age of twenty-four years to work for himself, and followed farming, hiring out by the month in the vicinity of his home. In 1883 he came west, and settled in Pawnee county, Nebraska, where he remained for one year, then came on to Rock county, and settled on a homestead in north west section 20, township 31, range 19, where he went to work building up a home and farm. He first put up a small frame house and began breaking the land to raise crops. In the of 1884 he worked out at husking corn near Norfolk, and his wife assisted him in every way possible, helping him in the work of hauling wood, cutting posts, etc.

He gradually increased his holdings and now owns a farm of six hundred and forty acres of good land. Eighty acres of this is in a high state of cultivation, and on this he raises banner crops of grain, corn, etc. He is engaged to quite an extent in stock raising and dairying, and now keeps twenty-two milch cows. He recently built a fine large barn on his place, size forty by fifty feet, and has a commodious house, and all necessary farm buildings, and all the modern farming implements with which to carry on a model farm. At the time he located here there was not a tree in sight and he went to work and planted a large number of forest trees, and has a beautiful grove now growing on his place.

Mr. Royse was married in 1883 to Miss Rose Green, whose father, Jonah Green, was a miller by trade, of American blood. The family is widely known and highly respected throughout the community in which they reside. Mr. Royse is active in local public affairs, and stands firmly for the principles of the Democratic party.

SKETCH OF SHERIDAN COUNTY.

BY CHARLES P. BRESEE.

Comparatively few white men had seen what is now Sheridan county when the writer, in April, 1877, first entered its borders. The country at that time was covered with short, curly buffalo grass, the salt grass only appearing in valleys, giving the hills and ridges a smooth, bald appearance. The Sioux Indians had full possession of the country, which was indeed a magnificent hunting ground, fairly teeming with antelope and deer, and some few elk still remained. Ducks and geese were abundant and some grouse were to be found upon the prairie. No white man at that time lived within its borders and to the prospector passing through it seemed that a generation would perhaps pass away before it would ever be inhabited by the white man. But with the opening of the Black Hills the Sioux Indians were soon gathered in by the United States government and located on the Pine Ridge reservation, which joins Sheridan county immediately on the north, and which agency is only some two miles distant from what is now the northern border. However, soon after the establishment of the reservation, a strip of land some five miles wide and ten miles long, which is now a part of Sheridan county, was set aside by the government under pretense of keeping bootleggers away from the agency, but was in all probability really accomplished by the post traders that independent stores might not be put in too close. This strip was known as the "extension" and was held by the government and used only by a few favored cattlemen until it was thrown open to settlement in 1904, and immediately became a part of Sheridan county, as it was fully within her borders. This is a splendid strip of agricultural land and was covered with squatters in forty-eight hours after being opened. However, the one section lying immediately south of the agency was taken by one Charles Nines, who proposed to open a store on his homestead, and at once the interested parties on the reservation brought such pressure to bear on President Roosevelt that he again set aside this one section and the same is yet withheld from settlement.

Almost before the government had placed the Sioux Indians on the reservation the hardy cattleman pushed to the front and in the fall of 1878 Newman and Hunter both established ranches in what is now Sheridan county, and while it is true that the Newman ranch buildings were just in the edge of what is now Cherry county, close by the old Gordon rifle pits, yet his range was almost wholly within the limits of Sheridan county. These two ranches continued to monopolize almost the entire territory until the coming of settlers in 1883, when they were crowded out by the settlers, although a number of their cowboys are still residents of Sheridan and Cherry counties. John Riggs, who was foreman of the Hunter ranch, became the first sheriff of Sheridan county, and is at the present time living on a beautiful farm situated on the Niobrara river, some fifteen miles southeast of Rushville and near the site of the old Hunter ranch. T. B. Irwin, who was foreman of the Newman ranch, was for many years a resident of western Cherry county, where he owned and operated a large cattle ranch of his own. Ed. T. Ross, one of the wild and woolly cowboys of the Newman ranch, now resides at Gordon and is one of the most prominent and wealthy cattlemen of that section. Several more of the old-time cow punchers at present reside in Cherry county, while quite a number of the old-time range riders now sleep beneath Sheridan county soil.

Sheridan county was organized in June, 1885, with James Loofborrow as clerk. Its first general election was held in November, 1885, and its first elective officers were: Abel Hill, clerk; John Riggs, sheriff; S. S. Murphy, superintendent; Chris Mosler, treasurer; C. Patterson, county judge, and W. H. Westover, county attorney.

From the time the territory was taken from the Indians until 1883 its entire population consisted of a few cattlemen and three or four squaw men scattered along its northern borders, but in 1883 a few hardy pioneers pushed their way into its present territory and following close on their heels came the Indiana colony, headed by Major John A. Scamahorn, settling in its eastern borders, where now stands the town of Gordon. From that moment on the tide of civilization poured in until in 1885 nearly every quarter section of land north of the Niobrara river was occupied by a homesteader. Then came the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri River Valley railroad, crossing the northern part of the county from east to west and the towns of Gordon, Rushville and Hay Springs sprang up like magic, and by October, 1886, there were within its borders nearly fifteen thousand people, and what eight years before had been the hunting ground of the most warlike tribe of Indians in America had in this short space of time become a happy community of civilized people.

For years a fierce county seat fight was waged between the towns of Hay Springs and Rushville, but Rushville was finally successful and is the present county seat, with a population of some seven hundred people.

Sheridan county is sixty-nine miles long by thirty-six miles wide. The Niobrara river runs through the county from west to east about midway. North of the river the soil is a rich limestone loam similar in texture to the famous blue grass region of Kentucky, and is one of the finest farming regions in the west. South of the Niobrara river the greater portion of the country is sand hills and is occupied by cattlemen, but has numerous lakes and hay valleys, while the hills are covered with luxuriant grass, affording a paradise for ranchmen, and while this portion of the county is thinly populated, yet it is a rich country and produces some of the finest cattle in the west. The Burlington & Missouri railroad runs entirely through the southern part of the county, along which are located the stations of Bingham, Lakeside, Ellsworth and Reno.

The northern portion of the county is watered by several creeks which flow in a westerly direction, emptying into the White river in South Dakota. There is little timber in the county except along its northern border.

where pine trees once covered the hills and the streams are fringed with elm, ash, box elder and cottonwood. It is fast becoming the greatest potato country in the west and produces immense crops of all kinds of small grain, and corn of the earlier varieties is successfully raised. Its output of cattle and horses is large and no better stock country can be found anywhere in the world. Water is pure and abundant at an average depth of about thirty feet. Its mean altitude is about thirty-five hundred feet, and while its rainfall is only about twenty-four inches per year, yet this practically all falls in the growing season and is sufficient to produce bountiful crops. Land is cheap and abundant and untold thousands may yet find homes within the borders of Sheridan county.

A. M. WILSON.

Among the capable and industrious men who hold responsible positions in McCook, Nebraska, none is more highly respected than the subject of this review, A. M. Wilson, who is superintendent of the electric light company here. He has held this position since 1894 and has been connected with the concern for fourteen years.

Mr. Wilson is a native of Missouri. His father, J. W. Wilson, settled in Keokuk, Iowa, in 1859, and moved to Omaha two years later. At the breaking out of the war, he enlisted and served for three years in a Nebraska regiment, taking an active part in the battle of Gettysburg, and was with the army of the Potomac. He was shot and severely wounded during a hard-fought battle. He was a native of Terre Haute, Indiana, and after being discharged came back to Nebraska but afterwards moved to Kansas, where he died. During his young manhood, our subject learned the electrical work at Tarkio, Missouri, and came from there to Nebraska, afterwards working all over the western states. In 1894 he settled in McCook, and began with the company he is still with. This plant has a two hundred and twenty horse power boiler, six dynamos, 2-30 K. W. and 4-15 K. W. S. The electrical capacity is ten hundred and twenty-eight amperes. It runs about three thousand lights, and is a private plant. It has the meter system. The plant has been increased seventy-five per cent. in three years, in order to keep up with the growth and demands of the city. Mr. Wilson has three men working under him all the time, and besides gives up his entire time and attention to the work. The company will soon install a day system to meet the growing demand for its light, and it now enjoys the reputation of being one of the best plants in the state for even the continuous service.

Mr. Wilson married Miss May Colling, daughter of Nicholas Colling, an old settler of Indianola, Nebraska, who came west from Illinois in 1872. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, who are named as follows: Florence, Ethel, Francis, Royal, Mina and Merna.

Mr. Wilson is a Republican in political faith, and takes an active interest in all local and state affairs. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen lodge of McCook.

EBER A. SMITH.

Eber A. Smith, one of the most prominent farmers and stockmen of Deuel county, and a man of untiring energy and good business management, resides on section 12, township 13, range 45. He has in all one thousand eight hundred acres, and is one of the wealthiest men of the locality. He has been a resident of Deuel county since 1886, and is widely known, and universally respected and esteemed.

Mr. Smith was born in Washtenaw county, Michigan, on the second day of August, 1845. He grew to manhood there, receiving a good education, and worked as a clerk in a general merchandise store at Lawton and Paw Paw for a number of years. In April, 1865, he enlisted in Company F, Twelfth Michigan Infantry, served with his regiment for two months, then was mustered out on account of illness which compelled him to leave his regiment. He returned to Michigan, and secured employment as a solicitor, traveling for eight or nine years, covering territory in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. In 1886 he came to Nebraska, arriving in Deuel county in July, and immediately took a homestead on section 12, township 13, range 45, proved up on a quarter section, and went through all the early Nebraska times in getting started. He witnessed the drouth years, when he was unable to raise any crops, and often became thoroughly discouraged, but never thought of giving up his farm, and as the better years came on he was able to add improvements gradually and bought land adjoining his original homestead, so that he now has one of the finest properties in the region. He has about two hundred acres under cultivation, and plenty of hayland and pasture for a large bunch of stock. He is now breaking up about one thousand acres, using for the purpose one of the late model steam plows, and has every kind of improved machinery to make the operation of a large farm easy compared with the way farmers were obliged to do in the early days. He has good buildings of all kinds, a good grove and many fine trees surrounding his residence. He devotes his entire time to the improvement of his farm, and every part of it evidences his good management and business ability.

Mr. Smith was married May 12th, 1869, to Mary B. Beach, at Medina, Michigan. Mrs. Smith was also a native of Washtenaw county, that state, and the parents of both our subject and his wife were pioneers there. There are three children living, who are a credit to their parents, named as follows: Frank A., now a professor in the University of Wyoming; Fred E., who is a graduate of the University of Wyoming and of the Denver Law School. #### HARRY I. WHITESELL.

Mr. Harry I. Whitesell is one of the leading pioneers of Garfield county, who has always expressed himself to the effect that a man's chance for making money in western Nebraska with a small amount of capital to start with, is much better than anywhere in the eastern states, and says that the only excuse for a man being poor here is his own dislike for work; that anyone willing to work can come to Nebraska without a dollar, and in six years' time can become independently well off. Mr. Whitesell is a practical farmer, and a good manager, as his farm bears evidence by its well-kept appearance and splendidly tilled fields. Mr. Whitesell is prominently known throughout his county and is highly esteemed by all as a worthy citizen and good neighbor. He resides in section 24, township 22, range 15.

Mr. Whitesell is a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1859. He comes of sturdy German stock, reared on his father's farm, receiving his education through the country schools of his native state. He declares that his success in life is due to his early training, for his father taught him early in life that it was only by his own efforts that he would become wealthy or even attain a competence, and this teaching has clung to him through all his later years and acted as a spur to his labors.

Mr. Whitesell came to Nebraska in 1882, settling in Dodge county, where he was engaged in the sheep business for several years, going to Holt county from there and remaining up to 1892. He then came to Garfield county and pre-empted a claim of one hundred and sixty acres, which he soon afterwards disposed of. He next landed in the southeastern part of the county, where he took up a homestead, later buying more land until he owns altogether one thousand two hundred acres, all of which is good pasture and farm land, four hundred acres of it being under cultivation. He engages in the culture of corn, oats, wheat and also barley and rye to some extent. He has good barns and other farm buildings, and a fine residence. During the first few years, in fact, up to within the past ten or twelve years, his greatest trouble arose from lack of water, but he now has a fine supply for all purposes, furnished from deep wells which he drilled, and this is of the purest quality. Mr. Whitesell formerly raised a good many cattle, but of late years has not kept any large number, although he raises several carloads of hogs for the market each year, finding more profit in them than from cattle raising. He raises all the grain and hay which he feeds on his place, growing a great deal of alfalfa, which is the best feed possible for all stock, and also finds that the land in his vicinity is particularly well adapted for the raising of English blue grass, which is something entirely new in this part of the country. Mr. Whitesell leases land to farmers who have not enough hay on their own farms, and the yield on his range is from two to three tons per acre, all of it the very best quality.

In 1890 Mr. Whitesell was married to Mrs. Martha (Sterling) Butterfield, a native of Pennsylvania also, of German stock, a daughter of John C. and Rhoda (Parshall) Sterling. They are the parents of seven children, who are named as follows: Mabel, Laura, John, Grace, Rhoda, Martha and William. The last two named were twins, and both are deceased. Our subject and his family are active members of the Methodist Episcopal church, highly respected by all, and form a most intelligent group. Mr. Whitesell is a Republican, and was precinct clerk for seven terms. He has also served as road overseer.

CAPTAIN AMBERSON G. SHAW.

One of the leading citizens of Valentine is the subject of this sketch, Amberson G. Shaw, a well known figure who has held a unique place on the frontier and in the settlement of the west.

CAPTAIN A. G. SHAW.

Mr. Shaw was born in Brown county, Ohio, November 27, 1842. His father, Sylvester Shaw, was a veterinary surgeon and farmer, and was a son of Russell Shaw, who was one of the first pioneers of Ohio, for whom Russellville was named. Our subject's mother, Miss Elizabeth F. Hatfield, was of English descent, born and reared on the river Dee. She was the mother of nine children, of whom Amberson G. Shaw was the youngest.

At the breaking out of the war Mr. Shaw enlisted in Company B, Eleventh Ohio Cavalry, serving in Missouri, and was sent west through the Indian country, seeing service from Omaha to South Pass in the Rocky mountains. He was in the government service for three and a half years, and in 1865 in Omaha he received an honorable discharge, after which he did freighting from Omaha to Fort Laramie for two years, then working for two years as telegraph operator at Horseshoe, Wyoming. He has the distinction of sending the only dispatch ever sent to Fort Phil Kearney for relief, at the time of the Indian massacre near there. After quitting this position he spent two years on a ranch south of Fort Laramie. In the meantime he had married into the Sioux nation, when he, together with E. W. Raymond, were instrumental in getting the Sioux tribe on to the Rosebud reservation from Fort Laramie, and subsequently was employed as a carpenter on the reservation for twenty years. Part of this time, however, he worked as a scout, serving under General Miles and Crook, and was one of those on the ground the day after the Custer massacre had taken place. Through his knowledge of the Sioux language he has been employed as interpreter for numerous parties of Indians engaged to travel with wild west shows, and in this capacity has visited all the principal cities of Europe and America; is well known for his skill as a fancy shot with rifle and revolver and the throwing of knives, in which he has few equals. In 1884 Mr. Shaw came to Valentine with his family and here established the first photograph gallery in this town. He has always been active in lending his influence and assistance wherever needed, and is closely identified with the development and growth of this locality. In the early days he served as justice of the peace for four terms. This was during the wild days of Valentine, and he had many tough and lawless characters to handle.

Mr. Shaw was married March 16, 1865, to Miss Pauline Sarah Augusta Petrattive of Wisconsin. Two children have resulted from this union, Valentine Queen and Richard Frederick.

By a former marriage Mr. Shaw had four children named as follows: Dallas, an Episcopal minister; Byron B., Annette and Valentine I.

Mr. Shaw is a comrade of Colonel Wood post, No. 208, Grand Army of the Republic, of Valentine and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In political sentiment Mr. Shaw is an Independent. A portrait of Mr. Shaw will be found on another page in this work.

J. O. VALLETTE, M. D.

Dr. J. O. Vallette, a prominent resident of Alma, Nebraska, is well known and held in the highest esteem by all in this locality. He was a leading physician near Chicago, and has an enviable reputation, which he has built up by successful practice and faithful attention to duty. He has retired from practice since 1888. Dr. Vallette is a son of Jeremiah Vallette, a native of Rhode Island, known as the best agriculturist of his day. His grandfather, also Jeremiah Vallette, served in the Revolutionary war, and his mother was Miss Abiah Mott, daughter of an old settler in Connecticut. Both families are well known throughout those sections of the country, and their names figure in the early history of both states. Our subject received his education at Hahnemann College at Chicago, and after coming west taught school near Chicago for several years. He was born and raised in Stockbridge, Berkshire county, Massachusetts, and spent his boyhood years at that place. In 1864 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Illinois Infantry and was physician to Colonel Brunson, serving mostly in Kentucky.

In 1883 the family came to Illinois, moving on a farm which is now a part of the great city, and our subject has watched the growth of Chicago from the time it had but four thousand people. After receiving his diploma as a doctor he began practising in Illinois, and followed the profession at Wheaton for twenty-four years. In 1883 he came to Harlan county and located on a homestead in Eldorado township, having come west on account of throat trouble. The climate here greatly benefited him, and he continued the practice of medicine, finally giving it up in 1888. He is now ninety-two years of age, enjoying perfect health of body and mind, takes an active interest in current events, and is one of the best informed men in this locality.

Dr. Vallette was married to Miss Clarinda A. Walker, of New York state, and they have one son, Ed E., a resident of Alma. For several years Dr. Vallette ran a general store in western Illinois, and his son clerked in this establishment.

Dr. Vallette is a man of public spirit and has always taken an active part in all affairs of local and state matters, and has been one of those who have helped to make the success of this section of the state. Dr. Vallette owns a farm of one hundred and seventy-eight acres in Eldorado township.

ALONZO M. BRINCKERHOFF.

Alonzo M. Brinckerhoff, a prominent farmer residing on a valuable estate situated in section 21, township 32, range 20, Rock county, Nebraska, was born in Amboy, Lee county, Illinois, July 28, 1862. His father was a native of New York state, being born in Oneida county in 1822, and was of Holland stock, his mother also being of Holland ancestry, the Brinckerhoff family having come to America in about the year 1600. Our subject had one sister, named Sarah, she being born in New York. The family moved to Iowa in 1866, living the last four years in Greene county. They came to Rock county, Nebraska, in 1878, and in the spring of 1879 located on his present farm in Brinckerhoff precinct. In coming from Iowa the daughter and her husband, Mr. John H. Putnam, and several other people drove through with team and wagon from Greene county. When they arrived here his father had three horses, twelve head of cattle and some household goods, which was about the extent of his capital. He took up a tree claim and a homestead and began to break up the farm with a yoke of cattle; and during the first years he had a hard time getting along, owing to the wilderness of the country and the lack of modern farming tools. Neligh, a hundred miles distant, was the nearest milling place, and Atkinson, fifty miles distant, was the nearest city having a grocery store; and they were obliged to make these long trips to supply the family with provisions, taking several days for the journey, camping out at night under the wagon. They remained here increasing their holdings until 1900, when our subject bought the place consisting of five quarter sections of land, and stocked with sixty head of cattle and thirty-five head of horses. It fronts a mile and a half on the Niobrara river, and since purchasing the property he has widened the boundaries until he now owns one thousand acres, a portion of which is river bottom, with two hundred and eighty acres under cultivation and about sixty acres of natural timber. He also has a fine orchard covering five acres of ground, nicely growing, and a complete set of substantial farm buildings. The place now supports about one hundred and forty head of cattle, thirty of them being milch cows, furnishing a goodly supply of cream for shipment each week.

Mr. Brinckerhoff was married in November 1887, to Miss Almeda Dunnaway, born in Wisconsin in 1868. They have a family of seven children, named as follows: Gilbert, Annie, Mary, Crystal, Alonzo M., the third, John and Almeda. The father, A. M. Brinckerhoff, Sr., passed away from earthly toil in January, 1908.

Mr. Brinckerhoff, as was his father, is a staunch Democrat, the latter having served as county commissioner of Brown county, when Rock was a part of Brown county. Alonzo M. Brinckerhoff, Sr., was a railroad engineer on the Illinois Central during the war, and later was employed on other parts of the road. Mrs. Brinckerhoff is a member of the Baptist church. Mr. Brinckerhoff is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. A view of the Brinckerhoff home and its picturesque surroundings is shown elsewhere in this volume.

JOHN W. O'MARA.

John W. O'Mara, an old-time resident of Box Butte county, Nebraska, owns a well improved farm of extensive proportions, and is recognized as one of the substantial farmers of that region. He has passed through the experiences that usually fall to the lot of the pioneers of all new countries, and has been an earnest and faithful citizen and well merits his high station and enviable reputation as a worthy member of his community.

Mr. O'Mara was born in Warren county, Indiana, in 1862, on a farm. His father, Patrick O'Mara, is a native of Ireland, as was also his mother, who was Mary Bowen, and she died when John was but three years old, since which time his father has been both mother and father to him. Our subject was reared in Indiana, and at the age of twenty, the family came to Illinois, where they lived for some years. In 1885 Mr. O'Mara came to Nebraska with two sons, John and William, locating on section 18, township 27, range 47, and they put up a sod shanty and began farming. They owned a good team and did freighting from Hay Springs. Many times did our subject camp out at night under his wagon in hauling timber from Pine Ridge, as he was handy to make a living and stick to the homestead until proving up. Our subject got along very nicely and was doing well up to the time the drouths struck that region, and then his crops failed for several seasons and at last he was compelled to go into the Black Hills, where he obtained employment at railroad construction work and followed that for some time. However, he never gave up his farm, and after the good years came on he succeeded in adding many improvements and gradually increased his acreage until he is now proprietor of one thousand acres. At one time he owned two thousand acres, but disposed of part of it at a good profit. His ranch is all fenced and he has erected a good set of buildings, has a fine well and windmills, etc. One hundred and sixty acres are under cultivation, and he is engaged in mixed farming and stock raising.

Mr. O'Mara is numbered among the old settlers of his region, and has aided materially in the progress and growth of that part of the state by always taking an active interest in all local affairs. In political views he is a Democrat.

FRANK M. BOWMAN.

Frank M. Bowman, a well known resident of Cherry county, Nebraska, has for the past three years been foreman of the Metz ranch. This is one of the finest equipped ranches in this county, located four miles north of Cody, and is a grand hunting resort, the McGanzer Club House being located on its premises. Mr. Bowman has the handling of the whole place, and is a first class manager and one of the best ranchmen in this section of the country.

Mr. Bowman is a native of Boone county, Indiana, born June 8, 1860. His father, Dr. W. L. Bowman, of American stock, is a prominent physician at Stanton, Nebraska. His mother, who was Mary Wylie, is a native of Ohio. There was a family of ten children, our subject being the third in order of birth, and he was reared in his home county until seven years of age when his parents came to Stanton county, Nebraska. They were among the pioneer families in the eastern part of the state, and went through the usual pioneer experiences, living in a dugout, and handling ox teams while starting their home in country. Our subject and an older brother, Webster B., lived at Alliance for several years. Most of his youth was spent on a farm, and at the age of twenty he started out for himself, going to Colorado, where he spent two years on ranches, then came to Holt county in 1883 and took a homestead and proved up on it.

He remained on his farm for several years, and went through many hard times in getting started, witnessing the grasshopper raids and losing a number of crops from this and other causes, but gradually got ahead and managed to build up a comfortable home. In 1887 he opened up a grocery store at Stanton, then became foreman of Charles H. Chase's home ranch near Stanton, occupying this position for two years. In 1903 he came to Cherry county and began in his present work, where he has made a decided success and proved a most valuable man for the position. In August, 1904, he filed on a Kincaid homestead of six hundred and forty acres in sections 28 and 34, township 35, range 33, on which he proved up in 1909. He has built a substantial house, barn and outbuildings, erected a windmill and made other improvements, which will provide him a comfortable home when he decides to retire to it.

Mr. Bowman is numbered among the earliest settlers in this region, his parents having driven into the state by team and covered wagon, and he has taken an active part in the development of this region since locating here.

Mr. Bowman was married April 2, 1883, to Miss Emma Breden, daughter of John and Nancy (Forbes) Breden, the father a minister in the United Brethren church. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowman, namely: Ray, Frankie, and May. Mr. Bowman is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen.

ADAM H. SCHLASMAN.

Adam H. Schlasman was born in Lisbon Linn county, Iowa, in 1855, of which state his father was one of the early pioneer farmers, a man of high character and splendid reputation. The parents were Jonathan and Eve (Banie) Schlasman, natives of Pennsylvania, and were of Dutch descent.

When our subject was fifteen years old the family moved to Kansas, settling in Pottawatomie county, where they were among the earliest pioneers. Here Adam H. was reared on the farm, assisting his father and receiving advantages for an education. At the age of twenty-five he started out for himself, and leaving his frontier home, went north to Nebraska, then on to Montana, spending about four years at the city of Bozeman. In 1885 he returned to Nebraska and settled in the north-west corner of Blaine county on the North Loup river. He built a sod house and "batched it" for several years, seeing hardships in the way of loss of crops by drouth and hail storms. He now has a lovely home and farm of four hundred and eighty acres and successfully carries it on. He cultivates about two hundred acres of his land, raising good crops and is enjoying a comfortable competency.

In 1894 Mr. Schlasman was united in marriage with Mrs. Maggie A. McKee, daughter of William F. Reed and Susianna (Shafer) Reed, pioneers of western Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Schlasman have one child, Susianna E., and one step-daughter, Margaret McKee.

Adam H. Schlasman was among the oldest settlers of this vicinity and has done his part as a leading pioneer in adding to the material advancement of the locality in which he lives. He is a Democrat in politics and has been active in the councils of his party. In 1887 he was elected sheriff of Blaine county and held the office for four years, and carried the first and only prisoner to the penitentiary that was ever sent up from Blaine county. He was a careful and efficient public officer and won universal respect and approval among his constituents for rigid enforcement of the law and the conscientious performance of his duties. He held other offices, among them being that of justice of the peace, which office he now holds. Mr. Schlasman is widely known in the county and is regarded as one of the progressive citizens of the community. He has been constable, road overseer and precinct assessor, and has given good satisfaction as a public official.

CHARLES EPPLER.

Charles Eppler, one of the most influential and wealthy agriculturists of Perkins county, resides on his elegant farm, his dwelling being located on section 2, township 11, range 38. He has accumulated his fortune by push and energy, and his high station as a farmer and citizen is well deserved. He was born in the town of Decatur, Illinois, on July 8, 1861.

The father of our subject, Hiram Eppler, was born in Pennsylvania, of German stock, and he married Rose Queary, a native of Illinois, of French descent. The family settled in Illinois as pioneers, and there our subject was raised and educated. At the age of about seventeen years he went into business for himself in the town of Macon. His father died when he was six years old, and from that time on he had to hustle for himself, and early learned the hard lessons of life, in addition to making his own living, being obliged to help support his mother. He first started in the draying business, doing teaming and anything that he could find to do, and continued in this work for several years in Illinois. In 1887 he left there and came to Nebraska, settling on a homestead, on which he erected a sod house, twelve by fourteen feet in size, in which he spent one winter with his family. He had little to start with and necessarily was obliged to go slow in the way of adding improvements to his place, but managed to make a living and get along fairly well up to 1890, when the bad times struck the locality, and he suffered crop losses during '93, '94 and '95, and at the end of that time was one thousand dollars in debt, with a mortgage on his home, and things looked pretty discouraging to him. The last straw seemed to be a blind horse, and Mr. Eppler fully decided to leave the country and try it somewhere else, so turned his blind horse loose and determined to follow the direction the horse took. After circling around for a little while the animal came back to where Mr. Eppler was waiting and watching, and refused to go away, so this seemed to him to be an indication that he had better remain in the country, which he did, and results have proved that this was a wise move and he has never regretted the action.

As the years went by conditions improved considerably and he was able to build up his farm in good shape, added substantial buildings, paid off his debts, and prospered in every way. He now has a ranch of one thousand six hundred acres of deeded land, all in first-class order with fences, groves, etc. The place is well stocked with cattle, horses and other live stock, and he is doing splendidly, owning besides his ranching interests a good building on the main street in Grant Village and a substantial bank account.

In 1883 our subject was married at Decatur, Illinois, to Miss Maggie Plottner, born in the east, of German stock. Five children have blessed their union, named as follows: Fred, Grace, Rilla, and Hiram, besides Beatrice, who died in 1900, aged six years. The others are intelligent young people, well equipped for life's battle, receiving a good education and thorough training. They have a happy and peaceful home and are popular in their community.

Mr. Eppler has always done his full share in helping build up and develop the resources of his adopted country, and has been instrumental in establishing different schools here. He has served as justice of the peace for a time and held other local offices. In politics he is an Independent voter.

CHARLES S. REECE.

Charles S. Reece, who makes section 6, township 30, range 28, the scene of his industrial activities, and the home that is dearer than all the world, was born in Andrew county, Missouri, on a farm, March 12, 1871, and comes of a lineage long identified with the best life of the south. His parents were born and reared in North Carolina, where his ancestors had long played a prominent part in industry, politics and society. His father, Alvis F. Reece, was a farmer, who was brought into Missouri by his parents while still young, and there he lived and died. Malvina Mackey, his wife, and the mother of the subject of this article, was reared to a rural life, and proved a worthy helpmeet to her honest and industrious husband. They were the parents of seven children, of whom Charles S. was the fifth in order of birth.

Charles S. Reece remained at home in Missouri until he reached the age of fifteen years, when he accompanied the family in its removal to Lincoln county, Kansas, where they spent the two years following in farming. Upon the death of his father, Charles S., now a well-grown lad of seventeen years, took upon himself the responsibility of the family fortunes, and with his mother set himself to a hard contest with an unkindly fate. In 1888 they removed to Cherry county, Nebraska, and settled on a homestead on the Snake river. They found shelter in a sod house, and did their first farm work with a team composed of a horse and an ox, but later on he secured two oxen. Nicely started in the stock business, between May 7th and 10th, 1892, his entire herd of cattle perished in a terrible storm that swept for four days over the prairies. When he became of age, Mr. Reece took a homestead for himself in section 6, township 30, range 28, and at once began building up a stock farm. He has today twenty-seven hundred and twenty acres of good land and every modern improvement. His house is twenty-eight by twenty-eight feet, and the barns are large and roomy. There are three wells, equipped with separate windmills, and a generous garden with such fruits as the permits.

Mr. Reece was engaged in teaching from 1890 to 1896, being employed

well, climate

those years in only three districts. For two successive seasons he held the contract to furnish hay at Fort Niobrara, which he met to the perfect satisfaction of the army officials at that point. In March, 1898, he was appointed deputy county clerk, and was elected clerk in 1901, being re-elected in 1903, and serving two full terms in that position, to the eminent satisfaction of all who had to do business with him. In both elections he carried every precinct in Cherry county, with only three exceptions.

The marriage of Charles S. Reece and Miss Harriet E. Thackrey occurred September 7, 1902. She was a daughter of Samuel and Ellinor (Grecian) Thackrey, farming people at Manhattan, Kansas, and descendants of long established American families. To this union have come three children: Francis M. and Helen G., who was born in Valentine, Nebraska, and Leona R.

Mr. Reece is an active and public spirited citizen, and ever ready to take hold of any business enterprise that looks to the good of the community. He was one of the incorporators of the Stockmen's Telephone Company, and for two years was its president. At the various farmers' institutes he is a prominent figure, and has given many valuable addresses, which have proved of deep interest to all concerned with the problems of agriculture as presented to practical life on the Nebraska prairies. Mr. and Mrs. Reece are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Valentine, where Mr. Reece holds membership in the Modern Woodmen of America. One of the interesting illustrations in this work shows a view of the residence of Mr. Reece.

SAMUEL P. JONES.

Samuel P. Jones, who for the past twenty-three years has resided in Cheyenne county, Nebraska, and during that time has acquired a fine property as a result of his industry and good management, is widely known in his locality as a substantial citizen, and highly esteemed by all who know him. He has a pleasant home in Eagle precinct, and is one of the prominent public-spirited men of his community.

Mr. Jones was born in Pennsylvania, October 13, 1861, and two years of his life were spent there. His parents then moved into Iowa and made that state their home for twenty-three years. About 1886 Mr. Jones came to Nebraska, traveling by wagon through the wild country, and located in Cheyenne county, taking a homestead of eighty acres in section 34, township 17, range 47. There they went through all the experiences that fell to the people of those early days in that region in building up a home in the wilderness, suffering every form of hardship and privation, but after all sorts of discouragements have come out victorious and now own a fine ranch and have a pleasant and comfortable home. Mr. Jones has a fine ranch of thirteen hundred acres in Eagle precinct, with a fine stone dwelling on section 34, township 17, range 47, and on this runs about four hundred cattle. He also engaged in mixed farming, cultivating four hundred acres, and has thirty acres of good alfalfa hay. He is owner of a fine strain of roadsters and few in the country can show him a clean pair of heels; he is also engaged at present in breeding mules.

Mr. Jones was married in Oskaloosa, Iowa, December 27, 1888, to Mary E. Evans, a native of Mahaska county, Iowa, born April 27, 1866. After their marriage our subject returned to Cheyenne county with his bride, and together they started out to make a home and accumulate a competence, and well have they succeeded, as a glimpse of their well appointed ranch would show any observer. To them have been born the following children: Mary Jane, born in 1890; Margaret Sarah, born in 1891; Ina Pearl, in 1893; Thomas S., born in 1896, died in 1907; Bessie May, born in 1898, and Harriet Ann, born January 2, 1908. The parents of our subject, Thomas S. and Sarah J. Jones, both of English nationality, are now deceased, as are also Mrs. Jones' parents, who were Evan J. and Mary (Edwards) Evans.

GEORGE E. SHEPARD.

George E. Shepard, residing in Logan township, Franklin county, is a successful and prosperous farmer and stockman of that vicinity who has built up a fine estate through industry and good management, and is one of the substantial and worthy citizens of his community.

Mr. Shepard was born in 1856 in Hennepin, Illinois. His father, Thomas W. Shepard, settled in Illinois in 1833, having moved there from Indiana. Our subject grew up in Illinois, and in all spent thirty-five years in that state. He was in the farming and stock raising business in Putnam county, and came to Nebraska in 1893, having purchased part of his land here in 1885. He started in farming here, getting high grade stock on his place, and now has from ninety to one hundred good Shorthorn cattle, each year selling a number of thoroughbred bull calves to farmers throughout the locality. He also deals in high grade Poland China hogs, for which he finds a ready market. Only enough horses are kept on his farm for his own use, and he engages in mixed farming on quite a large scale, his crop of wheat usually amounting to four thousand bushels and corn up to five or six thousand. He feeds all of the corn he raises, and often is compelled to buy more. His farm comprises five hundred and eighty acres, three hundred and twenty acres being pasture, which makes a pretty good sized place.

Mr. Shepard states that this country is far ahead of Illinois for farming and stock raising, and from his long experience in both states he is in a position to know whereof he speaks. On the same investment here twenty per cent. is earned, against about four per cent. in Illinois. In 1906 and 1907 he paid a visit to his old friends in the latter state, and found them practically standing still, while here those who came a few years ago and took up land have steadily forged ahead and are now in very comfortable circumstances.

In 1881 our subject was united in marriage to Miss Emma L. Devereux, of Downer's Grove, Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Shepard have been born the following children: Charles E., who is married and lives on a farm in Furnas county, owned by our subject; Thomas W., Percy, Dave, Will, married; Frank, also married, and Ellen, the last named is the wife of Otto Lynch, of Macon, this county. Five of these children are from Mr. Shepard's present marriage and two from a former.

Mr. Shepard is an active man of his township, and for fourteen years served as clerk of the school board. He is president of the Franklin county fair association, which was organized thirty-two years ago, he having acted in this capacity for the past three years. Mr. Shepard is an active politician, has served on the Republican central committee for his township, and lends his influence for the bettering of conditions in his community. He was assessor for one term, and is held in the highest esteem by his fellowmen and associates.

A. S. CANNON.

A. S. Cannon, a prominent and well-to-do farmer and leading citizen of Phelps county, resides on section 32, Lake township, where he has a pleasant home and highly improved farm. He has a valuable estate and is one of the substantial men of his locality and held in the highest esteem by all.

Mr. Cannon was born in Illinois. He is a son of E. H. Cannon, of Prairie township, a sketch of whom appears in this work on another page. Our subject located in Lake township in 1896, at that time purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of improved property, and has been engaged in mixed farming and stock raising since that time. He has made a success of the work in all its branches, and applies every modern method in his operations, succeeding in obtaining the best possible results from his labor. He usually has a drove of fifty head of pure bred Duroc Jersey hogs, and thirty-five high grade cattle, and takes especial pride in keeping up the standard of his herd. In addition to his farming operations. Mr. Cannon owned and operated a threshing outfit, and carried on this work all through his locality during the season, but he has since sold that business and outfit.

Mr. Cannon takes an active interest in all local affairs, and is one of the politically prominent men in his section. He has served as supervisor of his township, and a member of the county board, being on the claims committee, elected in 1903 for an unexpired term and re-elected the following year. He was clerk of Lake township for five years prior to 1903, and has gained the confidence and respect of his fellowmen by his thoroughly honest dealings and integrity. He is now, and has been for the past ten years, secretary of the Phelps County Insurance Company, a very successful concern. Mr. Cannon is an Independent in politics, and a wide-awake, active young man, with any amount "of go-ahead-iveness" in his make-up, and a first class business man.

Mr. Cannon was married in 1896 to Miss Nellie Carpenter, of Harlan county, daughter of A. Carpenter. To Mr. and Mrs. Cannon have been born four children, namely: Virgil, Roscoe, Denzil and Mary. The family are active members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

WILLIAM H. MAIDEN.

William H. Maiden holds a prominent place among the foremost agriculturists of Dawes county, Nebraska. His home is on section 5, township 34, range 47, where he has been located for many years past, and appointed home and well cultivated fields well speak the man of taste and progress, one stands higher in the estimation of his fellowmen and no lowmen and associates than he. He is among the leading old settlers in this region who has take an active part in the development of the section from its very beginning, and richly deserves the success which has come to him.

Mr. Maiden was born in Whiteside county, Illinois, in 1848. His father, George Maiden, was a farmer and old settler in Illinois, and was one of those who lived in that section of the country at the time of the Black Hawk massacre. He married Sarah Templeton, American born, of Scotch blood.

In 1856 the family moved to Tama county, Iowa, and there our subject grew to manhood, remaining at home with his parents up to the time of his twenty-first birthday, assisting in the farm work, and attending the country schools, where he received a fair education, for those early days. He left home in 1877 and came into the Black Hills, working for different freighting outfits in that vicinity, and part of the time being manager of the mail route from Fort Pierre to Deadwood, remaining here up to 1880. He then returned to Iowa, where he was married to Miss Dora E. Derrick, whose father, John C. Derrick, was a farmer of German descent, and her mother was Adelia Kellogg, raised in New York state. One son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Maiden, William J., now twenty-one years of age and living on a farm adjoining that of his father.

Mr. Maiden and his family lived in Iowa up to the spring of 1886, farming there in Carroll county, then came to Dawes county, Nebraska, and settled on his present homestead, landing here on March 8th. This farm was located in section 5, township 34, range 47, and he at once began to build up a home, putting up a dugout, in which they lived for two years, then built a better house of the same kind and lived in that for nine years. During the first years they went through many hard times, witnessing the drouths, and was obliged to work in the roundhouse at Chadron and any odd work he could get to do in order to support his family. He kept on improving his place, however, and has now a ranch of eight hundred acres, about seventy acres of which is in alfalfa and plow land, with the balance in hay and pasture, as he engages extensively in the stock business, raising a large number of cattle and horses for market each season. The ranch is located on White river, and is well supplied with natural timber of all kinds, and he has it well improved, all fenced, and everything in first-class order.

Mr. Maiden is a strong Democrat and ardent admirer of William Jennings Bryan.

and takes a keen interest in local and national politics. He has served as school director for four years, also as school treasurer for five years.

EUGENE F. MOON.

Eugene F. Moon, one of the successful and progressive agriculturists of Prairie township, Phelps county, Nebraska, is owner of a well-improved farm and highly esteemed in his community as an energetic and industrious citizen. Mr. Moon was born in Michigan, 1869. His father, Horace Moon, formerly of Prairie township, now of Holdrege, was supervisor for several years in the township, and came here from Van Buren county, Michigan. The mother, Susan Ensign, was also a native of that county.

In 1890 our subject began on his own account, settling on a one hundred and sixty acre farm in Albany township, Harlan county, which was owned by his father, and there he made a success from the start, purchasing the farm, which he afterwards sold. While living on that place he had plenty of pasture and kept about sixty head of cattle and a large drove of hogs. The year he sold this farm his corn crop went as high as sixty bushels per acre, which was a pretty good yield. He now rents eighty acres, farming two hundred and forty acres in all, and keeps twelve horses, and sixty hogs. These he finds pay best of anything on the farm, and he has had excellent success in every enterprise of this nature.

Mr. Moon was married in 1893 to Miss Katie Cannon, daughter of E. H. Cannon, whose sketch appears in this book. Mr. and Mrs. Moon are the parents of four children, named as follows: Jessie, Otis, Claude and Elsie.

The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Holdrege and are held in high esteem by all. In political faith Mr. Moon is an Independent.

GARNER M. COLE.

Among the old settlers of Brown county, Nebraska, none is better known or more highly respected than the subject of this review. Mr. Cole was born in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, December 23, 1869. His father, Ishmael Cole, was a farmer and an old settler in Seward county, Nebraska, who came of old Yankee stock. Our subject was partly reared in Wisconsin, and grew up accustomed to hard farm work. When he was seven years old, his parents moved to Seward county, and were among the old pioneer settlers of that state. Here they spent some eight years, then settled on a farm near Ainsworth, and remained there until 1883, at that time moving to Chadron, Nebraska, where his father homesteaded and proved up, living on the farm for four years. Our subject started out for himself when fourteen years of age, working on different farms all over Brown, Keya Paha and Cherry counties, and for four years was engaged in the livery business in Ainsworth. At the end of this time he settled on a homestead in section 28, township 31, range 21, Brown county, here proved up and gradually added to it, until he now has a farm of three hundred and twenty acres. The estate is a valuable one, well improved with a good house and all farm buildings. It is located on Oak creek, which furnishes a good supply of water the year round. There is a fine natural growth of timber on the land, mostly of oak and ash, which makes it one of the most desirable places in the locality.

Mr. Cole was married in October, 1900, to Miss Pearl E. Swett, a native of Iowa. Her father, Alanson Swett (of whom a sketch appears in this volume), an old settler in Brown county, lives on an adjoining farm. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cole, who are named as follows: Kennerd, Laura and Glenn.

Mr. Cole has a wide circle of acquaintances and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. He is a Socialist in political sentiments, and fraternally a member of the Modern Woodmen of America camp at Ainsworth.

LEWIS M. RIESCHE.

That diversified farming may be carried on successfully in Dawes county, Nebraska, has been demonstrated beyond doubt by the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review. For many years Mr. Riesche has followed farming and has built up a fine farm and comfortable home, stuck to his farm through many discouragements and come out ahead, and he is now recognized as one of the foremost citizens of his locality, highly esteemed and respected by all.

Mr. Riesche is a native of Newport, Kentucky, born in 1858, of German descent. His father, who was a blacksmith by trade, was born in Germany, as was also his mother, whose maiden name was Louisa Taschner. Our subject was raised in Kentucky and in early youth learned the cigarmaker's trade and followed that work for ten years in Cincinnati and Newport, Kentucky. In 1883 he came to Nebraska, locating in Lyons, Burt county, and there worked on farms for three years, then moved to Dawes county, landing here in June, 1886, and settling on his present homestead in section 5, township 30, range 48. He first put up a rough frame building as a dwelling place; and later a log cabin was added to it, and he "batched" it for several years. The dry years soon came on and he lost four or five crops in succession, and was also hailed out one season, and it seemed to him that he could not get a start. However, he stuck to the place, and steadily improved it with fences, good buildings, and kept on trying to raise crops, until he has seventy acres under cultivation, and about one hundred and seventy acres in hay and pasture land, and keeps quite a number of head of stock.

Mr. Riesche was united in marriage in June, 1899, to Mrs. Jane Rimmer, whose parents were old settlers in Nebraska. Mrs. Riesche was a widow with one child, Isaac Osborne Rimmer, and one child has also been born to our subject, a daughter named Mary, born in July, 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Riesche have one adopted son, James Henry Riesche.

Mr. Riesche takes an active interest in local affairs and has served as a township official at different times, now holding the office of moderator of school district No. 78, in which he lives. A picture of Mr. Riesche and family will be found on another page of this volume.

V. A. KLEIN.

V. A. Klein, one of the leading business men of Lodgepole, Nebraska, is a prominent citizen of that thriving town. He has been a resident of Cheyenne county for many years, and has become closely identified with the commercial and social interests of the locality where he makes his home. Mr. Klein is a gentleman of sterling worth, and well merits his success and high standing in the community. He is well known in musical circles, taking a deep interest in that subject, and is leader of the Klein orchestra, also of the Lodgepole band, both of which he organized.

Mr. Klein was born in Frauenthal, Bohemia, on September 10, 1862, receiving a fair education as a boy, and during his young hood worked with his father and brothers in their flour mill. In November, 1882, he left his native land and came to America with his wife and children.

parents, the family locating in Rosedale, Kansas, where our subject remained for about five years, during which time he lived mostly in Kansas City, and was connected with different musical organizations, doing orchestral and brass band work. In March, 1887, he came to Cheyenne county and homesteaded in section 2, township 12, range 48, which place he later sold. The father died in Rosedale in the spring of the year, 1887, the entire family moving to Nebraska with our subject. There were four brothers and two sisters who settled in that region, one other brother locating in Burt county, Nebraska. He was a Catholic priest, and the entire family were devout Roman Catholics. For a time our subject was employed as a clerk in the Pacific hotel in Sidney, and at the end of two years went to Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he spent several years engaged in different business enterprises, all of the time being more or less engaged in music, and was a member of the leading orchestra and band in Cheyenne.

In 1898 Mr. Klein returned to Nebraska, engaging in business in Sidney, coming here as instructor of the Sidney brass band. He only remained a short time, then moved to Lodgepole, and started in the saloon business, which he followed for two years, then established a mercantile business, and has continued at it ever since. He has built up a fine trade, and is now proprietor of a constantly increasing trade, having a nice large store and carrying a complete line of general merchandise. Besides his business enterprises Mr. Klein owns a good ranch and farm situated twelve miles south of Lodgepole.

Our subject was married in Cheyenne, Wyoming, in 1891, to Florence A. Scherer, who was born in Montgomery county, Ill., in 1868, coming to Cheyenne county with her father and family in 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Klein are the parents of two children, Ethel M., aged sixteen, and Clara E., aged fourteen, both living at home.

Mr. Klein is an active man in public affairs in his community, and is at present acting as treasurer of Lodgepole village. Politically he is a Republican.

FRANK MAYFIELD.

Should the reader ask for a representative old settler of Dawes county, and who has grown up in a new country and acquired valuable property by dint of his own energy and despite the trials and privations which attend it.

tended him in the early days, we would give the name of the gentleman mentioned above.

Mr. Mayfield was born in Richardson county, Nebraska territory, in 1860. His father, George Mayfield, as a young man learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for some years, and later followed farming, and he was married to Miss Ellen Cash, of English stock, as was himself. Our subject was reared and educated in his native state on his father's farm, where he learned to perform all kinds of hard work as a boy, and when twenty-six years of age left home to make his own way. He came to Dawes county in February, 1887, and located on section 13, township 31, range 51, as a pre-emption, later filed homestead papers. Here he built a log house, and has lived on the place ever since, adding to his original holdings until he owns four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land besides controlling one hundred and sixty acres adjoining. He lives on West Ash creek, and his farm is well supplied with all kinds of timber, running water the year round, wild fruits, and he also has planted fruit trees and small fruits such as strawberries, raspberries, etc. He is engaged in mixed farming, diversifying his crops and attaining marked success.

Mr. Mayfield was married in 1882 to Miss Ruby Bacon. Mrs. Mayfield is a daughter of Henry and Lura (Davison) Bacon, pioneers of this county, and well known throughout this section, but now residents of Olympia, Washington. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mayfield, who are named as follows: Thora, Di., Lura, Walter and Ralph, the two latter bright sturdy boys of ten and twelve years old, who almost run the farm now, as Mr. Mayfield had a bad accident happen to him November 25, 1907, while gathering corn. The team became frightened, ran off and ran over him, breaking his left jaw bone and knocking one eye out and cutting his face badly; but he has recovered to a great extent after such a close call to death.

Mr. Mayfield has always been active in local affairs, and has given much of his time and influence in helping to build up and develop the commercial resources of his section. Politically he is a Republican.

DAVE L. WILLIAMS.

Prominent among the younger ranchmen of Loup county is Dave L. Williams, whose name stands at the head of this review. He was born in Hamilton county, Nebraska, December 28, 1875, on the farm of his parents. His father, T. W. Williams, whose sketch appears in this volume, was an old settler in Nebraska and of Loup county. His mother was Mary (Lewis) Williams, and both of his parents were born in Wales, coming to America when they were children.

In the spring of 1876 the whole family came to Loup county and located on a homestead. St. Paul and Grand Island were the nearest trading points and all goods and material had to be hauled from one or the other of those places. Our subject was raised on the frontier and can remember when deer and antelope were plentiful, and occasionally an elk was seen. Dave worked with his father on the home farm until he was twenty-one years of age, helping to improve the home of the family, and then, in the spring of 1896, he went into the sand hills of Rock county, working for the A. D. Cattle Company for ten years. He spent ten years as a cowboy in the county of Rock, and was all over Brown, Cherry and Keya Paha. Our subject bought his present farm while he was still in the sand hill country, but did not move upon it till in 1906, since which time he has made many improvements. He has two hundred acres, with forty acres under cultivation, the balance being devoted to pasture and grass land, which he needs for his cattle and horses to graze on. Mr. Williams still does considerable ranching business and has a bunch of cattle in the sand hill country. His home farm is one mile south of Taylor, the county seat of Loup county, Nebraska. Having come to the county in 1876, Mr. Williams became one of the very earliest settlers and he has done his part in adding to the material advancement of the community.

Dave L. Williams was married to Miss Mary Harvey in 1900. The bride's parents, Benjamin and Sadie (Ham) Harvey, were pioneer settlers of Loup county. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have been blessed with three children: Gladys, Vera and Dorris.

OSCAR W. McDANIEL.

Oscar W. McDaniel occupies a prominent place among the large ranchmen of Cherry county, Nebraska, his residence being on section 4, township 29, range 26, where he has built up a fine estate, operating a large tract of land, and has gained a wide reputation as a successful and prosperous citizen.

Mr. McDaniel was born in Radford, Montgomery county, Virginia, April 16, 1866. His father, Jacob McDaniel, of Scotch-Irish descent, was a harness maker by trade, and in later years a farmer. He served four years in the Confederate army, was captured and held prisoner at Camp Douglas, near Chicago. The mother, Mary E. (Bradbury), was of remote German ancestry. One of her grandfathers was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. The McDaniel family moved to Sarpy county, Nebraska, in 1874, where they still reside. Our subject was the oldest in a family of seven and began life for himself at the age of twenty-one, farming one year in Sarpy county. In 1887 he came to Cherry county, took up a claim where he now lives and engages during spare time in drilling wells. Since then he has taken up additional land and bought more, at the present time owning a ranch of nine hundred and sixty acres, most of which is hay land. He has started in the stock raising business recently, and finds this more profitable than farming. He has continued to follow his old-time business of well drilling, and has done this work all over the eastern part of Cherry county, at which he has met with flattering success. He started in his career here with only twenty-four dollars in money and a team of horses, and has accumulated a fine property through his industrious and energetic habits. He is an expert machinist and was employed from May, 1898, to June, 1899, in the locomotive works of the Burlington at Havelock, near Lincoln. For one term he engaged in teaching in a district near home.

Mr. McDaniel was married February 13, 1889, to Miss Mary E. Rockwell, born in Illinois in 1867, of Scotch-Irish descent. Mr. and Mrs. McDaniel have a family of three children, namely: Ethel, born in 1889; Dwight, 1893, and Ida, in 1900, all born and raised on their present homestead.

Mr. McDaniel has always done his full share in the building up of his locality, and is regarded as one of the leading citizens in his community. He is a Democrat, but has never held any but local office. He is a member of Wood Lake lodge, No. 221, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and also lodge No. 221, Ancient Order United Workmen, of the same place.

Mr. McDaniel's ranch is very fertile, producing more hay than he needs for the cattle he keeps. This he sells to less fortunate ranchmen who feed large herds on his place, on which they are supplied with water from three never-failing wells. He probably holds the record for potato production in Nebraska, having dug two hundred and fifty bushels from a quarter acre of ground. He knows of no one who has surpassed him. A view of the family residence is shown on another page in this work.

WILLIAM W. WOOD.

William W. Wood, for many years a well known and highly respected citizen of Rushville, Nebraska, built up an enviable reputation as a barrister, his practice extending throughout Sheridan and adjoining counties. He is now a resident of Alliance, Nebraska, where he is register of the United States land office. Mr. Wood is among the old settlers in this section of the country, having driven here by team in the early days, and has taken an active part in all the events of importance since the early days of this portion of Nebraska.

Mr. Wood is a native of Jefferson county, New York, born in 1850. His father, Daniel Wood, was a farmer, who during his young days had followed the life of a sailor on the Great Lakes, continuing in this work up to 1858, then begun farming. Our subject was one of a family of four children, and when he was ten years old the family came to Wisconsin, settling in Eau Claire county, where he grew to manhood, assisting his parents in the work of carrying on their farm. He attended the Eau Claire high school, and later graduated from the University of Wisconsin, receiving his diploma in 1876. He taught school there for three years, then came to Kearney county, Nebraska, in 1879, locating at Minden. During the time he was engaged in teaching school he studied law and was admitted to the bar in Kearney in 1879. He first began his practice at Minden, and was elected superintendent of schools in that county, serving for five years, and in connection with this work followed teaching together with law work. In 1882 he formed a partnership with John M. Stuart in the law business and three years later came to Sheridan county. Here he took up a homestead and proved up on it, living in a log house for some time. He soon afterwards moved to Rushville, and in the fall of 1885 opened his first law office here, which was in a tent. He has since that time practiced law constantly, and built up an extensive and lucrative practice. He is also interested in the stock business, owning a small ranch on Pine creek, which he has operated for the past four years.

Mr. Wood was married in 1884 to Miss Belle M. Alexander, daughter of William Alexander, a pioneer settler in Pawnee county. Mrs. Wood was born in Iowa, of Irish parents. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wood, Wilma M., and she was the first white child born in Rushville. Miss Wood took a four-year course in the Nebraska State University at Lincoln, graduating with the class of 1908.

In 1900 Mr. Wood was elected county attorney of Sheridan county, and served one term, and in March, 1907, was appointed register of the United States land office at Alliance, Nebraska, and moved to that city. He is a Republican and has always voted that ticket.

JAMES RILEY SWIM.

Among the successful agriculturists of Keya Paha county who came to western Nebraska in the early days of its development and who through his perseverance and industry has built up a fine estate, we mention the name of James Riley Swim, who resides on section 23, township 33, range 23.

Mr. Swim was born in Lee county, Iowa, December 9, 1845. His father was Alexander Swim, a Kentuckian, farmer by occupation, and his mother, who was Miss Elizabeth Phelps, was also a native of Kentucky. Of a family of ten children our subject was the seventh member, and was reared and educated in Polk county, Iowa. He assisted his father and brothers in the farm work, and received a sturdy, practical training, remaining on the home farm until he was eighteen years of age, then enlisted in the Twenty-third Iowa Infantry, Company B, and followed the fortunes of a soldier in the Civil war for a year and a half. He participated in many skirmishes and was at the thirteen days' siege of Spanish Fort in Alabama. After he was discharged from the war he began farming in Polk county, and a year later went to Marion county, remaining fourteen years, and in 1879 came to Douglas county, Nebraska, where he resided for four years, then came to Keya Paha county in October, 1883, where he proved up on a homestead. He lived in a log house for several years, and spent his time in improving his farm and home. In 1887 he went back to Dodge county and remained there two and a half years, following farming, then returned to Keya Paha county on his homestead. He is now proprietor of a farm of three hundred and sixty acres, all of which is fenced, with eighty acres in a high state of cultivation. His farm is well covered with natural timber, and there is plenty of running water on it. He has put up a substantial set of farm buildings, and has a valuable estate.

On March 22, 1867, Mr. Swim was married to Mrs. Eliza Nokes, of Marion county, Iowa, whose parents, Elias and Sarah M. Fuller, were of American blood and old settlers in that state

Mr. Swim was formerly a member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Norden until its charter was abandoned owing to lack of membership and also the growing importance of the Masonic fraternity in the community. Our subject is a man of active public spirit. He has held numerous school offices and takes a commendable interest in local affairs. In political faith he is a Republican and belongs to the Masonic order. A view of Mr. Swim's premises is to be found in this volume on another page.

HUGH BOYER, DECEASED.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history, now deceased, during his lifetime held a high position among the leading citizens of Cherry county, Nebraska. He was engaged in agriculture for many years in that section of the country, made a great success of the work, and while building up a good home and ranch for his family, also aided in a large measure in the development and growth of his locality, giving his personal aid and influence to every movement for its advancement. Mr. Boyer raised a large family, all of whom are now grown and filling honorable positions in the world, several of the sons' names appearing in this volume.

Hugh Boyer was born on a farm in Grayson county, Virginia, in 1837. His father, John Boyer, followed farming all his life. He was of Dutch origin. His mother's maiden name was Jane Fielder. Our subject was reared in his native state, as a young man owning a good farm, which he carried on successfully. In 1865 he was married in his native county to Margaret James, also of Dutch blood, and to them were born nine children, who are named as follows: John, Reid, Fields, Boyd, Charles, Mack, Crumley, Roby and William.

Mr. Boyer left the east and emigrated to the western states with his family in 1882, settling in Madison county, Nebraska, where he farmed up to 1886, then removed to Cherry county, traveling by team through the wild country to their new home. They had covered wagons for the family to ride in and also bringing all their goods that way. They had a long and tedious journey, obliged to camp out along the road nights, and had several interesting experiences on the trip. Immediately after arriving at their destination Mr. Boyer filed on a homestead in section 17, township 25, range 32, put up a sod shanty for a dwelling house and started to open a ranch, and there they went through the hardships and failures that fell to the lot of nearly all of the early settlers in the region, and kept hard at work, and after many years succeeded in improving a nice property and became one of the well-to-do men of his community. At the time of his death, March 2, 1906, he was proprietor of a ranch of eleven hundred and twenty acres, and which is one of the best of its kind in the county.

Mr. Boyer was county surveyor for one term; also justice of the peace for several years.

MICHAEL A. BANNON.

Michael A. Bannon is one of the well-to-do men and also one of the best known farmers of Sioux county, as a man who has devoted his career to the pursuit of farming and has met with deserved success in his line of work. He has developed a fine farm and is a gentleman of enviable reputation, enjoying a pleasant home. He resides on section 20, township 32, range 54.

Mr. Bannon was born in Monahan county, in the north of Ireland, in 1852, and came to this country with his parents when a small boy. The mother died when Michael was fifteen years old, and the father with his family settled in New Orleans and remained there for a time, where he died when our subject was an infant. Then the family came to northeastern Iowa and lived on a farm, where our subject grew up, starting out for himself when little more than a child, working out by the day and month for farmers in that vicinity. At the age of seventeen years he went to Montana and spent four and a half years, working as a gold miner at Helena, then returned to Iowa. For twelve years he lived in Clay county, engaged in farming and in 1885, first came to Nebraska, settling in Sioux county, locating in Hat Creek Valley. There he filed on a homestead and began to improve his farm, breaking up the land with two teams which he brought with him from Iowa. His first building was a log cabin, and he lived in it for fifteen years, working at freighting, and doing anything he could find to do in order to get ahead and build up his home, making long trips through the country and camping out at night under his wagon, suffering exposure in the severe weather, and going through all the pioneer experiences. However, he stuck to his farm and succeeded in improving it in good shape and made it his home for fifteen years, and at the time he left the place he owned a ranch of five hundred and sixty acres on which he run a large herd of stock, also engaged in farming on a large scale. In 1901 Mr. Bannon came to his present location, in search of more range land for his cattle raising operations. He finally selected this tract of land, and he with his sons now own about two thousand seven hundred acres. He has made a splendid success here, and has a fine ranch and comfortable home.

Mr. Bannon was united in marriage in 1871 to Miss Anna McGraw, a native of Massachusetts, and they are the parents of the following children: Frank, William, Thomas, George, John, Margaret, Robert and Nellie.

Mr. Bannon is one of the leading old timers of this section of the state, and has done his full share in the upbuilding of this region. Coming here in an early day, he has done a great deal to build up Crawford, in Dawes county, and Harrison, in Sioux county, Nebraska. In political sentiment he is an Independent.

ANDREW KELLER.

Andrew Keller, a highly esteemed citizen of Lake township, Phelps county, is the proprietor of a fine two hundred and forty acre farm, where he has built up a pleasant and comfortable home. He has acquired a valuable estate, and supplied himself and family with all the comforts of a rural home, and is one of the well-to-do men of his locality.

Mr. Keller is a native of Bavaria, Germany, and came to the United States in 1883. His father was Michael Keller, owner of large land interests. Our subject came to Phelps county in 1880, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres, on which he built a fine house, barns, and all necessary farm buildings, fenced his land, and has one of the finest orchards and groves in the vicinity. He was possessed of sufficient means to build up a good home and add all improvements when he came here, unlike many of the early settlers who was obliged to start with nothing, and this enabled him to escape much of the hardships and discouragements of a pioneer experience. Mr. Keller has been all over the United States, and likes this part of Nebraska better than any place he has seen, as the land is very productive, the climate healthful, the water A1, which is a combination of conditions not often to be found.

He has been successful here from the beginning, and is well satisfied with the result of his labors. He is interested in stock, raising a large number of cattle, also hogs and horses. Mr. Keller is married and has three children. A brother of our subject, Joseph, resides at Defiance, Ohio, and two others, Richard and Dato, are in Washington. His grandfather, Conrad Keller, was a very wealthy man in the old country, owning three mills, besides farms and town property, which was all under the control of the status of landlords in Germany at that time. Politically Mr. Keller is an Independent.

JOHN SERRES.

There is no one on whom the title of "a leading old settler" is bestowed with greater truth than the gentleman above mentioned. Mr. Serres is one of the wealthy ranchmen of western Nebraska, having a fine estate in Sioux county which has been developed and put in the very best condition by his hard labors and constant attention to his duty of building up a fortune, and incidentally, he has gained an enviable reputation as one of the foremost citizens of his community by his active public spirit.

John Serres was born in Luxemburg, Germany, in 1852. His father, Andrew, was a farmer all his life, and lived and died in his native land. John remained at home until he was twenty years of age, working on the farm, and in 1872 came to this country, utterly without means and not versed in the language or American customs, but was determined to succeed and whatever drawbacks he afterwards encountered did not daunt his courage. After landing in New York city he went to Wisconsin, locating in Washington county, and there followed farm work for about twelve years, spending some of that time in Michigan and in the Wisconsin lumber woods. About 1880 he went to Milwaukee, where he was employed for a time, eventually securing work on the street railway, as a driver and conductor. He was married in Milwaukee in 1881, to Katherine Ruffing, whose father, Michael Ruffing, was a shoemaker by trade, and spent many years in that city, his death occurring there in 1893. Her mother's parents were natives of Germany, Annie Mary Pung being her maiden name.

Mr. Serres went to South Dakota in 1885, arriving there in March of that year. In company with his brother, Stephen, he took a team and drove into Nebraska, having a most dangerous journey through the wild country, coming through Valentine and landing in Sioux county. He picked out a location and filed on land in Hat Creek Valley, where the brothers built two log cabins, and bought several head of cattle from some settlers in that vicinity. Their nearest trading point was a distance of fifty miles from their claim, and it took five days in which to make the trip and return, driving ox teams. He opened land and began farming, doing breaking for people who lived in the neighborhood, but soon the hard times struck him, his crops failed and everything went against him. Provisions soared so high that it was all he could do to make a living, being obliged to pay four cents a pound for potatoes, with pork at eighteen cents a pound and flour four dollars a hundred pounds. In 1896 he had a fine field of flax, with the crop growing nicely, when some big cattlemen in the vicinity turned a drove of stock into the grain, utterly destroying the crop. This was the way the larger ranch owners showed their hostility to the smaller farmers who came into the region, hoping to discourage them so they would abandon their claims, and leave the field clear for their own herds. This incident was a severe loss to our subject, as it was really his first crop. After that time, for several years he had fairly good success, then came the dry years, when he was unable to raise anything, even losing the seed he planted, so he determined to engage in the stock business and got together a few cattle, which was the beginning of his career as a ranchman. For a number of years, part of his time was spent in working on the railroad doing construction work, in order to make a living for his family. However, after a time he met with better luck, and gradually added to his original possessions, until he is now owner of a thousand-acre ranch, all fenced and cross-fenced, supplied with water for all his needs from springs on the ranch, and he has one hundred and twenty acres under cultivation, raising large quantities of grain each year. One season his crop amounted to over two thousand bushels. The ranch is well equipped with a complete set of substantial buildings, and is one of the best improved places in the county.

Mr. Serres is the father of seven children, namely: Emma Margaret and Hattie, born in Milwaukee; Lena Katherine, Elizabeth Mary, John Stephen, Rose Theresa, and Edward John, born in Sioux county, the two eldest married.

JOHN LAW.

John Law, one of the genuine old-timers of Deuel county, Nebraska, has retired from active farm work, although he lives on the home ranch in Swan precinct, where he has spent many years and succeeded in building up a good estate and valuable ranch. He has now reached the venerable age of eighty years, but is still in the enjoyment of good health and is a genial old gentleman, held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

Mr. Law was born in England, April 23, 1828, and lived there up to 1845, then came to America with his mother, to join the father who had gone on to prepare a home for them in the new country. They settled in Jersey City, New Jersey, and lived there about fifteen years, then went to Livingston county, Illinois. In September, 1862, John enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and saw active service up to December, 1865. He was with Sherman on his march to the sea, and took part in the following battles: Siege of Atlanta, Lookout Mountain, Tennessee, Resaca, and was through the Carolinas and saw service in Kentucky, northern Alabama and Georgia. He was mustered out of the army at Washington, D. C., returned to Illinois and remained there up to 1885, then came to Deuel county, Nebraska, taking a homestead on section 10, township 12, range 44, which is his home ranch and on which he now resides.

Mr. Law was married to Hannah Hodges, in Jersey City, New Jersey, on the first day of January, 1850. Mrs. Law was born in New Jersey in 1826, and is the senior of her husband by two years, the lady now being eighty-two, and a very charming gentlewoman, loved and admired by all who know her.

Mr. and Mrs. Law are the parents of eleven children, eight of whom are still living, as follows: James, married; Charles, who is a widower; Lottie, married; Sophie and Sarah, twins, the former single and the latter married; Millie, married; George H. (whose sketch appears in this volume), and Daisy, married. All are filling honorable positions in life, and are esteemed citizens of their respective localities. A portrait of Mr. Law appears elsewhere in this work.

CLARK N. DITTO.

Clark N. Ditto, a leading citizen of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, is classed among the successful and progressive farmers of western Nebraska. He is a gentleman highly esteemed by his fellowmen, and his high standing is well merited.

Mr. Ditto is a native of Clinton Ohio, and was born in 1844. His father was a farmer by occupation, born of stock, and his mother, Miss Priscilla was a Virginian of English descent. Of a family of eight children our subject was the fourth member, and was raised and educated in the county of his birth, attending the country schools, where he received a good foundation training which well fitted him for the events of his future years. He enlisted in the army at the age of seventeen years, joining Company M, Second Ohio Cavalry, and with his regiment went into Kentucky and Tennessee. He was one of those who took part in the siege of Knoxville under General Burnside, and in all served for two years and ten months in the service of his country, experiencing many exciting times, and seeing hard service all through.

At the close of the war he entered the employ of a produce firm, and later was engaged in the mercantile business for a time. In 1868 he came west to Illinois, settling in Champaign county, where he spent eighteen years following farming. He then went to Iowa, where he remained for one year, then came on to Nebraska, locating in what is now Keya Paha county, going to farming at once. He built a dugout and lived in this for several years, going through the regular pioneer existence and encountering all the hardships and discouragements in the shape of drouths, storms, grasshopper raids, etc. His farm was situated in section 29, township northeast 34, range 17, and he kept at work improving his place, building up a home, and is now owner of two hundred and forty acres of good land. One hundred and twenty acres of this is cultivated, and the rest in pasture and grass, all of it fenced and cross-fenced. He has planted numerous small fruits, such as currants, and berries of all kinds, and also has nice orchards which bear fine fruits.

In 1894 Mr. Ditto was married to Mrs. Ellen Ross, of this county, whose father, Barnett Smith, was an Englishman, a farmer, and mason by trade. Mrs. Ross was a widow with five children—Robert, Cecil, Percy, Herbert and Mabel. The family came to Keya Paha county in 1883, and were among the old settlers in this part of the state.

One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ditto, a girl named Anna S., born in 1897. Mr. Ditto is prominent in all matters of local interest, and does his share in the advancement of educational and commercial affairs in his locality.

EDWIN C. WILLIAMS.

Edwin C. Williams, who lives on a fine ranch in section 28, township 16, range 41, is one of the most influential of the old-timers of Keya Paha county, Nebraska. He has lived a long, useful life, serving his country with unselfish patriotism and making a record in his community as a man of strong principles and successful business methods.

Mr. Williams was born on a farm in Chautauqua county, New York, August 13, 1841, and was of old American and Yankee stock. His father, George D. Williams, was a shoemaker and farmer. His mother was Susan Dutton, of Connecticut ancestry; she died in Nebraska at the residence of her son.

The subject of our sketch was reared in New York state until he was twelve years of age, when the family came west to Wisconsin, settling in Portage county, where the father died. February 14, 1864, our subject enlisted in Company D, Third Wisconsin Infantry, being sent south with his regiment to join in the Atlanta campaign. He marched through Georgia and was with Sherman through the Carolinas. While on this campaign, on March 16, 1865, at the battle of Averysboro, North Carolina, he was severely wounded in the right leg, which had to be amputated. Ten minutes after he was wounded his regiment was relieved and never saw active service again. Such were the fortunes of war, that, after serving through the entire Atlanta campaign to almost the close of the war, Mr. Williams was wounded and lost his limb in the last ten minutes of fighting; he was discharged September 1, 1865, at Prairie DuChien, Wisconsin.

After the war was over our subject returned to Wisconsin, and July 4, 1868, was married to Miss Roxalina Woodworth, who was born and reared in Pennsylvania. Her father, John Woodworth, died when she was an infant. Her mother was Lovina Acres in her youth and the parents were descendants of eastern people. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have been blessed with four children: Etta May, married Charles Gorman; Lottie Maud, married Harry Robins; George Henry, and Susie Lovina, wife of Michael John Thies, all living in Keith county and doing well.

In the summer of 1869 Mr. Williams came with his family to Rice county, Minnesota, and made his home there for some sixteen years, owning one hundred and sixty acres of land in East Prairie, about half way between Owatonna and Faribault. He sold his Rice county farm in 1885 and came west to the North Platte river valley in Nebraska, and settled on his present homestead. The country was very new and his farm was nothing but raw prairie land. He lived in a small board shanty until he could build a stone house, his present residence; he is the only one left of several Minnesota people who settled here in those early days. And they were days of hard times for the pioneers; all supplies had to be hauled from Ogallala, a long, hard trip, somewhat dangerous because the North Platte river had to be forded, there being at that time no bridges. Now Mr. Williams has a nice comfortable home and fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, with sixty acres under cultivation. The land is located on Clear creek which furnishes running water the year around and there is to be seen a fine orchard of fruit trees and all the up-to-date improvements necessary to the successful operation of a farm. Our subject used to run large herds of cattle, but of late years he has been curtailing his business and is now living a somewhat retired life.

Mr. Williams has been active in political affairs, was elected county commissioner in 1889, and has served his community in a number of minor offices. He is Republican in politics, and while in Minnesota was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

A. O. STOCKTON.

A. O. Stockton, one of the enterprising and prosperous old residents of Perkins county, owns a valuable estate on section 21, township 9, range 39. He settled in the county in 1886, and is one of the best known men in the country, highly esteemed as a worthy citizen and progressive agriculturist.

Mr. Stockton was born in Platte county, Missouri, on a farm in 1848. His father was a native of Ohio and his mother of Indiana, they coming west about 1840, settling in Missouri, where our subject grew up. Our subject lived at home up to 1886, then came to Nebraska, driving to Perkins county from Ogallala, and settled on section 19, township 9, range 39. He put up a dugout at first, and lived in that for five years, going through all the pioneer experiences in starting his farm, and often had a hard time to make a living. He returned to Missouri about 1892 and began farming on a seventy-five acre farm, remaining for four years, then sold the place and came back to Perkins county. He located on a pre-emption on section 21, and has since added to the place, now owning four hundred and eighty acres, nearly one hundred of which is now cultivated, and the entire ranch fitted with good improvements. He engages in stock raising and farming, has a good income from the farm, and is one of the solid and substantial agriculturists of his township.

In 1872 Mr. Stockton was married to Mary

ESTATE OF MIFLIN P. BROSIUS (deceased).
Cherry County, Nebraska.

Mifflin P. Brosius.

L. Ballard. They have five children, named as follows: Owen, Myrtle, now Mrs. Blayny; Grace, now Mrs. O'Connor; Florence, and Bryan. One son, Martin, is deceased. Mr. Stockton is active in local affairs, always taking a deep interest in and aiding to the best of his ability any movement for the good of his community.

MIFFLIN P. BROSIUS, DECEASED.

Mifflin P. Brosius was, for many years prior to his demise, one of the leading citizens and agriculturists of Cherry county. The farm residence is on section 11, township 34, range 28, one of the largest and best constructed dwellings on the north table surrounded by barns and outbuildings far above the average.

Mr. Brosius was born on a farm in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, June 1, 1855. His father, Jesse Brosius, was of German descent, and his mother was Miss Elizabeth Taylor. Our subject was reared and educated in Pennsylvania, whence he migrated to Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, in March, 1877. In November of that year he came to Louisville, Cass county, Nebraska, working at the painters' trade, at the same time operating a market garden and poultry yard. On March 21, 1883, he arrived in Cherry county, where he had filed on a homestead September 27, 1882. His first buildings were a sod house, with a log barn, and he lived in this house for nine years. The farm now comprises six hundred and forty acres, which is divided in two pieces, improved with fine farm buildings, machinery, fences, and everything necessary to facilitate the work of a thrifty farmer. A large part of the land is set out to small fruits, which yield a snug income to the owners.

Mr. Brosius went through many privations in the building up of his present estate, including drouth periods, grasshopper raids, hail and other misfortunes that fell to the lot of the old settlers of this locality. When he arrived in Cherry county his possessions were as follows: a blind team, wagon, one cow and his household goods, together with one dollar and a quarter of borrowed money. The first summer was spent in a tent, but as winter came on he was compelled to find something more comfortable and put up his first building, which was a sod house, twenty-four by sixteen feet, with a kitchen addition. The first crop which he raised on his farm was a sod crop of potatoes and corn.

On April 12, 1877, he was married to Miss Eliza Guss, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, whose father, Samuel Guss, was of German descent. He was a harnessmaker by trade, being also engaged in farming and the livery business. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Brosius, named as follows: Jesse, married and now living on a ranch; Nettie, dead; Clara, married; Will, who runs the farm for his mother; Viola, Walter, Harrison, dead, Ralph, Laura, dead, and Leroy. Six grandchildren complete the family circle.

Mr. Brosius died April 29, 1903, and was deeply mourned by his family and a large circle of friends as an exemplary husband, father, neighbor and citizen, universally respected and esteemed by his fellowmen. Originally a Republican, he later affiliated with the Populists and fraternally was a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Degree of Honor. A portrait of Mr. Brosius will be found elsewhere in this work.

WILLIAM S. BARKER.

William S. Barker, mayor of Valentine, is an efficient and popular city official, as well as editor of one of the leading publications of northwestern Nebraska.

He is a native of Oskaloosa, Iowa, born April 15, 1865. His parents, Charles E. and Sarah J. (Ginn) Barker, are both of English descent. The family came to Burt county in 1865, settling on a farm, and were among the pioneer settlers at Tekamah. Here our subject was reared and educated, attending the Tekamah high school, assisting his father on the farm out of school hours. At the age of nineteen he came to Valentine and for about three years worked at the printers' trade, having begun his apprenticeship while in Tekamah. About 1887 Mr. Barker purchased the Cherry County Republican, a weekly paper, the name of which he changed to "The Republican." This is one of the first papers established in Valentine. There were only two others, "The Valentine Reporter", and "The Minnechaduzza Republican," having been published prior to "The Cherry County Republican." During the first year he did all of his own work, writing, composing, printing and using a small hand press. Now his business occupies a space twenty-five by eighty feet, he has a steam plant, power press, and employs two or three assistants all the time. Business in the art preservative has steadily increased until he now does all kinds of fancy calendar and job printing under the name of "Barker Art Printery." Since Mr. Barker established his business he has had twenty-one out of twenty-two competitors go out of business after a more or less stormy career; only one paper in town, besides his own, has survived the struggle for existence in this cold and unappreciative world.

Mr. Barker is a Republican, and takes an active interest in politics, supporting heartily the party nominees, but would never accept an office for himself, preferring to be free from political obligations and at liberty to express himself as he sees fit, unhampered by the fetters which usually keep the office-holder in their grasp. He has, however, served as mayor in the town board at Valentine since 1906.

Mr. Barker was married June 25, 1889, to Miss Jennie L. Keister, a native of Pennsylvania, and daughter of William A. Keister, of that state. One daughter, Bernadine A., has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Barker. They are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Barker affiliates with the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of Workmen, and the Modern Woodmen of America of Valentine.

D. S. HARDIN.

Among the leading business men of Alma the above mentioned gentleman, subject of this history, occupies a prominent place. He is one of the foremost attorneys of Harlan county, Nebraska, and is also engaged in the real estate and collection business.

Mr. Hardin was born in Champaign county, Illinois, in 1855. He was raised there, and attended the State Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa, graduating with the class of '80. In 1880, after leaving college, he came to Nebraska and located in Beatrice, was admitted to the bar in 1883, and since that time has practiced the profession he chose, and been very successful and gained an enviable reputation in this part of the state. In the year of 1893 he moved to Alma, and since then has been engaged in the practice of law there, also doing a large business in real estate and collections. He is the owner of a large amount of land in this and adjoining counties, all of which he rents out. His places are stocked with grade cattle and hogs, also horses, and he devotes a portion of the farms to mixed farming, and thinks this is the best place he has ever seen for farming and stock raising. A steer can be raised here for about one-fourth of what it costs in Iowa, and the price obtained is just as high. Hogs are raised cheaper and better here than in that state, or other parts of the country, and therefore a man can make much more money in this section in these lines of business. He has widely advertised these features of the state, and done much towards getting new settlers in this locality each year, the population having increased more than double in the past four years.

Mr. Hardin was married in 1883 to Miss Lucia Marks, of Eldorado, Iowa. They have two sons, Harry and Charles, now attending the State University, at Lincoln, Nebraska, and three younger children at home. Mr. Hardin is a member of the Masonic lodge at Alma. In political faith he is a Republican.

WILLIAM L. MILLER.

Among the representative farmers and ranchmen of Sioux county, who have aided materially in the development of that region striving to advance the best interests of his community whenever possible, a prominent place is accorded William L. Miller, who resides on his well-improved estate in section 22, of township 33, range 55. He is a gentleman of energetic character, and well merits his high standing.

William L. Miller was born in New Brunswick, Canada, in 1852, in the town of St. Andrews, near the state line of Maine. His father, William, was a shoemaker by trade, and he married Annie Austin, a native of Canada. Our subject grew up in Washington county, Maine, attending the common schools as a boy, and at the age of fifteen began working for his own living, ever since that time having taken care of himself. He was in the lumber woods in Maine, also worked in saw mills, etc., for many years, and followed farming off and on during his young manhood. From Maine he went west, locating in Cheyenne, Wyoming, in 1884, and spent two years in that city.

Mr. Miller came to Nebraska in 1886, landing in Sioux county by team, driving all the way from Cheyenne. At that time Harrison was merely a tent town, and settlers had just begun to straggle into the locality. He picked out a homestead on section 22, township 33, range 55, started to build up a home, and also filed on a pre-emption, which he proved up on as well as his homestead. His first house was built of logs, and his first team a pair of mules, with which he broke up land for crops and did all his work. His first crops were a failure on account of the unfavorable conditions and dry weather, and he was obliged to obtain work in the Black Hills to earn money and make a living for his family. As the times grew better he gradually improved his place, later bought more land, and is now proprietor of a ranch consisting of eight hundred acres, fitted with good buildings, and has quite a large part under irrigation, raising grain and stock. The place is all fenced, and he has considerable timber on it.

Mr. Miller was united in marriage in 1874, at Calais, Maine, to Miss Maria Coburn, born at Calais, and daughter of James Coburn, a sailor, who married Elizabeth Lane, the relatives of both Mrs. Miller's parents following the sea as an occupation. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller, namely: Evelyn S., Robert J., and Annie E., born in Maine; William A., born in Cheyenne, and Arthur F. and Minnie V., born in Sioux county. The family have a pleasant home, and a host of friends in their community.

In political sentiments Mr. Miller is a Democrat, but has never sought office, devoting all his time to his home and ranch.

HOWARD G. FURMAN.

Howard G. Furman, who has won an enviable reputation as one of the most successful and extensive raisers of cattle in western Nebraska, was born in Bradford county, Pennsylvania, in 1848. His parents, Alfred and Elizabeth (Gustin) Furman, were both natives of the same state. At the age of nineteen years he left his home and came west into Nebraska, where he spent some time railroading, carrying mail and hunting. He then went into Wyoming, and carried the first mail from Laramie City to Fort Sanders. He spent three years in the west, traveling up into Montana, where he built a boat and came down the Missouri river to Sioux City, returning to his home in Pennsylvania. After two years he came west again and went at freighting into the Black Hills from Sidney, Nebraska, and Ft. Pierre, South Dakota, Deadwood, Sidney, Pine Ridge and other places. He experienced many troubles with the Indians in this locality, and during an engagement while on one of these trips he received a shot in the shoulder, while his mules were ruined for hard work. In 1881 he went into Idaho, assisted in the construction of a railroad in Oregon, and traveled through parts of Utah.

Mr. Furman came to Dawes county, Nebraska, in 1884, locating on a ranch on the Niobrara river in section 29, township 29, range 50. A log cabin was his first home in this county, where he engaged in the stock business. From time to time he purchased adjacent lands, until at the present time he has a ranch comprising sixty-three deeded acres besides some leased land. He has left quarters. He has left no stone in an effort to make his ranch a model first house, which was built as a dugout and was a common dwelling place for most of the pioneers in this section. He lived in the dugout for some time, then built a log house and "batched it." He landed here in the spring of 1886, and the snow was on the ground about a foot deep, and he almost froze the first night he was here, and was unable to stay in his dugout, so footed it to some friends who lived on the creek.

When he arrived here he had no money, and made a living the first month by picking buffalo bones, and in this work cleared seven dollars per day. He had worked as a barber during his youth and so soon moved to Crawford, then a small town of tents only and opened up the first barber shop in the place, setting up in business in a big tent, using it also as a dwelling place and store room for groceries. When he was not busy at his trade he worked at other odd jobs. His price was twenty-five cents for a shave and fifty cents for a hair cut. On Sunday his tent was used for church services, and as so many of his customers were waiting for shaves that he kept right on at his work while the services were being conducted in the opposite side of the tent, neither interfering with the other.

Soon after this he worked as a clerk in Eastman & Doer's store. Quitting them he went to clerk for H. F. Clough, general merchant, the man to whom he had sold the buffalo bones the first two months he was in the country. In the fall of 1886, in partnership with H. F. Clough, he opened a hardware store, also in a tent, their first stock of goods costing two hundred and eighty dollars. Their present stock invoices about nine thousand dollars. They carried this on all winter, and had a carload of stoves shipped in, which they sold out faster than they could black them and set them up. They did a rushing business, and he remained in the hardware business for twenty-two years. He has succeeded from the first, and in 1887 put up his present building, occupying the same location for the past twenty-two years. His partner did not last long in the business, losing all his property, and after that Mr. McDowell entered into partnership with one Camp Ellis, the latter buying out Clough's interest in the business, Mr. Ellis remaining with our subject up to the time of his death, which occurred September 1, 1905, and was succeeded by R. G. Smith, who is still connected with the business. Mr. McDowell, besides his business interests in Crawford, owns one thousand five hundred and twenty acres of deeded land located within two miles of Crawford, a large part of which is irrigated. He is also half owner of two thousand six hundred acres located four miles from Crawford, and on this land raises horses, sheep and cattle. Mr. McDowell was one of the first to install a system of irrigation in this vicinity and was the means of inducing others to follow his plan.

Mr. McDowell was married in 1899, on April 11th, to Miss Effie Gorton, whose father was a pioneer in this section. Mr. and Mrs. McDowell are the parents of three children, namely: Harold, Esther and Katherine. The family are popular members of society in their community, and enjoy a pleasant home surrounded by a host of warm friends and kind neighbors.

Our subject has been on the school board for the past nine years, and still holds office in that body. He is a Democrat in political views.

ALANSON R. SWETT.

Among the old settlers and those who have helped in the development and growth of Brown county almost since its organization, none is better known or more highly respected and esteemed than the gentleman whose name heads this review.

Mr. Swett was born on a farm in Ohio, February 18, 1831. His father, Trustrum Swett, was a cooper by trade, born in Vermont of old American stock, and died when Alanson was six years old. His mother, Miss Pattie Smith, was a native of Connecticut, whose father was one of the patriots who fought in the battle of Bunker Hill and was severely wounded after grounding his arms. The British after receiving the surrender fell upon the unarmed prisoners with saber and pistol despatching many in their tracks. Mr. Smith defended his head with his arms until both were nearly severed after which a blow in the head felled him. Seeing an unconscious movement of his leg they shot at him with their pistols, but luckily missed him. When they were gone he dragged himself to a house by the roadside covered with blood and had his wounds dressed, eventually recovering from the effects of the terrible struggle he had gone through. Our subject is the child of his mother's second marriage, and when he reached the age of eleven his mother moved to Iowa, settling in Wapello county on a farm. He remained there until twenty years of age when he followed the rush for the gold fields of California, spending one year in those regions before returning to Iowa. In the spring of 1852 he went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, remaining there one year, then moved to Shelby county, where he followed farming for thirty years, building up a good home and valuable property, and was among the oldest settlers in that part of the country. Here he owned two farms, putting in many years of hard work in improving them, and was very successful in his undertakings. In 1883 he sold out his property there and came to Brown county, one of his daughters having lived here for some time. He settled on a homestead and began a regular pioneer's existence, erecting good substantial buildings, and for the next five or six years worked hard in establishing his home, and it was during this time that he suffered a sad misfortune in the death of his wife. Everything seemed to go wrong; crops failed, and he became terribly discouraged, gave up farming, and moved to Ainsworth, living there for about four years. In 1899 he settled on his present homestead on Oak creek, located in section 28, township 31, range 21, where he has a well improved farm, well equipped for successful operation.

Mr. Swett was married in Iowa in December, 1852, to Miss Jane Tinsley, a native of the state of Kentucky who was of good old southern blood, and came to Iowa with her parents when she was a small girl. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Swett, of whom six are now living, named as follows: Minnie, now Mrs. A. L. Sisson; Ervin, living in Madison county; Clara, now Mrs. Ned Jones of Keya Paha county; Elsie, married to A. W. Barton, of Shelby county, Iowa; Otis, who runs his father's farm and business; and Pearl, wife of G. M. Cole, who reside on a farm adjoining her father's. Mr. Swett is a gentleman of active public spirit and has a host of friends, all of whom accord him a high station as a business man and worthy citizen. In politics he was originally a Democrat, later a Populist and is today an avowed Socialist in economic beliefs.

P. L. O'BRIEN.

Among the residents of western Nebraska who have made North Platte their home for the past thirty-five years, the gentleman above named is worthy of a prominent place. Mr. O'Brien is highly esteemed in his community for his honesty and integrity, and enjoys an enviable reputation as a citizen.

Mr. O'Brien was born in Troy, New York state, 1851. He was there until the age of four or five years and then went to Chicago, where he was reared. He first came to Nebraska in 1871 and entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railway Company, working as a brakeman for some time, then was a freight conductor for the company. In 1883 he was appointed to the position of passenger conductor, and now acts in that capacity on the Overland Limited No. 1 and 2, his run being from Cheyenne to North Platte, Nebraska. Mr. O'Brien has a clean record all through his career as a railroad man, and has gained the confidence of his superior officers through his faithfulness to duty and strict attention to their interests.

In 1883 Mr. O'Brien was married to Miss Malinda E. Norton. Her father was killed in the Civil war and the mother died in 1907. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien have had four children: Chester A., deceased; George Percy, in the Union Pacific machine shops; Doris Ruth, and Darrow Norton, the two last named attending school.

W. T. YOUNG.

W. T. Young, one of the best known residents of Kimball county, Nebraska, has spent many years of his life in the pursuit of farming, and has met with pronounced success in his development of a fine farm in section 34, township 15, range 57. He has resided there during the past twenty-five years, and is classed among the prominent old settlers of that region.

Mr. Young was born in Bloomington, Monroe county, Indiana, on February 20, 1853, where he lived until he was about twelve years of age, then moved to Wapello county, Iowa, accompanying his parents, three brothers and four sisters, and there they settled as pioneers, living there up to 1874, farming all of the time. In 1874 he went to Colorado, where he worked at ranching. From there he went to Pine Bluffs, Wyoming, in 1883, remaining for several years, coming to Kimball county, in 1886, landing in this vicinity in April of that year. His first location was on a homestead on section 34, township 15, range 57, and he proved up on a quarter section of land, later taking Kincaid homestead in the same section. He now owns in all one thousand acres, all good farm and range land, and of this he has seventy-five acres devoted to grain raising, with the balance in hay and pasture, and runs about one hundred head of cattle and one hundred horses, and is a progressive and up-to-date ranchman and farmer in every respect. He has put good buildings and improvements on his place, having a commodious and handsome dwelling with every kind of farm buildings, good fences, wells and windmills, etc., and altogether owns one of the valuable estates in the county. He also has about sixty acres under irrigation.

Mr. Young was married in Iowa, February 3, 1883, to Miss Anna Plowman, who is a native of Van Buren county, Iowa. Her father is now deceased, but her mother still resides in Iowa at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. Mr. and Mrs. Young are the parents of six children, who are named as follows: Stella, William T., a graduate of the State University, now a rising young electrical engineer at Armour, South Dakota. Grover, who died October 7, 1906; August, Gertrude and Roy, living at home. Both our subject's parents are deceased.

Mr. Young is a leading citizen of his community and has held numerous local offices. He is a staunch Republican and strong party man, having served as road overseer and constable. He takes great interest in all public questions and especially educational matters, having taken an active part in establishing and building up schools. He has been a member of the school board for eight years. Mr. Young has passed through many interesting experiences during the pioneer days. His first house on the farm was of sod. When the splendid improvements are seen today on his place, the change that has occurred stands out in bold relief.

D. S. BEYNON.

D. S. Beynon, the genial and popular postmaster of Burwell, has been a resident of Garfield county since 1886, and is one of the best known old timers of the county.

Mr. Beynon was born in Albia, Iowa, December 5, 1856. He is of Welsh descent, his parents coming from Wales to this country in 1850, settling first in Ohio, and also spent one year in Pennsylvania. Later they moved to Iowa, where they were among the early settlers, locating in Monroe county in 1852. The father was a farmer and miner. They settled on government land in Iowa, filing on one hundred and twenty acres, which they developed into a good farm, and succeeded in building up a good home. Our subject is the third member in a family of ten children, of whom three brothers and two sisters are still living. He grew up on the home farm until he was twenty-one years old, and then left home and struck out for himself, coming to Nebraska and settling at Willow Springs, Garfield county. He first worked at freighting, following that for a year, then started in the drug business and carried on a store at that place for about a year, when he left there and came to Burwell, at the same time the railroad was being built through this section. Here he opened another drug store, all the time keeping up his studies in pharmacy, and passed the examination as a registered pharmacist in 1890. He has been very successful in his enterprise and built up a fine trade throughout this vicinity. He has a fine line of goods, and runs a thoroughly first-class, up-to-date establishment, carrying in addition to drugs a full line of paints, oils, etc. When Mr. Beynon first came here he intended to take up some government land, but after getting started in business neglected to do so, and he is now very sorry he did not take up a claim as he would have made money by so doing. At that time he could have bought land for a few dollars an acre, and it would be worth many times the amount of its original cost.

Mr. Beynon has always taken an active interest in local matters. He was appointed postmaster in 1897, when Burwell was a fourth-class office, and he remained in the position up to the present time, now serving his first term as a third-class postmaster. He has been a member of the town board for several years, also has been on the school board for ten years. In 1889 he was appointed sheriff, and during his service captured Nicholas Foley, the criminal and desperate character who was afterwards taken from a deputy sheriff by a mob and lynched for having murdered Mrs. Ada Clark, of Antelope county, Nebraska.

On December 3, 1883, our subject was united in marriage to Miss Christina J. Corneli, born in Iowa, of German descent, whose parents were well-to-do farmers in Iowa, where her girlhood years were spent. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Beynon, four of whom are now living, namely: Rebecca, John, Hazel, and Helyn. One daughter, Etta, died in 1890, at the age of one year and six months. The family are prominent members of the Congregational church of Burwell and highly esteemed by all. Mr. Beynon is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and is also a Mason. Politically he is a Republican.

OSCAR L. WILSON, M. D.

Dr. Oscar L. Wilson, a prominent and widely known physician of Sheridan county, Nebraska, resides in Rushville. He is highly esteemed throughout this locality as a skillful practitioner, and has gained the confidence of all with whom he has had to do in a professional or business way.

Dr. Wilson is a native of Ladoga, Montgomery county, Indiana, born in 1857. His father, O. B. Wilson, was a Kentuckian, minister by occupation, and his mother was also born in Kentucky. In a family of six children our subject was the fourth member, and he was raised in his native state, attending the common schools, and later the Ladoga academy, beginning his study of medicine in 1876. In 1880 he set up an office in Rosedale, Indiana, and practiced for a year, then went to Charleston, Illinois, where he followed his profession for thirteen years, and in July of 1895 came to Nebraska, locating in Rushville. This was in the midst of the hard times which prevailed throughout this section of the country, but he opened his office at once and began working up a clientage. His reason for settling here was on account of his wife's health, as he had left a good practice in Charleston, Illinois, to try this climate. For several years times were hard, but in 1897 things changed for the better, and since then he has steadily worked upward and now enjoys an extensive practice all through the central part of this county.

Dr. Wilson was for a time interested in the stock business here, but now devotes all his attention to his profession. When he first landed in Nebraska he had not intended settling permanently in Rushville, but liked it on account of the healthy climate, and as his wife's health gradually improved and his practice began to grow, they decided to make this their home.

In 1884 Dr. Wilson was married to Miss Mary Balch in Janesville, Illinois. Four children came to bless this union, named as follows: James L., Mary M., Beatrice S., and George B.

Dr. Wilson is a man of active public spirit, lending his influence and aid in all matters that tend to the improvement of conditions in his community. He is at present serving on the town board, and takes an active part in local affairs. He is a Republican.

FRED ABLEY.

The gentleman above mentioned was one of the first settlers in Box Butte county, Nebraska. When he first struck this region in 1886, settlers were very few and he had the choice of location, picking out a homestead which he considered as nicely situated as any in the county, and he still occupies this place, which is located in section 13, township 26, range 50. Here he has a fine home and well developed farm, and has always assisted to the best of his ability in building up this part of the county and aided materially in its growth and progress.

Mr. Abley was born in Switzerland, in 1840. His father was Fredolin Abley, a butcher by trade, who left the old country with his family when our subject was a boy of four years of age, the father dying on board ship during their voyage to America. The mother with her three children, settled first in Milwaukee and lived there until her death, which occurred in 1851. After his mother's death our subject started out for himself, going to Michigan and locating in Berrien county, where he secured employment in the saw mills. In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, 6th Michigan Infantry, and with his regiment was ordered south. He was in active service through Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi. He was at the battle of Fort Gaines and Fort Jackson, also at New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Port Hudson, Mobile Bay and the Spanish Fort. Our subject was promoted to corporal during his first enlistment for three years and was mustered out in February, 1864. The same year he re-enlisted in his old regiment to serve during the war, and in August, 1865, he received his discharge at Jackson, Michigan. He received a serious wound while at Fort Morgan, Alabama, while putting guns on the fort, and has never fully recovered from the effects of this injury.

After the close of the war Mr. Abley returned to Michigan and there engaged in farming up to the spring of 1886, owning a farm of fifty-six acres and made a success of it, building up a good home and farm. He decided to go west, so he sold his farm there and came to Nebraska, settling in Box Butte county in 1886, "batching it" the first year,—his family not coming out until 1887. His first dwelling was a dug-out, and in this he lived for one year. All his supplies had to be hauled from Hay Springs, seventy or eighty miles distant, and he also did considerable freighting throughout the section. He broke up land and started his farm in good shape and was very successful in his farming work for some years, then as the drouths struck the region in 1890, the following three years were hard ones as the crops failed and he had a hard time to get along, but he never gave up the struggle and by perseverance and industry built up a good farm. He owns four hundred and eighty acres, fifty of this being highly cultivated, all of it fenced and well improved with good buildings, etc. He is engaged quite extensively in the stock business, keeping a large number of cattle and horses.

Mr. Abley was married on December 5,

1867, to Mary Stratton, whose father was a farmer and a veteran of the war of 1812. He married Mary Burns, of New Hampshire, whose great-grandfather, Samuel Stratton, was in the famous battle of Bunker Hill, and met his death in that action. Her maternal grandfather also was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was killed during the service in the early part of the war. To Mr. and Mrs. Abley three children were born, two of whom, Emery and Amos, are now living. Cliff H. died December 6, 1897, aged twenty-seven years, and was an earnest worker in the Salvation Army at Deadwood, South Dakota.

Mr. Abley has held different school offices in his district, and has served as United States census taker. He is a Republican and a strong party man.

JOHN R. AYRES.

John R. Ayres, an old settler in the western part of Nebraska, has done his full share in the upbuilding of this region, and his name will go down in history as one of those who spent the best years of his life in assisting to develop the commercial and agricultural resources of the section in which he resides. He has now retired from all active business and enjoys his comfortable home and the society of a host of friends in Valentine, Cherry county.

Mr. Ayres was born in Louisa county, Iowa, in 1846, before Iowa was admitted to the statehood. His father, Michael Ayres, was a pioneer farmer in that state, where he raised his family of three children, of whom our subject is the youngest, his mother dying when he was but eighteen months old. While he was a young lad his father moved to Carroll county, Illinois, settling on a farm, where he grew up accustomed to hard work and at the age of twenty started out for himself, farming on shares for several years.

In May, 1864, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Forty-second Volunteer Infantry, and served in the war for about seven months, then left the army and returned to Illinois. In 1867 he went to Iowa and settled in Buchanan county, remaining there for nineteen years, having during that time purchased a large farm there. He first came to Nebraska in 1887, taking up a pre-emption and tree claim in Cherry county, located northwest of Crookston. Here he went through sod shanty experiences, breaking up his prairie and opening his farm with a team of cows and oxen combined. He had a hard time in getting started being overtaken by the dry years, and one year losing two hundred and fifty acres of crops in three days on account of the fierce hot winds which swept the section. In 1897 he moved to section 25, township 35, range 30, and after living there for a time moved to Valentine, leaving his son to run his farm. He has a fine estate, well improved ranch of six hundred and eighty acres and since his retirement his sons have succeeded in carrying on the business successfully, although they have met with some heavy losses and discouragements at different times. One experience was when a herd of thirty-one horses and mules were stolen from their farm. A part of the animals were recovered and the thief is now doing time in the penitentiary, but the loss of time and money was very large.

Mr. Ayres was married in 1868, in Illinois, to Miss Fannie Soules. Ten children resulted from this union, who are named as follows: James, Ira, Elmer, William, Harry, Sarah, Clara, Albert and George and Henry, of whom the eldest and youngest are deceased.

Mr. Ayres has always been an active public-spirited citizen and takes a leading part in all affairs of local interest. He is a Populist in political belief and was one of the organizers of that party in this section. He is a member of Colonel Wood post, No. 208, Grand Army of the Republic, of Valentine.

GEORGE H. DAVENPORT.

Among the younger members of the farming community of Dawes county, Nebraska, who have succeeded in building up a good home and farm, and who enjoys the esteem of his fellowmen, is the gentleman above named.

Mr. Davenport was born in Dekalb county, Missouri, in 1881, and is a son of John R. Davenport, deceased, a native of the state of New Jersey, and grew up there, learning the harnessmaker's trade as a young man and followed that work for a good many years. When the war broke out he enlisted in the army and served for three years in the Civil war, and served with the regulars for five years after that time. After the war he returned to New Jersey, was married in 1877 to Miss Clarinda Goff, a native of Texas, and they were the parents of the following children: Alice, George (our subject), Agnes, Claude, Lucy and Esther, the last mentioned now deceased. The family settled in Missouri in 1877 and remained there up to 1888, then moved to Dawes county, Nebraska, where the father took up government land and remained until proving up. The first building he put up was a log house in which the family lived for several years. They went through many hardships and privations during the first years here, witnessing the drouths and some years being unable to raise any crops at all, and were obliged to get work to do on farms and ranches in the vicinity of their home, and trying in every way to make a living. They kept on building up their farm and got through all right without losing their farm, although at times it seemed rather up-hill work and they became discouraged. The better years finally struck them and they were able to get ahead a little, and improve their farm and home, and succeeded in a marked degree, accumulating a nice property, consisting of a farm of three hundred and twenty acres of deeded land, besides some two hundred and forty acres of leased land, all of which is fenced and in first-class shape. There are good buildings on the place, and our subject engages in mixed farming and stock raising with his mother, they owning the place together.

CHARLES H. BRITTON'S PIONEER "DUG-OUT",

The father died in 1905, leaving the mother and our subject in control of the farm, he being the eldest son, now twenty-seven years of age. The farm in its every appointment speaks his good judgment and industry.

CHARLES H. BRITTON.

Charles H. Britton, one of the truly self-made men of Box Butte county, has prospered as an agriculturist and is the owner of a well improved estate in township 26, range 47. He has become widely known as an energetic and successful farmer and worthy citizen, and his success and good name are well merited as a reward for his strict integrity and honest dealings with all with whom he has had to do.

Mr. Britton was born in Putnam, Livingston county, Michigan, in 1840, on a farm. He is a son of Claudius, Jr., and Sarah (Beeman) Britton, both born and reared in the East and married there.

Our subject was reared and educated there, also was married in 1866 to Miss Jennie Hinchey, making it his home up to 1878, learning the brickmaker's trade when eighteen years of age and following that occupation for some years, operating a brick making business of his own for a time, and later spent seven years in Crawford county, Iowa, at the same work. In 1885 he came to what is now Box Butte county, arriving here in March of that year. He took a pre-emption and tree claim and also filed on a homestead in 1886 and proved up due time, these places being located thirty miles from Alliance. The first year "batched it," and in 1886 his family joined here, all living in a tent the first summer, but ing a dugout in the fall, in which they lived for quite a few months. Mr. Britton worked out in the vicinity of his home, breaking land for his neighbors, also putting in some crops on his farm the first year, and received a good yield, but later suffered severely from the drouths and other causes. He has passed through all the pioneer experiences, making long trips to the nearest town for supplies and camping out at night on the frozen ground, and does not care to return to those days.

In 1890 Mr. Britton's wife died, and although this sadly discouraged him he remained on his farm and built up a good home. Better times soon overtook him and he was able to buy more land, now owning a ranch of fourteen quarter sections of deeded land, besides controlling a section of leased school land. Most of his time is devoted to the sheep business, of which he has made a great success. He also keeps about thirty-six horses, and about fifty head of cattle.

Mr. Britton is recognized throughout his locality as one of the leading citizens and oldest settlers in his section of the state, and filed the first pre-emption claims, also made the first tree claim filing in his township in 1885, also took a homestead in 1886.

Mr. Britton has one child, a daughter, Zellicie, aged forty-one years, and he also has five grandchildren. On another page of this volume will be found an interesting picture of Mr. Britton.

ALBERT G. BUMP.

Albert G. Bump, a prominent resident of McCook, Nebraska, is one of the substantial citizens and successful business men of the place.

Mr. Bump is a native of Mahaska county, Iowa, born near Oskaloosa, as was also his father, the latter's father having been one of the early settlers in Iowa, locating there in the forties. He was born in Elmira, New York, and came west, farming for a time, then went into business at New Sharon, Iowa. Our subject's mother was Miss Dorcas Gaston, daughter of Robert W. Gaston, who settled in Iowa in the early forties, having been one of the pioneer settlers in Richmond Virginia. His father, Rev. James Gaston, was a minister in the Disciples Church, and a man of fine education. In 1885 our subject was connected with the Burlington & Missouri railway, as a conductor on that road, and in 1892 he quit that and went to California in the interest of the Southern California railway, remaining until 1897, then came back to McCook and was with the Burlington & Missouri again for nine years, then resided in McCook and his position with that company to enter into business for himself. He was chief conductor of the Order of Railroad Conductors in 1900 and 1901, No. 95, for two terms. He was very successful in his work on the railroad, but concluded that western Nebraska had the finest climate and best prospects for advancement of any business enterprise of any part of the country he had yet seen, and decided to enter the business world, so he started in the real estate business, dealing in concrete and cement contracting of all descriptions, in 1905 purchasing a cement plant and organizing the McCook Stone & Cement Company. He enlarged the work by the erection of a new building, and owns the site on which it is located. The capacity of this concern is four hundred blocks daily of the very best material, which is shipped to all parts of western Nebraska. In this business he has an associate, J. O. Hammond. They have had large contracts for cement walks, and have put in about twenty thousand feet in McCook, and the coming year will lay at least sixty thousand feet in this city alone.

Mr. Bump married Miss Mollie B. Adamson, daughter of Evan Adamson, of Adams Grove, Iowa, one of the earliest settlers in that locality, who came from Tennessee. Mr. and Mrs. Bump have no family. Mr. Bump is a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is a Republican.

THOMAS W. PRESTON, DECEASED.

Thomas W. Preston, a prosperous farmer of Sheridan county, was born in Knox county, Illinois, in 1842, and was reared and educated there. His father, Milo Preston, a German-Irish native of West Virginia, was a farmer and among the early settlers of Illinois. Our subject is the second in a family of seven, and started out for himself when nineteen years old, enlisting in Company B, Fifth Iowa Infantry, at the outbreak of the war. After serving three years he was wounded and discharged. Two brothers were also in the war, both of whom are living at this writing.

In 1865 Mr. Preston was married to Miss Elizabeth Shaw, born in Iowa in 1845, and in 1880 she died, leaving three children—William, May and Minnie—all of whom are now living. In 1883 our subject married Miss Della Witherbe, born in 1857 in Michigan and raised in Nebraska since she was ten years old. Her father, Francis Witherbe, now lives in the Black Hills, at Custer, South Dakota. Four children were born of this union, named as follows: Maude, Marjory, Frank and Anna, all born and raised in this locality except Maude, who was born in David City, Butler county, Nebraska.

After the war closed Mr. Preston moved to Iowa, farming it there for two years, and in 1867 settled in Butler county, Nebraska, when antelope were running where Lincoln now stands. Here he farmed it for sixteen years, going through even harder times than he ever saw in Sheridan county, being many miles from a railroad for several years. In 1885 he struck out for Sheridan county, driving the distance with team and wagon. Having very little capital to start with, he pre-empted on southeast section 35, township 31, range 43, which he still owned and lived on. Afterwards he proved up on a Kincaid homestead. After farming for nine years he ran out of seed and quit, then commenced stock buying and raising stock.

Mr. Preston owned eleven hundred and twenty acres, farming about one hundred and forty acres and using the balance for hay and grazing, running about eighty to one hundred and fifty head of stock. He was constantly improving his ranch and had he started in the cattle trade earlier instead of farming he said he would have been much better off. At the time he started in Butler county his only capital was a team, wagon and one dollar and fifty cents, and here he experienced his hardest times, being compelled to go forty miles from home, where he obtained a job husking corn, for which he received every seventh bushel, and from the sale of this he managed to support his family. In view of this, Mr. Preston was well satisfied with what he accomplished, and declared he would not live anywhere except on the frontier.

In 1894 he visited Iowa and saw all the old friends there, but could not be prevailed upon to stay for more than two nights, as he said "it was too thickly settled for him." Mr. Preston departed this life the 4th day of April, 1908, near the age of sixty-six years, leaving a wife and four children to mourn the loss of a true and affectionate husband and father.

In political faith Mr. Preston was a Republican. On another page is presented a picture from an old photograph showing Mr. Preston's property.

MILTON E. SMITH.

Not many years ago this part of Nebraska was looked upon as a dry and arid waste in the summer, and as a snow-swept and ice-bound wilderness in the winter, but today Rock county has vast resources of its own, and its business interests are assuming much importance. Such towns as Newport and Bassett would not discredit any region, and the men who have made them are among the bright and wideawake Americans who put their mark anywhere with their name as the sign of achievement. Among the men who do and dare, and have redeemed this part of the state from the wilderness, is the gentleman whose name introduces this article, and is a prominent figure at Newport and indeed throughout Rock county.

Mr. Smith was born in Branch county, Michigan, January 1, 1863, a son of Calbert R. and Lucille (Dickenson) Smith, both descendants of long established American families. The father was a farmer and was born and reared in the state of New York, of which state his parents were also natives. C. R. Smith was the father of nine children, of whom the subject of this article was sixth in the order of birth. He lived many years in Branch county, and here his family was mainly educated and prepared for the work of life.

When Milton E. Smith had reached the age of twenty-two years he left home and struck out into the world to care for himself. From the time he was twenty he taught school until he was twenty-five years of age, and won a very favorable reputation as a teacher. However, the school room was not to be his permanent field of labor, as we find him in 1887 going to the Black Hills in South Dakota as a civil engineer in the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, and remained in the service of that corporation for some three years. For nearly a year and a half he was engaged in office work for the railroad in the Black Hills, and spent about a year in doing construction work, operating from Whitewood, South Dakota. It was in the spring of 1893 that Mr. Smith came to Newport prepared to grapple with the problems of business in the awakening community. He saw the possibilities of the town and county, and was ready to take part in any laudable enterprise that might open to him. His brother, A. O. Smith, had established a general store some years before, in which our subject had been interested from the start. Its rapid growth and development seemed to demand the presence of both brothers, and accordingly he came to the city, and when A. O. was elected county treasurer in 1895, Milton E. took full charge of the store. The building in which this enterprise has been carried on is sixty by seventy feet, and almost everything demanded in the county trade is handled here except dry goods and groceries. Especially full stocks of farm supplies, furniture and undertaking are carried, and the store commands a wide trade. Their two-story warehouse, forty by eighty feet, is stored came to his present location and settled on an unimproved homestead on the Calamus river, fourteen miles from Burwell. He has three hundred and twenty acres of land, with about one hundred acres under cultivation. He has quite a number of good buildings, a stone barn twenty-eight by fifty feet, twelve feet high, a horse barn twenty-four by forty feet, and a hog shed twenty by fifty feet; also three wells and windmills. The farm is fenced and cross-fenced in excellent shape and everything is up-to-date in all respects. Mr. Reinert takes particular pains in raising hogs and has been quite successful. He is also quite extensively engaged in the creamery business, and makes a fine income from that branch of his business.

Charles F. Reinert is prominent among the old settlers and is respected as a man who has done his part in adding to the material development of the community in which he lives.

On one of the illustrated pages will be found a group portrait showing the family and residence.

JOHN OLDERSHAW.

Through exceptionally good management and persistent labors the gentleman here named has acquired a well developed farm and good ranch, and is enabled to enjoy the comforts of modern farming. He is of a progressive nature, has had a wide experience in farming, and every detail of his work is carefully looked after and personally supervised. Mr. Oldershaw's pleasant home is in Bronson precinct, Cheyenne county.

John Oldershaw was born in Lincolnshire, England, August 5, 1852, a son of Burrell and Elizabeth (Lowe) Oldershaw. He grew up there, following the usual occupations of the middle classes, receiving a limited schooling, and at the age of thirty years left his native land for the United States, sailing from Liverpool on the "City of Richmond." After a voyage of twelve days he landed in New York in 1882. He came directly west, spending a year in Kearney, Buffalo county, Nebraska, then came on to Cheyenne county. He had followed farming in England, working with his father; he therefore decided to engage in that vocation here, and started to work on the M. M. Fitch ranch, remaining for six months; then, securing a position with the Union Pacific Railroad Company as car repairer, in the Sidney shops. He was with that company for about eighteen years. He purchased a quarter section of land in section 30, township 15, range 50, during this time. This he sold. He came to his present location in 1904, filing on a homestead in section 6, township 14, range 50, which is now his ranch home, containing three hundred and twenty acres.

Mr. Oldershaw has about fifty acres under cultivation, and runs quite a herd of stock. He has a set of good farm buildings, and is one of the progressive and up-to-date farmers and ranchmen of his section.

On the 22d day of February, 1882, prior to his sailing for the new world, Mr. Oldershaw was married to Miss Suzanna Edis, a daughter of Thomas Holland and Sarah (Cornor) Edis, the former a carpenter by trade. Mrs. Oldershaw is also a native of England, where her mother still resides. Her father and both her husband's parents died there within the past few years. Mr. and Mrs. Oldershaw have a family of three daughters, namely: Jennie, now a teacher in the public schools at Potter, Nebraska; Edith and Minnie are graduates of the Sidney high school, class of 1908. The former is teaching near Potter and the latter taking a post-graduate course to finish the twelfth grade.

Mr. Oldershaw has always taken a commendable interest in local affairs, and in political views he is an Independent. The family are all communicants of the Episcopal church. Mr. Oldershaw affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, while his estimable wife holds membership in the Royal Neighbors.

WILLIAM J. COFFMAN, DECEASED.

William J. Coffman, deceased, for many years one of the leading farmers and ranchmen of Thomas county, met with remarkable success in those lines and enjoyed a foremost place among the worthy citizens of his community. His death occurred on August 6, 1903, and was deeply deplored by his sorrowing family and a host of friends and acquaintances.

Mr. Coffman was born in Mahaska county, Iowa, in 1857. His father, John, of German stock, was a native of Indiana, and his mother was Jane Campbell, of Yankee stock, raised in the east. When William was twenty years old he came to Clay county, Nebraska, where he lived for three years, following farming, and from there went to Missouri and Iowa, where he spent about a year, mostly on a visit. He then returned to Clay county, Nebraska, and remained three more years. He then came to Thedford in 1887 and took up his present ranch as a homestead, which is situated on section 10, township 24, range 27, which was entirely unimproved land. He had but a very limited amount of cash to start his farm, and almost his entire start amounted to one horse and an ox team. There was no water on the place, and he was obliged to haul his first supply a distance of two and a half miles. He broke up land for his crops with his ox team, and was able to raise a little grain and a few vegetables during the first summer, and for several years went through very hard times. Two seasons his crops were a total failure, and during those times there was nothing to be seen for miles around except dry grass and sand hills. Mrs. Coffman states that she distinctly remembers when the sand hills were absolutely bare of any grass or hay, and it was only in the low wet places that one could see any signs of verdure. However, they went to work with a will, never giving up courage, but constantly added improvements little by little, and finally succeeded in raising good crops, also got together some stock and were able to lay by a little money, the family having three Kincaid homesteads adjoining their father's original homestead, and at present the ranch consists of twenty-four hundred acres, all fenced in good shape, plenty of timber, fruit and shade trees, etc., and there is a good supply of water from wells which are supplied with windmills. The ranch has a comfortable house and good buildings of every description, and is one of the most valuable estates in the county.

Mr. Coffman was married in 1878 at Hastings, Nebraska, to Miss Marantha J. Barnes, daughter of Anath Barnes, a well known pioneer farmer of western Nebraska. Five children were born to them, namely: Edward, Anath, Francis, Cecil and Arnim. Edward and Anath are both owners of fine homesteads in this vicinity. During 1907 the family suffered a serious fire loss, the fire consuming a considerable amount of hay, etc., amounting to three or four hundred dollars.

Mr. Coffman is counted among the earliest settlers of Thomas county. He went through all the pioneer times, watching the growth and development of the locality into its present state of fertility and progress, and himself took an important part in this success. Besides his farm and ranching interests he owned considerable property in Thedford, and during the school sessions his children occupy one of his residences in that city. For a number of years prior to his demise Mr. Coffman was active in local affairs, serving as county commissioner for two terms, also as sheriff for one term. He was elected district assessor and held the office for five years.

he was a staunch Democrat and attended numerous conventions as a delegate. His death was a severe loss to the community, as he always stood bravely for the right and never shirked a duty as a good citizen and sympathetic neighbor.

FRED L. WINELAND.

Fred L. Wineland, proprietor of Mule Shoe ranch, breeder of thoroughbred Polled Hereford cattle, horses, mules, jacks, pure-bred Duroc Jersey hogs and White Leghorn chickens, is an enterprising and prosperous resident of Franklin township, Franklin county, Nebraska, and a highly esteemed citizen of that region. He is one of the best known men in the county along the above lines, and has built up an enviable reputation as a stockman and breeder of thoroughbred animals. His postoffice is Riverton, and shipping station Franklin. Mr. Wineland came to his present ranch in 1893, and now owns three hundred and twenty acres in section 22, and pastures a thousand acres in the locality. In 1898 he began his Polled Hereford herd of thoroughbred cattle, which was then the only herd in Nebraska, and one of three bunches in the United States, starting with "Old McKinley," a common Hereford bull, and getting polled calves up to 1906, when he bought "Medford," a polled Hereford bull purchased of Gammon & Sons, of Des Moines, Iowa. He now has a herd of forty pure-bred cows, which he has raised in the last eight years, and has also sold a few animals, but he intends to keep on building up the herd right along. At the county fairs his cattle have taken first prize in their respective classes, and sweepstakes on the herd in 1906, against this and the adjoining counties. The polled Herefords are the same as the Hereford, only are all hornless, which are safer and feed better, with no shrinkage from dehorning. Mr. Wineland also buys and feeds cattle for the market, and handles a great many cattle each year.

He is now breeding thirty mares to imported Spanish jack "Lissido," and has two young jacks from this sire. He has a number of jennets that have taken first prize at the Nebraska State Fair, also sweepstakes. These were bred in Kentucky. He has a fine drove of pure-bred Duroc Jersey hogs, twenty-five in number, and has some splendid animals, selling them right along to the best breeders in this part of the state. Our subject has invented a chute for use in dehorning cattle, on which he dehorned, with a saw, seventy-seven animals in one hour, beating the world's record by twenty-five. He is now placing this device on the market and expects to make a good thing out of it.

His father, G. W. Wineland, was a pioneer of Lancaster county, this state, a breeder of standard bred horses for many years, now retired, and a member of the city council at Lincoln. He came from Lenawee county, Michigan, and is a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in Company K, One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Indiana Infantry, serving all through the war. Our subject's grandfather was a soldier in the War of 1812 and was with Perry in the Lake Erie victory. G. W. Wineland married Luella Lowe, whose grandfather, Captain Lowe, belonged to the New York troops. In 1892 Mr. Wineland married Miss Ethel Lowe, of Custer county, Nebraska, daughter of B. W. and Edith (Gaylor) Lowe, who came to that county from Lenawee county, Michigan, and settled on a ranch. Mrs. Wineland died April 13, 1906, leaving her husband with two children, Harold and Howard, both now attending school.

THOMAS B. MILLER

No old settler has done more to give Loup county a substantial reputation than Thomas B. Miller. He is a breeder of thoroughbred cattle and his methods have brought him prosperity and a competence.

Thomas B. Miller was born in Delaware county, Indiana, September 26, 1859. His father, Harvey Miller, was born in the Shenandoah valley, in Virginia, on a farm adjoining the home of General Robert E. Lee. Abraham Miller, the grandfather of the subject of our sketch, owned this adjoining farm and was a personal friend and neighbor of General Lee. Abraham Miller's father was George Miller, a native of Germany. Thomas B. Miller's mother was Jane Moffett, born at Moffett, Tennessee, which town was named after her father, and Mr. Miller's great-grandmother was Mary Donaldson, a native of Ireland, County Armagh. Thomas B. Miller's parents were pioneer settlers of Indiana and lived about a mile and a half from the village of Alexandria, where Thomas B. attended high school.

October 31, 1878, at Alexandria, Indiana, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Emma M. Perry, daughter of Aaron Perry, who was a blacksmith and contractor. Her mother was Sarah (Howard) Perry. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Miller has been blessed with ten children, three of whom are dead. Those living are: George W., Mary M., married and living in Indiana; Harvey L., a farmer in Blaine county; Ethel, married and a resident of Blaine county, Nebraska, in which she was the first-born white female child; Thomas Radle, Joy F. and Timothy C.

Thomas B. Miller followed the occupation of farming in Indiana for a few years, living close to the old Erie canal. In the spring of 1885 he came west into Nebraska as far as the end of the railroad at North Loup. He then, in company with Bill Stevens, an old settler, went by team to Taylor, and then rode up the river in company with A. J. Robinault, and filed on a homestead and timber claim in Blaine county, Nebraska. He built a sod house and a sod barn and then for ten or twelve years engaged in freighting from North Loup, Ord, Broken Bow and Dunning. He took a construction contract in 1886 on the new line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad west of Dunning. Mr. Miller had a great amount of business on his hands in those days and camped out with his work in both winter and summer. He relates about getting lost one cold night when they had to stop and camp; the teams got rest, but he and his men had to run about on the prairie till sunup to keep warm.

The years of drouth were very severe on Mr. Miller and he lost a great deal of money during that time, but better days dawned and great energy and perseverance won at last. Mr. Miller proved up on his homestead and timber claim. In 1892 he bought the farm of three hundred and twenty acres where he now lives and he has added very thorough and complete improvements. There is a fine grove of trees and the place is fenced and cross-fenced, and in 1904 Mr. Miller built a fine brick home and later, in 1906, constructed a large barn. He keeps about one hundred and thirty-five acres under cultivation, the balance of the farm being used for pasture, as his principal attention is given to stock raising.

Mr. Miller has been closely identified with all the public movements in his community and has always taken an active part in political matters. He has held the office of justice of the peace, and in early days was chairman of the association formed for the purpose of preventing the organization of Blaine county. Mrs. Miller is postmistress of Moulton postoffice, which is located on her husband's farm.

For years Mr. Miller was engaged in raising thoroughbred Hereford cattle for purely beef purposes. But as the country settled up and the cattle ranges became more confined, Mr. Miller could see that the farmers and ranchmen must adopt other kinds of stock. He argued that the milk strain of cattle must be introduced so that milk and cream could be made a source of income from the more confined grazing. Mr. Miller sold off all his beef breed of Herefords and has shipped in the first and largest herd of Holstein cattle ever brought into the county.

The Holstein cattle hold the best record for milk and butter producers of any breed. The returns from each individual animal is the best of any breed. Mr. Miller has a fine herd of registered Holstein cattle and will soon have many such milch cows and stock to sell. On another page will be found an interesting picture showing some of Mr. Miller's property.

LUKE M. BATES.

Luke M. Bates, subject of this sketch, is one of the rising young men of the times in Cherry county, Nebraska.

Mr. Bates was born in Hartford, Connecticut, in 1877, and is the son of John M. and Sarah (Glazier) Bates, both descendants from New England families, who took part in the Revolutionary war. The father, a clergyman of the Episcopal church, is one of the pioneers of northwestern Nebraska, and is well known and is highly respected all over this part of the country. His first service in this part of the state was in 1887, when as a missionary he traveled a distance of three hundred miles along this line of the railroad then under construction.

Mr. Bates and family came to Kansas in 1883, and later moved to Nebraska, where Luke was educated, finishing at the academy at Kearney, Nebraska. In 1899 he graduated from the law department of the University of Nebraska and was admitted to the bar of the supreme court in the same year. He at once located at Long Pine and began the practice of law, at which he engaged in 1906, when in February he was appointed register of the United States land office at Valentine, assuming the duties of office in March.

From 1899 to 1905 Mr. Bates was editor of the Long Pine Journal, which he made felt in the political arena of western Nebraska. In 1900 he was elected attorney of Brown county, which office he efficiently filled two years, and in 1906 was elected county commissioner, but resigned to accept his present office under federal appointment.

In 1902 Mr. Bates was married to Miss Odessa Kiner, whose father, S. H. Kiner, is a prominent old-timer in Long Pine. One daughter, Helen, has been born to them, and importance. He was supervisor of Lincoln township for two years, and served on the county board for some time. He was also justice of the peace for three terms, a member of the school board for a long time, and treasurer for seven years. In political faith he is an independent voter.

WILLIAM H. ZIMMERMAN.

For the past quarter of a century the gentleman above named has been closely identified with the development and civilization of Sioux county, Nebraska. He is proprietor of one of the finest estates in that region, his residence being in section 27, township 33, range 55, where he enjoys a pleasant home and many friends, a fitting reward for his many years of hard labor and effort.

William H. Zimmerman was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, in 1848, on a farm. His father, Samuel, was of German descent, a miller by trade, and the family spent quite a long time in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, where our subject grew up. He learned the miller's trade as a boy and worked at it for several years, also was on the public works for a time at Riddleburg Furnace, Pennsylvania. In 1885 he left the east and came to Nebraska, locating in Sioux county, teaming from Blair, camping out during the journey, and finally picking out a homestead on section 27, township 33, range 55. During the first years he followed railroad work in South Dakota and to the west of Chadron, also helped build the Chadron roundhouse. Finally with his family he settled on his farm permanently, erecting a good log house and adding improvements as he was able, and has of late erected a fine frame residence, modern and up-to-date. He worked his farm during the summers, and for five winters worked in the coal mines in Wyoming in order to lay by a little money. When the dry years came along he suffered severe losses from crop failures, and finally gave up trying to farm, working into the stock business, and from that time on met with better success. He has built up a splendid ranch, consisting of eleven hundred and sixty acres, having plenty of good pasture range and hay land for his cattle, Sow Bellie creek running through the place. He has about seventy-five acres irrigated and raises good crops of small grain, etc.

In 1873 Mr. Zimmerman was married to Miss Maggie A. Snyder in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, whose father, Adam, was a farmer in that vicinity, and she was raised there. Eight children have resulted from this union—George E. (deceased), Myrtle, Samuel I., Lillie, Eli D., Emery E., Clarence S. and Grover C.

Since locating in this region the family has experienced all the joys and sorrows of pioneer life in the west, and have seen much suffering and privation. One incident in particular occurred in the year 1895, when the roof of their house was blown off during a wind-storm, taking away the entire upstairs of their house. Mr. Zimmerman has done his share in the upbuilding of the locality, and aided materially in establishing the schools there. He has held the office of precinct assessor for five years. Politically he is a Democrat, and an earnest worker for party principles.

HON. E. W. ROBERTS.

Prominent among the residents of Holdrege is the gentleman above named, who has lived in this locality since 1883 and has built up a pleasant home and an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen, public official, business man and contractor, esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Roberts was born in Janesville, Wisconsin, where he was reared and educated. Our subject came to Holdrege in the fall of 1883, at the time the town was first started, and at once engaged in the contracting business, at which he has worked ever since. He has erected all of the finest buildings here, and put up the last school building, the high school, costing twenty-three thousand dollars; also the Johnson store building, the Nelson block, the City National Bank and First National Bank, the Hampton Hotel and nearly all of the brick buildings in the business section of the city. He has built most of the finest residence buildings in Holdrege, and his work wherever found is of the best, and is greatly admired by all who view it. He uses the best material in the construction of all his work, and through his honesty and integrity has won the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has had dealings.

For the past eighteen years Mr. Roberts has been chairman of the county board. He has been a member of the city council for eight years, and president of that body several terms. He also has been a member of the school board for fifteen years, ever since the city was first organized, and resigned some time ago. He was a candidate for the state legislature in 1906 and elected to represent Phelps county on the Republican ticket.

Mr. Roberts was married to Miss Mary Child. They have a family of children named as follows: Reynold, who served in the First Nebraska regiment during the war with the Philippines, corporal in Company I, and after the war went back there as a teacher, residing near Manila; Arthur, who was in the United States army, and is at present in the Philippines, connected with a railway company there; Ray, residing at Boise City, Idaho; May, living at home. The family are members of the Congregational church and earnest workers for that faith.

WILLIAM J. A. RAUM.

The above named gentleman is one of the earliest settlers in Sioux county, Nebraska, where he has succeeded in building up a valuable estate by dint of honest industry and perseverance, many times becoming discouraged through failures and loss, but never giving up, and he has been richly rewarded for his determination to succeed. Mr. Raum resides on section 23, township 32, range 53, and is held in the highest esteem by his associates and friends.

Mr. Raum was born in the town of Shipensburg, Pennsylvania, in 1847. His father, J. A. Raum, was a farmer and hotel keeper, of American stock, from one of the oldest American families. He married Miss Mary Bailey, also of good old American blood, born at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Both parents' ancestors fought in the early American wars, and their names figure prominently in the history of the earlier days.

Our subject served in the Civil war with Company D, Second Pennsylvania regiment. He received a severe wound at the battle of Cold Harbor, June 2, 1864, and was discharged from the army on November 2, of that year on account of disability. During his career as a soldier he fought with his regiment at the battle of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, and was also in the army of the Potomac.

After leaving the war Mr. Raum returned to his native state and worked on the railroad as a fireman and engineer for the following seven years. In 1876 he came to Nebraska, settling in Lancaster county, where he took up a homestead and pioneered there for several years. He next moved to Frontier county, where he farmed for three years, then to Sioux county, landing here October 1, 1881, driving from Frontier county with a team and wagon containing his household goods. He first settled on government land and started to build up a farm, remaining there for three years. Soon afterwards he settled on his present farm, in section 23, township 32, range 53, being nine miles northwest of Crawford, where he has lived for many years, engaged extensively in stock raising and farming. His ranch contains nine hundred acres, the place being well supplied with timber, plenty of good running water the year round, and good soil.

Mr. Raum was united in marriage in October, 1872, to Miss Virginia Ross, whose father, James R. Ross, was an old settler in Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Raum are the parents of five children, namely: William, Clarence, Edwin, Henry and Mabel.

Mr. Raum is one of the leading public-spirited citizens of his locality, and takes a prominent part in local and county affairs. He has served as county clerk of Sioux county for four years, and represented his county as delegate to different state conventions. In political views he is a Democrat.

WILLIAM H. ALLEN.

The development of Newport, Rock county, as a trading center for this portion of Nebraska, has been assisted in no small degree by the earnest and pushing career of Mr. Allen. Beginning here with the most limited resources he has worked and struggled to make a name and a standing for himself; and his career well illustrates the value of character as a business asset of no slight importance. Men have tried him, they have come to understand him, and his integrity and business ability are unquestioned.

Mr. Allen was born in Coles county, Illinois, May 23, 1869, a son of Francis W. and Matilda J. (Gardner) Allen. Both the Allens and the Gardners belong to good American lineage, and count among their forebears some honored men who have done the country good service. Francis W. Allen devoted his life to farming, and was a pioneer settler in Kansas, migrating to Cowley county in 1882. Our subject was the second child in a family of four children born to his parents.

William H. Allen was partially reared and educated in Kansas, whither his parents removed as before stated. In 1891 he left home to care for himself, and the following year opened a wholesale hay business in Newport, Nebraska, being among the very first to take up this line of trade. He had so little money that he was able to do business only on the closest margin. His business, however, rapidly assumed large proportions, and it was found that he was handling more hay than almost any man on the market—and up to the present time his patronage has been equal to the occasion as the output has increased.

Mr. Allen has not confined himself to a trade in hay alone, but is engaged in a hardware and agricultural implement business at Atkinson, which he established in May, 1902, and which has more than met all his expectations. In 1906, however, he received such flattering offers for the plant that he disposed of it, and opened a branch house at Stuart for handling hay and baling accessories under the firm name of Shaal & Allen, a business that has prospered from its inception. He is general manager of the Newport, Hammond and Southern telephone line, manager of the Newport Heat and Light Company, and owns a fourth interest in a similar plant at Atkinson.

Mr. Allen was married December 20, 1893, to Miss Alta M. Miller. Her father, Daniel S. Miller, is an old settler in Rock county and is regarded as one of its most honorable and reliable citizens. Her mother's maiden name was Ann Eliza Duboise. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have two children: William Harold and Florence May. Mr. Allen is an enlightened and public-spirited citizen, and has served on the town board. He is a Republican in politics. Fraternally, he is a member of the Masonic order at Long Pine, the Odd Fellows and the Workmen at Newport, the Modern Woodmen at Atkinson and the Elks at Norfolk.

Mr. Allen has a neat cottage home on Second street, a view of which may be seen on another page of this work, together with views of two of his large hay warehouses.

JOHN H. FERNAU, DECEASED.

John H. Fernau (deceased), who resided in Brown county, Nebraska, was one of the leading old-timers of this locality. Mr. Fernau was born in Germany, September 9, 1836. His father was by trade a shoemaker, and left Germany with his family when our subject was a child one year old, coming to the United States, where they settled on a farm in New York state. They lived there until their family had grown up, educating the children in the common schools, and teaching them to do all kinds of hard farm work. When John was sixteen years old he, with his parents, came west, locating in Washington county, Wisconsin, where they bought a farm and here he remained until he reached the age of twenty-one, when he started in life on his own account, following farm work, securing employment on farms in the neighborhood of his parents' home.

At the breaking out of the war he enlisted in Company B, Forty-fifth Wisconsin Infantry, and with his company was ordered to Tennessee. Here the regiment took part in the battle of Nashville and succeeding engagements in the west.

At the close of the war he received an honorable discharge, and went back to his old home in Wisconsin, where his parents still resided, and followed farming there up to 1868, when he went to Buchanan county, Iowa, where he opened up a farm and was among the pioneer settlers in that county. He remained there for sixteen years, and although he met with very good success, became dissatisfied and moved on to Brown county in 1884, taking up a homestead in section 9, township 30, range 21. Here he at once went to work erecting buildings and adding improvements to his place, and from the start was very successful in everything he undertook. He had some discouragements, and went through the usual pioneer's experiences, doing his full share toward building up the farming interests in this locality.

On September 3, 1861, Mr. Fernau was married to Miss Caroline C. Fry, in Wisconsin. She was born in Alsace, Germany, then a province of France, and came to this country with her parents when but two years old. Mr. and Mrs. Fernau had six children, named as follows: Lizzie, wife of Gus Swartz; Levina, who married George Orchid; John; Polly, now Mrs. John Berger; Joe, and Lottie, wife of Harry Lane.

In 1899 Mr. Fernau sold his homestead to his son, Joe, and purchased land adjoining, on which he erected a fine set of farm buildings, and established another farm which he steadily improved.

At the time of his death, April 4, 1907, Mr. Fernau was possessed of two hundred and forty acres of fine agricultural and grazing land. He took a keen interest in all matters pertaining to his locality, and was one of those who aid their influence for the betterment of the people around him. Politically he was a Republican and was a member of the Lutheran church.

WILLIAM B BISHER.

William B. Bisher is a native of Ohio and was born in the year 1869. His father, Lewis Bisher, was also a native of Ohio and was one of the pioneers of Loup county, Nebraska. Our subject's mother, Sarah (Waits) Bisher, was also a native of Ohio.

When William B. Bisher was ten years old the whole family moved to Indiana, where he was reared on a farm. In 1888 the family came west, settling near to Taylor, the county seat of Loup county, Nebraska. Our subject began working out by the month, continuing to do so for ten years. He worked hard and faithfully to get some money ahead, but his fortune did not grow very rapidly, especially during the depressing times from 1890 to 1896, when he could earn only fifty cents to seventy-five cents per day. In 1900, he located a homestead in the sand hills of Garfield county, where he remained about a year, then purchasing a farm near Burwell, making his headquarters there for six years. In 1906, he bought the farm where he now lives, on section 31, township 21, range 18, and has been devoting his energies to making it one of the model places of the community. He has two hundred and four acres in the place, with about one hundred and twenty acres under cultivation, and has a good house, barns, fences and other improvements. Industry and enterprise have been among his chief characteristics and his well directed efforts have brought him a very comfortable competence. He holds an honorable position in the regard of his fellows.

William B. Bisher was married in 1900 to Miss Kate Woods, whose father, Ross Woods, was one of the first pioneers on the North Loup river—her mother's maiden name was Fanny Olger. Mr. and Mrs. Bisher have six children: Willie, Lilly, Fannie, Mabel, Arthur and a baby, not named.

GEORGE KALB.

George Kalb, a resident of Swan precinct, Deuel county, is one of the earliest settlers in that region. He has not only witnessed the wonderful transformation of this country from a wild and uncultivated state to one of thrift and prosperity and a region rich in agriculture, but he has been a potent factor in its development, has acquired a valuable estate and the highest esteem with those with whom he has associated for many years. He has a home of comfort, and is one of the worthy and substantial citizens of his township.

Mr. Kalb was born in Meigs county, Ohio, on August 27, 1855. He was the eldest in his father's family of thirteen children, and grew to manhood on the home farm, attending the country schools, and early was taught to do all kinds of hard work which fitted him well for the hardships and efforts he encountered in later life. Both parents are now dead. The family moved to Richland county, Illinois, when he was about nine years of age, and there he remained until he was twenty-five years of age, then came to Platte county, Nebraska, and from there to Polk county. He homesteaded on section 12, township 13, range 44, Cheyenne county (now Deuel county), in October, 1884, and settled on the land the following spring, which he has occupied ever since. He, together with his brother and several others, were almost the first settlers on the table land, and went through the usual experiences in getting their homes started. This was perfectly wild land, with some timber, and they were obliged to erect the rudest imaginable dwellings at first, either dugouts or sod houses, as there were no facilities for obtaining finished timber, etc. However, they were able to get along fairly well, broke up some land for sod crops, and proved up on the claim in due time. He took additional land in the vicinity and became owner of a whole section of deeded land, which is well improved and equipped with every convenience for the operation of a model farm. He has one hundred and seventy-five acres cultivated, and has quite a herd of cattle and horses. During the past ten years he has erected fine buildings and made extensive improvements, and now has a substantial home and farm.

Mr. Kalb was married at Cheyenne, Wyoming, on November 27, 1892, to Miss Lena Swartz, who is a native of Germany and came to this country about 1885. They have seven children, who are named as follows: Henry E., George G., Mary Catherine, John Jackson, Clara Daisy, Theodore and Margaret.

Our subject is a Democrat in politics, and lends his influence for the upbuilding of the better interests of his community, casting his votes for those who in his opinion will labor for the welfare of the people. He is a member of the school board in his district, and has held other local offices.

F. J. SCHUMACHER.

One of the business men and representatives may be found in the above named gentleman, engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business at Orleans, Harlan county, Nebraska. Mr. Schumacher has resided in that city for the past fifteen years, and through his industry and good business judgment has come to be recognized as one of the leading citizens of the county. Orleans is a beautiful little city with a population of one thousand two hundred, and is the most thriving and growing town on the Denver & St. Joseph line of the Burlington route. It has four daily passenger trains, and as many freights as traffic demands. There are two good, solid banks, and it boasts of having the largest and finest opera house in the Republican Valley. It has two elevators, which last year shipped out three hundred cars of wheat, two hundred cars of corn, one hundred and fifty cars of cattle and one hundred and eighty cars of hogs. Many cattle and sheep are fed in this vicinity on account of the large acreage of alfalfa, making a good market for all crops raised here. It also has large flour and oat-meal mills, and will soon have a large alfalfa mill located here. A large percentage of the population of the surrounding country is of Swedish and German descent, typical of these nationalities, and they make good farmers, being distinguished for their industry and steadiness. The cultivation of alfalfa has made dairying an important industry, and the town is a great cream shipping point. The town has an eleven-grade high school and a fine seminary with an attendance of two hundred pupils each term. It has six churches, one of which is the most beautiful in point of structure between Omaha and Denver.

Mr. Schumacher is a native of Iowa and he located in the town of Nebraska in 1894, and settled in Orleans in the same year. He opened his present business in 1903 and has been very successful from the start, advertising this portion of Nebraska all over Iowa and Illinois, and has been instrumental in bringing in a great many settlers.

ROLLIN POLAND.

Rollin Poland, whose very complete and well appointed farm and ranch in section 35, township 32, range 35, shows him a progressive and industrious tiller of the soil, and whose high standing with his neighbors attests his real worth and character, is one of the leading citizens of Cherry county, and a good illustration of the successful Nebraskan settler, who has made his home in this state from an early date, and has had the courage to endure the hard conditions of early settlement, regardless of trial and trouble. It has taken courage to pass through pioneer days and hold on despite drouths and hailstorms and tornadoes and blizzards, but those who have done it have come into possession of a large patrimony of ease and comfort in the ownership of fruitful farms and ranches with cattle upon a thousand hills, and herds of horses and blooded swine. Mr. Poland has lived to possess and enjoy; and what he has is his by no accident but because he has earned it and is entitled to the fruits of his labors.

Rollin Poland was born in Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, October 15, 1865, a son of George W. and Mary T. (Parrish) Poland, American born, but of Scotch descent. The father was a native of New York, and served in the United States navy for three years. He had a family of six children, of whom two were girls, Rollin being the first born in the family circle.

When he was twenty-two years of age, the subject of this article took upon his own shoulders the burden of his own support, and leaving home was employed for a season at St. Louis, Minneapolis, and elsewhere along the Mississippi river on the government dykes. In 1891, after a brief visit home, he determined to see what the far west, as it was then pronounced, could do for him, and for that purpose appeared in Cherry county, Nebraska; here he was employed on the Churn ranch for four and a half years before he took up a homestead for himself, a tract of land which he still holds. By hard work and close management he has been able to increase his first original land holdings until he has become prosperous if not wealthy. His entire ranch now comprises eight hundred and twenty acres, of which but little is devoted to cultivation, Mr. Poland depending very largely upon the products of a stock farm for his profits. At the present writing he is keeping about two hundred and fifty cattle, and a smaller number of horses. His beginning consisted of two cows with calves and a team of horses lacking harness, wagon and farm implements, quite different from his present equipment.

Rollin Poland became a husband and the head of a household, January 1, 1895, when his matrimonial destinies were united with those of Miss Nettie B. Hook, who was born in Hamilton county, Iowa, in 1879. Her father, John Frank Hook, a sketch of whom appears in this volume, is now a resident of Cherry county. His wife, Martha Hill, the mother of Mrs. Poland, was also American born and bred. Mr. Poland has one child, Martha Ann.

In all political matters Mr. Poland is inclined to a strict independence, seeking for best men and wisest measures. In concerns of national importance he tends towards the Republican party, but insists that private judgment should determine in the last resort. With his measure of success in Nebraska he is well satisfied, and doubts if he could have accomplished any more with the means at his disposal anywhere in the land. Here he has a fine home, with water piped into the house, and light and heat and comfort in all its hospitable recesses. He began with nothing, and has made his own way to a considerable fortune. When he bought his first bill of groceries which to begin housekeeping it called for all the money he had left from buying and building, but Providence provided a way and their larder has never been empty. Mr. Poland has some alfalfa growing on his land and it seems to have taken a strong hold on the soil. The district school is on his ranch, in which he is much interested. A view of the family residence and the surrounding buildings will be found elsewhere in this work.

F. D. CODY.

The gentleman above named is a leading agriculturist of Sheridan county, Nebraska, where he has built up a comfortable home and farm in township 25, range 44.

Mr. Cody was born in Dubuque county, Iowa, in 1865, and raised in the town of Dubuque. He is a son of Edward Cody, who was born and raised in Ireland, coming to Canada in the pioneer days, and later to the United States, where he settled in Iowa about the year 1850. Our subject's mother was Miss Mary Devlin, born and raised in Ireland, who came to this country when a young girl. Mr. Cody started out for himself at the age of fourteen years. His father died in 1868, and he was taken to raise by some friends of the family, and he left their care as soon as he was able to take care of himself, and worked out on farms in Iowa for eight years. In 1887 he came to Nebraska in company with W. G. Wilson, securing employment on the Burlington & Missouri railroad, having worked with Mr. Wilson some little time before coming to this state. He took up a pre-emption after locating here, and proved up on it, still working for Mr. Wilson, and in all spent nine years on the road. He afterwards sold his pre-emption together with a tree claim, which he had taken up. He had planted over two thousand seven hundred trees and none of them grew, so his hard work and the expense for the shrubs were all in vain. After disposing of this place he took up another homestead and proved up on it, working out on neighboring ranches in the vicinity most of the time.

In 1904 Mr. Cody bought his present home of four hundred and eighty acres deeded land, and also has taken up an additional four hundred and eighty-acre homestead. He leases some land besides running his own farm, which he uses for hay land, as he has not enough on his place. He is engaged principally in cattle raising, and keeps about one hundred and twenty head, but does not handle horses to any great extent. He is just getting nicely started in the stock business, and is sorry he did not start in at this earlier, as he thinks he can make money at it, and make it much easier than by farming. He has his land all fenced, and a complete set of good farm buildings, which makes his estate a valuable one. There is no government land left near his farm, all of this having been taken up.

Mr. Cody was married in 1900 to Miss Julia Dunn, born in Ireland. She, together with a sister came to this country in 1899, her parents still living in Ireland on a farm. Mr. and Mrs. Cody have two children: Thomas, born March 22, 1901, and Margaret, born October 29, 1903. Mrs. Cody owned a claim here which they lived on until proving up, and together they had a pretty fair start on getting married. The only drawback to the locality in which they reside is that it is situated so far from any school, the nearest one being four and one-half miles away, but Mr. Cody states that they will remain on the farm for awhile at least.

Mr. Cody is not a party man, but votes for the best man on the ticket, although he does not take any active part in politics. He has spent his time and given his whole attention to the building up of his home and farm, and feels well repaid for what he has done. His postoffice address is Lakeside, Nebraska.

ALBERT A. NORMAN.

The gentleman herein named is one of the leading old settlers of western Nebraska, locating in Dawes county in 1886, and has since made that region his home, building up a good farm and valuable property. Mr. Norman has done his full share in the upbuilding of the locality, and is well and favorably known to all residing in this section of the state as a worthy gentleman and good citizen.

Mr. Norman was born in Scott county, Iowa, in 1860. His father, William S. Norman, born in Virginia, was a mechanic and farmer, who came to Iowa in the early stages of the development of that state, and went through pioneer experiences there with his family, where our subject was reared. The father later took up government land in Dawes county, Nebraska, and lived here for some years. During his young manhood our subject worked in the saw mills in eastern Iowa, spending most of his time between fourteen and twenty-one years in that work, then moved to the western part of the state, settling in Carroll county, Iowa, on a farm on which he remained for four years. He first landed in Dawes county in the spring of 1886, joining his father, who had come some little time previous. The son took up a homestead in section 35, township 33, range 48, and still occupies this farm. His first house was a log cabin, and when he landed here he had a team of horses, wagon and one cow to start with. He began on a very small scale, and worked at anything that came to his hand in order to get a start, hauling wood for a living, and at the same time building up and improving his farm. He had fair success with his crops from the first, and although he was visited by the drouths he was always able to raise a good crop of potatoes and some garden stuff, and managed to get along very well.

He now owns a ranch of six hundred and forty acres of deeded land and leases one hundred and sixty acres adjoining, cultivating about one hundred acres, and has twenty-five acres of nicely growing alfalfa from which he cuts good crops each season. His place is located on Big Bordeaux creek, and has plenty of good clear running water the year round. His principal work is stock raising, dealing largely in horses and cattle.

Mr. Norman is active in public affairs in his locality, and among the leading citizens, lending his influence and aid for the good of his community. He is an Independent voter.

Mr. Norman was united in marriage December 24, 1884, while living in Carroll county, Iowa, to Miss Ida Gray, whose father, Jerome Gray, was a blacksmith by trade, and owner of a farm in that region. Her mother was Miss Jane Hill, of England, coming to America when sixteen years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Norman are the parents of two children, namely: Laura, married, wife of Myron Fisher, of Eagle Grove, Iowa, and Ernest, twelve years of age, living with his father and mother. Mr. Norman's father-in-law, Jerome Gray, lives with him and is quite active at the age of eighty years.

CHARLES H. WELLER.

Charles H. Weller, an enterprising and successful business man of Chadron, Nebraska, was born in Richland county, Wisconsin, in 1856. His father, William Weller, was a farmer of Pennsylvania Dutch origin, and his mother of Irish stock, the latter dying when our subject was four years old.

When he reached the age of ten he also lost his father and from that time on was compelled to shift for himself, and he managed to get enough to do at all sorts of employment to make a living, in 1870 moving to Iowa, where he followed farming for two years.

Mr. Weller first came to Nebraska in 1872, crossing the Missouri at Omaha, locating at St. Paul, where he farmed for a time, and in 1875 came through western Nebraska on a government survey expedition, traveling through Cherry and Sheridan counties. He spent a year in this work, then went into the Black Hills with a large party of settlers, there being sixteen wagons and twenty-four men in the outfit. They struck Custer on July 4, 1886, there took up mining claims and worked them up to cold weather, then returned to St. Paul, where our subject spent the winter. In 1877 he went on another government survey and spent two years in the work, then began working as a cowboy in Nebraska and also in Wyoming, riding all over the western plains and following a frontiersman's life up to 1885. In 1886 he started in business at Harrison and remained there up to the spring of 1892, then located in Chadron, where he has since remained. Here he has carried on a saloon business and billiard room.

Mr. Weller was married in 1903 to Miss Minnie Rice, of Chadron, Nebraska, daughter of Alonzo and Jennie Rice, of American stock. They have no children.

Mr. Weller is numbered among the leading old-timers of this region, and has aided materially since first locating in this country in the development of the commercial interests of the locality. He is a business man of more than ordinary ability and has gained the respect and esteem of his fellowmen, all of whom admire him for his sterling character and strict integrity. Politically he is a Democrat. A picture of Mr. Weller's residence will be found on another page.

JOHN YOUNG.

For over a quarter of a century the gentleman whose name heads this personal history has been associated with the agricultural interests of Phelps county, Nebraska, and as an old settler and one of its worthy citizens he is prominently known all through this section.

Mr. Young is a native of Jon Koping, Smoland, Sweden, born in 1854. He came to this country in 1872, accompanied by his father and mother. The family settled in Iroquois county, Illinois, where they took a farm and remained for six years, then moved to Nebraska, locating on a homestead in Industry township, Phelps county. Our subject also took a homestead directly adjoining his father's, and still lives on this farm. He built a sod house, and began breaking up his land for crops. He has gradually improved his place, and now owns four hundred and forty acres, renting a part of the land, and working the balance himself. His farm is well stocked, and he engages in mixed farming and stock raising, generally keeping from fifty to one hundred hogs, which he ships to market. He has good graded cattle, and is just starting a thoroughbred Shorthorn herd. He also breeds horses for farm purposes, and has twenty-two head at the present time.

Mr. Young has had experience in farming in Illinois, and greatly prefers this state to Illinois, as the wet seasons there did more damage to crops than the dry weather ever does here. He has raised fine crops ever since starting with the exceptions of the drouth periods, when no one had any luck, and his corn crop is fine every year. He has raised as high as ten thousand bushels of grain in a single year, and states that he is well satisfied with the conditions in Nebraska.

In 1884 Mr. Young was married to Miss Emma Johnson, a native of Sweden. They have a family of nine children, who are named as follows: Frank W., farming on his own account, residing at home of our subject; Elmer E., who died in 1906, aged nineteen years; Annie, Carl, Harry, Esther, Alvin, Albert and Glenn. The family are all members of the Swedish Mission church at Loomis and are well and favorably known throughout the community.

Mr. Young takes a commendable interest in local affairs. He was a member of the county board for Industry township for two terms, and has been justice of peace and assessor, also a member of the school board for eighteen years, resigning this position and again accepting. In politics he is an Independent voter.

SAMUEL BLACK.

An old settler in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, who has done his full share in the building up of the commercial interests of his county, and built up for himself an enviable reputation as a business man and worthy citizen will be found in the person of the gentleman whose name heads this personal history. He resides in Norden, and is engaged in the livery business.

Mr. Black was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, January 10, 1842. He is a son of John Black, born in the north part of Ireland in 1816, and was a pioneer settler in Iowa county, Wisconsin, in 1855, and again in Burt county, Nebraska, in 1866; his death occurred in Tekamah in 1892. Our subject was the oldest of his father's family of eight children, four of whom are still living. At the age of thirteen years he moved to Wisconsin with his parents, where he remained until he was twenty-four years old, then came to Nebraska, settling in Burt county in 1866, migrating with his parents. He remained at home for three years more, then started in farming for himself on a farm of eighty acres, but sold this after a short time. In 1884 he came to Keya Paha county, locating close to the town of Norden, taking a homestead and remaining on it until he had proved up. He put up a sod building, which was his home for several years. Here he went through the drouth periods, so familiar to the early settlers in this locality, experiencing many hardships and privations. These were his hardest times.

In 1896 he moved to Norden, built a hotel which he conducted successfully about ten years; the same year he established a livery business, also still retaining that branch of the work, and has a large and lucrative trade in Norden and the surrounding country. He disposed of his hotel property in 1905, and afterwards purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres located north of Norden, on which he has planted orchards and forest trees, and has cultivated fifty acres. The balance is in hay land, supplying a good crop each season.

In 1867 Mr. Black was married to Miss Mary Metzler, in Burt county, Nebraska. Four children were born to them, namely: John, born in 1872, married, and engaged in farming in Sioux county; Frank, farming in North Dakota; Maria, married to Levi Nettleton, also residing in North Dakota; Maude, a graduate in music from the Chicago Musical College, of which she has served as principal.

On February 22, 1888, Mr. Black was married the second time to Mrs. Catherine Wentworth, a daughter of John and Ann (Gardner) Carr, the former born in Ireland in 1814. Politically Mr. Black is a strong Republican.

HENRY H. LACY.

Henry H. Lacy, one of the enterprising and energetic citizens of Sioux county, Nebraska, and who takes high rank for his many manly and sterling qualities of heart and mind, was born at Iowa Center, Iowa, July 14, 1877, and is deservedly popular in his community as a worthy resident and public-spirited gentleman.

Mr. Lacy is a son of Patrick Lacy, born in Canada, who came to the United States in 1875, and settled in Iowa, and later was among the pioneers of Sioux county, Nebraska. He married Elsie Hudgin, also a native of Canada, and when our subject was an infant of three months the mother died. The father removed to Iowa and remained there until Henry was seventeen years of age, when the family came to Sioux county and settled in Harrison, where they spent the winter of 1894, and the following spring located on a rented farm situated three miles northwest of Harrison. Father and son remained on that farm for about four years, then the latter filed on a homestead in section 14, township 32, range 57. He at once started to improve his claim, using a team of broncho ponies, and broke up some land and put in crops. He proved up on the place, built a good home and filed on a Kincaid eighty acres of land adjoining his original farm and is now owner of two hundred and forty acres. He cultivates about ninety acres of this, raising wheat, oats, corn, etc. He has done considerable experimenting with grasses and grains since coming here to ascertain those best suited to the soil of this region, and is a progressive and up-to-date agriculturist. His place is well supplied with good buildings, all fenced and cross-fenced, and he has a splendid supply of good water from deep water wells, fitted with windmills and tanks. Mr. Lacy keeps only enough stock for domestic puposes. He has acquired a nice property through his industry and good management, beginning with practically no capital but his own determination and energy. During the past two years he has suffered quite severe losses from hail storms, which have swept this section of the country.

Mr. Lacy was married in 1891 to Miss Bertha Dieckman, whose father was born in Germany, and came to America with his bride during the early days of the settlement of this region, locating in Sioux county in 1894, where they were among the pioneers and assisted materially in the development and upbuilding of that section. Mr. and Mrs. Lacy have a family of two children, Herbert, born April 20, 1904, and Robert, born January 26, 1906.

Mr. Lacy takes an active interest in local affairs and does his full share as a public-spirited citizen of his community.

BENJAMIN F. BROWN.

Benjamin F. Brown, residing on section 27, township 9, range 38, is truly one of the self-made men and prosperous citizens of Perkins county, Nebraska. He began with very little else save a strong heart and willing hands, and through industry and persistent effort has succeeded in accumulating a nice property, being considered one of the well-to-do and progressive agriculturists of his locality.

Mr. Brown was born in Clairmont county, Ohio, in 1836. His grandfather, Joseph Brown, was born in France, and his father was a native of Ohio, who married Mary A. Meyers, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock, they settling in Ohio as young people, where their family was reared. In 1852 they emigrated to Iowa, locating in Lee county, lived there for two years, then went to Clark county, where they followed farming and were among the pioneers. Our subject started for himself in Iowa, farming and breaking up prairie for people in the vicinity of his parents' home, and in 1884 came to Nance county, Nebraska. After spending three years there he came on to Perkins county, shipping to Curtis, and driving the balance of the way, having, as a start, four horses and a few tools. He located on a homestead on section 27, township 9, range 38, and began to build up a farm, putting up a sod shanty sixteen feet by thirty-two feet, in which he lived for several years. During the first months he was obliged to haul his water supply three miles to his place, and went all through the good, bad and indifferent times which fell to the lot of the early settler. The drouth years did not affect him very much, and he was able to raise some fair crops, but for the most part devoted his time to stock raising. He improved his farm in good shape, has added to his acreage until he is owner of a whole section of land, on which he has placed good buildings and every convenience for its proper operation, having a comfortable house, large barns, shed, shop, fences, etc. He has planted many trees, and has different kinds of fruit, etc.

Although Mr. Brown is now a man well along in years he does all his own work, raising many hogs and having a drove of about thirty horses and a bunch of cattle.

Our subject was married in Iowa to Mary Herold, daughter of Drury Herold, a well known farmer of that state. To them were born seven children, named as follows: William, Lafe, Mary C., Joe G., Frank H., Flora and Clarence. The mother died in 1884.

Politically Mr. Brown is a Republican, and takes a leading part in all local and county affairs, always lending his influence for good government and the best interests of his community.

WESLEY SEDA.

Wesley Seda, a thrifty and energetic resident of Cheyenne county, where his industry and business ability have put him well to the front of the procession, has passed through all the pioneer times of western Nebraska, and has gained for himself an honorable position as a worthy citizen and possesses the respect and esteem of his associates.

Mr. Seda was born in the village of Chrudim, Bohemia, September 28, 1865, and grew to manhood there, coming to America at the age of twenty-two years. He sailed from Hamburg to New York. After landing in this country he came directly west, settling in Cheyenne county, where he filed on a homestead in section 8, township 13, range 48, on which he lived for quite a number of years and succeeded in building up a good farm and home. He now makes his home in section 12, where he owns five hundred and sixty acres, and is largely engaged in farming, cultivating about two hundred acres. He also deals extensively in stock raising, running sixty head of cattle and ten horses. His ranch is improved with every necessary building, a fine new residence having been erected in 1908, and modern machinery, and is considered one of the prosperous and progressive farmers in his locality.

On July 22, 1893, Mr. Seda married Jennie Vannek, who was born in Bohemia in May, 1871, and came to the United States when a young girl, locating in Cheyenne county. Mr. and Mrs. Seda have a family of six children, as follows: Henry, Rosa, James, Sophia, Annie and Mary, all living at home.

Mr. Seda's parents resided in Cheyenne county for many years, both of whom are now dead. His wife's father is still living in the old country, at the advanced age of seventy-three years. The family are exceedingly hospitable, and have a host of friends in the community.

Politically he is a staunch Democrat, and is firm in his convictions.

JAMES WILLIAM BEED.

In listing the self-made men of Cherry county, Nebraska, who have become well-to-do agriculturists and have aided materially in the development of the farming interests of this region, a prominent place is accorded the name of J. William Beed. For many years this gentleman has followed farming in this region, and has met with pronounced success. He is known as one of the substantial citizens of his precinct, and well merits his high standing.

Mr. Beed was born in Franklin county, Iowa, on October 22, 1863. His father, Thomas Beed, was a farmer, born in England, who came to this country in his young manhood, lived in Iowa for a time and was one of the pioneer settlers in eastern Nebraska, his death occurring at Battle Creek, this state. The mother in maidenhood was Caroline Mann. There were nine children in his father's family, and he was the second member in order of birth. When he was nine years of age the family moved to Madison county, Nebraska, driving from Iowa by team, and it was in that section that he grew up. At the age of twelve years he started in for himself, working in different parts of Madison, and also in Burt county, and made several trips through western Nebraska before the railroad came in here. These were rough times, he being obliged to camp out often, and had many exciting experiences that were indelibly impressed upon his memory, of which he now tells many interesting tales of pioneer life in this state.

In 1884 Mr. Beed took up a homestead in section 33, township 35, range 30, of Cherry county, and after building a sod house, started in farming and building up a home. He "batched it" for four years, then married, and remained on the place up to 1905, when he took a homestead under the Kincaid law and now lives on this place. His farm contains nine hundred and forty acres of good land and he engages in horse breeding to a large extent, having about sixty in his herd. He cultivates only about one hundred acres. He has built up a good home and farm here, and is proprietor of a valuable tract of land which he has acquired alone through hard work and steady thrift. His residence is located on section 29, township 35, range 30, is well supplied with good water and a large number of trees.

In 1888 Mr. Beed was married to Miss Alice Grandon, whose father was an old settler in Cherry county. Mr. and Mrs. Beed have a family of three children, namely: Lonnie, Watson and Raymond.

Mr. Beed is a Republican in political sentiment, and has held different local offices in past years. He affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America.

MRS. ELIZABETH WIBERG.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wiberg, widow of Jonas Wiberg, who was a well known resident of township 21, range 14, Garfield county, lives on section 7, and personally superintends the management of this property with the help of her son, William D. Mrs. Wiberg is a practical farmer, as is also William, and the well tilled fields and attractive appearance of the whole farm bears evidence of their good management and business ability.

Jonas Wiberg was born in Sweden in 1823, of industrious and thrifty parents, and grew up taught to do all kinds of hard work on their home farm, receiving a common school education. He came to America in 1869, his parents having died when he was a boy of seven years old, and from that time he made his own way in the world.

Mrs. Wiberg's maiden name was Elizabeth Johnson. She is a native of Norway, born in 1843. Her first husband was Oleff Johnson. One child, Ed Olson, blessed this union. He now lives in Nance county, Nebraska, where he owns a nice farm. Mrs. Wiberg lost her first husband in her native land, he having passed away in 1870. That same year, when she was twenty-six years of age, she left her native land, coming to America with a party of emigrants. Her father and mother never saw them again, as she was unable to visit them. They are now both dead.

Our subject was married to Mr. Wiberg January 1, 1875, near Clinton, Iowa, and they came to Nebraska from that state in 1883, settling in Wheeler county before it was divided. They first took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres and started to build up a home and farm, but during the first few years had a hard time to get along and suffered many hardships and privations on the frontier, as they started without any capital to speak of and had only their strong hearts and willing hands to carve out a fortune for themselves. However, they were industrious and determined to win a home for themselves and family, and were not afraid to work hard for it. They were both accustomed to hard labor, as are all the sturdy children of the foreign countries who came here to build up a competence for themselves, and hard though the work here is, it is nothing compared with what they have to contend with there, at much less reward for their labor. They became well-to-do, having a tidy sum laid away for a rainy day, but were not classed among the wealthy residents of the county, though none were held in higher esteem than were Jonas Wiberg and his family.

Mr. Wiberg died October 26, 1902, leaving a family of fifteen children. He had seven children by his first marriage, namely: Gustaf, Christena, Eva, Frederick, Ida, Charles and Emma. The children of the second marriage are as follows: Mary, John, Sam, Anna, Belenda, William, Swen and Clara. Three children died in infancy. Mr. Wiberg was a prominent old-timer of Garfield county, regarded by everyone who knew him as a staunch friend, always willing to lend a helping hand to those in need. He was a strong Democrat, and while he took a commendable interest in local politics, never sought public preferment except to serve on the school board at different times. His family are all members of the German Lutheran church of Burwell. A picture of Mrs. Wiberg's ranch will be found on another page.

JOHN LONG KAY.

The gentleman above mentioned has been a resident of Sioux county, Nebraska, for the past many years, and was in this territory when the county was organized, and from that time on his name has been closely identified with every movement for the benefit of the region, and assisted materially in its development and growth. Mr. Kay resides in section 21, township 28, range 53, where he has a pleasant home and valuable estate.

Mr. Kay is a native of Linton, Yorkshire, England, born in 1858, on a farm. His father, Robert Kay, was a farmer all his life, dying in England in 1890, his mother in 1882; and our subject was raised and educated there, learning the woodturner's trade during his boyhood years, and followed that work during his life in England and later after coming to the United States. In 1883 he came to New Brunswick, landing at Halifax, and remained in that country for six months, then came to Lawrence, Massachusetts, and spent three months there in the weaving mill. In the spring of 1884 he came west to Minneapolis, and there worked at his trade for about six months. He next went to North Dakota and spent a short time in the harvest fields and in the fall of that year came to Iowa and followed farm work in Blackhawk county for about a year and a half.

In 1886 Mr. Kay came to Sioux county, and during the first summer Chadron was the nearest trading point. He settled on a pre-emption northwest of Harrison, and his first building on the place was a dugout. He started to work his farm, and later proved up on his claim. He worked out much of the time as a cowboy on cattle ranches in Wyoming, Idaho and Montana, and was with the War Bonnet Live Stock Company as a cowpuncher for about eight years. In 1900 he located on his present farm, and here he has built up a fine ranch, called "Linton ranch," named after the town of his birth in England. The ranch consists of six hundred and forty acres of deeded land, and the same amount of leased land, extending along the Niobrara river for some distance, furnishing splendid running water the year round for his stock. He has good improvements on the ranch, corrals, fences and good buildings, and everything in first-class shape. He runs a large herd of Hereford cattle, making a specialty of this kind of stock, and has made a success of his undertaking from the start. A picture of the residence will be found on another page.

In 1896 Mr. Kay was married to Miss E. D. Miller, daughter of D. D. Miller, a farmer from Iowa, who settled in Iowa in the early days. The father was born and raised in Ohio and the mother born in Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Kay are the parents of one son, Dull Long, and have also an adopted daughter, Mary R.

Mr. Kay has served his district as assessor for two years, and takes an active and leading part in local affairs. In politics he is a Republican.

HON. O. HULL.

The gentleman above named is one of the foremost citizens of Alma, Nebraska. For the past five years he has been lecturer for the Nebraska Farmers' Institute, treating on economic pork production and alfalfa culture, also soil tillage, advantages of a landed home and care and selection of seed corn, and is an acknowledged authority on these subjects. He is sent to every nook and corner of the state under the direction of the experimental station connected with the State University. He states that a marked advance is noted in improved methods of farming, the care and feeding of live stock, in the building up of the home and its surroundings, and all that goes to make a success in farming communities. This progress has a marked effect socially on the country neighborhoods, and from fifty to seventy-five per cent. of the farmers of Nebraska are actively interested in the farmers' institute lectures. Mr. Hull devotes the space from November 15th to March 15th of each year to this work, attending about four institutes every week.

Mr. Hull is a native of Sharon, Mercer county, Pennsylvania, and a son of Obadiah Hull, born in 1799, who came to Mahaska county, Iowa, locating on a farm there in 1858. Our subject's grandfather, Beshira Hull, served in the War of 1812, and his great-grandfather was Captain Isaac Hull, who commanded the Constitution during the war when the British ship Guerriere was captured, a famous action. This battle was fought August 19, 1812, and lasted from 5 o'clock to 7 p. m., when the Guerriere was compelled to surrender and was burned. The Constitution returned to Boston, Captain Hull resigned his commission and was succeeded by Captain Bainbridge, of the battleship Constellation. Captain Hull had three sons—Beshira, our subject's grandfather, John and Samuel. Beshira married Miss Rhoda Higbee. The mother of our subject was Miss Mary Moffatt, of Ohio. His brother, Amaziah Hull, graduated from Bethany College and was a classmate of President Garfield at Hiram College, in Hiram, Ohio. Mr. Hull himself is a graduate of the normal school at Oskaloosa, Iowa, and after leaving school was engaged in teaching for seven years. He was master of a granger lodge, and from that time on has always taken an active interest in these matters, working along the lines of the Granger Alliance and Populist movements. In the state legislature he was chairman of the committee on expenditure and accounts, and a leader of his party. He represented Harlan county in the legislature for two terms, i. e., from 1894-95 and 1896-97, taking an active part, especially in the session of 1897. He was elected by the Populists, and from the very beginning was state lecturer and organizer for the alliance for two years 1890-91 and 1892. Our subject is at present engaged in raising pure-bred Poland China hogs, and has a fine herd of from thirty to sixty on hand all the time. He came to Nebraska in 1876, locating in Lancaster county, where he remained for sixteen years, then moved to Harlan county, settling on a farm one and a half miles north of Alma. He now owns a farm on which he makes his home, located near the town. Since coming to this county he has assisted in the introduction of alfalfa in this section, and worked in every way for the advancement of the commercial and educational interests of Harlan county and Nebraska, and is a man of ready intelligence, forceful and of great versatility as a public speaker.

He was married in 1873 to Miss Miranda Clark, daughter of John and Sophronia (Hull) Clark, early settlers in central Iowa. Mr. Hull is a member of the Christian church of Alma, his father having identified himself with this religious organization at the beginning of the movement, together with Alexander Campbell, Barton H. Stone and other pioneers. The father of Mr. Hull was an ardent abolitionist, and one of those who took part in conducting underground railways in Ohio before the civil war.

HUGH HENDERSON.

Hugh Henderson, one of the old-timers and a pioneer settler in Brown county, Nebraska, is a man of keen business judgment, who has done his full share of work toward the development of the financial interests of the locality in which he chose his home. Mr. Henderson was born in Pennsylvania, May 5, 1852. His father, William Henderson, was a farmer of old American stock, whose grandparents were of Dutch-Irish descent. Our subject came west with his parents and their family of five children, of whom he is the second member, settling in Bureau county, Illinois, during the war, and there he was raised and educated. While still a young lad he struck out for himself, coming to Merrick county, Nebraska, and locating on the Platte river, where he remained for five years, and in 1884 he moved to Brown county, settling on his present farm in section 17, which he took as a homestead. He drove the entire distance from Merrick county in a covered wagon containing their household goods, the trip consuming eight days, the family experiencing many hardships and discomforts during the journey. After locating on this farm he went to work and put up a rude house of logs and began to break the land and get it in condition for cultivation. The drouth periods came on and heavy losses were sustained through the destruction of crops, but the family was never reduced to actual suffering, as they managed to make a comfortable living and provide themselves with the necessaries of life. He has one hundred and twenty acres of good land, with about seventy acres under cultivation, besides operating three hundred acres of leased land. He has a complete set of good farm buildings, and has planted a large number of trees since coming here, and made many improvements which add greatly to the value of the estate. He has a well kept farm, and is classed among the substantial agriculturists of his township.

Mr. Henderson was married in Illinois on Thanksgiving day, 1875, to Miss Evaline Burns, an Ohioan of old American stock. Twelve children have resulted from this union, named as follows: Oliver, James, Kittie, Ed., Albert, Milton, Iva, Hazel, Raymond, Percy, Viola and Clyde. Mr. Henderson takes an active interest in all the affairs of his community and is ranked among the leading citizens of Brown county. In political faith he is a Democrat.

RICHARD L. DEGRAFF.

Richard L. DeGraff, an old settler and successful agriculturist of Dawes county, is probably better known throughout his section of the country than any other person there. He has had an eventful and varied history, and has not come to his present comfort and ease without passing through many trials and much privation. He has resided in this county for the past twenty-five years, has developed one of the most valuable farms in the locality and gained the highest esteem of his fellow-men.

Mr. DeGraff was born in Dutchess county, New York, in 1838. When a few weeks old his parents moved to Prince Edward county, Ontario, Canada. The father, Nicholas, was of Dutch stock, born in Holland, while the mother, who was Miss Elizabeth Cole, of Scotch blood. Our subject was reared and educated in Canada, and at the age of seven-teen came to Wisconsin with relatives, where he worked in the lumber woods for seven years. In 1864 he enlisted in the Mississippi squadron and saw service up the Red river and into Louisiana, and was mustered out August 20, 1865.

In 1865 Mr. DeGraff, with his family, stopped at Ashland, Nebraska. He was then working on the Union Pacific Railway, and was one of those who helped construct that railroad from Fremont to North Platte, he doing contracting, furnishing wood, ties, poles, etc., and during those days many times waded across the Platte river. He was employed by the railway company for two years, and during this time had many encounters with the Indians, who roamed the region in large numbers. Skirmishes often occurred between the savages and the settlers and railroad men, and our subject took part in several of these encounters, relating many interesting incidents connected with the early days in this section. In 1867 he went to Iowa to escort his family to his new home, but the Indians were so hostile during that time that he was forced to remain there for quite a time, and finally decided to settle there, and did so, farming in different localities for about fifteen years, and from there moved to Missouri, where he bought a farm, later going to Kansas.

In 1884 he came to Dawes county, teaming here from Kansas with a covered wagon containing his goods. He located on his present farm July 6, 1884, in section 20, township 31, range 51, and went to work building up a home, his first dwelling being a dugout, so familiar to the settlers here. This had a roof made of poles and slab door, and the family occupied this up to 1890, when they erected a comfortable house. He also built good barns, and had his place well stocked with machinery, and in the year 1890, through some accident, the barn was burned down, destroying machinery, grain, six horses, harness, wagons, etc., causing a loss of some three thousand dollars. He had done considerable contracting in furnishing supplies for Fort Robinson and had made money, so that, although this was a serious misfortune to him, it did not cripple his finances to any great extent. He has been the means of getting many settlers in this region, and has done his share in the developing of its natural resources. Mr. DeGraff owns a farm of eight hundred acres, and has one hundred acres and more under cultivation, and the balance in pasture and hay land. He is engaged quite extensively in stock raising, running one hundred cattle and other stock. He is now one of the foremost citizens of his county, and has plenty to keep him in comfort and ease for the balance of his life, but he well remembers the time when he lived on nothing but buffalo meat all one winter. This was in 1866, and on one of his trips from Fort Laramie during this time he loaded his wagon with red cedar, which he sold at Alkali Springs, west of North Platte, for fifty dollars a load. Mr. DeGraff was at Fort Laramie in 1866 at the time General Taylor's treaty was made with the Sioux and Cheyenne Indians. He shook hands with old Red Cloud and Spotted Tail, and made a trade with Spotted Tail in a few minutes after shaking hands, trading him a blanket with red stripes on it for a fine robe worth six blankets.

Mr. DeGraff was married in 1860 at New London, Wisconsin, to Miss Sarah Carey, of American stock, born in New York state. Mr. and Mrs. DeGraff have a family of three children, namely: Dora A., George H. and Edward S.

Our subject is an Independent in politics, and although he takes a commendable interest in local and county affairs, has never sought public preferment.

CHARLES E. TROGNITZ.

Charles E. Trognitz, a prominent citizen of Cheyenne county, is a native of Germany, born March 5, 1857, and grew to manhood in his native country, coming to America alone, landing in New York city in 1873. He remained there for a short time, then went to Brooklyn and spent thirteen months. He returned to Germany for a visit, then again crossed to the new world, this time coming directly west and locating in Omaha. He remained there to January, 1875, then joined a party of settlers who were going into the Black Hills, but he only traveled with them as far as Sidney and stopped there for six months, doing different kinds of work. He secured work on a ranch owned by Bosler & Lawrence, on which they ran a large number of cattle, and stayed on that ranch up to the Indian outbreak in 1878, then left the place and went into the sand hills to locate abandoned government horses, wagons, mules, etc. The sand hills at that time were practically uninhabited, as on account of the bad water and other conditions the government camp had been abandoned.

After locating supplies there, our subject bought two yoke of cattle on Running Water creek, eighty miles east of the Black Hills stage crossing, from S. Neuman, and started into the sand hills to get the horses, etc., which he went in search of. These were left by the government employes about fourteen miles south of Running Snake creek, and upon undertaking the journey only took with him a few days' supplies. Just before he arrived at the creek he met an old messmate. He chatted with him a few moments, as he was very much surprised to meet any one but Indians and government scouts, as the soldiers had all left the locality. After a little time the man asked him which direction he was going, and Mr. Trognitz told him what he intended doing, etc. He said he happened to be going the same way, on his trip to the old Bosler ranch on Blue creek, and calculated to camp about six miles the other side of Snake river in the open prairie, so as to avoid a surprise by Indians. He then suggested carrying part of the provisions on his horse, and Mr. Trognitz agreeing, the flour and bacon was soon transferred to a place behind his saddle. No sooner was this done than he pointed to the southeast, calling our subject's attention to something in the distance, and when the latter turned to look the other set off with all speed and left him abandoned on the plains, with scarcely enough food to last him a day. This incident occurred in October, 1878, and is an experience he will never forget. He then took a trip for Mr. Neuman with a load of grain for Wounded Knee, and was caught in a heavy blizzard, was snowed under and had to dig out his wagon, and at different times his team gave out and he had to transfer his load to the top of the hills, and finally had to abandon the load and ride the mules to his destination, and found that he was supposed to have perished in the storm and men had been sent out to look for him.

During the same winter Mr. Trognitz had a contract to haul logs for the government at Pine Ridge agency, and in the spring sold his outfit and later bought some mules and outfit and began freighting to the Black Hills. He continued at this work up to the spring of 1881.

In June, 1880, he started in the restaurant business in Sidney, then took up a homestead at Lawrence Forks, Cheyenne county, and had several sections under control from that time on up to 1883, when he sold out to Lange Bros. and started in the livery business in Sidney, carrying that on for about four years.

He next engaged in the implement business, which he ran for about two years, then as he was elected sheriff of Cheyenne county, gave up his establishment. He had the distinction of having been the first man to erect a two-story building in Sidney.

Mr. Trognitz was elected sheriff of his county in the fall of 1889, and served up to 1894, then began ranching, and has been engaged in that line of work ever since. He now has a ranch of five hundred and forty acres, and runs about one hundred head of stock cattle and some horses. He has built up a valuable estate. During his career as sheriff Mr. Trognitz passed through the usual experiences in the wild western country, and was one of the most efficient officials the county ever had, and he recounts many interesting tales of those times. He was known as the "cowboy sheriff," and on the second day after entering upon the duties of his office captured a noted criminal, for whom there was a reward of $1,000. In 1890 Mr. Trognitz was married to Florence McWilliams, at Chicago, Illinois. Mrs. Trognitz was born in Newcastle, Pennsylvania. One child resulted from their union, Carl James, living at home and attending school.

Mr. Trognitz is at the present time lessee and manager of the Union Pacific Railroad Company's stock yards. He is active in all affairs of state and county, and is a staunch member of the Republican party.

LAMBERT JOHNSON.

Lambert Johnson, one of the enterprising agriculturists and worthy citizens of section 22, township 15, range 53, is a young man of industrious habits, progressive and up-to-date in his chosen work, and owner of a good farm on section 22. Mr. Johnson has become successful through his strict integrity and honest dealings, building up a comfortable home and gaining the respect of his fellow-men and is known as one of the solid citizens of Kimball county. A portrait of him will be found on another page of this volume.

Mr. Johnson was born in Sweden and first saw the light in 1874. His father was a farmer during his entire life, his death occurring in 1888. Lambert lived at home and assisted in carrying on the farm as a boy, leaving his native land when he was about fifteen years of age, bound for America. He landed in Baltimore and immediately started for the west, locating in Kimball county, Nebraska, at the first, and began working at whatever he could find to do on farms and ranches here, and also spent considerable time in Wyoming. He drifted from one place to another, and finally settled permanently in this vicinity in 1901, taking a homestead on section 22, township 15, range 53. He was practically without capital other than a strong heart and willing hands, and set about developing a farm. He put up a building of stone and dugout combined, and kept bachelor's hall for a number of years, constantly adding improvements and breaking up land for crops. He proved up on his homestead and afterward bought land adjoining as he became able, and now owns six hundred and forty acres, mostly in hay land and pasture, farming about sixty acres. He has erected a good house, commodious barns and other buildings, has his place all fenced, and keeps considerable stock. He is one of those thrifty sons of northern Europe who have done so much toward developing the west, starting with little and never yielding to discouragement and failure, but facing every trouble and hardship with the sturdy determination to conquer, and very few there are who have not made a complete success where many weaker natures have failed.

Mr. Johnson was married in 1907 to Miss Tensia Benson, also a native of Sweden, who came to this country but a short time prior to her marriage to our subject. They have a pleasant home and are held in the highest esteem by all who know them. Mr. Johnson is a Republican in political views. He takes a commendable interest in matters pertaining to the good of his community and has done his full share in developing the neighborhood in which he lives.

D. C. CONGDON.

D. C. Congdon, a prominent railroad man of North Platte, Nebraska, came here in 1877 from Middletown, Connecticut, beginning with the Union Pacific as fireman. He became a freight engineer in 1881, and in 1891 was promoted to passenger engineer and has held this position with the company ever since, proving a most capable and efficient man.

Mr. Congdon was born in 1858 at Middletown, Connecticut, and is a son of Joseph and Emma (Miller) Congdon, of New England stock. Our subject's uncle, I. H. Congdon, was general master mechanic of the Union Pacific Railway when only forty miles of the road were built, and remained for twenty years in this position, with headquarters at Omaha. A brother of our subject, M. M. Congdon, was general foreman of the Union Pacific at North Platte up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1881 at this place. Another uncle, Albert Congdon, was master mechanic and later purchasing agent of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway for several years, then was appointed one of the directors of the Canada Southern Railway. R. S. Congdon, another uncle, was a conductor on the Illinois Central Railway almost from the beginning of that road's existence, and is now on the retired list of the company, residing at Council Bluffs, Iowa. One uncle was also a conductor in New Hampshire and still another one, L. O. Gassett, was master mechanic of the Lake Shore road at Cleveland, Ohio, prior to 1875. William Congdon, an uncle, was a pioneer engineer on the Lake Shore Railway. Nearly all the members of our subject's family have been connected with railroad work for many years past, and the name Congdon is familiar to every railroad man in most of the states in the Union. Mr. Congdon himself has a splendid record and successful career. He has never had a serious accident since he has taken charge of a train, and is a thorough master of his profession. He is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and highly esteemed by his fellow-men.

Mr. Congdon was married in 1882 in North Platte to Miss Dora Hughes, daughter of Thomas Hughes, a pioneer railroad man, beginning his career as an engineer in the days when coal was an unknown quantity in furnishing fuel for engines. He began at Norwich, Connecticut, and railroaded west to the state of Montana, for many years being conductor on a passenger train. He is now retired at the age of seventy-six years, and resides at Hastings. Mr. and Mrs. Congdon have one son, Guy J., with the Western Pacific at Salt Lake City, Utah. The family are members of the Episcopal church and universally esteemed in the community.

WILLIAM ERRICKSON.

William Errickson, a prominent citizen of Cherry county, Nebraska, resides on his ranch located in section 11, township 29, range 31, where he owns one of the finest ranches in this section of the country. He is well known throughout the region as an old-time cowboy of western Nebraska, and during the early days has "punched cattle" all over these western plains.

Mr. Errickson, a native of Illinois, emigrated with his parents to Hamilton county, Iowa, in early childhood, remaining under the parental roof until 1876, when he came to Columbus, Nebraska, and drove stage to York on the Burlington and Missouri Railroad one year. In 1878 he came to western Nebraska and worked on different ranches in this region until filing on a homestead in 1884, situated on what is now familiarly known to people in these parts as the "Bachelor ranch." Excepting the summer of 1885, when he trailed cattle to Montana, he has remained on that place up to 1899, when he moved to his present ranch, which is located in the vicinity of Kennedy postoffice. Here he has worked faithfully and built up a model place, the ranch containing thirty-three hundred and eighty acres. He is extensively engaged in stock raising, running from six hundred and fifty to seven hundred head of cattle and one hundred and fifty horses. He is a man of great business ability, and recognized as one of the leading ranchmen in this part of the country. He has erected fine buildings on his property, including a splendid concrete house fifty-two by twenty-eight feet, commodious and fitted with modern conveniences, including bath room, running water and a heating plant. The outside is finished with front and rear porches, the main part being full two stories and garret in height. It is a handsome building, the lower story of concrete and the upper frame. One of his barns is an immense building, sixty by sixty feet, with a hay mow thirty-five by forty-eight feet in size. Mr. Errickson has expended much time, thought and money in the improvement of his ranch, and his efforts are certainly a credit to his taste, as there is no better appointed estate to be seen throughout this section. It extends from Gordon creek seven miles north to Boardman creek with a fine lake covering a hundred acres situated between. Seven wells, with as many windmills, furnish water to the portions of the ranch remote from lake and creeks. A view of the ranch residence and surroundings is shown on another page in this work.

In 1887 Mr. Errickson was married to Miss Margaret Gilbert, the second of a family of five girls, a native of Santiago, Chile, where her father, Rev. Nathaniel P. Gilbert, was serving as missionary. He was one of seven brothers, all of whom won distinction at the bar, in the medical profession or in government service. The mother, Mary Perkins, was a daughter of Dr. Joseph Perkins, president of a medical college at Castleton, Vermont.

Mr. and Mrs. Errickson are the parents of seven children—Roy, George, Gilbert, Hazel, Francis, Gordon and John, all born and reared on the home ranch. Johnnie died in March, 1908, the first break in the family.

Mrs. Errickson coming of a distinguished family, inherits their mental ability. She is a woman of wide culture and a worker in church and school interests in her neighborhood. She taught the first school in the district, receiving less in payment than her expenses in securing the situation. She is the organizer and mainstay of the Sunday school in the sod chapel at Kennedy. Her grandmother was Margaret Ingersoll, sister of Rev. John Ingersoll, father of Robert G. Ingersoll.

HANS P. LARSON.

Hans P. Larson, a well known resident of Sheridan county, Nebraska, was born in Sweden, September 3, 1863, and raised on his father's farm. The latter died in 1869, and the family continued operating the farm, our subject assisting his mother in the farm work, and also doing carpenter work in the vicinity of his home. He was the eighth member in a family of nine children, and at the age of twenty years he came to America, settling in Illinois, where he remained for one year. The following year he came to Nebraska, locating in Madison county, and farmed there for two years. In 1885 he sent for his mother, who came from Sweden and joined him in Nebraska, and the following year they went to Colorado, where our subject took up a tree claim and pre-emption. He proved up on the pre-emption and sold the property, and in 1888 returned to Nebraska and took up the homestead where he lives at the present time. This is situated in section 1, township 24, range 46, Sheridan county. He put up one of the first buildings ever erected in that section, which was built of sods, and the family lived in it for several years. He began working for the railroad, and did freighting for several years, and liked this work very well, accumulating quite a little money, and states that he would just as soon go to work at it again if the opportunity presented itself.

Mr. Larson had a very small start when he first came to Nebraska and began in the stock business on a very small scale. He got his first bunch in 1892, purchasing them on time, and for some years had a hard time in getting along. He gradually improved his farm, putting up good buildings, and in 1896 erected a comfortable, commodious barn, trading hay for the material to build it. In 1903 he put up a fine residence, and has his place well fenced and corraled. He has spent about four thousand dollars in buildings, and has as good a set of farm buildings as there is in this locality. He aims to keep about four hundred head of cattle, with about thirty-five horses for farm purposes and the market, which is about all that the place can support comfortably. Mr. Larson owns seventeen hundred and sixty acres of deeded land, and besides this leases a large tract, in all controlling about seven sections. He uses a large portion of his land for the production of hay, and cuts about four hundred tons on the valley land on his home place each year. He has tried farming at different times, but found that it did not pay, and for the last few years has given up the cultivation of all except about ten acres, which is used for home consumption.

Mr. Larson's farm is located one and a half miles from the school, and his boy of seven years rides to school. The nearest railroad station is at Reno, and Antioch is the nearest post-office.

In addition to his stock raising Mr. Larson has quite a large part of his land planted to tame grasses, and he also has a number of acres in alfalfa, which does very well. He has some sweet clover and brome, a grass planted which yields a fair crop. During the raids by the cattle rustlers he was instrumental in securing the arrest of a number of the thieves, and assisted in their conviction. He is of active public spirit, and has held different local offices on the Republican ticket, having served as constable in the early days.

Mr. Larson was married in 1898 to Miss Maude I. Jesse, a native of Iowa, born in 1875. She is a daughter of Samuel Jesse, born in England, who came to America in early pioneer days and settled in Iowa, being among the pioneers in that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Larson are the parents of three children, all born and raised on his present homestead. They are named as follows: Stanley Lawrence, born June 8, 1899; Stelma Flora, born December 14, 1901, and Theodore Gustave, born February 28, 1905.

Mr. Larson has been very successful in his line of work, and feels well satisfied with what he has accomplished. He has built up a good home and farm, and is contented to make this his home for some time to come.

ZADOK F. ANTRIM.

Zadok F. Antrim, one of the best known pioneers of Sioux county, Nebraska, is a prosperous agriculturist of section 3, township 32, range 55, where he has spent the past seventeen years. He has followed farming nearly all his lifetime, and despite many discouragements during his early residence in this section has acquired a thoroughly improved farm and become one of the well-to-do men of that locality.

Mr. Antrim was born in Delaware county, Indiana, in 1853. His father, William Antrim, was a farmer of American birth and breeding, and he married Phoebe Stewart, born and raised in Indiana, of American blood. When our subject was an infant the family left Indiana and settled in Cass county, Iowa, on a farm, situated fifty miles from Council Bluffs, which was their nearest trading point and supply station. He grew up on the frontier, and in 1867 went with his parents to Missouri, where they settled on an entirely unimproved farm, and eventually succeeded in clearing it up and improving it in good shape. In 1885 he left home and emigrated to Sherman county, Kansas, there taking up a homestead, and batched it for about two years, and then was married to Carrie Clark, and together they succeeded in building up a good home and spent in all about seven years in that state, but were unable to get ahead rapidly enough to suit them, as he raised but one crop during all the time he lived on that place, and was compelled to work out most of the time to make a living for his family. They had gathered together a few head of cattle and some chickens, and from these obtained most of their living. They lived in a sod shanty, and also had sod stable and outbuildings. Finally he was obliged to give up the struggle and leave Kansas, so he decided to try Nebraska, and disposed of the farm and came to Sioux county, landing here in 1892, driving the entire distance with a team and wagon containing their household goods, the family coming by the same route, and their nights were spent in a tent which they pitched wherever they happened to strike. They were twenty-one days on the road, and passed through some severe storms during the journey. Upon arriving in this vicinity Mr. Antrim purchased his present farm, which is located on Hat creek, in section 3, township 32, range 55. He at once went to work and put up good buildings, erecting a comfortable log house and barn, and started his farm. This place is called the "O. K. ranch," and had been established back in the seventies by Thomas J. Bingy. It was all good land, with quite a good deal of timber, plenty of fuel and good water. Since coming here Mr. Antrim has opened up about one hundred and fifty acres to cultivation, all of which is irrigated, and he has many trees and small fruit orchards planted, and the place abounds with berries, etc. Mr. Antrim has built a dam twenty-two feet high on Hat creek, which makes a reservoir for his irrigating system. There are fifteen hundred acres in the ranch, all fenced, and he has put good improvements of every description on it. He has met with many failures since locating here, the principal one being the loss of his barns with other property by fire in 1896.

Our subject and his estimable wife have a family of four children, named as follows: William F., Laura M., Model A. and Vern K. Mrs. Antrim's father, William Clark, was a well known farmer and old settler in Missouri, where she grew to womanhood.

Our subject has been one of the leading men of his community ever since settling here. He has always taken an active part in building up the schools and has held school office for seven years, having acted as treasurer and also director. Mr. Antrim has also served as township assessor for two terms, and justice of the peace for the same space of time. He is a Republican.

DELBERT E. SHERMAN.

Among the enterprising and prosperous business men of Cherry county none is better known or more universally esteemed than the subject of this review.

Mr. Sherman was born in the city of Aurora, Illinois, in 1857. His father, L. W. Sherman, was a contractor and builder, a native of New York state, as was his mother, Miss Electa Bathrick. Our subject, the eldest of three children, was reared and educated in Boone, Iowa, where his parents had settled in 1861. At the age of thirteen years he became self-supporting, doing farm work for a period of several years before coming west to Custer county in 1879. Here he located one hundred miles from a railroad, working as a cowboy until 1882, during which time he traveled over the entire west end of the state in the saddle. On his return to Iowa that year he was married to Miss Elveretta Boyer, daughter of a prosperous farmer of that state. Two children have resulted from this union, namely, Elsie and Ethel.

Mr. Sherman with his wife returned to Custer county, where he resided for two years prior to his advent to Cherry county in 1884. He at once settled on a homestead six miles south of Valentine, perfecting his title in five years, occupying a roughly built log house having no floors. It is men and women who cheerfully endure such deprivations that constitute the bone and sinew of our western country.

In 1889 Mr. Sherman moved to Valentine and opened a harness shop, which he conducted some eight years, being one of the oldest business men of the town. In 1897 he was appointed postmaster of Valentine under McKinley and reappointed in 1898 when this was made a third-class office. In January, 1902, he was again appointed under Roosevelt, and in 1906 was reappointed for a term of four years.

Mr. Sherman has always held positions of trust since coming to Valentine, being at present a member of the school board, having served one term as deputy sheriff of the county some years before. He is always interested in all commercial and social affairs of the town, is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America.

Mr. Sherman has the distinction of introducing and operating the first threshing machine in Custer county.

SAMUEL H. POWELL.

Samuel H. Powell, an enterprising business man of Burwell, engaged in the real estate business at that place, is one of the substantial citizens of Garfield county. He is well known throughout the county as a worthy member of society, and has spent many years of his life in this section of the country. He has built up a successful business and enjoys a comfortable competence as a result of his earnest endeavors and strict integrity.

Mr. Powell was born in Crawford county, Pennsylvania, in 1862. His parents were natives of New York state, of Welsh and good old Yankee stock, and still live in Pennsylvania. Our subject was the youngest of four children and was reared on a farm, attending the common schools and later the high school, receiving a very good education, which well fitted him for a business career. In July, 1888, Mr. Powell came to Nebraska and established a drug business in Burwell, having associated with him F. A. Webster, and they developed a good business. He remained in that line of work up to 1893, then engaged in the insurance and real estate business, in which he has continued ever since. He now has connected with him in this business W. P. Thorp, and the firm has met with marked success, dealing in land all over Garfield and the adjoining counties, and they are well known throughout the western part of the state and enjoy an enviable reputation as good business men and successful dealers. Mr. Powell is of the opinion that Nebraska is the best state of all for the poor man to start in, and says that any one having the energy and a small amount of ability, who will work hard and stick to it, can have no reason to complain, and is sure to gain a comfortable competence here. He has been successful in accumulating a nice property, and is well liked by all who have ever had dealings with him in a business or social way.

In 1891 Mr. Powell was married to Miss Ola M. Blair, a native of Marshalltown, Iowa, born of German parents, and raised and educated in her native state. To Mr. and Mrs. Powell the following children have been born: Lela, Frank, Mildred, Dorothy, Noah and Samuel. Mr. Powell is not a party man, but always votes for the best men, whether Democrat or Republican. In 1897 he was elected county treasurer on a petition and served for two years.

JOHN CLINTON WALCOTT.

Among those who have taken part in the upbuilding of the western part of Nebraska from its early settlement, the gentleman above named occupies a first place, and his name is familiar to all of the old-timers in that section as a man of integrity and energetic labors, always doing his full share for the good of his community. Mr. Walcott resides in section 24, township 32, range 49, where he has a comfortable home and valuable property.

Mr. Walcott was born in the British West Indies in 1857. His father, Edward Walcott, was an Englishman, and he married Miss Anna Pasmore, also born in England. Our subject grew to manhood in the West Indies, where his father was employed by the government as a custom house official, and the son was educated there. He came to the United States when he was twenty years of age, locating in Iowa, remaining there for a number of years, then came on to Nebraska in 1887. He at once filed on a homestead in section 25, township 32, range 49, and put up a board shanty, in which he lived in one room, "batching" for some time, and during the first years was employed on railroad construction work whenever he could get it to do, filling in his odd time working on ranches and anything which came handy, constantly building up his farm and home. For a time he did well, then the dry years came on and he had a hard time to get along, losing several crops in succession and was only able to make a living, and barely that, never raising a crop for seven years, living entirely from the product of a few cattle and some chickens. He stuck to his place, however, and gradually the times grew better and he improved the place, put up good buildings, fences, and kept buying more land, and is now the owner of nine hundred and twenty acres, part timber land, and runs a large number of cattle and other stock, and has done well. He has one hundred acres under cultivation, and raises splendid crops each season. There is a nice, clear stream running through his land, Chadron creek, and this furnishes an abundant supply of good living water for his stock and domestic use.

Mr. Walcott was united in marriage in 1892 to Miss Lizzie Morgan, daughter of Thomas Morgan, an early settler in Illinois, he dying when Mrs. Walcott was a child three years of age. Her mother was Miss Sarah Williams, whose parents were both born in Wales. Mr. and Mrs. Walcott are the parents of one son, Edward.

Mr. Walcott is a Republican and has been treasurer of the school district for many years.

H. E. TECKER.

H. E. Tecker, of Franklin, is one of the earliest settlers in western Nebraska, having come here in 1878. He is a prominent farmer and stockman, and during the past thirty years has raised, bought, fed and shipped stock from this locality, dealing only in high-grade stock.

Mr. Tecker is a native of Illinois, where he grew up. His father, Herman Tecker, was born in Hanover, Germany, and came to America about 1830, locating in Lake county, Illinois, where he spent many years. He was there engaged in farming and stock raising and feeding, and became very familiar with that country and in Chicago along this line of work, as he was a large shipper of cattle and hogs to that place. He remembers the city from its small beginning up to the size it has now grown.

The mother was Miss Ellen Elliott, a native of London, England. In 1884 our subject came to Franklin county, purchasing a one hundred and sixty-acre farm in Bloomington township, located on Center creek, and has since added to the place a farm adjoining the south part on the bottom lands, lying just south of Franklin; also in 1906 a farm north of the town, consisting of six hundred acres. Has since sold one hundred and sixty acres and now owns four hundred and forty acres. Here he feeds from one hundred to one hundred and fifty head of cattle and from one hundred and fifty to two hundred hogs each year, and intends going into the stock business on even a larger scale. He keeps only high-grade animals and finds it a profitable enterprise. He also engages in mixed farming, and raises one hundred and seventy-five to one hundred and eighty acres of corn and other feed annually, and buys considerable to keep his stock on. Thirty acres is used for an alfalfa patch, and he cuts several good crops of this each season. Mr. Tecker considers this a great feeding country, and on the same amount of money invested will make twenty per cent. here to four per cent. in Illinois.

In 1877 Mr. Tecker married Miss Mary Marferding, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. They are the parents of eight children, namely: H. M., Harry, Walter, all of whom assist their father in the farming and stock business; Mrs. Blanch Austin, of Franklin; Mrs. Maud Rayburn, of Kansas City; Ruth, married to Steve Murray; Mabel and Mary, living at home. The family occupy a fine residence in Franklin and have a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Politically Mr. Tecker is a Republican and has taken an active part in public affairs in the town and county for many years.

RALPH H. HAGBERG.

Among the well known railroad men of western Nebraska, the above mentioned gentleman occupies a prominent place. He resides in McCook, Redwillow county, and is recognized as one of the leading citizens of that thriving city.

Mr. Hagberg was born in Sweden, August 1, 1867, and came to America with his parents in 1870. His father, Alex. Hagberg, settled in Galesburg, Illinois, with his family in that year, remaining there for two years, then removed to eastern Nebraska, locating at Harvard. They lived there until 1872, then came on to Furnas county and took a homestead and pre-emption, also tree claim, situated near Arapahoe. This was then only a wilderness and very sparsely settled, there being only two families within a radius of twenty miles from the place they located on, they being at Elk creek. The father was a very active and hard-working man and one of the pioneers who aided materially in the development and growth of this section of the country by persuading many Swedish settlers to come to Nebraska from Illinois, telling them of the many advantages and opportunities to be found in this state. He was a Republican, active in party affairs, keeping abreast of the times in all public matters and promoting educational interests in every way he could. For many years he acted as assessor of Furnas county, and was a man much above the ordinary in intelligence and ability. He had received a very good education in Sweden and this was of great benefit to him and gained him the reputation of being one of the best informed men of the times. He was an active member of the Lutheran church, and the whole community sympathized with the family when his death occurred in 1904. In the early years in this state he was engaged in the live stock business, and made a marked success at this work. He left four children—Fred, a farmer of Clay Center, Kansas; Charles, who has been very successful in the mining business, located at West Point, California; Edith, now Mrs. Frank Marshall, of Arapahoe, Nebraska, and our subject, who since 1887 has been connected with railway work. In that year he began working for the Burlington & Missouri Railroad at Arapahoe, and the following year ran a section at Mascot, remaining at this for two years. In 1890 he was made foreman of the Oxford yards, and the year following was appointed foreman of construction on laying steel rails for the main line, and followed this for three years. In June, 1895, he became roadmaster at McCook, running from that place to Akron, and in 1904 was transferred to the portion east of McCook. He has made a good record for himself in all his work, and is a man of marked ability, gaining the whole confidence of his superiors.

Mr. Hagberg was married in 1899 to Miss Alma Rosanter, a native of Sweden, who came to this country when a young girl. They have no children.

Mr. Hagberg is a good citizen of the community where he has made his home, and a man who devotes his entire time and attention to the work he has chosen. In political faith he is a Republican.

THOMAS PEACOCK, DECEASED.

This honorable name of a man who passed on to the better world, but leaving behind him the record of good and useful years, should not be omitted from any comprehensive roll of the makers of Brown and Rock counties, Nebraska. He was born in Buckinghamshire, near London, England, March 4, 1829, and came to this country when eighteen years old. His parents, James and Sarah (Mott) Peacock, were born and reared to a farming life, and to this noble labor Thomas Peacock always turned. His parents settled in Essex county, New York, in 1847, and there the young man made his home, and when a little older grown engaged in farming for himself. There he was married on September 26, 1854, to Miss Margaret M. Bogardus, a native of the state of New York, having first seen the light at Albany, October 27, 1837, where her father, David H. Bogardus, had long been engaged in the double occupation of farming and keeping hotel. He was of Holland ancestry, while her mother, Sally A. (Newbury) Bogardus, had an American lineage running through many generations.

To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Peacock were born nine children, of whom four are now living: David, at present on the old home farm; Margaret, wife of Hudson Brown, Gregory, South Dakota; Thomas, living in Newport, pastor of the Methodist church; and Hattie Maria, who married a real estate broker of Gregory, South Dakota. For the youngest of these was named the postoffice of Mariaville, Mr. Peacock at that time being postmaster, and she being the first white baby born on the prairie. This office, Mr. Peacock and his wife held from the spring of 1882 until the fall of 1893, when the latter resigned after Mr. Peacock's demise.

Mr. and Mrs. Peacock remained in New York for the nine years that followed their wedding, and in 1862 removed to Fillmore county, Minnesota, where they maintained their home for the next four years. They went back to their old New York home, but remained only a year, as the east had lost its charm. Coming to the west once more, they settled at Omro, Wisconsin, a town on the Fox river, then of considerable importance; but after a residence there of two years removed to Green county, Iowa, which became their home for nine years. In 1879 Mr. Peacock brought his family by covered wagon from Iowa to what is now Rock county, Nebraska, and settled on section 35 in Kirkwood precinct. During the summer they lived in a tent, but as the winter advanced, moved into a log house which they built during the fall. He proved up his homestead in due time, and at the time of his death his farm had become one of the more noted places in the county. He died at home October 18, 1892.

Mr. Peacock served as a soldier in the Union army during the civil war, and for two years wore the blue as a member of the Seventy-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry. His services were rendered in the army of the Potomac,

RESIDENCE OF THE LATE THOMAS PEACOCK,

under command of General McClellan, and there he received injuries which produced disabilities necessitating his discharge.

Mr. Peacock took an active interest in political matters and did much work in the administration of local and public affairs in his own community. He helped organize Rock county and gave close attention to the formation of the school districts and the inauguration of public education. He was an active Republican.

The Peacock homestead forms an extensive estate of four hundred acres, with about sixty under active cultivation. There is a fine grove of forest trees, and over a hundred fruit trees, with sixty vines of improved varieties of grapes. One hundred and twenty acres are devoted to tree culture, and ample fuel for all purposes is furnished to the dwellers on the farm.

The subject of this biographical writing is remembered as an honorable man, a faithful husband and father, an industrious farmer, and a loyal and patriotic citizen of the county.

A view of the premises is to be found on another page, as well as a print of the original building which for many years served as postoffice and hotel. As many as seventy-five have been fed here at a single meal, colonists passing through to other parts of the west. The famous "rustler," Doc Middleton, has refreshed himself at their board and at the time of his capture the posse which had him in charge dined here on their way to the place of his incarceration.

MERRICK E. ROBERTSON.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history resides on sections 19 and 30, township 35, range 30, Cherry county, Nebraska, where he has a fine estate and pleasant home. Mr. Robertson was born in Sullivan, Indiana, November 4, 1860, the second son of a family of five children. About two years later the family moved to Shelby county, settling on a farm, and in 1866 went to Edinboro, Johnson county, where the father engaged in merchandising. In 1874 the family returned to the Shelby county farm, where they resided at the time our subject started out for himself.

In 1885 Mr. Robertson came west, locating in Cherry county on August 5th of that year, and in October, filed on a homestead, where he now lives. He first built a sod house, such as was in general use among the pioneer settlers, and lived in this for the next nine years, "batching it", as many of the early settlers had to do. His first team was a yoke of oxen, and he spent his time when not occupied in farming, freighting in order to make a living, saving his money for improvements on his farm. For two seasons he worked at brick manufacturing in Norfolk, Nebraska, using the proceeds of his labor to add to his property, now amounting to six hundred and forty acres of good land in sections 19 and 30. He has this all fenced and improved with good buildings, also a fine grove of trees, and plenty of good hay land. Minichaduza creek and Spring creek both run through a part of this ranch, the former of which he has dammed, making a fine fish and ice pond.

His farm is beautifully situated with a school nearby, of which he is director, he having always taken an active interest in building up the schools in his community. He had a hard time during the first years, and met with many discouragements through loss of crops, and with insufficient capital to develop his place. He was here during the Indian scare of 1891, but remained at home when so many of the settlers were driven from the section through fear of the savages.

October 1, 1896, Mr. Robertson was married to Miss Jessie Story, whose parents, William and Lydia (McKenney) Story, moved from Shelby county, Indiana, to Cherry county, Nebraska, in 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson have a family of three children, named as follows: Lilly, Sylvanus and Rosetta.

All of Mr. Robertson's time is spent in building up his ranch and home. He cultivates only a small portion of the land, but cuts over two hundred and fifty tons of hay every year, keeping sixty to seventy-five head of cattle and a few horses. He does not seek political preferment, although he is deeply interested in all affairs of local importance. Politically he is a Republican.

JOHN NASLUND.

For over thirty years the gentleman whose name heads this review has been identified with the development of different parts of the state of Nebraska, and the past twenty-two years has been passed in Deuel county, where he gained a high station as a citizen, and incidentally became one of the substantial men of his community. He is the owner of a fine estate in Chappell precinct, Deuel county, and is one of the leading men of the community, taking an active part in every movement for its betterment.

Mr. Naslund was born in Sweden, on July 22nd, 1851. He was raised and educated there, assisting his parents in carrying on their little farm, and remained there up to 1879, then came to America. He located at Alton, Ills., but only remained a short time, then came to Omaha, landing there in June, 1879. From there he went to Iowa and spent about a year in that state at Red Oak and later at Council Bluffs, then returned to Omaha, and afterwards made his home in York county for four years. In February, 1886, he arrived in Deuel county and took homestead rights on section 20, township 13, range 44, proved up on the place, then sold out. He is now living on section 2, township 12, range 45, which he bought from H. G. Span, an old-timer in Deuel county, and has built up a good farm, having 240 acres, and his son, John A. Naslund, owns the sections joining his father's farm on the east and south.

Mr. Naslund has passed through all the experiences of the pioneers of this section of Nebraska. He has been prosperous and successful during later years, although he had a hard time in his early residence here. He was among the very earliest settlers in the locality, and about the first to start farming. Of late years he has been engaged in the stock business on quite an extensive scale, and at the present time has a herd of one hundred and fifty cattle. He has the farm supplied with all modern conveniences, good buildings, and a thoroughly improved and well equipped estate. At the present time he has about eighty acres irrigated and four hundred more acres will soon be under irrigation. In 1907 the average yield per acre of winter wheat was forty-three bushels, the best yield in this region. In 1908 he had a yield of forty-one and one-fourth bushels to the acre. The farm is operated by himself and his son.

Before leaving Sweden our subject was married to Anna Olund and to them have been born three children, namely: John Albert, Henry W. and Lily Marie, all living on the home ranch. Mr. Naslund has done his full share in the improvement of his section of the county, assisting in building up the schools, and is now serving as moderator of district No. 29. In politics he is a Republican. His sons, John A. and Henry W. own an Advance steam threshing outfit, new, modern, and up-to-date, and do work all over this part of Nebraska and Colorado. For years Mr. Naslund has followed the trade of plasterer, and has been known for years as "John Naslund, the plasterer," being one of the first in this neighborhood.

THOMAS R. EVANS.

Prominent among the progressive agriculturists and business men of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, is the gentleman above mentioned, Thomas R. Evans, who resides on section 22, township 33, range 23.

Mr. Evans was born in Denbighshire, Wales, Great Britain, February 26, 1843. His father, Robert T. Evans, was a Congregational preacher, and came to America with his family in 1857. After filling a pulpit in the state of New York he migrated to Low Gap, Missouri, where he ministered to a congregation thirty-seven years, until killed by a cyclone in Livingston county, June 20, 1883. His mother, who was Miss Elinor W. Williams, survived her husband's death by several years, coming to Keya Paha county with our subject, where her death occurred in 1906 at the advanced age of ninety-two years. Mr. Evans was the only son of his parents, and grew to manhood in New York state, where he learned the shoemaker's trade and photography. In the spring of 1865 he came west, settling in Waukesha county, Wisconsin, where he entered the mercantile business. He was later appointed postmaster of Waukesha, under Abraham Lincoln's administration. He spent eight years in all in Wisconsin, then came to Iowa, settling in Iowa county on a farm and started in to build up a home. He resided on this place for about seven years, his land comprising eighty acres, which he sold and moved to Missouri, where he remained for seven years, operating a farm.

After the cyclone of 1883 Mr. Evans, who was a deacon in the church, felt that he would have to make a new home for himself and family, also the people who lost all their effects and homes, so a meeting was called and he was elected as a delegate to select the spot for new homes, and he came to Nebraska, and selected Keya Paha county as one of the most desirable places he found. His own and thirteen other families came to western Keya Paha county, making up nearly a full train with the party, as they came on to Ainsworth. Mr. Evans located on section 20, township 33, range 23, where he put up a log house and went to work building up his home. He handled ox teams, opening up a large part of his farm with oxen and although he experienced all the hardships and privations of the early settlers in this locality he persevered and finally succeeded in establishing a comfortable farm and home, at the present time owning one hundred and sixty acres, after having divided his farm and giving part of it to his son. He has plenty of running water on his place, also natural timber and wild plum trees.

Mr. Evans surveyed the town site of Norden, and platted the town for the owner, and still owns a half interest in the site and a number of lots there.

Mr. Evans was married in Wisconsin in 1864 to Miss Mary Jane Parry, whose father, Ishmael Parry, was a farmer. Ten children were born of this marriage, named as follows: Robert (deceased), Annie, Robert, Thomas, Ishmael, May, Llewellyn, Hugh, Ollie and Florence. His wife died February 6th, 1906, and is deeply mourned by her family and all who knew her.

Mr. Evans was elected county surveyor four terms, serving faithfully and well. He has dealt to considerable extent in real estate, and carried on a loan business for eastern capitalists in this section, and been engaged in a number of large enterprises aside from carrying on his farm. He is a man of active public spirit, and takes a commendable interest in local affairs. He is a strong Republican.

WILLIAM HUFF.

William Huff, who resides in section 1, township 31, range 49, Dawes county, Nebraska, is one of the prosperous and successful citizens of his community. Mr. Huff has spent many years of his life in this locality, and is well and favorably known to all the residents of his township as a citizen of worth, and a progressive and energetic farmer.

William Huff was born in Mahaska county, Iowa, in 1850. His father, Thomas Huff, was a native of Germany, and came to the United States in his young manhood, settling in Kentucky. He married Zilpha Hale, of Welsh descent, born in Kentucky, and they came to Nebraska in 1868, with their family of nine children, from Iowa, where they had lived until our subject was eighteen years of age. They began as pioneers in southeastern Nebraska, settling in Richardson county, where for a number of years our subject was engaged in trading among the Indians who then were scattered all through that part of the state in large numbers. He was also engaged in farming there for some years, and owned a farm of ninety acres up to 1885, when he disposed of his property and moved to Sheridan county, where he was among the early settlers and again went through pioneer experiences. He lived at Hay Springs for a time, then located three miles west of that town, where he worked on rented land, then filed on a homestead on the Niobrara river, southwest of Hay Springs, in Dawes county. There his nearest neighbor was two and a half miles distant, and the country was entirely unimproved, wild land, but he at once went to work and built a substantial frame house and started a farm. For three years he met with very good success, then the dry periods came on and he was unable to raise any crops and was obliged to work out for a living, hauling timber and wood off the land he now owns to get money for provisions for his family, and on two or three occasions he went into the Black Hills to work for a time and try and get a little money ahead. In 1899 he finally sold out his homestead and moved to his present farm in section 1, and here he has a well improved farm and ranch of seven hundred and forty-two acres of deeded land besides operating six hundred and forty acres of leased school land. His property is located on Chadron creek at Box Springs and is well supplied with good living water and plenty of timber. He runs ninety head of cattle and about a dozen horses, and farms quite a large part of his land.

When Mr. Huff was twenty-five years of age he was married to Miss Frances Shaw, whose father, John Shaw, was a freighter and pioneer in Nebraska. Mrs. Huff's parents were of Irish birth and settled in this country when young people, locating in Nebraska in the early days, and our subject's wife was reared and educated there. Mr. and Mrs. Huff are the parents of the following children: Maude, Irene, Thomas, Anna, Mead and Katie.

Mr. Huff is a man of active public spirit, and has held numerous local offices. He has served on the school board of the district for ten years past.

JAMES CURRY.

James Curry, a prominent resident of Box Butte county, Nebraska, owns a fine farm in section 23, township 26, range 50, and from a very humble start has succeeded in building up a valuable estate and has also borne his share of the burdens in building up his locality.

Mr. Curry was born at Ontario, Canada, in March, 1833. His father was a farmer, a native of Ireland, as was also his mother, they settling in Canada when young people, building up a good home and rearing their family of nine children. Our subject worked on the home farm during his boyhood, attending the country schools, remaining with his parents until he was twenty-six years old, then started to farm on his own account and followed that occupation in Canada up to 1866, when he came to the United States and located in Omaha. He only remained there a few months, then located near St. Paul, where he built a mill and operated it for a short time, and was among the pioneers in eastern Nebraska. In 1888 Mr. Curry first struck Box Butte county, and filed on his present farm, which is situated on section 23, township 26, range 50. His first dwelling was a sod house, and his first team was a pair of oxen, with which he broke up all of his land. He also hauled timber and fuel from Pine Ridge with these, camping out at night under his wagon, and went through the regular frontiersman's experience. However, he has been extremely fortunate in never having had any total failures, once having lost some of his crops by hail storms and suffering to some extent from the drouths, but has never experienced the suffering and privation that has fallen to the lot of so many of the early settlers in this region, although his only possessions when he struck this county were his oxen and wagon and six cows. He first worked at clearing his farm, and has succeeded in building up a good home and valuable estate, accumulating about two thousand acres, of which he has sold over one thousand six hundred acres. His place is all fenced and well improved with good buildings, etc., and he keeps quite a large number of stock, mostly horses and cattle.

In 1857 Mr. Curry was married to Margaret Hiller, daughter of a farmer and early settler in Lampton, Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Curry are the parents of nine children, five of whom are now living, namely: James, William, Margaret, Albert and Robert, and all of whom are settled in good homes in Sioux county.

Mr. Curry has held school offices for many years. He was elected justice of the peace several times but never served.

DANIEL STINARD.

Daniel Stinard, one of the most successful farmers of Cherry county, is one of the old settlers of this community.

Mr. Stinard was born in New Rochelle, New York, in 1853, and is a son of Augustus Stinard, a farmer who was also interested in several business enterprises. Our subject, the youngest of ten children, was reared and educated in his native state. Until the age of eighteen years he remained under the parental roof and then launched out for himself in the dairy business for a time, later entering the mercantile pursuits in Goshen, Orange county, and Mt. Vernon, in West Chester county, New York. He met with moderate success but finally determined to go west where prospects for greater achievements were brighter, and in 1884 came to Valentine, pre-empting and proving up a claim, after which he filed on a homestead on which he also proved his claim. While on his homestead he opened a store two miles east of Niobrara, which proved to be a very successful undertaking. He continued on the farm engaged in cattle and horse raising until 1893, when he came to Valentine and opened a clothing store, which he has been successfully conducting since that time, developing into one of the solid business men of the town. He is numbered among the substantial old settlers of Cherry county, and has been honored by his fellow townsmen with one term as mayor of Valentine. He has built up an enviable reputation as one of the leading men of the community.

Mr. Stinard was married to Miss Mary E. Lawrence, daughter of Augustus Lawrence, of old American stock. They had six children, of whom but three are living, namely: Ida and Ada (twins), and Lucella.

Mr. Stinard is a staunch Republican.

MAGNUS JOHANSON.

Magnus Johanson, one of the old settlers of Kimball county, Nebraska, is known throughout that section as a prosperous and energetic farmer and worthy citizen, and well merits the high station which he holds. A portrait of him appears on another page.

Mr. Johanson was born in Sweden November 22nd, 1851. He was the fifth child in a family of eight, and was one of a pair of twins. He grew up in Sweden, following farming as a boy. Both parents lived and died in their native land, and when our subject was thirty-two years of age he came to America, landing in New York city, living in that state for about two years. He next went to Iowa and then came to Sidney, Nebraska. For several years he was on several different pieces of land, but had poor luck, and did not locate permanently for some time. In June, 1904, he homesteaded in section 2, township 16, range 54, and now has the entire section. He went through all the old Nebraska hard times, meeting with losses and discouragements, but never gave up hope, and finally was successful in building up a good home and improving his ranch in good shape. He has about one hundred acres cultivated, and runs forty head of cattle and a bunch of horses. His ranch is supplied with improvements of every kind, including good buildings, etc., and he is classed among the wealthy men of his locality.

On January 29th, 1894, Mr. Johanson was married to Miss Carolina Sanderson, a native of Sweden, who came to America in 1883. They have an interesting family of five children, all living at home and named as follows: Herbert Edwin, Carl Helmer, Bertha Amanda, Emil Alexander and Melvin M.

Our subject's twin brother, John Johanson, came to America in 1887, locating on section 14, township 16, range 54, Kimball county, and now owns a fine farm of three hundred and twenty acres. He is married and has a family of seven children. The family occupy a pleasant home, and have a well improved ranch, and the father is extensively engaged in the stock raising and farming business.

Magnus Johanson is prominent in local affairs, and has done much to forward the interests of his township. He is at present acting as moderator of school district No. 12. He is a staunch Republican.

MRS. L. J. DOYLE.

The subject of this review, since April, 1906, has been associated in business with her husband, J. M. Doyle, proprietor of the Washington Hotel, at Holdrege, Nebraska. Mrs. Doyle was formerly the wife of F. D. Traverse, of Holdrege, and came to Holdrege from Pennsylvania, in 1880. She was at that time the widow of Jesse Evans, and the mother of one child, Henry Evans, now residing at Seattle, Washington, a successful builder and contractor of that place.

Mrs. Doyle is a native of Wayne county, Pennsylvania, born near the town of Sherman in 1853, and is a daughter of Henry and Margaret (Bush) Jayne, the latter at present residing in Prairie township, hale and hearty at the age of eighty-three years. The Jayne family came from England, settling in Long Island in 1660, and Henry Jayne had four great uncles, who fought in the Revolutionary war: Colonel William Jayne, on Washington's staff; Captain Timothy Jayne, who had forty-nine members of the Jayne family in his company of soldiers, all relatives, and all were captured at Fort Washington, only eighteen of whom returned, the others having died on the Jersey prison ship. Henry Jayne's father, Benarah Jayne, was in the war of 1812, and he himself served in the Civil war. Mrs. Doyle has one brother, Benjamin Jayne, of Goodland, Kansas, and two sisters, Mrs. Ella Dobson, of Holdrege, and Anna B. Scott, of Omaha.

Upon coming to Phelps county Mrs. Doyle took up a homestead, and at present is the owner of several fine farms in this vicinity, and since taking her first homestead she has been constantly engaged in farming operations, and has bought and sold farms and residences, always with a profit, and is a shrewd business woman. Prior to her marriage to Mr. Traverse, which took place in 1887, and since his death, in 1892, she was sole manager of her large interests. She bears testimony to the fact that her son, Henry, when only a boy, became a great help to her, and later was very successful in managing farms and raising stock, also in feeding and buying and selling stock of all kinds. Prior to his locating in Seattle, he was married to Miss Hattie Rowland, of Dubuque, Iowa, a niece of George Rowland, of Industry township. F. D. Traverse came to Holdrege in 1884, and for four years served as postmaster under President Cleveland. He was county treasurer for two years, from 1890 to 1892 inclusive, and was engaged in the real estate and loan and insurance business, and gained a reputation as being one of the best business men here, always in the front rank of those who work for the upbuilding of Holdrege, and the development of this county. He was one of the "pushers" along all lines, an active member of the Democratic party, and his popularity was demonstrated by the fact that with only four hundred Democrats in Phelps county to one thousand eight hundred Republicans, he was elected treasurer, irrespective of party lines. He was a Mason, an active member in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was one of the organizers who also helped to build the Presbyterian church of Holdrege. He was proprietor of several fine farms, and personally operated and managed three hundred and twenty acres in Lake township, of which he was half owner. He was very successful in these lines, and after his death his widow sold cattle to the amount of $4,000 which he had on these farms. His success in grain raising was equally pronounced, and he was a successful farmer and business man in every sense. He left a family of two children, namely: Margaret, married B. C. Baker, of Holdrege, a prominent piano dealer; and Frank D. Traverse, attending school at Holdrege.

In 1905 our subject was married to J. M. Doyle, well known all over the state, having been in the real estate, insurance and mercantile business for over twenty years, in Lincoln, Hastings and Alexandria. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle made a success of the hotel business, and run a first-class house patronized by only the best people.

Our subject is one of the best agriculturists in this locality, having in one year cleared $1,879.25 from one hundred acres, hiring all the help in operating this land.

Mrs. Doyle is a prominent member of the Baptist church of Holdrege, and was one of the organizers of the church, and is an earnest worker in its interest. She is most successful in raising funds for its support, and devotes much of her time to the work of the upbuilding of the locality in which she chose her home. She is a very estimable lady, and enjoys a host of warm friends and acquaintances.

J. H. CLEARMAN.

J. H. Clearman, of Minden, Kearney county, is prominently known as a successful and prosperous business man and worthy citizen of his locality. Mr. Clearman is proprietor of the New York department store in Minden, with branches at Norman and Keene, both in Kearney county.

Mr. Clearman was born in 1859 at Springfield, Missouri. He came to Nebraska in 1884, locating at Sutton, where he was in business for many years. He then had branch stores at York, Harvard, Stanton, Upland, Clay Center, Hartwell, Wilcox, Keene, Norman, Chester and other points, and was very successful in his management of his large enterprises. He is a man who attends strictly to his business matters, and is thoroughly up-to-date in all his methods, and a hustler. His main store at Minden is a fine brick building forty-four by one hundred and forty-four, which he built in 1900. This has a full size basement, and the whole building is devoted to salesroom space. It is a modern, up-to-date store in every way, and he carries a full line of general merchandise. He has an immense trade steadily spreading out, now extending all over Kearney and the adjoining counties, and is favorably known by everyone in this section for his strict honesty in all business dealings. Both Bradstreet and Dun's give him the credit of being the only man to manage branch stores successfully all through the hard times of the past several years, and during the different panics that occasionally swept over the country. He operates on a strictly cash basis, and is a merchant and not a banker, being willing that the banks should carry the people's paper and accounts, but he only buys and sells for cash at the right prices. He is a great believer in the opportunities of Nebraska as a money-making state, and besides his residence and business property in Minden he owns an eight-hundred-acre ranch in Lincoln county, also other farm lands in different parts of Nebraska.

Mr. Clearman was married in 1884 to Miss Hattie Morgan, daughter of D. Morgan, a retired merchant and capitalist of Minden, and Mrs. Clearman assists her husband in the management of his mercantile affairs, and he realizes that this constant association and confidence and help are important factors in his success.

Mr. Clearman does not take a pronounced part in public affairs as an office seeker, but only as a citizen who is interested in the upbuilding of the state that has been his home for the past twenty-four years.

JOHN F. STRONG.

The gentleman whose name heads this review is one of the prosperous agriculturists of Sheridan county, where he has a valuable estate and pleasant home. Mr. Strong is a native of Jefferson county, Iowa, born in 1849, near Fairfield. When he was two years old his parents moved to Lucas county, Iowa, and here he was raised on a farm until he was twenty. His father, Thomas L. Strong, was of Scotch-Irish descent, born and raised in Ohio. He was the first settler in his precinct in Lucas county, and built the first school house in that locality, which was named "The Strong School," and still bears that name. There were six children in his father's family, of whom he was the second member, and he remained at home up to 1869, then began working out on farms by the month, and continued at this for about five years. He then rented a farm and started in for himself and followed farming in Iowa for eighteen years, but never made much money at it, so in 1893 he decided to go where he could get free land, and came to the state of Nebraska. His first location was seven miles west of section 25, township 24, range 44, his present home, and here he tried farming, remaining on that place for seven years, and at the end of that time was poorer than when he came here. He kept a few head of stock, and this helped him out some, but he could not make any money at mixed farming, as the land was sandy, and when the dry time came on it blew out and took the crops along with it. In 1900 he sold that farm and bought his present home of one hundred and sixty acres. Nearly one hundred acres of this is good hayland, and here he went into the stock business. He had some seventy head of stock when he took this farm, and engaged exclusively in the stock raising business, and never had tried farming here. He soon afterwards took an additional four hundred and eighty acres, all of this being range land, and besides this leases the same number of acres of school land. His children also have a homestead which is located near his place, so he has plenty of hay and pasture land for his stock, and handles about two hundred head, doing all of the work of caring for this himself, except in haying time, and then is obliged to hire outside help. Mr. Strong is satisfied that he has done splendidly here, and much better than had he stayed in Iowa on rented land, but had he bought land there and held it for a raise, he might have made a good thing of it. When he first struck Nebraska he did not have much capital, and made a big mistake in trying to farm, but he had always followed that work and did not like to give it up, and in fact, likes it much better than stock raising, and may at some future time sell out his present range and buy a good farm.

In 1874 Mr. Strong was married to Miss Lorinda Wyland, a native of Elkhart county, Indiana. Her father, Israel Wyland, was of RESIDENCE OF GEORGE ARTHUR HEATH,

Cherry County, Nebraska.

German descent, born in Ohio, settling in Indiana when he was twelve years old, and still resides in that state. His wife was a native of New Jersey, and died when her family of children were still quite young. Mr. and Mrs. Strong have five children, who are named as follows: Royston C., Bessie M., Della A., James F. and Dick W., two of whom are married and reside in Alliance, and the rest make this their home, their postoffice address being Lakeside, Nebraska. Mr. Strong is a gentleman of active public spirit and takes a keen interest in local and state affairs, but has never held any except local office. He cast his first vote for U. S. Grant, in 1872, and has always voted the Republican ticket.

CLARENCE A. FORSLING.

In the gentleman above named we have another one of the sturdy sons of Sweden, who left his native land and came to this country to help in the steady march of progress, and incidentally to build up for himself a home and fortune for his descendants. Mr. Forsling was born January 10th, 1870, and grew to the age of eleven years in the land of his birth, then came to America with his parents. A sketch of his brother, G. A., is given in this volume, also the family history.

Mr. Forsling first lived in Hardin county, Iowa, after striking the states, and made that his home for six years, later went to Chicago and secured employment with the Northwestern Railroad Company and was connected with that company for one year, then came to Phelps county, and later to Kimball county, Nebraska. He is the owner of several ranches, one situated on Lodgepole creek and one on the table land, owning altogether about four thousand acres, and engages in stock raising on an extensive scale, running about one hundred cattle and seventy-five horses. Besides his stock raising operations he raises large quantities of hay each year. He has a complete set of good buildings on his ranch, and every improvement for the operation of a model farm. Mr. Forsling is also engaged in the livery business, and a member of the firm of Forsling & Walker, pioneer real estate agents, with offices in Kimball. He owns and occupies a handsome residence in the town and is a prominent factor in all town and county affairs. In 1900 he was elected sheriff of the county, holding that office up to 1905. Politically he is a Republican. Mr. Forsling was married to Miss Rose Lynch, July 13th, 1898, at Cheyenne, Wyoming. Miss Lynch was born in Cheyenne county, Nebraska, her parents being a pioneer family in the region, and among the very first settlers. Her mother is still living, but the father is dead. Four children have been born to our subject and his amiable wife, namely: John W., Lela, James C. and Mary, all living at home.

GEORGE ARTHUR HEATH.

George Arthur Heath, a progressive and enterprising farmer and stockman of Cherry county, Nebraska, is one of the early settlers of this region. He resides on his pleasant farm in section 18, township 33, range 34, known as "95 Ranch," where he has succeeded in building up one of the valuable estates of the locality, and is considered one of the substantial agriculturists of the community.

Mr. Heath was born in Canada July 14, 1864. His father, George Heath, lived on a farm near Libby Mills, and the family remained there until our subject was two and a half years old, then moved to the United States, locating at Steamboat Rock, Hardin county, Iowa. There were six children, of whom he was the oldest member, and at the age of eighteen years he started out for himself, securing employment on farms in the locality of his parents' home, and continued at this for three years. In 1886 he came to Nebraska and settled on a homestead in Cherry county, which place he now occupies. During the first three years he worked out through the winter and devoted his summers to building up his farm and breaking land. He had a hard time to get along and went through the dry years, but was very fortunate in never having had a total failure of crops since starting here. He has made all he had since coming to this locality, as he had no start at all except a strong heart and willing hands, and has worked hard to meet his payments on his land and to improve his place, but is now owner of a ranch and farm of four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land besides a homestead tract of four hundred and eighty acres additional. He farms one hundred and thirty acres and is engaged to a large extent in the stock business, running about one hundred head of cattle and twenty horses. A view of the family residence and surroundings will be found on another page in this work.

Mr. Heath was first married February 7, 1892, to Miss Anna Mone, born in 1864, at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, her parents being of Irish descent and early settlers in this locality. Two children were born of this marriage: Rosa and Nellie, and on September 22, 1899, the family suffered the loss of the wife and mother. February 25, 1903, Mr. Heath married Miss Ella Milslagle, born in Iowa in 1863.

When our subject came to this section he was the second settler on Boiling Springs Flat, and has remained on this ever since. His entire time is devoted to his home and farm, and although he is a loyal Democrat he has never had any time to devote to taking an active part in politics.

ALBARA D. BEEBE.

Albara D. Beebe, whose postoffice address is Ainsworth, Brown county, Nebraska, is widely known as a leading representative of the agricultural interests of this section of the state, and has won from rather unfavorable conditions by industry, thrift and prudence, a very considerable competence, which he is able to enjoy while still in the vigor of his manly strength and vital powers.

Mr. Beebe was born in Chardon Village, Geauga county, Ohio, November 14, 1849, and came of a family long settled in the state of New York, but of remote English extraction. His parents, Nelson and Caroline (Twung) Beebe, were devoted to the cultivation of the soil. They early felt the drawing of the west, and for some years made a home in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin, but later removed to Waseca county, Minnesota, where from 1860 and on the paternal home was maintained, and where the subject of this writing and the only other member of the family, his brother, George, who is now a resident of Oregon, grew to manhood. There Nelson Beebe died, and his death was soon followed by that of his wife. Albara D. Beebe was thrown upon his own resources, and began life for himself as a worker in the grain warehouses at Wells, Minnesota, at the early age of eighteen years. He was quick to master the mysteries of grain buying and grading, and for some years was employed as a grain buyer. While a resident of Rushford, Minnesota, he was elected marshal, and held the office several years. While still in Minnesota he was married in Waseca county, and was blessed with three children, Charles, Albert and Clara. He contracted a second marriage in Nebraska, in 1880, when Miss Sarah Hastter became his wife. She is a native of Richland county, Ohio, and is a lady of many charms and social abilities. To this union there have come five children, George, Robert, Effie, Lloyd and Lawrence, all of whom were born in this state, and constitute a bright and interesting circle of young people.

For a time Mr. Beebe was engaged in the drug business at Rushford, but came to Nebraska and made his home in Hall county for some two or three years. In 1882 he removed his family from Hall county to a claim which he had located the previous year, and described as part of section 14, township 30, range 21. The homecoming journey was not uneventful, being made across country with ox teams and a covered wagon. The house which became the first family home was built of logs, and had a shingle roof, the first of the kind between Longpine and Ainsworth. For two years it was without a board flooring, that being a luxury that could await the establishment of the family finances on a firmer footing. For some two years Mr. Beebe used oxen before he was able to supply himself with work horses. Take it altogether these were hard and toilsome days, but their memory can but make sweeter the present independence and ease. To maintain his family he worked out for a time, and hauled wood for a living. At one period he worked forty days for seventy-five cents a day and his dinner. Now these experiences seem almost a forgotten dream amid the privileges and comforts of his present well earned independence. He is the respected proprietor and operator of a choice half section of Brown county, all of which with the exception of about sixty acres is under active cultivation. Here he has erected a very comfortable and attractive two-story farm house, forty-eight by twenty-six feet, and a modern and well appointed barn forty-eight by thirty-two feet. He has brought into fine condition a charming grove as well as a good orchard. Here he has an ample supply of the best farm machinery, and is extensively engaged in stock raising. In the spring of 1906 he had some twenty head of horses, thirty head of cattle and one hundred and thirty-five hogs. He owns his entire plant clean and clear, and owes not a dollar to anybody. He has done his full share in the development of Brown county, and is known by all conversant with its history as one of its leading settlers and pioneer citizens. Although never taking an interest in party politics, he has been a patriotic and public-spirited participant in local affairs; and for more than fifteen years has been school director, and assessor for eight years.

PHYLANDER H. YOUNG.

Phylander H. Young, a very successful ranchman of Cherry county, Nebraska, whose home and business are to be found in section 24, township 31, range 29, is western born and bred, and thoroughly familiar with all the conditions of life in that vast region which he has made his home. His father, George Young, was a successful cattle feeder in Saline county, Missouri, where his mother, Virginia F. Gilliam, was born. His father was a native of Maryland, and the Youngs have long been identified with American affairs, tracing their lineage to a sire mentioned in colonial affairs in 1780.

Mr. Young was ninth in a family of ten and the youngest son of his parents. His earlier years were spent on the parental farm, but when he was nineteen years of age he left home, and for a time was employed in Lincoln, where he was connected with a wholesale grocery. From Lincoln, he went to Ogden, Utah, with a sheep "outfit," and for some months was engaged in trailing sheep from Ogden to Soda Springs, Idaho. For a time he was a fireman on the Southern Pacific railway, running between Ogden, Utah, and Carlin, Nevada. On a trip into Yellowstone Park he became stage driver for the trip and posed as an old guide, a bluff he successfully carried out. After his trip to the Yellowstone Park he again secured work ranching at St. Anthony, Idaho. He was employed as a horse ranger in Montana for one summer and in 1901, came to Thedford, Nebraska, with horses from Montana, which he trailed over to Dewey's Lake, where he remained for a month, and then went back to the old Missouri home, having contrived to pack into a few brief years about as many and as varied experiences as often fall to the lot of a young man. In March, 1902, he returned to Cherry county and finding a tract on Gordon creek that suited him purchased first about two thousand acres. In the following autumn his father also came to this part of the state, and together the two bought adjoining land from time to time until a tract of five thousand five hundred acres had been purchased, all of which has been fenced and very extensively improved. The property is known as Gordon Valley Ranch and extends for over ten miles along Gordon's creek. It is one of the most desirable tracts of land devoted to cattle raising in this entire region, and feeds annually upwards of a thousand cattle and about fifty mules. The improvements are better than the average, and the buildings compare favorably with those constructed in far older communities. The brand is V bar open A. The place is equipped with a fine set of scales and such other improvements as a modern and up-to-date cattle ranch demands. There are three fine groves on the ranch, eight good wells, over three of which have been erected windmills with accompanying tanks. One of the interesting illustrations in this work is a view of the residence and its surroundings.

Mr. Young was married October 15, 1905, to Miss Stella M. Crowe. Her father, J. W.

Crowe, a native of Nova Scotia, is an old settler, locating southwest of Merriman, Nebraska, in 1888. The mother, Catherine (House) Crowe, was born in Wisconsin. They are highly respected for their many sterling qualities of heart and mind. To Mr. and Mrs. Young have been born two daughters: Virginia Catherine, born August 3, 1906, and Laura Edna, December 2, 1907. They are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Young affiliates with the Masonic fraternity at Valentine.

WILLIAM I. WRAY.

William I. Wray, a representative citizen of Cherry county for the past twenty years, and a prosperous business man and former agriculturist, is a gentleman of sterling character, who commands the respect of a large circle of acquaintances.

Mr. Wray was born on his father's farm in Jasper county, Iowa, February 25, 1870. The latter came to Nebraska with his family, settling in York county near the line of Holt county in the spring of 1879 and moved to Holt county in the spring of 1881, where he located on a homestead, remaining until the spring of 1888, when the family came to Cherry county and settled on a farm. Our subject started out for himself, working in Keya Paha county for about six months, going west in 1895 overland to Idaho and all through Wyoming, Nevada and Oregon, where he worked at freighting, mining, etc., and remaining three years. At the end of that time he came back to this county and farmed for one year, then engaged in the tubular well drilling business. Since starting in this work he has put down nearly two hundred wells in Cherry county alone. He has been very successful in this work, and has followed it for seven years, becoming well known all over the county and adjoining counties for his faithful work and strict attention to business.

December 15, 1898, Mr. Wray was married to Miss Cora A. Elliott, whose father, Nathaniel Elliott, is an old settler of Nebraska, now residing on the Niobrara river, twelve miles south of Georgia. His wife was Miss Sarah Keys prior to her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Wray have a family of five children, who are named as follows: Flossy, Sylvia, Eddie, Violet and Olive.

Mr. Wray has a nice residence in Georgia, as well as a ranch home, the dwelling erected in the spring of 1908 on a Kincaid homestead of six hundred and forty acres, one and a half miles west of Georgia. The family is well known and highly esteemed as good citizens and neighbors. Mr. Wray is a Republican, and takes a commendable interest in all affairs that tend to the advancement of educational and commercial opportunities in his community. He is a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Odd Fellows lodges of Georgia.

CAPT. W. H. BANWELL, M. D.

Capt. W. H. Banwell, one of the leading physicians of Orleans, Harlan county, Nebraska, has been engaged in the practice of medicine for many years in this locality.

Mr. Banwell was born in Andover, Ashtabula county, Ohio, September 10th, 1832, and is a son of Henry and Hannah Castle Banwell, both born and raised in Northamptonshire, England. He was educated in Springfield, Clark county, Ohio, and there studied medicine up to 1859. At the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Sixteenth Ohio Regiment, the second day after the firing on Ft. Sumter, and served four months, participating in several battles in West Virginia, then re-enlisted and served for four years in the Forty-fourth Ohio Regiment as a private under Colonel Samuel A. Gilbert. He received the appointment of second lieutenant in this company, and afterwards as first captain of Company B, serving until the close of the war. Then he enlisted in the Eighth Ohio Cavalry. He refused a captain's commission in this company and entered the secret service, serving four years and eight months. His last service was at Nashville, Tennessee, under Lieutenant Colonel Shafter, who died in 1906.

On this occasion Capt. Banwell followed after Champ Ferguson, who with a company of thirty soldiers rode through Tennessee and shot down Union men, he being one of those who caught and helped hang Ferguson, and in a recent letter General Shafter refers to this occurrence. He also served in the Twenty-third Army corps with the army of the Cumberland. His brother, Henry, was killed at the battle of Petersburg, Virginia, and his other brother, George, was with our subject all through the war. Captain Banwell was first at the killing of the rebel General Garnet at Carricks Ford. He was at Lookout Mountain and in battles around Nashville and Chickamauga, Antietam, Winchester, etc., and during all of this hard service he was never once wounded, and was always at the front of his regiment. At the closing of the war he resumed the study of medicine, graduating at the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery July 1, 1871, soon after establishing himself near Springfield, Ohio, where he continued to practice up to 1882. He was elected president of the Clark County Medical Association and held that position for a year, and in the fall of 1882 came to Harlan county, Nebraska, and took a homestead, where he has remained ever since. He has made Orleans his home for the past twenty-four years, practicing all over Harlan and the adjoining counties. His professional career extends over a period of thirty-five years. He is a man of active public spirit, taking a deep personal interest in all affairs of the community, both commercial and social. He has been a member of the Masonic lodge since 1864, and has taken all the degrees of that society. He is a Shriner in the veteran Masonic association of Nebraska, which means that he is over sixty years old and has been a Mason in good standing for over thirty years. He was master in Melrose lodge, No. 60, in Orleans for five years. Was for sixteen years a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and has held the post of surgeon of the Burlington & Missouri Railway at Orleans for the past sixteen years.

Capt. Banwell was married in Clark county, Ohio, in 1867 to Miss Lucina E. Sprague, daughter of Darius Sprague, a leading farmer of Clark county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Banwell are the parents of three children, who are named as follows: Jessie, wife of Ed. L. Means, a banker and druggist of Orleans; Ollie, wife of Walter H. Green, cashier of the Massachusetts National Life Insurance Company, of Indianapolis, Indiana; and Colonel Hayes Banwell, residing at Arapahoe, Nebraska, cashier and manager of the Citizens State Bank at that place.

In addition to his professional work, Capt. Banwell is interested in a large tract of farming land situated near Orleans, to the management of which he gives his personal attention. In politics he is a strong Republican.

JOSEPH LEOPOLD DE BOCK, DECEASED.

Joseph Leopold DeBock is well-known to nearly all the pioneers of western Nebraska as a leading citizen, and for many years prior to his demise was a resident of section 22, township 32, range 55, in Sioux county.

Mr. DeBock was born in Belgium, in 1842, and grew up in that country. His father, Carlos, was a farmer and nurseryman, and a very wealthy man, and Joseph received many advantages in the way of education and travel as a young man. At the age of twenty-five years he came to the United States, settling at first in Michigan, where he worked in the pine woods for a time. He was a man of very strong character and iron constitution, and a hard worker, and his strength was tested to the utmost in his work, as many times he was obliged to stand all day in water while logging and doing that work. He finally drifted to Utah, where he lived for twelve years, engaged in the mining business, and owned a mine of his own, also manufactured charcoal. In 1884 he came to Nebraska, settling in Sioux county, driving in with two teams and covered wagon, camping out along the road, the trip taking three months, making this journey on account of his wife's failing health, and while on the trip she experienced much sickness, to which was added the discomfort of having to go through many storms and rough weather. On arriving in this region they located on Hat creek, where Mr. DeBock built a log cabin twelve by fifteen feet, and made a comfortable dwelling, in which they lived for a number of years. Chadron was their nearest trading post, a distance of sixty miles. He went to work to break up land for crops, and used the numerous springs on the places to irrigate his land, planted small fruits, and after they were in bearing peddled the fruit at Ft. Robinson, twenty miles away, also sold vegetables, and in this way got a start. He bought three cows, for which he paid forty dollars each, and these furnished them with plenty of milk, butter, etc., and also had some to sell. When the drouths struck the vicinity he suffered crop failures, but his irrigation system helped him out considerably, and he was able to add improvements, and gradually added to his ranch, owning at the time of his death, July 23d, 1903, four hundred and eighty acres, well improved with good buildings, etc., and stocked with cattle, hogs and some horses. Mr. DeBock put in many years of hard work in opening up his ranch, which was in the timber belt, and he did much grubbing and clearing. He also helped in developing the resources of his locality, and did much toward aiding the prosperity which has come to the county.

Mr. DeBock was married, in 1864, to Antoinette Connen, born at Green Bay, Wisconsin, where she was reared, her father being a farmer in that vicinity. Nine children were born to them, named as follows: Rose, Louis, Henry, Mary, Silva, Arnold, Leo, James and Roy. Since the father's death Mrs. DeBock has successfully carried on the home ranch, and is assisted by Leo, who bids fair to be as successful in the work as his father was. They have a pleasant home, and many friends in the community.

W. H. KOCHER.

W. H. Kocher is one of the leading business men of Holdrege, Nebraska, and for the past twenty years has been associated with the commercial interests of this community. He has a large and lucrative trade, having been engaged in the building and contracting business since 1887, and has gained a wide reputation as a master workman.

Mr. Kocher is a native of New York state and removed to Wisconsin with his parents at the age of six years. He was engaged in the builders' trade for nineteen years before coming to Nebraska, having resided for that length of time near Madison, Wisconsin, and was prominently known all through that section. He first came to Nebraska in 1887, at once establishing himself in this business, and ever since has devoted all his time to this work, meeting with the greatest success in every instance. He has made a specialty of putting up frame residences of the best class, and his work along this line is of the very highest order. The Ed. Titus' residence in Holdrege is a specimen of the work done by Mr. Kocher, which was built at a cost of about $10,000. The city of Holdrege has, for its size, more such residences than any other city in western Nebraska, and for this it is indebted largely to the faithful and superior workmanship of our subject. He was one of the workmen who helped erect the Hampton House, the City National Bank, and other large buildings here. Mr. Kocher built a fine residence on East avenue for his own occupancy, which is presided over by his wife with much taste and intelligence for the home comfort of herself and husband, there being no other members in the family. Here they entertain their numerous friends, and everything is of the highest order and modern convenience.

Mr. and Mrs. Kocher are members and earnest workers in the Presbyterian church here, and in all social and religious circles they are held in the highest esteem. He is a strong Republican in political sentiment, but has always refused all office preferment.

HERMAN C. RINCKER.

Among the successful self-made men of Dawes county may be truly noted Herman C. Rincker. He came to the new world from his mother country when but a boy, and since his residence here has displayed an enterprising spirit and the exercise of good judgment in a manner that commends him to all as a worthy citizen. He now resides in section 11, township 31, range 52, and is one of the prosperous farmers of his locality. He went to that region as a pioneer, has accumulated a fine property and applied himself closely to his calling. He is well versed in agricultural pursuits and possesses what years of experience teach to the observing only.

Mr. Rincker was born near Weisbaden, Germany, in 1849. His father, William T. Rincker, was a veterinarian, also engaged in the meat business, and our subject was a lad two years old when his parents left their native land and came to America, settling in Chicago, where they remained for a time, then went to McLean county, Illinois, locating in Lexington, where Herman was raised and educated. He became familiar with farm work as a boy, and drifted into different kinds of labor, building telegraph lines, etc. In 1875 he came to North Platte, where he did line work for a time, then was trainman on the Union Pacific railway for thirteen years, eleven years of this time having charge of a train as conductor. He left the railroad in 1888 and went to Fort Laramie, Wyoming, where he engaged in the meat business, remained a year, then returned to Nebraska and settled in Crawford in 1889, opening a meat market there and continued in the trade up to 1901, building up a good business and making money. He bought his present farm in 1894 situated three-quarters of a mile east of Crawford, and has spent six years on the place, improving it in fine shape. He owns three hundred and twenty acres, thirty of which are cultivated and forty of it under irrigation. He has a comfortable house, two-story, and twenty-four by twenty-six feet in size, fitted up with modern conveniences, and everything about the farm bespeaks thrift and industry.

Our subject was married in 1888 to Charlotte H. Diehl, whose father, John Diehl, fought and died in the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Rincker have a family of two children, namely: Edna and Clarence.

Mr. Rincker is a staunch Republican, and takes an active interest in local and county affairs.

THE MISSES VAN ORSDOLL.

Much has been written of the hardships and privations endured by the men who are the pioneers of a new country, while but little is ever said of the fortitude and courage of the women. Their lot is immeasurably harder than that of the men, and owing to their confinement to the household and its many duties, see less of the stirring events that go far toward lessening the tedium of a lonely, sparsely settled land.

The west has had an attraction for many maidens, some of them teachers to whom the wide prairie meant the breath of life, some of them from other walks of life, while some came for health or adventure. Among this stream of emigration from the more thickly settled regions east of the Mississippi, came the Misses Van Orsdoll, of Columbia City, Indiana, daughters of Henry Van Orsdoll and nieces of J. W. Pike, who was a pioneer in Cherry county about 1883. Miss Maude visited the region in 1894, having been teaching in Iowa. In 1900 Miss Mary came, and with her, filed on homestead rights some six miles west of Valentine, erected the required buildings and proceeded to hold down their claims. In June, 1904, they filed on their additional rights under the Kincaid law, and will when the title is perfected, own two sections of fine land, much of it good hay flats, the rest in range. They proceeded to stock it with cattle, and with the assistance of hired help are managing to increase their herds at a satisfactory rate. They have not escaped the usual experiences of pioneers, Miss Maud losing her first dwelling by a cyclone. A second was erected at once. In another instance, thinking he had only a woman to deal with, one of the neighbors proceeded to cut hay on their land, expecting to haul it away. He soon learned his error and has not repeated the offense. Another was more successful, felling and stealing a fine hackberry grove that had sprung up on the place. This grove gave the name to Miss Mary's place, "Hackberry Hall," which was christened with hot coffee to make the naming complete.

After living for a time in the smaller claim house, Miss Maude erected in sight of the main road between Valentine and Crookston, one of the best furnished dwellings in the hills, and named it "Prairie Manor." A view of this building appears elsewhere in this work together with their earliest dwellings.

The ladies are more versatile than most men, and can turn their hands to carpentering, painting, excavation, building fence or breaking bronchos to ride or drive and training cattle to stand for the milking.

Both sisters have travelled much throughout the west as well as in the east, and have met on intimate terms many men of distinction. They were favored with an invitation by the state geologist of South Dakota to take a scientific trip through the Bad Lands. They are also intimately acquainted with most of the noted Indians, and speak quite fluently the language of the Sioux. Many are the specimens of Indian work they have secured which few can acquire, so strong a friendship have the Indians for these girls from Indiana. Among the most notable trinkets in their possession are war clubs, the pipes of peace, an entire suit of Indian boy clothes, war bonnet, scabbards of note, pipe bags, ceremonial dancing moccasins, saddle blanket which appears on their favorite saddle horse in the illustration above mentioned, besides many minor trophies of their visit to the reservation. What has been accomplished in the sand hill country by these girls reared in luxury and ease in their eastern home, is an inspiration to others of their sex who would attain independence by their own effort, energy and indomitable will.

On another page of this volume we present an interesting view of the residence and ranch property of the Misses Van Orsdoll.

ALMON STUART.

Almon Stuart, a prominent resident of Kearney county, Nebraska, has a pleasant home in Minden, where he resides with his family, highly esteemed by all who know him. Mr. Stuart was born in Watertown, New York, December 4th, 1821. He is a son of Asa Chapman Stuart, who fought in the war of 1812. The family moved to Michigan when our subject was a boy, and when a young man went to St. Joseph, Indiana, where he spent some time. The mother of our subject was Miss Elizabeth Sherman Wilcox, whose father was in the Revolutionary war. At the breaking out of the Civil war Mr. Stuart enlisted in the 9th Indiana Infantry, Company I, and served for three years. He was all through West Virginia and in the army of the Tennessee. He was twice wounded at Murfreesboro, Tennessee, and once at the battle of Chickamauga, and still carries the ball that he received at the latter place, at the age of eighty-seven years. He fought in all the important battles of the west, and relates with interest many interesting occurrences of that time.

In 1878 Mr. Stuart came to Nebraska and took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in Kearney county. He gave the township in which he settled its name when it was organized as Cosmos, and was elected supervisor, also served as a member of the county board for three terms, proving a very efficient official. He was assessor for some years, and an active public-spirited citizen. He is proud of the fact that for over thirty years he has not owed any man a cent, and is in the enjoyment of a comfortable competence which enables him and his wife to surround themselves with all the comforts of life in their advanced years. They reside in their home in Minden surrounded by many warm friends, and do their best to make the lives of their family and the community peaceful and happy. For fifty-nine years Mr. and Mrs. Stuart have traveled the path of life together. They are agnostic in faith, if one may so call it, living consistent lives, with charity for all. On another page will be found portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart.

Mr. Stuart was married August 13, 1849, to Miss Elizabeth Jaquith, a daughter of Asa Jaquith, a carpenter and joiner of old Yankee stock and who served his country in the war of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Stuart have four children, as follows: One son, Lincoln Almon, a member of the First Nebraska Regiment, under Colonel W. J. Bryan, in the Spanish war, now residing in Minden; Jesse Ovid Bion, engaged in the lumber business in Seattle, Washington; Helen Elizabeth Ada Slusser, residing in Minden; and Louisa Adeline Virginia Youngston, married.

Mr. Stuart is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and his wife of the Ladies Auxiliary of that post.

ANDREW F. CHALBERG.

Andrew F. Chalberg, a prosperous agriculturist and stockman of Chappell precinct, has been a resident of Deuel county for the past twenty years, and during that time has gained a valuable estate for himself and the respect and esteem of his fellowmen.

Our subject was born in Sweden, in 1859. He grew to manhood there, following farming as a boy, remaining in Sweden until he was twenty-four years of age, then came to the United States, and was the only member of his family to leave their native land.

After arriving in this country Mr. Chalberg located in Muskegon, Michigan, and made that locality his home for about two years, drifting around afterwards for several years, and finally coming to Deuel county, Nebraska, in 1888. Here he filed on homestead rights on section 6, township 12, range 44, proved up on a quarter section, and afterwards took additional land on sections 5 and 6. He erected a rude building as a dwelling, and other farm sheds, and began the improvement of his farm. During the early part of his residence here he planted trees which are now a valuable feature of his place. At different times he met with disappointments in building up his homestead, but constantly added improvements as he was able, and now has the place all in fine shape.

Mr. Chalberg devotes about fifty acres to grain raising, and has plenty of good pasture and hayland for his stock, running about sixty head of cattle and some horses. He has been most successful in his farming ventures during later years, but during his early residence here the hardships endured were many and bitter. Conditions are now entirely different, and in the case of our subject's work all comforts of farm life are supplied and all machinery for lightening the farm labor is at hand.

On March 1st, 1891, our subject was married at Omaha, to Miss Amelia S. Anderson, who was born in Sweden, coming to America in 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Chalberg have four children, named as follows: Edward E., born February 11th, 1893, Elsie Sophia, born December 24th, 1894, Ester Caroline, born April 20th, 1902, and Ellen Mary, born October 17th, 1906. They are a happy and congenial family, and have a pleasant home and many friends.

Mr. Chalberg takes a commendable interest in local affairs and has aided in every way possible to advance the best interests of his community. He has built up a good home and has been a potent factor in the development of the agricultural resources of the locality. He is a Republican politically, and has held school offices.

AL WILLERLING.

Al Willerling is widely known throughout Rock county and the northern part of Nebraska as one of the very first business men to make a permanent home and settlement in the thriving little city of Newport. Only one other business man of Newport is now here who was in that city and engaged in business at the time of his coming. He has met the people as they came to make their homes in the county, and by his accommodating spirit, honest methods and genial courtesy has won a host of friends who stand by him from the beginning.

Mr. Willerling was born on a farm in Defiance county, Ohio, September 26, 1858, a son of Herman and Mary (Ohlinger) Willerling, and was reared and educated in his native community. His father owned a tannery in addition to his farming operations, and divides all his time between the two occupations. His mother, born in this country, came of a German parentage, and the subject of this writing was her second child. In all, her family consisted of four children. When he was seventeen years old Al Willerling left home and sought work for himself in the pine woods of northern Michigan and from time to time he was also employed in the iron mines of that region. In the winter of 1882 and 1883 Mr. Willerling was engaged as a cook for a surveying expedition that penetrated far into western Nebraska, then Sioux county, and in the course of these explorations saw much of what is now Dawes, Box Butte, Scott and Bluff counties as well as many other parts of the state. For a time he was cook at Fort Robinson. In 1884 he came to Stuart, and made a homestead entry in Holt county, on which he put up a sod house. In the course of these enterprises displaying much business ability, A. C. Powell, of Stuart, put him in charge of a general store at Atkinson, where for four years Mr. Willerling remained in his employ. In 1892 he went into partnership with J. W. Henderson, opening a general store in Newport, his partner retiring in his favor the following year. In 1902 he sold out, and for two years made his home in Leigh, Nebraska. In 1904 he set up in the wholesale hay business at Newport, and speedily became interested in several mercantile enterprises. He has a feed and confectionery store which is largely patronized, besides a ranch of seven hundred acres devoted exclusively to hay, of which he at times cuts six hundred tons in a season.

Mr. Willerling was married June 16, 1890, to Miss Mary Butler, daughter of Finley and Margaret Butler, old settlers of Holt county. In political matters he is a Democrat, and has long taken an active part in local affairs. He holds membership in the Odd Fellows, the Workmen and the Woodmen lodges of Newport.

GUSTAV CARLSON.

Gustav Carlson, one of the prominent citizens of Valentine, is among the early settlers of Cherry county, where he has gained an enviable reputation as a business man.

Mr. Carlson was born in Engelholm, a village in the southern part of Sweden, in 1848, the eldest in a family of nine children. He grew to manhood in Sweden, and learned the carpenter trade with his father, beginning at the early age of twelve years. When twenty-one he left his parents' home and followed his trade for a year and a half, as overseer of a large force of carpenters on a farm in Sweden. He came to America in 1871, landing in New York after a voyage of seven days. Going to Pennsylvania he secured employment with a railroad company, remaining in their service for two years. From there he went to Horns-ville, New York, where he worked at his former trade. Later he returned to Pennsylvania and entered the employ of George Lepert, a furniture manufacturer, with whom he worked as employee for ten years. Gradually rising in the work in that factory he soon became superintendent and had charge of all of the machinery for seven years.

In 1884 our subject came to Valentine and filed on a homestead eighteen miles northeast of the town. Here he built and lived in a sod house for a short time, during the building of a log house in which he lived the first years, farming while proving up on his homestead. He has since filed on a Kincaid homestead of four hundred and eighty acres one mile south of Valentine.

In 1880 Mr. Carlson was married to Miss Amanda Anderson, a native of Sweden, who came to America with her parents when a child. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carlson, namely, Alma, Amy, Effie, Hazel, Lloyd, Edgar and Levina.

In 1891 the family moved to Valentine where Mr. Carlson follows his trade, doing all kinds of carpenter and cabinet work. He has a fine shop twenty-two by one hundred and eight, and also does picture framing, plumbing, etc. He has erected nearly all of the principal buildings in Valentine, and was appointed superintendent of construction of the Cherry county court house.

In 1898 he started a hardware store but ran this for two years only, selling the business to return to his trade. In politics he is an Independent, takes an active interest in all local affairs, and is now on the town council serving his second term. Is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

CHARLES J. OSBORN.

Charles J. Osborn, an agriculturist of prominence in Cheyenne county, resides on his fine farm in Sidney precinct. He has been closely identified with the public affairs of his locality from the early stages of its development, serving in different capacities at various times, during the period 1894-'96 holding the office of county clerk, and has always taken an active part in county and state politics.

Mr. Osborn was born five miles from Hillsboro, in Montgomery county, Illinois, June 30th, 1862, a son of Samuel C. and Lydia (Kendrick) Osborn, who are now deceased. He lived on the home farm and received the usual schooling of the farmer lad in those times, remaining with his parents until 1885, when he came to Nebraska and located in Cheyenne county, where he spent a few months, then turned back to the eastern part of the state for a time, returning to Cheyenne county in the spring of 1886, and he has made this section his home ever since. He filed on a homestead in section 22, township 16, range 49, which he later sold, filing on another claim in section 14, township 14, range 50, now owning four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land, together with a full section, making a ranch of one thousand one hundred and twenty acres, which is known as the "Idlewild Ranch and Dairy Farm." He is engaged to a large extent in dairying, and keeps a large number of cows, besides other stock. He was among the first to raise high-grade Shorthorn cattle in this part of the state, and has made a complete success of his venture.

Mr. Osborn farms about one hundred and thirty acres, raising corn and small grains. He has erected good buildings of all kinds, and every portion of the ranch bears evidence of good management and prosperity.

Mr. Osborn married Miss Iva Bewley, a native of Montgomery county, Illinois. The wedding occurred there November 4th, 1883, the twenty-fifth anniversary of which was duly celebrated in 1908 by all their neighbors and friends from Sidney and the surrounding country. The parents of Mrs. Osborn, Oliver H. and Sarepta (Meisenheimer) Bewley, have both passed away. Mr. Osborn's family consists of the following children: Leo E., engaged in the decorating and painting business, residing in Sidney. One son, Maynard Waldo, now living in Sidney, married Winnifred Bixby. Viola Blanche, Jesse R. and Clifford are still at home. They are a most interesting family, and have a pleasant home, surrounded by a large number of warm friends in their community.

Mr. Osborn and his wife are both active in neighborhood affairs, the former now acting as school moderator, while the latter holds the office of treasurer, school district No. 77. Mr. Osborn is independent of party lines, voting for principle and men rather than political affiliation. He is a member of the Methodist church of Sidney.

DANIEL TRUAX.

Daniel Truax, a resident on section 34, township 32, range 34, is one who can say that he has seen Cherry county from its first development through storms, drouths, and wild Indian scares until it has become the prosperous and orderly community which is now presented to the world. It was a grand heroic struggle, this building of an empire, this planting of civilization on these wind-swept and sun-kissed prairies, and strong, heroic characters were moulded and welded at its white heat. Who can ever tell the story of settlement or make the coming generation understand what privations and denials and endurance, the lofty courage went into the history of the pioneer days in Nebraska? We can be thankful that they lived, for we have great and noble states as their heritage to the good of the world. Mr. Truax did his full share in the development of the west, and his place among the men who made Cherry county is secure.

Daniel Truax was born in Fulton, Pennsylvania, July 4, 1843, and was reared on a farm cultivated by his father, John Truax. The father never came to the west, and indeed never left the county in which he was born and reared. His wife, the mother of Daniel, was Julia A. Malatte, and came of French descent. She was the mother of a family of eight children, of whom Daniel was third in order of birth.

When Daniel Truax donned the Union blue, and went into the Civil war as a member of Company C, Eighty-second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, he was twenty-one years of age, and began a career of which he and friends are justly proud. His regiment was attached to the First Brigade, Third Division of the Sixth corps of the Army of the East, and played an important part in the stirring events that attended the closing years of the great war. Mr. Truax served until the end of the war, and on the dawn of peace returned to his Pennsylvania home, and resumed the occupation of farming, which he had given up for the time to battle for his country, and for eleven years followed the plow in his native state. He was married June 16, 1865, to Miss Anna J. Truax, a native of Fulton county, Pennsylvania, where she was born May 6, 1844. Her people were American born, but came of German descent, and were industrious and home-keeping in the extreme. They clung closely to the old landmarks, and never left their native state to go west and grasp its great opportunities. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Truax became the parents of a family of seven children, David A., Laura F., and Joseph dead. The others, Harriet, E. Jane, and Joseph and Charles (twins), of whom the three eldest are dead. These children were all born in Fulton county, Pennsylvania, but were reared in Nebraska. In 1871 the Truax family removed to Carroll county, Illinois, and spent five years in farming; while as many more years were spent on an Iowa farm in Hardin county. In 1885 Mr. Truax located in Cherry county, but it was two years later that he brought his family to Nebraska. He did not begin his career in this state under very favorable auspices, as he had only fifteen dollars and a few horses with which to enter upon his work. His first business transaction was to contract a seventy-dollar debt in the purchase of three cows, as the beginning of his herd of cattle. He passed through some very hard times when he began, and a severer strain in 1893 to 1896, the dry years of disastrous memory to so many settlers. Today he owns a half section of choice farm land and four hundred and eighty acres of homestead entry. His land is well improved, fenced, and is largely devoted to horse raising, of which he has about fifty head, with perhaps twenty cattle. He is interested in thoroughbreds and some seasons follows the races. Dale, at the head of his stud, is a most beautiful specimen of running stock. When he first came to this region, it was all wild and but thinly populated, there being only two section houses and a store in Cody. Mr. Truax is a Republican, and remembers with satisfaction and pride that he cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, when that eminent patriot was elected president for the second time. During the Indian rising of 1891 he thought it prudent to leave for a time, but soon returned and has never lost faith in Cherry county; he feels much pleasure in considering the very substantial results that have attended his labors.

THE PLATTE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, KEARNEY MILITARY ACADEMY.

The Platte Collegiate Institute, Kearney Military Academy, is one of the more noted educational institutions of the state of Nebraska, and in its comparatively brief history has made a record for itself for thoroughness of teaching, high standards of management, and splendid ideals of scholarship second to none in the west. The making of character is recognized as the ultimate of instruction, and a lofty life is held possible for every young man who comes, as all do, into close personal relations with the principal and his assistants. The academy is pleasantly located in the valley of the Platte river, about a mile and a half from the city of Kearney, and its situation is peculiarly favorable to the health and the spirits of its attendants.

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

The buildings are large and commodious and are in good condition.

The new Cochran Hall has just been completed at a cost of $50,000. It is built of reinforced concrete, is equipped with all modern conveniences and requisites of a first-class school. It contains the rooms of the headmaster and family, study hall, chapel, hospital, office and dining room, and quarters for masters and eighty cadets.

Kearney Hall is built of brick, four stories high, and contains carpenter's and blacksmith's shops, laboratory, recitation rooms and quarters for masters.

Lewis Hall contains the gymnasium, a large well lighted room with about two thousand feet of floor space, completely equipped with apparatus, horizontal and parallel bars, traveling rings, trapeze, etc.

Cochran Hall contains quarters for forty cadets and two masters.

Each room accommodates two cadets, is heated by steam, lighted by electricity, and furnished with the usual bed-room furniture.

The grounds, which are thirty-five acres in extent, are level and afford excellent facilities for drill and for the various forms of athletics so essential to a complete education. Ample space is given for football, baseball, and other outdoor games, and two cement courts for tennis have been laid down this year.

This school was founded in 1892 by the Rt. Rev. Anson R. Graves, LL.D., for the purpose of providing a thorough preparatory training, either for college or business, for young men and boys at a moderate price.

The academy commends itself to those parents who desire for their boys a school whose location is easily accessible, in a country whose climate is unequaled for healthfulness, and one in which, while every care is taken to provide everything essential to the proper instruction and well being of the boy, such as may be found in the best schools of its type, non-essentials are kept down, in order to allow the management to put the fees at such a moderate price as to be within the reach of all.

The discipline and instruction are of the highest order, the boy is taught to work from right motives, every proper effort is made for his comfort and happiness, and the fact is never lost sight of, that the development upon right lines of the boy's character, is of as much importance as proficiency in studies, and this is more readily done, as the school is not so large in numbers, but that the boy must come into intimate personal relationship with the principal and instructors.

The various members of the teaching force are men and women of much natural ability, broad and thorough scholarship, and bring to their work an enkindling enthusiasm that awakes quick response in the youth before them. The discipline of such a school is stimulating and not repressive, stirring up to the doing of what is right and good, and only negative in a slight and lessening degree. A semi-military training has long been found most helpful in the formation of habits of punctuality, neatness and promptness. The daily drill gives physical exercise of the best sort, and the management makes its discipline a means to an end, and the performance of duty never becomes in its sight mechanical.

The academy makes an especial point of its manual training, and gives a course covering two years' work, strictly modern and up-to-date. The wood shop is fully equipped with benches, each one being supplied with a complete set of tools, and lathes for both wood and iron work.

The general course of study covers four years of work with a preparatory course for younger students. It includes the studies taught in the public schools up to the eighth grade, with the addition of a year in beginning Latin. It gives much attention to a reading course, which is intended to develop a taste for good reading. It has produced most satisfactory results.

A marked feature of the academy is its cadet organization, representing as it does the very best educational ideas of the day along this line, and subject to such improvement as the experience of similar schools elsewhere may suggest.

 GEORGE D. CLARK.

Should the reader ask for the name of a representative old timer of western Nebraska, who has spent many years of his life in the building up of a farm and home in a country where but a few years ago there was a vast wilderness, and who is familiar with the early growth and development of this section, we would mention George D. Clark as a typical westerner, a man of sterling character and energetic force of will, who has helped to make the history of this locality. Mr. Clark now resides in section 25, township 31, range 49, and is held in the highest esteem by his fellowmen and associates.

Mr. Clark was born in St. Lawrence county, New York state, in 1852. His parents lived on the banks of the St. Lawrence river, the father being a tanner and harnessmaker by trade, who died after settling in Illinois, during the Civil war. The mother was Katherine Wilson, and both parents were of mixed nationality, of English and Irish stock. Our subject grew up in his native state until he was sixteen years of age, following farm work, and then learned the harnessmaker's trade after his father, and continued at that work for thirty years off and on. During his younger years Mr. Clark was quite an extensive traveler, having been all along the Pacific coast and the western states, and did not live long at any one place up to the year 1886, then came to Nebraska and settled in Dawes county. He located on a farm fifteen miles south of Chadron, and remained until proving up, then moved to his present place, taking this as a homestead, and also proved up on it. Here he went through pioneer experiences, witnessing the drouth periods, although he was more fortunate than many of his neighbors in that he never had a total failure of his crops, and was always able to make a comfortable living, besides constantly improving his place and building up his home and farm. He has been most successful in his different ventures, and steadily added to his possessions, now owning a ranch of eight hundred and eighty acres, and is engaged principally in stock raising, running a large number of cattle and horses. He does mixed farming, and finds time to still follow his trade as harnessmaker a little here at home.

In 1875 Mr. Clark was married to Isabelle Colton, whose father, Benjamin F. Colton, was a farmer in Michigan. In 1888 Mrs. Clark died, leaving a family of two children: Hattie and Frank. Mr. Clark was married again in 1903 to Mrs. Elizabeth Allen and has one child by the second marriage, namely: George Edward. Mrs. Clark had six children by her first marriage: Daisy, Joe, Fred, Fay, Margreta and Vernon.

Mr. Clark has always taken an active interest in local and county politics, and served his district in different capacities since locating here. He is a staunch Republican.

P. A. NORTON.

Mr. Norton, one of the prominent citizens of North Platte, Nebraska, has been associated with the commerial interests of this locality for many years. He is an old settler in western Nebraska, and is well-known and highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Norton is a native of Cook county, Illinois, and is a son of Philip Norton, who was a contractor connected with the building of the Union Pacific railway on the line which runs out of Omaha, constructed in 1865-'66 and '67, also in building this line further west. He died at Ogden, December 1st, in 1882, having been a contractor on the short line up to the time of his death, and having worked at this business nearly all his life. He was a native of Tipperary, Ireland, and came to this country when a youth, with his wife, who was Elizabeth Sheldona, born in England. Our subject was reared in Illinois, and on reaching his twenty-first year obtained employment with the Northwestern Railway Company, traveling all over the western part of the country, and was with the Union Pacific railway from 1874 to 1876. He continued at this work for several years, and in 1881 located in North Platte, where he has resided ever since. For four years he was foreman of the roundhouse in North Platte, and in 1887 was made engineer, in which position he has been successful and faithfully served the road. He has a splendid record in this capacity, and in all the time he was with the railway company never had an accident to his train.

Mr. Norton was married at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1880 to Miss Lizzie Holden, a native of Iowa City, daughter of James and Ann Murphy Holden, of that place, her father having been born in County Mayo, Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Norton have one son, Philip James, who is connected with the Union Pacific railroad, holding a responsible position in the company's shops at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Mr. Norton is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows lodge at North Platte, also the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Maccabees. He belongs to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, George W. Vrooman Lodge No. 88, of North Platte.

oline Gundlough, born and reared in the same town with our subject, and daughter of Fritz Gundlough, who was a day laborer and sheep herder; her mother's name was Sofa (Schrader) Gundlough.

In 1883 Mr. Heumier came to America, accompanied by his family. After landing in New York city he came directly west to Wisconsin, where he settled on a farm in Rock county and worked rented land for a number of years. Our subject first came to Sioux county in 1889, locating on "gumbo" land near Adelia. There he passed through many hard experiences, working out in the Black Hills in order to make a living as he had a hard time to get his farm in shape to raise crops, and the hard years came on when he had several failures and was at last compelled to give it up altogether. In 1894 he came to his present location, built a log house and started to improve his farm, also hauling cord wood and sold it to help keep his family. He opened up six acres of land around which he built a pole fence the first year, and his first crop on this was hailed out, but he did not give up heart and determined to win out and stick to his farm. He had a tough struggle, but has finally made a success of his undertaking by his perseverance and energy, and is proprietor of six hundred acres of land, seventy-five of which are cultivated and the balance in grass and pasture, also having a nice tract of timbered land. The place is well fitted up with good substantial buildings and all improvements, and his farm is one of the best kept and best equipped in his locality.

Mr. Heumier is the father of fifteen children, the three eldest born in Germany; four have died, leaving the following: Elvena, Augusta, Frieda, Annie, Martha, Minnie, Louisa, Charlie, Sofa, Herman and Marie.

The subject of this sketch is one of the old settlers of his community and has devoted much of his time and energy to building up and improving his locality, being an earnest advocate of good roads and assisting materially in every movement along these lines, and he has also aided greatly in establishing good schools in this section.

DAN BARNES.

Among the men who came to Cherry county in the early days to build up a home in a new country where the opportunities were many for gathering a comfortable fortune, the gentleman above named was one of the first to settle in this section. He has spent many years in this work and now enjoys the fruits of his industry and perseverance, highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Barnes was born in Fillmore county, Minnesota, February 19, 1864. His father, Alvah E. Barnes, was a farmer of American stock, native of Ohio. When our subject was a young lad the family, consisting of five children, moved to Butler county, Iowa, where he was reared and educated. At the age of twenty years he started in farming on rented land, continuing for two years, then came to Nebraska, locating in Cherry county. He first settled on the Snake river, building a log house without nails, but only stayed there for two years and then took up his present farm as a homestead. During these first years he saw many ups and downs of pioneer life and often was compelled to work out in the neighborhood of his home, receiving seventy-five cents a day for his labor, and glad to get this, to support his family, and tide them through hard times. He hauled posts and bones for thirty miles to Cody, selling the posts for eight cents each in trade and only half that in cash. He had three horses and forty cents in cash when he first landed here, and with this start has gradually forged ahead until he now owns a ranch of nine hundred and sixty acres, a large portion of which is hay and grazing land, on which he runs two hundred and twenty-five head of cattle, all full-blooded Aberdeen Angus. He deals exclusively in this breed, and his herd is conceded to be the best to be found in all western Nebraska. This herd has been under careful breeding for the past twenty-three years, and was first started in this county by Mr. John Shores. There are some exceptionally fine animals among them, and all are the very best of their kind. Mr. Barnes also keeps quite a number of horses. His place is well improved with fences and good buildings, his barn alone costing $850, built in 1903. A view of the residence and surroundings will be found on another page of this work.

Mr. Barnes was married April 2, 1885, to Miss Ida Blaufuss, a native of Wisconsin, born in 1863. Her parents were both born and reared in Germany, coming to this country when quite young. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have a family of six children, all of whom were born and raised in this state. They are named as follows: May, Cecil, Alta, Bryan, Mildred and Clare. The main ambition of Mr. Barnes is to give his children a good education, and intends to do this even though he has no fortune to leave them. They are all bright and intelligent, eager to please their father in his wishes, and have always attended school regularly, riding seven miles to their district school. One daughter is a teacher, devoting part of her time to this occupation and also attending school herself. Their home is in section 29, township 30, range 34.

Mr. Barnes has never taken any active part in politics although he has always voted the Democratic ticket. He is a member of the Cody lodge of Modern Woodmen of America. During the early days they had to go thirty-five miles for their mail and once during the Indian uprising the brothers did not have enough cash to buy a stamp to write an assuring letter home.

ISAAC N. MILLS.

Isaac N. Mills is an active and pushing farmer and business man whose home is on Buffalo Flats, Brown county, Nebraska, and whose name is closely associated with the settlement of this part of the state where his fortunes have been cast these many years. He was born on a farm in Erie county, Pennsylvania, June 20, 1854, where his father, Alonzo Benjamin Mills, who came of German blood, was engaged in the practice of medicine. His mother, Helena Scott Mills, was born in Germany, and accompanied her parents to this country when she was twenty-one years old. The parents died on board the ship while making the voyage to this land of hope and promise, leaving the girl to proceed alone. Here she married and became the mother of a family of five boys, of whom Isaac N. was the second member. When he was five years old the family removed to Ohio, and there the husband and father died nine years later, having in the meantime spent several years in Pennsylvania, and going a second time to Ohio. After his death the bereaved widow returned again to Pennsylvania, where young Isaac was reared to farming and lumbering. While still a young man he became a husband and the head of a home by his marriage July 5, 1877, to Miss Martha Johnson, a native of New York state. Her father, Russell Johnson, was a blacksmith and served in the United States army, where he received injuries which caused his death in after years. To Mr. and Mrs. Mills have come two children, Elton, born in 1880, who married Florence Ferguson, and Alonzo, born in 1883, who married Grace Rickard.

Mr. Mills came west in the fall of 1879, and spent some time looking over the country and seeking a desirable location before concluding where to cast his lot. For some time he was in Merritt county, Nebraska, where he lost five horses. Finally he decided to locate on what was known as Buffalo Flats, in Brown county, and in the north west quarter of section 2 he planted a tree that he might know the spot on his return. This was done while he was on a freighting expedition through the country, and was received with laughter by his companions who insisted that he would never see either the tree or the land again. Events proved, however, the wisdom of the action, and in due time the spot selected became the home of himself and family.

Mr. Mills made a temporary settlement on Long Pine creek, and there he got out the logs for his first house and barn. For three weeks he lived on the creek without bread, but secured plenty of game and had a delightful time in certain ways. In this rough and ready life he was able to take care of himself, and though he slept the first three nights under a tree, he presently put a little comfort and order around him, and made ready for the coming of his family in May, 1880. The log house was still unfurnished, and was lacking windows, but it made the beginning of a home for the family. His first motive power in the shape of teams was two bulls and a donkey, and when he attended the first Fourth of July celebration at Ainsworth he drove a bull and a cow for a team. At one time he was entirely without money, and all the food he had in the house of any kind was one batch of biscuits. He had done some work, and was promised his pay, but was disappointed in receiving it. He betook himself to the woods, where he cut cedar poles, and hauled them to Long Pine, where their sale enabled him to buy provisions for the family. Mr. Mills worked in the stock yards at Long Pine during the fall seasons that followed prolonged drouths. Then he bought an old threshing machine, and made some capital in operating it through the country. In 1880 he was engaged in freighting from Columbus to Albion, Nebraska, and while engaged in this line took the contract of moving a six thousand eight hundred pound safe to the latter point. This work he did in two days, making his first night at Genoa, and reaching Albion at the closing of the second day out, thus completing most successfully what he recalls as a terrific job. Before the safe was put in place it went through the floor into the cellar of the building in which it was first located.

It is pleasant to note that after many hard and laborious years, whose constant strain is that of privation and denial, Mr. Mills and his excellent family have now entered into the enjoyment of prosperity on a very liberal scale. His farm comprises some two hundred acres, and with the exception of about fifteen acres it is all under cultivation. A modern and attractive farm house has replaced the old log and sod structure, which still stands and is used for a blacksmith shop. In 1907 he purchased a three-hundred-acre farm a short distance northwest of Long Pine on which his younger son is installed as manager. As would appear from the above narrative Mr. Mills is one of the oldest settlers of this region, and is widely known as a man of unbending integrity, unwearied industry, and a kind and neighborly heart. He is Independent in politics and with the family is a member of the Methodist church.

JACOB DRESSLAR.

The place of the nativity of Jacob Dresslar is Morgan county, Indiana, where his birth occurred January 15, 1870. His father, John Dresslar, was of old American stock, but his far away ancestors came from Germany. Our subject's mother was born in Ohio and her name, in youth, was Martha McCoy.

Until he was fifteen years of age, Jacob Dresslar spent his life in Indiana, but at that time in his history the family came west to Nebraska, locating in Dawson county on land near Overton. This was in 1885, and they were among the earliest settlers. Here the family lived for four years, and then in 1889, moved to Keith county. Our subject remained with his father until 1896 and helped to build up the home place, where his father died in March, 1904. The father was prominent among the old settlers and was widely known and esteemed. With the aid of his sons he built up a beautiful home place, five miles south of Brule.

Our subject took a homestead in August, 1893, and commenced operations for himself, and here he resides today in a fine large modern house with capacious barns and outbuildings surrounding. He experienced the usual hard times of the pioneer, witnessed the years of drouth, when the crops were almost total losses, and sometimes it was very discouraging; but he did not give up. He kept hard at it, improving his land and made a success, finally proving up on his homestead. He has a splendidly improved farm of one hundred and sixty acres, with a good house, barns and sheds; has a fine grove of forest trees, and the farm all well fenced. He has a fine orchard of cherry trees, twenty-five in number, one hundred plum trees, and has raspberries, and other small fruits in abundance. All this had been done by our subject's own work and is due to his good management. He has certainly done his share toward the advancement of the community in which he has lived.

Jacob Dresslar was married, December 29, 1898, to Miss Emma Dorran, born in Braidwood, Grundy county, Illinois, a daughter of John Dorran, a native of England and a pioneer of Dawson county, Nebraska, where he located in the early days of 1879. He served during the Civil war in the Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Her mother, Harriet Raney, was born in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Dresslar have had two children: Howard and Thelma.

Jacob Dresslar is a Republican in his political affiliations and belief and has served his party in several official positions. He has been deputy assessor for several terms and has proven a capable and efficient public officer.

HORACE E. GARDNER.

Horace E. Gardner, who ranks foremost among the leading old settlers of western Nebraska, is one of the prosperous farmers and ranchers and owner of a valuable estate in section 31, township 21, range 33, Hooker county, and highly esteemed as a worthy citizen of his community.

Mr. Gardner was born in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, in 1857. His parents were Americans of German descent and followed farming all their lives. Our subject was reared in his native county until he was fifteen years of age, then went into the lumber woods in northern Michigan and spent three winters employed in the lumber camps. In 1875 he emigrated to Iowa and secured employment with Chas. C. Orr & Co., in Sioux City, and remained there up to 1883, when he went to southeastern Kansas and spent about one year. He then went back to Sioux City and worked for his former employers, Orr & Company. In 1884 he came to Nebraska, landing in Valentine, and freighted from there to Gordon, finally settling on a farm eight miles northwest of that town. His first house was built of sods, and he began to farm. He soon became owner of several ox teams, with which he broke up a tract of land, and in due time proved up on his claim, then returned to Sioux City and remained for two years.

Our subject first came to Hooker county in 1901, settling on a ranch situated twenty miles southwest of Mullen. This contains four hundred and eighty acres of good range land, and is located in what is called "Antelope Valley." He farms one hundred and ten acres, and uses the balance for ranching purposes, engaging in stock raising to quite an extent.

In 1879 Mr. Gardner was married to Miss Mehetabel Sager, at Sioux City, Iowa. Her father, Abraham Sager, was a farmer during his early life, and later was heavily interested in the lumber business at Wakesma, state of Michigan. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gardner, who are named as follows: Fred, Sadie, Dennis, Mary, James and Oliver D.

The family have a pleasant home, and are well liked in their community. Mr. Gardner is a Bryan Democrat.

W. A. FLOREY.

W. A. Florey, known throughout the community in which he resides as an energetic and prosperous farmer and stock raiser, lives on his valuable estate situated on section 12, township 34, range 41, which lies on the line between Sheridan and Cherry county.

Mr. Florey was born in Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, in 1860, and was raised on a farm there. His father, George Anthony Florey, served in Company K, Thirty-fifth Wisconsin Regiment, during the Civil war, being enlisted for three years of service; was taken ill and died at Chicago while on the way home, where he was going to recruit his health, in the year 1864. He left a widow and two children, of whom our subject is the older. Our subject started in life for himself at the age of twenty, working in a cheese factory, and followed that work for several years, until he left Wisconsin for Nebraska. One year was spent in railroad work then he came to Sheridan county, settling in the locality in which he still resides, in 1886. He took a homestead and proved up, adding more land as he was able. His mother and younger brother came to Nebraska and they all lived together until the latter's health failed and he was obliged to return to Wisconsin, but the mother still lives here with her son, W. A. Mr. Florey farmed during the dry years, but his crops failed several seasons and when he was unable to raise enough seed for the following years stopped trying to farm and started in the cattle business. He gradually got ahead, and now owns one thousand seven hundred acres of land, and cuts annually about eight hundred tons of hay on his farm, having more hay than range land. He runs three hundred head of cattle and just enough horses to handle his ranch. He has a good set of buildings on his place, and his land is fenced, and altogether he is proprietor of a fine estate, and is doing well in his work. When he first came here he had nothing to start with, and is well content with what he has done.

In 1903 Mr. Florey was married to Miss Hattie Wells, born in Manchester, Iowa, in 1873. Mrs. Florey is a daughter of Henry and Sarah Mervin Wells, both New Yorkers, who settled in Iowa many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Florey have two children: Leonard W. Florey, born on June 20, 1904; and Elizabeth, born April 10, 1907.

Although Mr. Florey has never had time to devote to taking an active part in politics, he takes a commendable interest in local affairs of importance to his locality, and lends his influence for the benefit of the citizens of his community. He is a Republican.

GEORGE CHRISTOPHER.

George Christopher, now a resident of section 21, township 31, range 29, belongs to a race that has made most valuable contributions to the great volume of American citizenship, not so numerous because the home country is but a little tract of the earth, but industrious, frugal, upright and intelligent to a high degree. How much the west and northwest owe to the Scandinavian countries, Norway, Sweden and Denmark, for the great flood of God-fearing and labor loving emigrants, may never be told, but the debt is very great, and the student of social and industrial conditions in those vast domains of the republic will never hesitate to acknowledge.

George Christopher was born in Lancaster county, Nebraska, July 2, 1876, and is a son of James and Marie (Hansen) Christopher, both of whom were born and bred in Denmark. The father came to the United States in 1864, sailing from Liverpool in the steamship America, landing at Portland, Maine. Coming west he was among the oldest settlers of Lancaster county, where he appeared in 1874. He helped on the construction of the first postoffice building in the city of Lincoln, where he is now living retired from active life, but having a keen and vivid memory of these far away days and scenes.

Mr. Christopher, the subject of this writing, remained at home, and participated in the family fortunes until he reached the age of twenty-one years, when he struck out in life for himself, and spent the ensuing three years in farm work in Gage county. In 1896

O. H. Ames

he was married to Miss Elmina Ellis, whose sister is the wife of Aaron VanWinkle, a sketch of whom appears on another page. Paul, Ray and George are the young children who have come to bless this union.

The Christopher family removed to Cherry county in 1906, where the husband and father has speedily become one of the most important land owners and operators of the entire county. He bought outright sixteen hundred and eighty acres of land, has leased three sections of school land, and has a Kincaid homestead of six hundred and forty acres, making in all forty-two hundred and forty acres under his management. On this vast tract of land he is branching out quite extensively in stock raising, having at the present writing (1908) about eight hundred and fifty head of cattle, with one hundred and twenty head of horses. Here he has a good house, large and roomy barns, and a cattle shed three hundred and fifty feet long. Windmills of the most modern type provide ample water for the stock, and everything on the ranch seems to meet the most critical inspection. A fine view of the place is shown on another page of this work.

Mr. Christopher is a Republican, and has attended several county and state conventions of that party as a prominent and working delegate. While in Lancaster county he was a leading member of the party and his position as a representative Republican has been conceded in Cherry county from the moment of his arrival. He is a member of the Masonic order, affiliating with the lodge at Valentine.

BISHOP ANSON ROGERS GRAVES.

Rev. Anson Rogers Graves, Protestant Episcopal bishop of the missionary diocese of Kearney, comprising western Nebraska, was consecrated January 1, 1890, and has given eighteen years of his life work earnestly and successfully to this diocese. He was not discouraged by the great financial depression of 1892-'97, nor by the crop failures when from eighty to ninety thousand people left Nebraska. Happily, in recent years of bounteous harvests thousands of this number have returned, and are eagerly settling on the fertile lands of this section of the country. Above all else, the splendid school for boys, the Kearney Military Academy, founded by Bishop Graves in 1892 and carried by his efforts through the disastrous years that followed, is now blessed with great prosperity, so that in addition to the fine buildings of the institution already erected, the year 1907 sees another building erected, entirely fire-proof and costing over fifty thousand dollars.

Anson Rogers Graves was born in Wells, Rutland county, Vermont, April 13, 1842. He worked his way through college, and was graduated at Hobart College in 1866 with the degree of A. M., and LL.D. was conferred on him by Hobart College and D. D. by Racine College. He married in April, 1877, Mary Totten Watrous, of Brattleboro, Vermont. He was assistant pastor in Grace church, Brooklyn; rector of St. Luke's, at Plattsmouth, Nebraska; assistant at Gethsemane church, Minneapolis, Minnesota; rector of All Saints, Northfield, Minnesota; All Saints, Littleton, New Hampshire; St. Peters, Bennington, Vermont, and rector for six years of Gethsemane church, Minneapolis. Bishop Graves is the author of various sermons and tracts, and is a man of superior education, greatly esteemed by all.

When Bishop Graves entered on his duties in this state, in 1890, there were three hundred and seventy-five communicants in his diocese. There are now over two thousand four hundred here. Then six clergymen carried on the work, now there are fifteen; then twelve churches, now thirty; church property was then estimated at forty thousand dollars, and now reaches three hundred thousand dollars; then there was no school here, and now we have the splendid academy with eighty thousand dollars in buildings and thirty-six thousand dollars endowment.

Bishop Grave's family consists of the following members: Rev. Fred D. Graves, of Alliance, Nebraska; Elliott V. Graves, instructor in athletics and manual training in Lawrence University, Wisconsin, who was on the football team of the Nebraska University, at Lincoln, and well known throughout the country. Margaret married to Rev. G. G. Bennett; Gertrude, David W. and Paul.

The bishop's duties are to oversee the work of the Episcopal church in his district, secure clergymen for the work and see that they are paid, secure funds in the east for schools, endowments and missionary work, hold the church properties and see that they are cared for, visit all the stations where work is carried on once or twice a year and look after vacancies when they occur. In speaking of his work the bishop said: "During my episcopate I have baptized three hundred and eight, confirmed three thousand five hundred and forty-five, married twenty-two couples; officiated at twenty-four burials, consecrated six churches and dedicated many chapels, admitted thirty candidates for holy orders, ordained fourteen deacons, admitted one deaconess, ordained thirteen priests, received or found working in the field sixty-four clergymen, have lost by death, removal or deposition forty-four.

"Since I have been bishop there have been in our district 4,000 baptisms; 2,855 confirmations; 841 marriages; 1,328 burials by our clergy; 40,765 public services; and the money raised for all purposes $317,596. For a district of thinly scattered people with only four parishes barely self-supporting, and not one really wealthy churchman in it, we think this is a good showing."

THOMAS DOYLE.

Energetic efforts and intelligence go hand in hand in the building up of one's fortune, regardless of the vocation to which they are applied. One of the well-developed and highly improved estates of Sioux county is that owned and operated by Thomas Doyle, who resides in section 21, township 32, range 55, and is the possessor of nine hundred and sixty acres of land. The comfortable circumstances enjoyed by this gentleman have been brought about by the exercise of judicious labor and painstaking care, and every appointment of his place bespeaks good taste and refinement.

Thomas Doyle is a native of Tipperary county, Ireland, born in 1849, his parents spending their entire lives in that country. He grew to manhood in his native county, following farming as an occupation, and when he reached his thirtieth year determined to seek his fortune in the new world, so took passage for America, landing in New York city in July, 1881. He came west immediately, settling first in Dubuque, Iowa, spending about three years in that city. He then came to Nebraska and secured work at railroad construction, going into the Black Hills, and from there to Casper, Wyoming. He later traveled through Washington and Idaho, but made no permanent settlement, and finally returned to Nebraska in 1891, taking up a homestead in section 17, township 32, range 54. In 1880 he bought his present farm where he still lives, which is situated on West Hat creek. He at once began to improve his farm, put up substantial buildings and breaking up land for crops, and while he went through many hardships during the first few years, has succeeded splendidly. He has the ranch all fenced, and about one hundred acres under cultivation, also has plenty of range and hay land. He is engaged in stock raising on a large scale, and is doing well, operating his property along progressive lines, and is recognized as one of the well-to-do ranchmen of his county. The place is well supplied with good running water, and there is considerable timber on it.

Mr. Doyle was married in 1880 to Catherine Dellaney, and two children were born to this union, but he had the sad misfortune to loose both children and mother in 1881.

Mr. Doyle was married in 1902, the second time, to Mary Spannin, born in America of German descent, and they are the parents of three children, named as follows: Kate, Mary and Thomas. The family occupy a pleasant home and enjoy the respect and esteem of all in their community. Our subject has always taken an active interest in local affairs, and is among the honored pioneers of this locality, and no man, from what the people say, stands more on his word and integrity than does Thomas Doyle.

JAMES McClymont.

James McClymont, of Industry township, Phelps county, Nebraska, is one of the most successful and prosperous agriculturists in this locality. He resides in section 5, township 5, range 19, where he has built up a fine farm and home, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. McClymont is a native of Knox county, Illinois, born in 1853, of Scotch descent, his father being Peter McClymont. Our subject came to Nebraska in 1889 and located on the farm where he now lives in 1889, originally purchasing a half section of land in section 5, township 5, range 19, and later adding the balance of this section and also one hundred and sixty acres which lies across the road from his place, making a fine farm of eight hundred acres. All of this is first-class farming land, and he is engaged in mixed farming and stock raising. He has been very successful in his grain crops, and is progressive in his methods of farming. He also is widely known as keeping only the best grades of stock, having a drove of from seventy-five to one hundred good grade Poland China hogs, and fifty to seventy-five white-faced cattle of the Hereford breed. Each winter he feeds and ships a few carloads of stock which nets him a good round sum. He keeps about twenty-five head of horses, preferring the full-blooded Percherons, and raises a number of fine colts. He is known throughout the county as a successful, clear-headed and intelligent citizen, always casting his influence for good.

"SPRING ARBOR FARM," RESIDENCE OF J. H. PUTNAM,

Mr. McClymont was married in March, 1878, to Miss Isabelle McDowell.

Mr. McClymont is now serving as district supervisor, comprising the townships of Industry, Laird and Rock Falls. He was elected in 1905, and is a faithful public official, always looking to the interests of the community which he stands for. He is a Republican, and has been a member of the school board for the last nineteen years. He has also been a deacon in the Congregational church at Loomis.

JOHN H. PUTNAM.

The gentleman here named is the oldest settler in Rock or Brown counties, and is well known throughout this section of the country as a successful and prosperous agriculturist. He has been the foremost among the pioneers who have aided materially in the upbuilding of the commercial and social interests of the region, and enjoys a deservedly high standing as a citizen.

Mr. Putnam was born in Clinton county, Michigan, May 7, 1843, and was raised there until 1852, when the family moved to Shiawassee county. His father, William R. Putnam, of good old American stock, was born in New Jersey in about 1810, and died in Michigan in 1881, universally esteemed and respected. There was a family of seven children, of whom our subject was the third member. He went out into the world to make his own way at the age of twenty-one, following farm work for three years in Michigan and Illinois, then taking up contracting and building as a trade. His principal work was building churches, and he did much of this in Iowa, where he located in 1868, remaining there for ten years, eight years of this time at Fort Dodge. In the fall of 1878 he moved to what is now Rock county, then unorganized, settling on a homestead on section 34, township 32, range 20, and lives on that place at the present time, to which he has given the name of Spring Arbor Farm. When he first came here there was not a family on Long Pine creek, the country was a wilderness, wild game was plentiful and as trapper and hunter he killed sixty-eight deer himself. He was here during the pony raids and cattle rustling, but was fortunate in never having lost any stock, although he had some heavy losses by drouths. He relates an interesting anecdote of an attempt of the famous Doc Middleton to steal his team while camping one night some distance from home. He and his father-in-law witnessed the hard winter of 1880-'81, but got along without receiving any assistance from the government. He stuck to his place through all the pioneer experiences that fell to the lot of the early settler, and now has a fine farm of seven hundred and sixty acres, all lying on Pine creek. One hundred and fifty acres is under cultivation, with fifteen acres including three of orchard that have been subjected to irrigation. He keeps sixty head of cattle and fifteen horses, besides other stock. His farm is splendidly improved with good buildings and fences, and he is numbered among the progressive and leading citizens of his community. At present he has partially retired from active farming, the business being carried on by his son.

While living in Iowa Mr. Putnam was married to Miss Sarah Brinckerhoff, of Grand Junction, whose parents, natives of New York, were early settlers in Rock county; both have since joined the great majority. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Putnam: Ira Wayne, Bessie, now Mrs. Charles Sawyer; William Dayton, Alonzo B., who runs the home farm; Clem and Agnes.

In 1883 Mr. Putnam organized the Camp-meeting Association and served as president a number of years. He is deeply interested in educational affairs, and contributed the labor to erect the school near his home. Here he organized a Sunday school, the first west of O'Neil, and acted as superintendent for twenty years. For four years Mr. Putnam has been president of the Agricultural Society of Rock county, and takes an active interest in all affairs of importance to the interests of his locality. He is an independent voter, and while in Iowa he was a member of the Congregational church.

A view of "Spring Arbor Farm" will be found on one of the illustrated pages of this volume.

THOMAS SHIPMAN.

Perseverance and diligence are the stepping stones to success, and these characteristics, supplemented by honesty and good citizenship, are the leading attributes possessed by the gentleman herein named. Mr. Shipman has been a resident of Dawes county, Nebraska, since the early settlement of this section, and has built up a comfortable farm and home here, and his name is closely identified with the upbuilding of this locality. He is well known and highly respected throughout his community.

Mr. Shipman was born in Pike county, Illinois, in 1862. His father, Alfred Shipman, was a farmer, of American stock, he having married Miss Almira Durrell, of Ohio. Our subject was reared in his native state, attending the country school and helping his parents in the farm work, until he reached the age of eighteen. Then the whole family moved to Iowa in 1880, and in 1884 he came to Dawes county, with a party of three others, from Illinois, all traveling by team. Mr. Shipman located on section 27, township 32, range 52, and put up his first building, which was a log shack, and here "batched it" for seven years, driving ox teams, breaking up his land and building up his farm. He proved up on his pre-emption, and took a homestead in about 1888, proving up on that also, and remaining for several years. In 1904 he moved to his present farm in section 28, township 32, range 52. Here he has everything in first-class shape, with good buildings, fences and all machinery for use on his farm. The place consists of four hundred and eighty acres and he engages extensively in stock raising, besides cultivating one hundred and fifty acres. In the spring of 1907 he had a fire which destroyed his stable, corrals and feed, but he is now planning to build other barns, etc. He has been unfortunate in having been burned out three times since settling here, the fires being caused by sparks from railroad engines.

In 1892 our subject was united in marriage to Miss Barbara Cornell, daughter of Levi Cornell, an old settler in this county, now residing in the state of Washington. To Mr. and Mrs. Shipman have been born the following children: Harold, Ethel, Oliver, Hazel and Genevieve.

In politics Mr. Shipman is not party bound, but votes for the best man running.

NICHOLAS SIMONS.

Through exceptionally good management and persistent labors the gentleman herein named has acquired a well developed farm, and is enabled to enjoy the comforts of modern farming surrounded by his family and a large circle of warm friends. Mr. Simons resides on section 21, township 34, range 23, Norden precinct, and has the satisfaction of knowing that his success has come to him by his own unaided efforts.

Mr. Simons was born in Fulton county,

New York, March 25, 1861. His father, Peter Simons, was a farmer by occupation, who came to this country from France, his native land, in about 1850, and died in New York in 1864. There were four children in his father's family, and he was the third in order of birth. When he reached the age of thirteen years his mother died, and as they had no relatives to look after them, the children were compelled to make their own way, and our subject worked on farms at times, also worked in the cotton factories, tobacco factories, and peddled goods through the country. At the age of nineteen he came west, locating in Crawford county, Iowa, where he followed farming for several years, and in 1886 came to Nebraska, settling in Keya Paha county. He at once put up a board shanty, and the following year built a sod house containing two rooms, in which the family lived for several years. The first years were hard ones to them, and oftentimes they endured privations and hardships, going through the drouth periods, when he was obliged to work out by the day to make a living. One year he put in fifteen acres of wheat, planting it four times, and each time the wind storms which swept the country would blow his seed out of the ground. He had a few head of stock, and managed to get along until the better years came on. His farm now consists of five hundred and sixty acres, and he engages in mixed farming and stock raising, mostly the latter. He has built a substantial house, barn and hen house, besides has wells and windmill with plenty of good water, and a fine grove of trees nicely growing. In 1901 he lost his health through overwork, and since then has not been able to do any hard labor.

Mr. Simons is a strong Republican, and although he takes a keen interest in local affairs, could never be induced to accept office. He has been active in helping to build up the schools in his locality, and done his full share in the development of its commercial and educational interests.

Mr. Simons was married April 18, 1883, in Crawford county, to Miss Katherine Sander, daughter of Peter and Gertrude (Peters) Sander, both born in Germany and coming to this country when very young. Mr. and Mrs. Simons are the parents of fourteen children, eleven of whom are living, named as follows: Mary, now Sister Adelia of St. Francis' Convent, Lafayette, Indiana; Annie, wife of William Langer, of Keya Paha county; Nicholas, John, Joseph, Katherine, Charles, George, Matilda, Dorothy and Agnes. Those who died were named Peter, Rose and Leo.

All but two of these children were born on the homestead in Nebraska. Mr. Simons is a Republican in politics and a communicant of the Catholic church.

SIDNEY W. FORD.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history is a man of industrious habits, progressive and up-to-date in his methods of operating his fine farm, which lies in Madrid precinct, every appointment of which bespeaks his good management and individuality. He is one of the early settlers of Perkins county, and was very influential in shaping the affairs of the region during its development into a farming community.

Sidney W. Ford was born in Jackson county, Illinois, in 1861. His father, James Ford, was a native of Ohio, and he married Mary Paxton, also born and reared in that state. The family settled in Grundy county, Illinois, when Sidney was three years old, and there he grew up on a farm, receiving a limited schooling and being taught at an early age to do all kinds of hard farm work. He started out for himself when a youth of fifteen. Later, at the age of twenty-one, he rented land, remaining there up to 1886, when he came to Nebraska, locating in Perkins county on section 32, township 11, range 37. On coming to this region he shipped his goods to Ogalala, which was his nearest trading post, and drove from that place to his claim. His first dwelling was a frame shanty, and he lived in it for several years, then put up a sod house, steadily improving his farm and getting considerable of the land under cultivation. He was soon hit by the drouths and grasshopper periods, losing several crops from different causes, but remained there up to 1901, succeeding in building up a very productive farm, then came to his present homestead, which is situated on section 4, township 10, range 37. Here he has put on splendid improvements, having a handsome residence, good barns, the place entirely fenced and cross-fenced, and it is considered one of the best equipped ranches in the county. There are about nine hundred and sixty acres all in one piece, and he has two complete sets of buildings, engaging in mixed farming and stock raising.

Mr. Ford was united in marriage at Verona, Illinois, in February, 1883, to Miss Ann Jones, of Welsh descent. Five children have been born to them, who are named as follows: Simon, Lloyd, Mary, Sarah E. and Minnie.

During his residence in this vicinity Mr. Ford has always manifested a true public spirit and has gained the respect and esteem of his associates through his straightforwardness and sterling character. He has been an important factor in the advancement of his locality. During the construction of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway through Perkins county he lent his aid in building the road.

NELS W. OLSON.

The advantages offered in America for the young man of thrift and enterprise to gain a footing and build for himself a comfortable home and become an honored citizen has induced many sons of the Scandinavian peninsula to emigrate to the new world, and they are now found plying all trades and filling all professions. Agriculture comes in for her full share of these desirable citizens, and Cheyenne county, Nebraska, has many within her borders. The gentleman above named came from Sweden and has gained a high station in Sidney precinct, Cheyenne county, as a prosperous farmer and citizen of sterling character.

Nels W. Olson was born in the province of Skone, in the south part of Sweden, on May 18, 1871, and was reared there to the age of sixteen years. At that time he crossed from Christianstadt to Copenhagen, thence to Hamburg, whence he sailed for Baltimore, landing after a voyage of fifteen days. He located in Lincoln, Nebraska, and remained for one year, working in the track department of the Union Pacific railroad. He then came to Cheyenne county, and for several years after locating in this region worked for the Union Pacific Railway Company, again in the track department. He filed on a homestead in section 14, township 14, range 51, and later removed to section 36, where he now owns one thousand six hundred and sixty acres of fine farming land, and controls one thousand three hundred and sixty acres additional. He has built up a good home and ranch, having splendid buildings of every description and all improvements. Lodge Pole creek runs through the place, which has much fine hay land and twenty acres of alfalfa. He runs about one hundred and fifty cattle and has made a success of his enterprise, and is classed as one of the leading men of his community. Mr. Olson makes a specialty of fine cattle, and has some splendid specimens of the Hereford breed.

On December 28, 1895, Mr. Olson was married to Miss Tillie Berg, in Laramie City, Wyoming. Of this union four children have been born, named as follows: Oscar Albin, Carl Lubbig, Gustaf Clarence and Annie Elizabeth. Mr. Olson's parents never left their native country, the father dying there in 1899, while the mother is still living. His wife's parents are both deceased. Mr. Olson is a Republican in politics; he was reared in the Lutheran church and affiliates with the Masonic order in Sidney.

WILHELM MARTENS.

The gentleman above named is one of the progressive agriculturists of western Nebraska, a hard worker and makes a close study of the soils in this region, although his financial means have not permitted him to carry on the experiments which he feels would eventually prove beneficial to the entire western part of the state. Mr. Martens is held in the highest esteem by all who know him, and enjoys an enviable reputation as a man of superior intellect and ability.

Wilhelm Martens was born in the town of Angern, Germany, in 1852. His father was a woodworker by trade, and lived and died in his native land. Our subject was reared and educated in the old country, receiving a better education than generally fell to the lot of the young German lads in those days, but he was a natural student and eager to absorb knowledge, and his parents were able to allow him to follow his natural inclinations. During his boyhood days he also learned the machinist's trade, and worked in machine shops in different large cities there. He remained in Germany up to 1881, constantly following his trade and keeping up his studies at the same time, and was married there in 1877 to Miss Anna Fehler, daughter of Wilhelm Fehler, a locksmith and manufacturer of weights and scales, also was employed by the German government as scale inspector or tester.

In April of the year 1881, Mr. Martens left his native land and came to America with his family, locating in South Bend, Indiana, and there followed his trade for three months, then went to Chicago and lived there for two years. He next went to Denison, Iowa, and bought an unimproved farm, all wild prairie land, and began farming, continuing on this place for four years, then traded the farm for a wagon shop and blacksmith shop in Denison, removing into the town, and there worked as a woodworker, making wagons and all kinds of woodwork, also farm machinery. In 1888 he came to Dawes county, Nebraska, arriving here with very little money and nothing much to start with. He settled on a homestead in section 14, township 34, range 48, a tract of wild prairie land with no improvements. He, together with his wife and five small children, lived in a tent during the first year, then built a sod house and started to build up a home. He did well at first but the dry years soon struck them and they were unable to raise any crops, and his wife sickened and died, leaving him almost discouraged. They went through many hardships and much privation, but still stuck to the place, and soon things changed for the better and he was able to get together quite a little property and improve his farm with good buildings, etc.

Mr. Martens now owns a fine ranch of twenty-five hundred acres, with one hundred acres under cultivation and forty acres of fine alfalfa, the balance being in grass and pasture land. He has built about sixteen miles of fence, and has a good substantial house, built in 1897. This house is built of mud and stone for the walls, with sides and roof of tin cans which our subject picked up in the vicinity of his home, which are used almost as shingles would be on a roof, the whole house costing only about one hundred and fifty dollars to build. It is of commodious size, fourteen by twenty-six and fourteen by eighteen, and is a very comfortable dwelling. A picture of the family and the residence will be found on another page.

Mr. Martens and his children, Minnie, Wilhelm, Annie, Louisa, Amanda, Ernest and Paul, are all well liked by their neighbors and associates, and enjoy a pleasant home. When Mrs. Martens died her last words to her husband were, "Take care of the children," and well has he fulfilled this charge, being both father and mother to his little ones, and as they grew up kept them all near him through times of trouble and suffering. Mr. Martens was married again in 1907 to Mrs. Elizabeth Strigl, of German stock, born in Nauenburg, Germany, and coming to America in 1883.

In political views Mr. Martens is a Socialist, and takes a deep interest in all local and national politics. It was on account of his honesty to his political principles which caused him to leave Denison, Iowa, and come to Nebraska, as at that place his outspoken opinion regarding socialism and his loyalty to the cause of labor cost him his business and trade, and he was compelled to come to Dawes county a poor man, although he has never changed his mind about these matters.

RESIDENCE AND FAMILY—WM. MARTENS, Dawes County, Nebraska.

JAMES GREENWOOD.

In the person of the above mentioned gentleman we find one of the oldest settlers of Franklin county, recognized by all as a representative citizen of that locality who has seen the growth and progress of the region from its early settlement. Mr. Greenwood came to the county in 1871, and has been one of the foremost in aiding its development, commercially, educationally and socially. Mr. Greenwood is a native of Yorkshire, England, and came to America with his parents when but two years old, the family locating in the southwestern part of Wisconsin, where two sons still occupy the old homestead. Our subject grew up there and received a good education.

In 1869 he came to Nebraska, locating in Plattsmouth, where two companies were formed to locate town sites, Captain Murphy taking one company and starting Arapahoe, in Furnas county. (See sketch of this gentleman on another page.) The other company came with Mr. Greenwood, nine in all, and located at Franklin. The party consisted of our subject; George Fairfield, surveyor; Bill Wells, V. V. Leonard, A. M. Chase, Samuel Waugh, now of Lincoln; R. Baxter Wyndam, now an attorney of Plattsmouth; George Poisel, a teamster, and A. M. Weaver. The only homesteaders were V. V. Leonard and Mr. Greenwood, and the town was laid out on eighty acres. E. A. Kirkpatrick was one of the company, and he filed on the eighty, but the only one of this number who now resides in Franklin is our subject. He looked after the company's interests for a year, and in 1872 returned to Plattsmouth, coming back here later and engaging in the general merchandise business in partnership with George Buck. In 1872 George O'Bannon, a cowboy from Texas, started a grocery here, and our subject ran his store for four years, and after getting the county seat here the town boomed for a time. Then Bloomington got the county seat and Franklin property went down for a while. Mr. Greenwood and his partner moved their store to Bloomington, and in 1881 returned and reopened the business. The Congregational Academy had then been started here by Rev. C. S. Harrison, who now resides at York. This academy has been a great boon to Franklin, with its three large buildings, fine campus and large attendance of western Nebraska students. Through the influence of our subject, Mr. Buck and their associates, saloons have always been barred, and these gentlemen have given largely of their time and property to the upbuilding on a temperance and educational basis of the town of Franklin. Mr. Buck now resides at Lincoln.

Franklin has prospered ever since the academy has been located here, attracting a good class of residents who have built up substantial homes and business places and have taken a pride in beautifying the park, streets and their private grounds, so that they now have a pretty and growing town. In 1873 George O'Bannon, the cowboy, jumped the town site of eighty acres and held it, so Mr. Greenwood and Mr. Buck took up an adjoining eighty for the town and laid it out, giving land for park, schools and churches, and also gave lots free to actual settlers. Mr. Greenwood was married in 1874 to Miss Emma E. Buck, now deceased. His second wife was Ruth Kenyon. Mr. Greenwood has the following children: Jennie; Grace; Joseph K., taking a course in the law department of Grinnell College, Iowa, and J. A., now a student at the Franklin Academy, and an athlete of no mean reputation; Lucille and David R. Mr. Greenwood was elected county commissioner and served for several terms, and has also been village trustee.

MARTIN JOSEPH MANION.

Martin J. Manion, a popular and highly esteemed citizen of Box Butte county, Nebraska, was born in Dublin, Parish Kilfinch, Ireland, in 1850. He is a son of William Manion, a native of Ireland, who came to America in 1840, landing in New York on August 15th of that year, and he married Mary Foley, also born and reared in Ireland. After reaching this land they settled in Illinois, where the father followed farming for many years. Our subject was reared in Ireland and lived there until he was thirty-eight years of age. In 1890 he started for America from his native shore and landed at New Orleans, and then came north to Omaha, where he remained for a time. He then came to Box Butte county, buying a relinquishment on section 1, township 27, range 48, and after filing on this property was in debt to quite an extent, but he began to open a farm, purchasing two plug teams on first landing here, and during the first six months lived in a tent until he could put up some sort of a dwelling place, then built a sod house and occupied that for a number of years. He witnessed the drouth periods, losing several crops, and for five years the only thing he raised was good crops of Russian thistles, also some good crops of potatoes. He was obliged to work out by the day and month a large portion of the time in order to make a living, hauling timber from Pine Ridge, camping out at night under his wagon, as did most of the travellers in those times, and often slept on the hard frozen ground wrapped in blankets, the snow many times covering the ground all around him. He made, in all, two hundred trips from the vicinity of his home and Pine Ridge. He did all kinds of hard work, breaking up land, etc., in order to make a little money, and all he received for a day's work was fifty cents, and was glad to get that. However, the better years soon came on and he was able to improve his farm, buying more land, and now owns a ranch of twelve hundred and eighty acres, running seventy horses and over two hundred cattle. He also devotes about two hundred acres to farming, and has his ranch all fenced, good buildings on it, etc.

Mr. Manion was married in 1870 to Jennie O'Mara, daughter of Patrick and Ellen (Bowen) O'Mara, both born and reared in Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Manion are the parents of six children, named as follows: Mayme, married, the wife of John Mahoney, of Nance county, Nebraska; William, Josephine, John, Thomas and Francis, who died in infancy. The family occupy a pleasant and comfortable home, and are highly esteemed by their neighbors and fellow citizens.

Mr. Manion is a Democrat and stands firmly for his convictions. He takes a commendable interest in local affairs, and has held school offices for several years past, and is now road overseer.

CHARLES G. YOUNGQUIST.

Among the younger members of the farming community of Phelps county, Nebraska, none are better known or command a higher place as a progressive farmer and worthy citizen than the gentleman above named. Mr. Youngquist has been identified with the agricultural interests for the past ten years, and deserves special mention for the success he has attained in building up his farm and home, which is located in Industry township.

Mr. Youngquist is a native of Sweden and came to America with his parents when an infant. He came to Phelps county with his father in 1880. The latter, John S. Youngquist, who took a homestead in Laird township, subsequently added to his holdings there until he was proprietor of four hundred and eighty acres in that locality. He was very successful at everything he undertook from the start, and is now living in Holdrege, retired from all active business. Prior to coming to Nebraska the family lived at Goodhue, Minnesota, but our subject states that he would not at any price exchange his property here for land in that state. He has always had the greatest faith in the opportunities of this country, and has proved this to be well founded by his own success.

Mr. Youngquist began on his present farm in 1898, and has been constantly adding to his acreage until he is now owner of a fine four-hundred-acre farm. Of this he has three hundred and fifty acres well tilled, and on this he raises fine crops each year. His corn crop in 1904 amounted to about seven thousand bushels, most of which is fed out on his farm, as he keeps about eighty to one hundred grade hogs and about the same number of cattle, with horses sufficient for his farm use. He has recently put up one of the finest farm residences to be found in this locality, and his farm is supplied with a complete set of substantial buildings and modern machinery with which to successfully operate it. He has accomplished all this in the past eighteen years through his own individual efforts and perseverance, which shows that Nebraska is the place for the industrious, wide-awake young farmer.

Mr. Youngquist was married in 1893 to Miss Emily Johnson, of Holdrege. They have a family of four children: William, Edna, Harold and Ellen.

Mr. Youngquist takes a commendable interest in all public affairs in his community. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church in his township, and a trustee of the same. He also is a member of the school board. In political faith he is a Republican. Our subject has bought a residence and property in Loomis, where he intends to settle and make his home. He will still oversee the operating of his farm.

CARSON HENNINGS.

Carson Hennings, a practical farmer and thorough ranchman of western Nebraska, owns a valuable property in section 17, township 26, range 50, Box Butte county, is an old settler in this region, who has always done his full share in local affairs tending to the bettering of conditions in his locality. Mr. Hennings' farm is a notable exception to most

RANCH RESIDENCE OF NELSON S. ROWLEY,
Cherry County, Nebraska.

ENTIRE & HOUSE DRAWING

farms in that his crops nearly always show up as among the very finest in the county on account of the thorough cultivation of the ground and his strict attention to the details of his operations.

Carson Hennings was born in Oldenburg, near Bremen, Germany, in 1859. His father, George Hennings, was a farmer, and our subject's boyhood was spent in assisting his parents in the work of carrying on the home farm, and attending the common schools where he received a thorough, old-fashioned training in the common branches of study, which stood him in good stead during his later years.

In 1885 he left home and started for America, landing in Baltimore in that year, and he came directly west, stopping in Cincinnati, where he remained for one year working in a dairy near that city. He was not exactly satisfied with the country there, so decided to try his fortunes farther west, coming to Grand Island, Nebraska, and looking around for a place to settle. He travelled over Box Butte county in his search and finally took up a homestead on section 17, township 26, range 50, and also a tree claim in section 25, township 25, range 52. In 1888 he returned to Germany for a visit, and there was married to Miss Anna Wemken, a native of that country. They returned to America and located in Box Butte county, on section 17, township 26, range 50, put up a sod shanty and began their home. His first team were oxen, and with these he broke land for a small crop. At the time the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad was being built into Wyoming, and Mr. Hennings was employed by that company, and later when the Chicago & Northwestern people were building their road through this region he was one of those who helped put it through. For a time he was employed by the Homestake Mining Company, and in fact worked at anything he could find to do in order to get along and get started on his farm.

During the years 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896 the drouths worked havoc in his locality and he was unable to raise a decent crop. These failures were a severe setback to him, but as the years grew better he was able to add more land to his original farm and has built it up in fine shape, at the present time owning six hundred and forty acres, one hundred and thirty of which is devoted to diversified farming. He has good buildings and everything necessary for the proper operation of the farm, and also deals largely in stock, keeping about seventy-five head of cattle and has five horses for his farming purposes. He keeps about twenty-five cows for dairy purposes, which bring him in a snug income.

Since locating here Mr. Hennings has been active in local and school affairs, has served on the school board for many years and is one of the leading public-spirited men of his section. He is a Republican but is not actively interested in politics, preferring to devote all of his time to his home and farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Hennings are the parents of six children, namely: Lena, Anna, John, Henry, Carl and George. The family is held in high esteem as good citizens and kind neighbors.

NELSON S. ROWLEY.

Nelson S. Rowley, one of the prominent residents of Cherry county, Nebraska, is a very well known and highly esteemed member of this part of the state. He was born December 28, 1861, on a farm near Toronto, Canada, whither the family had moved from the states. His father, John Rowley, was a farmer of Yankee descent, and his mother was Miss Emily Goldsmith, both natives of the state of New York.

Our subject is one of a family of eleven, he being the sixth child. About 1865 his parents moved back to New York state, and some three years later went to Shiawasse and Clinton counties, Michigan, where they lived until Nelson was fifteen, at which time his father died. Then the mother and younger children came to Nebraska in 1877, locating at North Platte, where our subject began life as a cowboy, in this manner helping to support the family.

In the fall of 1880 he saw what is now Cherry county, but at that time was a part of Sioux county. As a young man Mr. Rowley rode over all the territory in this part of the state, many times being compelled to camp out, thus becoming familiar with Cherry county from one end to the other. In 1885 he filed pre-emption on section 30, township 30, range 31, his present residence, and has since followed the occupation of a rancher. In 1893 he filed under the homestead act on section 31, on which he lived five years and then moved back to his present home. In the summer of 1887 he grew lonesome for a touch of wild life again and started with his brother for the "old outfit." Going by rail to Rapid City, thence by stage to Spearfish, Mr. Rowley, accompanied by his brother, walked thence ninety miles through flooded streams and wet prairies to the ranch on the head waters of Little Powder river.

Mr. Rowley was married, October 4, 1888, to Miss Ella Felch, who is a daughter of Benjamin F. and Clara (Bremmer) Felch, of Scotch and English descent, both old settlers of Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Rowley have one adopted child, Maud E., who is being given the advantages of a higher education in the schools of Valentine and a convent. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Rowley filed on a homestead as Miss Felch, and in 1906 secured an additional four hundred and eighty acres under the Kincaid act.

Mr. Rowley has gone through many hardships and met with much discouragement and loss, having been burned out four times by prairie fires, thereby losing all his barns, sheds, hay and much live stock, and these were only the large losses he sustained, for within seven years in which these fires occurred he experienced many smaller losses also. However, he did not lose courage, and is now the owner of sixteen hundred acres of land, with fine buildings and improvements, well stocked with cattle and horses, and has a leasehold on thirteen hundred acres additional, on which he runs some six or seven hundred head of cattle, one hundred and seventy-five horses and other stock. Mr. Rowley's ranch is located in section 30, township 30, range 31, of Cherry county, Nebraska. He is one of the progressive men in this section of the state, is numbered among the old timers, and his name will figure in the history of Cherry county. Mr. Rowley was one of the witnesses of the Indian scare of 1888, and describes vividly the experiences of that terrible time, but did not take to flight as many of the neighbors did.

Our subject takes an active interest in local politics, and in 1896 was nominated for sheriff by the Populists of Cherry county. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Valentine. One of the interesting illustrations in this work is a view of the residence and surroundings. It will be found on another page.

JAMES R. BIRDWELL.

A prominent place among the list of prosperous and successful farmers of Cheyenne county is accorded the gentleman's name mentioned above. For many years he has been engaged in agriculture and conducts a large estate there.

James R. Birdwell is a native of Harrison county, Indiana, born November 26, 1863, a son of Thomas R. and Mary A. (Waters)

Birdwell. He made that locality his home until he was twenty-one years of age, living on a farm, and there he received a practical training as a boy and young man. His parents are still residing in Harrison county on the old homestead.

Our subject arrived in Nebraska in September, 1884, settling at first in Saunders county, and farmed there for three years, then came to Cheyenne county and filed on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in section 22, township 16, range 50, which is now the home ranch. He has improved this property well, cultivating one hundred and twenty-five acres and runs about twenty-five head of stock. The farm is supplied with good buildings, has a splendid water supply, and is well adapted to stock raising and farming.

Mr. Birdwell married in Saunders county, Nebraska, November 24, 1887, Miss Anna E. Potter, who was born in La Salle, Illinois, a daughter of Charles and Ella (Bancroft) Potter. She came to this state with her parents when she was a girl of eleven, where both of her parents died. Mr. and Mrs. Birdwell have four children, who are named as follows: Thomas G., Alvah, James H. and Charles R.

Mr. Birdwell is a Bryan Democrat with independent tendencies, and takes a commendable interest in local affairs. He is a member of the Dalton Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, and of the Methodist church.

JOSEPH L. WHEELER.

Joseph L. Wheeler, an active and pushing business man and farmer of Long Pine, Nebraska, has won a reputation and a standing second to none for the possession of those manly traits that mark the true American, such as honesty, a sterling integrity and an industrious habit that will not tire nor grow weary until the end is accomplished. While still in the prime of life he has become quite fore-handed, and shows in the story of his own career what steady labor, wise calculation and unbending uprightness may accomplish. Mr. Wheeler was born on a farm in Dodge county, Wisconsin, July 24, 1858, and is the oldest member of a family of eleven living children born to his parents. His father, J. T. Wheeler, is an old settler of Brown county, Nebraska, and his career forms the subject of an interesting sketch that appears on another page of this work.

When Joseph L. Wheeler was ten years of age his parents transferred themselves, their children and all their appurtenances to Mahaska county, Iowa, where they maintained a home for the following ten years, after which they resided in Grand Island, Nebraska, for the five years following. In the fall of 1882 the subject of this writing came into Brown county, and for the ensuing five or six years divided his time between the work of helping the incoming farmers open and develop their claims and conducting the farming operations on the paternal homestead, and was of much assistance in the rearing of his younger brothers and sisters. On the 9th of February, 1889, he was united in marriage to Miss Emma Berger, a native of Nebraska, and a daughter of Eli Berger, one of the pioneers in the settlement of Brown county. To this happy union were born two children, Bert and Flossy.

From 1894 to 1899 he conducted a meat market at Long Pine. Mr. Wheeler turned to farming for himself in 1899, after closing his meat market, and two years later bought the farm on which we find him at the present writing. It is situated on Willow creek, and is a part of section 7, township 30, range 20. It is a very choice tract of land, one hundred and sixty acres in extent, and though partially improved at the time of his purchase, has been modernized and brought to date by its progressive owner. New buildings have replaced the old, many fruit trees have been planted, and much small fruit is growing. He has one hundred and five acres under cultivation, and is making a marked success in his career as a Nebraska farmer. From the beginning Mr. Wheeler was always ready to push ahead by any honest enterprise. He broke bronchos, trained many a yoke of oxen to drive and never willingly let the "nimble nickle" go by unclaimed. He was formerly an active Populist during the prosperous days of that party, and is now in the ranks of the Democrats. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Long Pine.

JUDGE WATSON R. TOWNE, DECEASED.

Judge Watson R. Towne, deceased, whose picture appears on another page, was probably one of the best known citizens of Cherry county. He was a resident of the county for more than a quarter of a century, and was closely identified with the history of its development.

Mr. Watson was born in Franklin, Vermont, in 1834. His father, Ephraim Towne, a native of Massachusetts, was a farmer of English stock, and his mother, Miss Jane Willis, was a Canadian of Irish descent. They had a family of nine children, of whom our subject is the fifth, all reared and educated in Vermont. The boy secured a common school education and his time between school hours was devoted to hard farm work. At the age of twenty years he came to Chicago, securing employment with a commission firm with whom he remained for four years. Thence he went to Minnesota and joined the pioneers and for two years, with St. Paul as headquarters, engaged in trading with the Chippewa Indians in the Red river valley. In the fall of 1859 he came back to Chicago, and at the outbreak of the Civil war enlisted in the Chicago Dragoons, an independent company of cavalry which furnished its own horses, equipment, etc. Ordered to West Virginia, they participated in a number of engagements and skirmishes during the early months of the great conflict. After being mustered out he still longed for the excitement of a soldier's life, and went to Missouri as a scout, serving in the southwest until the year 1864. When the war was over he went to Colorado and there drove mule and bull teams, freighting in the mountains, leading the usual frontiersman's life until 1867, when he came to Nebraska and there worked for the government along the North Platte. In the fall of that year he left government service and freighted in Wyoming until the summer of 1870, at which time he came to Schuyler, Nebraska, and from then to the present has made this state his home, with the exception of nine years spent in Iowa.

Mr. Towne traversed the entire western part of the state on horseback. For three years he was live stock agent for the Elkhorn Valley railroad, and subsequently owned and operated a large sheep and cattle range on the Minnechaduza. In the fall of 1890 he located in Valentine, becoming one of the leading public-spirited citizens of the town, being honored in 1896 with the nomination and election to the county judgeship of Cherry county, an honor four times repeated, showing with what approval and esteem his decisions have been received by his constituents within his jurisdiction.

Mr. Towne was married in 1872 to Miss Olive O. Aldridge, who came of Canadian ancestry. Four children have been born to them, and they are named as follows: George W., Nellie O., Maude and Mabel.

Mr. Towne was universally esteemed and admired, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of his associates. His career illustrates the versatility and steady attributes that have made pioneers of the west what they are today—qualities that have given force to our institutions and have made a garden out of a wilderness of barren plains.

JAMES A. W. JOHNSON.

Among the prominent business men of Georgia, Cherry county, the gentleman above mentioned occupies a foremost place. Mr. Johnson is well known all over this section of the country, and is highly esteemed as a citizen of true worth.

Mr. Johnson was born in Cerro Gordo county, Iowa, March 16, 1867. He is a son of Sylvanus Johnson, whose sketch appears in this work on another page. Mr. Johnson is the third member in his parents' family of seven children and was raised in Iowa on his father's farm, where they lived the usual life of pioneers on the frontier of western Iowa, and later in Holt county, Nebraska, where they afterward settled. When he was twenty years old he came to Cherry county and begun as a homesteader, taking up a claim south of Georgia. The first days were spent in hauling wood to Valentine for a dollar and a half a load, using ox teams, and in teaching school in the neighborhood, in which he was successful. He put up a log house with sod roof and remained here until proving up on his claim. Here he engaged in stock raising, and also in the well-drilling business, putting in wells all over Cherry and Keya Paha counties. In 1900 Mr. Johnson left his farm and moved to Georgia, trading cattle for a store in town, where he is now engaged in the mercantile business, carrying a good stock of general merchandise. He sold the farm and later bought a large ranch of about seventeen hundred acres on which he runs a number of cattle, superintending its operation personally in addition to his other interests here. In 1900 he was appointed postmaster of Kilgore (Georgia station), succeeding his father in that office.

On January 25, 1887, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Mary Wray, whose father was an old settler in Holt county, and later moved to Cherry county. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have five children, namely: Estella, Sadie, Bessie, Leonard and Ethel.

Mr. Johnson is a prominent Republican, taking an active part in politics, serving on the central committee for ten or twelve years and has been serving as justice of the peace for an equal period of time. He has been delegate to both state and county conventions many times, and is one of the leading men of his community.

JOHN ARMSTRONG.

Among the leading old settlers of Box Butte county, Nebraska, none is more widely known or more highly esteemed than the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review. For many years he has been closely identified with the agricultural interests of this region, and he has done his full share in bringing about the present prosperity enjoyed by the residents of that locality. He has a pleasant home and well improved farm in section 11, township 27, range 49.

Mr. Armstrong was born in the county of Fermanagh, province of Ulster, Ireland, on June 19, 1852. His father, John Armstrong, was also a native of that county and followed farming during his entire life, as did also his father before him. He married Elizabeth Wadsworth, of Huguenot stock. Our subject was reared and educated in his native land, attending the church education society school, and later the national school, receiving a better education than the average boy of his station, studying besides the common branches agriculture, botany, etc. When he was twenty-seven years of age he came to the United States. One brother had previously emigrated to this country and had located in Cuming county, Nebraska, and with him our subject spent a short time, later traveling to the Pacific coast and worked in the gold mines in that part of the country for about a year. In 1884 he came to Box Butte county for the first time, traveling all over this country on horseback, camping out nights on the ground. He also lived in Stanton county, but liked this region best of all on account of the price of land, and returned here, driving from Hay Springs with a team and wagon, carrying farm machinery, grain and seed, and driving four cows along. His first house was made of sod, in which he lived for about twelve years, occupying a homestead and tree claim which he filed on as soon as coming here. This land was situated seven miles northeast of Hemingford. He had a pretty good start, owning a team and several cattle, some hogs and chickens, which was a great deal more than most of the settlers had to begin with. He did well from the start and got through the dry years in good shape, as he did not try to farm any during those years. In 1899 he sold out his homestead and bought his present farm, which is located in section 11, township 27, range 49, the only reason for disposing of his former place being that this one offered better schooling advantages for his children. Here he has a fine estate consisting of ten quarter sections, all well improved, fitted with good buildings, wind mills, supply tanks, etc. He cultivates four hundred acres, and runs about two hundred head of cattle and thirty-five horses each year.

Mr. Armstrong was married May 4, 1886, to Matilda Martz, who is a native of Prussia, born near Berlin, and came to America when a young girl with her parents, the family settling near Muscatine, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong have a family of five children, all boys, named as follows: Will S., aged nineteen years, a graduate of the Creighton College of Pharmacy; Paul E., eighteen years old, who attended the Chadron Academy and later the Bayls Business College at Omaha, Nebraska; John W., sixteen, living at home and attending school at Hemingford high school; Roy H., eleven, and Teddy F., two years of age, at home with their parents.

Mr. Armstrong is determined to give each of his children a good education to fit them for the battle of life. The three eldest each own about twelve hundred dollars' worth of cattle and horses on the home farm, and have their own particular lot of stock to take care of, teaching them responsibility and as an inducement to remain at home and help their parents in the operation of the home ranch. Our subject is enthusiastic about the opportunities offered in this region for any man willing to work, and states positively that there is no need or excuse for any one to want a home and good farm who is energetic and industrious.

Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong will be found on another page of this volume.

Our subject and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Hemingford, Nebraska. He is a Republican, active in local affairs tending to the betterment of conditions in his locality.

ANDREW GROVER WICKHAM.

Andrew Grover Wickham, residing in township 25, range 33, Cherry county, Nebraska, ten or twelve miles northwest of Mullen, is counted among the old-timers of Nebraska, and is one of those men who has ever been willing and ready to assist in the development of that locality and take a leading part in all school and public affairs.

Mr. Wickham is a native of Westville, Champaign county, Ohio, born in 1840. His parents were of English blood, and took an important part in old colonial affairs. The father, Minor T., was a farmer all his life, and he married Martha Brown, of a well known family, and she died when Andrew was a small boy seven years old. He was reared and educated in Ohio, and in 1861 enlisted in the United States volunteer service, becoming a member of the Seventy-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and afterwards saw hard service for several years. He was at the battle of Stone River, Chickamauga, in the campaign of Atlanta, Savannah and at Nashville, and also was through North Carolina with his regiment, taking part in many skirmishes. While on a foraging expedition in North Carolina he was captured March 20, 1865, and held prisoner for ten days near the close of the war. After the close of the war he went to Indiana, arriving there in the fall of 1865, and began farming on rented land, remaining there for twenty-one years, and at the end of that time came to Nebraska, spending the winter of 1886 at Broken Bow, and in the spring of the year 1887 settled in the sand hills in Hooker county, nine miles southeast of Mullen. He drove through the country by team from Broken Bow, and after arriving at his claim at once erected a sod house, stable and sheds, and occupied his sod shanty for several years, proved up on his homestead and improved it in good shape. In 1891 his wife departed this life and he soon afterwards removed to Mullen, where he could give his children the benefit of the schools. While living on the farm he went through some hard times, experiencing every phase of pioneer life, suffering from prairie fires, in one instance having had his sod barns burned to the ground and losing all their possessions, also considerable hay, harness, etc.

In 1904 Mr. Wickham took a Kincaid homestead, which he is at present occupying and which is devoted to ranching. This is situated ten miles northwest of Mullen, in Cherry county, and he has this place in excellent condition, supplied with good buildings, fences and every improvement. He does a little farming.

In 1860, before enlisting in the army, Mr. Wickham was married in Ohio to Susanna Schaeffer, and they reared a family of thirteen children, all but two of whom are living at the present time. They are named as follows: William H., died in 1890 in Chicago; John Anson, Ida May, Violet, George, Emery, Ella, Jessie, Andrew, Ollie (deceased), Frank, Elmer and Arthur. Mr. Wickham has given to each child a good education, sending a number of them to Indiana to attend different schools, and they are a very bright and intelligent group. Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Wickham will be found on another page of this volume.

Mr. Wickham was one of the first county commissioners in Hooker county at the time the county was organized, receiving his appointment through Governor Thayer. Our subject is prominent in affairs in his locality, taking an active part in all public matters.

TRUMAN FREELAND.

Truman Freeland, of whom a portrait appears elsewhere, is one of the first settlers of the western half of Nebraska, coming to the state when many homesteads were yet to be taken within fifty miles of Omaha; coming to the state when all that portion of Iowa west of Fort Dodge was mostly unsettled land, and no bridge yet spanned the Missouri river. Thousands of deer and antelope roamed over the country between Lincoln and Grand Island, and when he first saw the country north of the Platte and west of Columbus it was a wilderness, uninhabited except by Indians, buffalo, elk, deer and other wild animals roamed in countless numbers over the entire tract; there were also many beasts of prey, such as the mountain lion, buffalo, wolves, coyotes and wildcats. Otter, beaver, mink and other furbearing animals were numerous in all the streams, and Mr. Freeland states that beaver dams were often raised to a height of three and four feet, and that near where he now resides trees were felled by the beaver, that were more than twenty inches in diameter.

Mr. Freeland assisted in the construction of the first bridge thrown over the waters of the Platte and carried the chain when government surveys were made in what is now Custer and Loup counties.

He was the second settler of what is now Garfield county, C. H. Jones and family having settled in the county a few days before his arrival as an actual settler. He erected the first residence on the valley of the North Loup river west of Haskell creek, and twenty miles above it, having but one neighbor nearer than twenty miles. Mr. Freeland assisted in the construction of the first school house erected in the county, the building being placed on his pre-emption; Mrs. Freeland taught the first school held in the county. Mr. Freeland erected the first frame dwelling built of foreign lumber erected in Garfield county, hauling the material from Grand Island, a distance of nearly one hundred miles.

The subject of this sketch is decidedly a man of peace, and took but little part in the Indian troubles of pioneers days. Mr. Freeland received his education in the common schools of northern Illinois, and is a man of marked literary ability, his writings having appeared in various publications throughout the United States, not one of his contributions having been rejected. He is now publishing a volume of poems entitled "My Thoughts and Yours," a few stanzas of which, by permission of the author, we print below, as they are very appropriate in this volume. Mr. Freeland was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, February 22, 1852, and came to Nebraska in 1869, where he has since resided. He settled in Howard county in May, 1872, and moved to Garfield county November 19, 1872, where he has since resided near Burwell, the county seat of Garfield county, which was all government land at that time, the nearest town being Grand Island. During the first few years the nearest trading point for the settlers in this region from which they could obtain groceries was Grand Island, located one hundred miles from their camp.

Mr. Freeland was married February 3, 1874, to Miss Almira J. Russell, a native of Vermont, of English descent. Mrs. Freeland was a teacher in the first public school established in Garfield county. She departed from this life the 22nd day of August, 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Freeland have never had any children, but reared two which they adopted, a boy and a girl, Melvina and Earl.

Mr. Freeland had always voted the Prohibitionist ticket up to several years ago, but has changed his political views of late years, and now leans toward the Socialistic cause. It can be truly said that he comes of genuine pioneer stock, his mother's father having been one of the pioneer settlers of Indiana, whose original purchase from the government included a portion of the battleground of Tippecanoe in Marshall county, Indiana. Mr. Freeland's mother came to Rock Island county, Illinois, in 1832, when that country was yet a wilderness, and is still living in good health with her son Truman in Garfield county, Nebraska.

HILLS OF NEBRASKA.

No human foot e'er pressed thy sides
For centuries unknown,—
Wild beasts upon thy high divides
Unmolested roamed.

Once the home of finny tribes,
Buried in the mighty deep—
Tonight upon thy sloping sides
Feathered songsters sleep.
Monuments of God are ye,

Piled at the tomb of time,— Piled that man may wiser be Beholding thee—His work sublime.

RESIDENCE AND PORTRAIT OF TRUMAN FREELAND.
(Author of "My Thoughts and Yours.")

ANDREW GROVER WICKHAM AND WIFE.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN ARMSTRONG.

HILLS OF GARFIELD COUNTY.
(1872)

O'er all this rolling prairie land,
Reigned perfect silence—solitude—
O'er the billowy hills of sand
And where the pines and cedars stood.

Spreading elms and cottonwood
Along the river's brink were seen,
And here and there the silent flood Rolled through a grassy plain.

In the valleys smooth and wide
Roamed the buffalo, elk and deer;
And gamboling on thy high divides,
Were timid antelope everywhere.

WILLIAM S. BIXLER.

The above mentioned gentleman is well known to all the residents of McCook, Nebraska, as the genial and popular proprietor of the Bixler opera house. He is one of the younger citizens of McCook, who by his faith in the city and his liberal enterprise is adding materially to the fame of McCook as one of the coming prosperous cities of the west. In 1906 Mr. Bixler built and operated a large roller skating rink here, which was a popular amusement resort for the younger members of the community, and this year he has enlarged this rink so as to make it the largest and best equipped theater between Lincoln and Denver. The main floor is so constructed that it can be lowered evenly and used as a rink, thereby combining theater and rink. Everything is run in the very best manner, catering to all classes and tastes of this beautiful and cultured city. He has started right, and is determined to take every precaution to keep out worthless amusement companies, whose stock in trade is all in their show bills, producing only plays and operas that are worthy of the patronage of the very best class of people. These plays are limited to about four each month, and by this method his clients are not surfeited and are prepared to enjoy the occasional treats which he gives them. The McCook public has a well trained and critical taste in music and the drama, and to a less capable man it would be extremely difficult to always provide plays to their liking, but our subject strives hard to please the most particular, and in this he has the sympathy and active support of the best people of the city. The auditorium seats ten hundred and fifty-eight people, and its acoustic properties are splendid. The main building is sixty by one hundred and forty feet, being fifty-four feet high over the stage, which is thirty-two by sixty, and forty feet high to rigging loft. The three drop curtains used in this playhouse would do credit to any theater in larger cities. The place is fitted up with four hundred electric lights, and there are five dressing rooms. This theater is used for religious services, lectures and political demonstrations, thus filling a great public need.

Mr. Bixler has lived in McCook since his boyhood, having come here with his father in 1884 from Pennsylvania, where the family lived near the Maryland line. His father, Hiram K. Bixler, owns a fine river bottom farm near McCook. Our subject was connected with the Burlington & Missouri Railway for seven years, and was chairman of the protective board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen for all the territory west of the Missouri river. He was one of those who helped to get the first schedule of the Burlington & Missouri Railroad after the great strike of 1887.

Mr. Bixler was married to Miss Alice Coe, daughter of M. H. Coe, who settled in this county in 1884, now residing at Perry, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Bixler have one son and two daughters.

Mr. Bixler is a deservedly influential and popular resident of McCook, and one who is always foremost in promoting the interest of all that tends to the growth and advancement of the community in which he resides.

LOUIS MARTINSON, DECEASED.

Louis Martinson, who was numbered among the old and honored settlers of Kimball county, was a successful and fore-handed farmer of that region, was thoroughly identified with life on the frontier and knew its light and dark shades by experience. His estate is on section 36, township 16, range 55, where he had a well improved farm and was classed among the well-to-do citizens of his locality.

Mr. Martinson was born in Sweden, July 26, 1851. He was the youngest in a family of eleven children, all growing up in their native land. When our subject was a young man he came to America with his wife and five children. They landed in the United States May 6, 1887. They came to Nebraska, settling in Antelopeville, Cheyenne county, which is now a part of Kimball county. The father homesteaded on section 24, township 16, range 55, and began to improve a home and farm. They went through all the pioneer experiences in getting their farm started, going through good, bad and indifferent times, often meeting with disappointments in the shape of crop failures and other discouragements that fell to the lot of the early settler in that section, but finally succeeding in putting improvements on their place and getting ahead.

At the time of his death, our subject had a ranch of eight hundred acres, about sixty acres under cultivation, and ran a large bunch of cattle and horses. His son Charlie owns four hundred and eighty acres, farms extensively and keeps a small herd of cattle and horses. Since his father's death he has had charge of the ranch.

Mr. Martinson was married in Sweden, in 1875, to Miss Ellen Jansen, who died July 4, 1908, on their homestead here. They were the parents of the following children: Hilda, wife of Walter Haycock, living in Kansas; Charlie A., mentioned above, single; Avery C., Millie, Peter, deceased; Helen, wife of James Wells, living in Cheyenne, Wyoming, and Harry:

Mr. Martinson was a Republican. He had held different local offices and always took an active interest in local affairs. He was also treasurer of school district No. 13. Since his death, which occurred October 1, 1908, his son Charles has assumed the management of the ranch which he now controls and operates. He was assessor for one term and school director for a time, and has taken an active part in local affairs.

JOHN W. RADFORD.

John W. Radford, known throughout Kearney county as a prosperous and successful stockman and ranch owner, resides in Logan township, where he has a fine home and farm. He came to this place in 1887 and homesteaded where he now lives, taking forty acres, and the same year bought another one hundred and sixty acres, and has since added to it until he is now proprietor of six hundred and forty acres of fine ranch and farm land. He farmed in Iroquois county, Illinois, prior to coming here, bringing some stock with him from that state, and has since kept increasing and improving his herds, and now has about one hundred and fifty head of good grade cattle. He prefers the white faces, and has one thoroughbred white-faced male at the head of his herd, and has some fine animals among them.

Mr. Radford was born in England in the year 1850. His father, Robert Radford, was born in Somersetshire, England, and came here in about the year 1885, settling in Logan township and living in this locality up to 1896, when he moved to Oregon, where he died in 1898. He was eighty-six years old, and was well known to the residents of this county as a man of good business judgment and industrious habits. The mother, whose maiden name was Mary Langdon, was also a native of Somersetshire, England.

Comparing this country with Illinois, where he farmed for twelve years, Mr. Radford states that he much prefers it here, as there is much more money to be made here, a man being able to do twice the amount of work and making dollars in Nebraska where he could only make cents in Illinois. He has a nice herd of Duroc Jersey red hogs, and has had marked success with them. He has tried the Poland China, but was unable to get as good results from that breed, and thinks the former are better for all purposes. He has about one hundred and fifty head on hand at present. He raises a number of mules and colts each year for market, and realizes good profits from this source. He has about eighty acres of good alfalfa and intends growing more right along.

Mr. Radford was united in marriage in 1883 to Miss Mary Sherrill, daughter of Jesse and Elizabeth Sherrill, who were from Kentucky and settled in Iroquois county. Mr. and Mrs. Radford have seven children, namely: Ben and Harry (twins), Letha, Lulu, Edna, Pearl and Nell. The family is highly esteemed in their community and prominent members of the Methodist Episcopal church, our subject acting as treasurer and member of the church board. He is also school director in his district.

DAVID V. MORGAN.

David V. Morgan, one of the well-to-do and probably one of the most prominent of the old settlers of Dawes county, Nebraska, resides on his fine estate in section 21, township 31, range 48, where he has a pleasant and happy home, and is held in high esteem by his fellowmen.

Mr. Morgan was born in Coal Valley, Rock Island county, Illinois, in 1860. His father, Thomas Morgan, was a coal miner, and the family lived in the mining districts in that vicinity, and the father was finally killed there in May, 1865, soon after the Civil war. He was a native of Wales, and came to this country in his young manhood, his wife also having been born in Wales. Our subject was reared in Illinois until he was nineteen years of age, then came to Boone county, Iowa. He had traveled considerably through the middle and western states. He had worked in the coal mines from the time he was eleven years of age, spending altogether fifteen years in that work, and even after coming to this country worked for a few winters in the mines in Kansas and Iowa. When he first came to Dawes county he teamed from Valentine, and then afterwards freighted for several trips, hauling produce, etc. He located on the section where he now lives, where he put up his first house, which was made of logs, and there "batched it" for a time. He brought a good team of horses with him, and they were stolen from him, but he soon got another team and went to work building up his farm, breaking land, etc. During the first several years he dug fourteen wells, averaging two hundred feet deep each. The dry years overtook him and he suffered considerable loss at different times, but continued to build up his farm and improve the place, adding to his acreage constantly until he is now owner of four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land, besides operating quite a tract of leased land. He has been very successful, and is counted among the prosperous citizens of his locality, and is a man of sterling character and integrity.

MRS. HENRY RETHMEYER.

Mr. Morgan was married on January 25, 1888, to Miss Anna Frazier, of Lehigh Valley, Iowa. Her father, Robert Frazier, was a miner, and both father and mother were natives of England and were reared there, where Mrs. Morgan was born. Six children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan, and are named as follows: Lulu, Edith, Blanche, Hazel, Lawrence and Ellsworth.

Mr. Morgan is active in local public affairs, and is serving as road supervisor at the present time. He is also on the school board and has served his district in different capacities for several years. He is a Republican.

DANIEL A. HANEY.

Daniel A. Haney, one of the pioneer settlers of Grant county, Nebraska, has acquired a valuable property on the south line of the county, and is classed among the substantial ranchmen of his community, and enjoys the respect and esteem of his fellowmen. He has watched the growth of the region from the earliest days of its settlement, and has taken an active part in its development as an old-time resident.

Mr. Haney was born in Moultrie county, Illinois, in 1863. His father, Isaac, was a well known farmer and ranchman, and an early settler in western Nebraska, and our subject was raised and educated here. The family settled in this state in 1871, in Saline county, and Daniel grew up on the home farm, passing through all the pioneer experiences so familiar to the old settlers in this region. In 1884 he left home and went to Kansas, remaining there for several years, following ranching. He then returned to Nebraska and filed on a homestead in the southeastern part of Grant county, there putting up sod buildings and "batching it" for about three years. He started his ranch, breaking up some land for crops, trying hard to farm same, but found he was unable to do very well, so gradually got into the cattle business and rode the range for a number of years. He lived on that ranch up to 1906, and succeeded in building up a good property, owning in all one thousand acres, all of which is deeded land, well improved with every kind of ranch building, fences, corrals, etc., and all in first-class shape. In the latter year he built a handsome residence in Hyannis, and now makes that his home, although he personally superintends the operation of his ranch.

Mr. Haney was married in 1896 to Miss Minnie Goble, whose father, A. J. Goble, is a prominent old-timer and successful ranchman of Grant county. Four children have been born to our subject and his good wife, named as follows: Pearl, Jessie, Alma and Ethel. These form a charming and interesting group and they have one of the most pleasant and happy homes to be found.

HENRY RETHMEYER.

Henry Rethmeyer, a resident of Minden, Kearney county, is well and favorably known as a worthy citizen and good business man. He is a contractor and builder, and has followed this trade constantly since coming to Minden twenty-four years ago.

Mr. Rethmeyer was born in Cook county, Illinois, February 13, 1858. He is a son of Fred and Dorothy (Dullmeyer) Rethmeyer, who came to Illinois from Schamberg, Lippe, in 1854, settling in Cook county, where he followed farming for many years. He is now eighty-six years of age, and his wife seventy-nine, both hale and hearty. Since locating in Kearney county Mr. Rethmeyer has built a good many dwelling houses and barns, all over the county and also in the adjoining counties. He has done work in Adams and Clay counties, and erected the German parsonage at Grand Island. This is a beautiful residence, and he has put up many of the finest houses in his home town, of which his own home is a good example. He employs four or five assistants and carries on a large business, giving the best of satisfaction with whatever he undertakes. He owns two houses here, and has met with pronounced success in his line, and has made all he is worth through industry and strict attention to his business, supplemented by honesty and good judgment. On the grounds surrounding his residence he has in full bearing a fine orchard of cherries, apples, plums, apricots, etc., showing that all of these fruits can be successfully grown in Nebraska if properly planted and cared for.

Mr. Rethmeyer was married in 1883 to Miss Mary Heimerdinger, who came from Stuttgart, Germany, in 1882. They are the parents of two children, namely: Mary, wife of John Stader, a farmer living in this county, and Julia, wife of J. Blackburn, who is engaged in the fruit business in Banning, California. Mr. Rethmeyer has four grandchildren—Edward, Onita and Hilda, in Kearney county, and Olpha May, in California.

In the summer of 1907 Mr. Rethmeyer went into the cement block business and does considerable contracting in the line of cement work. He does cement floor work, porch columns, baluster work, steps, etc.

On another page of this volume will be found portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Rethmeyer.

ALLISON C. HARBERT.

Allison C. Harbert owns and operates a fine estate of seven hundred and twenty acres, located in section 20, township 34, range 42, where he has a pleasant and comfortable home. He is one of the leading agriculturists of Sheridan county, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Harbert is a native of Benton county, Iowa, born in 1866. He is a son of John D. Harbert, of American stock, born and raised in Ohio, now a resident of this county. There were three boys and four girls in his father's family, of whom he is the second member. At the age of twenty-one years he struck out for himself and came to Nebraska, locating on the homestead he now lives on. He first landed in Gordon, March 16, 1887, and was obliged to borrow money to file on his land. He went to work at once building up his place, and never worked out for any one in his life. His father had a homestead near his own, and he worked on that until he took his own farm, assisting his parents in carrying on their farm and supporting the family. During these first years he worked very hard to get a start, and the dry years from 1893 on were very disastrous to him, as he lost all his crops, and had to begin all over again when the good years came along. He began to raise better crops after a time, and has been very successful of late years, having gone into the stock business to quite an extent, and also cultivates a large part of his land.

Mr. Harbert was living on his present farm during the Indian scare of 1891, occupying a sod house, and here he stayed during all that time, but never met with any serious trouble from the savages. He lost all his household goods in 1888 by fire, and this was a severe loss to him, having to rebuild and fit up his home with new goods. He has "batched" it ever since coming here, never having been married.

Mr. Harbert is well satisfied with conditions in this region, and thinks western Nebraska the place to live. He has never taken an active part in politics, but votes the Republican ticket.

IRVIN E. MYERS.

Irvin E. Myers stands well among the younger settlers of Nebraska, and is pushing rapidly to the front at Newport, Rock county, where his sturdy manhood, manly character, and honorable methods give him prominence. His birth occurred on a farm in Erie county, Pennsylvania, July 22, 1868, where his father, George W. Myers, was engaged in trade as a mason and also followed farming to some extent. Irvin, the youngest child in a family of three, was reared to manhood in Erie county, where he received a somewhat liberal education. When he was eighteen years of age he struck out for himself, and secured work in the Pennsylvania lumber woods, where for thirteen years his time was entirely demanded. The young man found, however, as thousands of others had found before him, that opportunity grew harder for every oncoming generation in the older regions, and that if a young person hoped to find place for himself in the work of the world he must "go west," and as Horace Greeley recommended, "grow up with the country." This he did in 1888, that year coming to Rock county, Nebraska, and making a homestead entry of a farm for himself, on which at first was a sod shanty for a home and such rude shelter for the stock as he could hastily construct. He did his farm work with oxen, and at the end of five years was able to "prove up" and finally secure title.

The wedding festivities of Irvin E. Myers and Miss Etta J. Hornby were celebrated May 1, 1895. She is a daughter of George C.

and Myra (Jones) Hornby, who were for years pioneers of Rock county, and are now living in South Dakota. She has taken part in the earlier settlement of this part of the state, and is now, while still a young woman, reckoned among the oldest pioneers of Rock county. To Mr. and Mrs. Myers have come two bright and charming children, Helen and Harold.

Mr. Myers brought his young family to Newport in 1898 that he might take a position as foreman of the E. L. Myers lumber yard, a position he held until the month of October, 1905. At that time he set up in business for himself in a store specially devoted to the handling of feed and merchandise, of which he disposed May 21, 1907.

Mr. Myers is a landed proprietor of standing and owns a section of land, three hundred and twenty acres in Rock county and an equal amount in Wheeler county, both tracts devoted to the production of hay. The Newport creamery, in which he was interested for a time, was largely indebted to him for its organization. In politics his influence is felt, and he is an active worker in the Republican party. He is a member of the Workmen and Royal Highlanders of Newport and the Modern Woodmen at Bassett.

ISRAEL KIMBEL.

The farming community northwest of Oshkosh has an able representative in the person of Israel Kimbel. For many years he has been a resident of Deuel county, during which time he has been successful as an agriculturist and stockman, has gained an extensive acquaintance on account of his many sterling qualities, and is known as an energetic and prosperous farmer and worthy citizen.

Mr. Kimbel is a native of Missouri, born May 3, 1861, but made the state his only a short time, his parents removing to Iowa, where he grew up. He and the family came to Nebraska in 1888, landing here in Deuel county on March 7, during a heavy snowstorm, and drove out by team from Ogallala. In the same spring he took a homestead on section 13, township 17, range 45, proving up in due time, and members of his family now own land adjoining to the amount of about sixteen hundred acres. Mr. Kimbel cultivates three hundred acres and runs a small bunch of cattle and quite a number of fine horses, also a good drove of hogs. He has the entire ranch well improved, and has an abundant water supply, the home ranch being located on the Platte river bottom, seven miles west of the town of Oshkosh. It is one of the best situated tracts lying along the river, and is a very valuable property. He started on the ranch in 1888 on wild prairie land, and lived in a tent the first six weeks until a sod house was built. Comparing the difference between that time and the present it shows Mr. Kimbel to be an energetic and worthy citizen.

Mr. Kimbel married Jennie A. Dowell, a native of Illinois, the event occurring in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on September 14, 1882. Both parents of Mrs. Kimbel are dead. Mrs. Kimbel's father was a pioneer in Montana, where Mrs. Kimbel spent thirteen years of her girlhood days. Later the family moved to Iowa. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kimbel, namely: William Leroy, single; Jessie, wife of Grover Crane, living near the home ranch; Pearl, wife of Verde Fought, they residing north of Oshkosh on a farm; Gertrude, Bessie and Maude, all at home. The entire family of our subject are well and favorably known throughout the locality, and their home is one of the most hospitable to be found. Mr. Kimbel is a thoroughly congenial gentleman, and bears the reputation of being a true sportsman among those who love to hunt, and has participated in many a fine hunting trip with a party of genial good fellows. Mr. Kimbel has done much in the way of assisting in the establishment of the schools in his locality, and taken an active interest in local affairs. In politics he is a Democrat.

Mrs. Kimbel's mother was born and raised in Illinois. Her father was a prominent and well-to-do farmer of Manard county, Illinois, seventy-five miles from Springfield. He had an extensive estate. Mrs. Kimbel's grandfather, William Dowell, was a Baptist minister, born in Kentucky. He made Illinois his home for many years, where he raised a family. Later he removed to Missouri.

JOSEPH G. AKES.

In the gentleman above mentioned we have one of the leading old-timers of Dawes county, Nebraska. He came to this region when it was a wild prairie land and through his industrious habits and energy succeeded in building up one of the valuable estates of the locality, and has been intimately identified with the development and growth of this section from the pioneer days.

Mr. Akes was born in 1861 in Henry county, Iowa. His father, Granville S. Akes, was a farmer and mechanic, who came to Missouri with his family in 1865, settling in Gentry county, where our subject grew up, and was educated in Missouri, attending the common schools. At the age of twenty-one he went to Mills county, Iowa, where he worked out on farms for two years, and on May 15, 1884, came to Nebraska and settled on his farm in what is now section 8, township 31, range 51, Dawes county. His first house here was a rude dug-out so familiar to the pioneers of those days, in which he "batched it" for several years. The country was then in a wild state, wild beasts roaming through the regions, and often he heard the coyotes howl through the lonely nights when he lived alone in his dugout. He had all the experiences of the pioneer, handling ox teams and freighting, while proving up on his farm and striving hard to win a home. He was in the ranching and farming business from the first, and made money, adding constantly to his acreage, and in 1907 when he sold out his farm, he was owner of eight hundred and eighty acres, of which over two hundred were cultivated and raising good crops. He had built a good house, barns and other farm buildings, corrals, planted trees, built fences, and had one of the best improved places in his locality. When he came here he teamed from Sidney to Valentine, camping out nights on the journey, and for a time after locating lived in a tent on his farm, and also used a covered wagon as a dwelling place.

On account of his ill health Mr. Akers was obliged to sell his ranch and moved to Crawford in March, 1907. Several years ago he was struck by lightning while working with a two-horse team hitched to a mower and the horses were instantly killed, while the shock injured his health for the remainder of his life.

In 1890 Mr. Akers was united in marriage to Miss Iva J. Barnes. She is a daughter of William G. Barnes, a well known sawmill and lumberman.

He is a Democrat.

WILLIAM L. HOYT.

William Hoyt, one of the extensive ranchers of Sioux county, Nebraska, resides in section 17, township 31, range 57, and has been associated with the agricultural interests of the locality for the past twenty-one years. He is a gentleman of untiring energy and perseverance, and his character and reputation are beyond question.

Mr. Hoyt was born in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1863. His father, Jacob N. Hoyt, was of American stock, and carried on a paper manufacturing business in the city of Cleveland for many years. The father married Mary Lattimer, who was born and reared in Delaware, Ohio, was also of American blood, and she died when our subject was three years old. Jacob N. Hoyt was born December 15, 1831, and his family was of English descent, and were early pioneers of the New England states, settling in Concord, New Hampshire. Jacob N. Hoyt was one of the early residents of Cleveland, going there in 1853, and was employed in the Cleveland postoffice as clerk for ten years. He was prominent in politics in that state, and was a prominent member of the Knights Templar and of the Masonic lodge. In the year 1865 he went into the paper manufacturing business and continued in that business until 1869, when he moved to Illinois. He located on a farm in Macon county, remaining there for fifteen years, then went west to Kane county, Illinois, where he was engaged in dairying and farming until his death, which occurred in May, 1907, Ed and Walter, our subject's younger brothers, falling heirs to the home property, where they still live.

In 1884 our subject struck out for himself, emigrating west, and located near Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he worked as cowboy on a large ranch, and there led a typical frontiersman's career, spending a large portion of his time on the plains, camping out wherever he happened to stop and was all over the country on horseback, often encountering many dangers such as are common to one following that mode of life. For a long time he was employed by R. S. Van Tassel, starting to work for that gentleman shortly after coming west, and it was while in his employ that he chose his location for himself.

In 1888 Mr. Hoyt filed on a pre-emption claim in this territory, still continuing his work on the range, dividing his time between the two, spending his summers on the ranch and the winters on his claim. He proved up on the land and managed to get along pretty well, in 1891-'92 starting in the livery business in Harrison, where he remained for about two years. Previous to this he had taken a tree claim and opened up a ranch of his own, got together a nice bunch of cattle, and constantly increased his herd, and in 1896 purchased additional land, which forms a part of his present ranch. He now owns twenty-one hundred and sixty acres, all deeded land, and controls in all eleven hundred and twenty acres of leased land. His ranch is beautifully situated on Running creek, close to Coffee Siding, and all of it is fenced and has good buildings, including comfortable house, large barns, sheds, corrals, etc. Mr. Hoyt is engaged exclusively in cattle and horse raising and has met with splendid success. He raises considerable hay and has one hundred and seventy acres of finely irrigated hay land.

Our subject is a thorough business man and a representative westerner, having seen as much of the ranching business as any one in this region. He likes to recall the time when he rode the plains and still has his old saddle in which he rode for twenty years, and figures that he has traveled in that length of time over one hundred thousand miles. Mr. Hoyt is among the well-to-do men of his locality, and besides his fine farm and ranch land is owner of two residence properties in Harrison.

Mr. Hoyt was married in 1896 to Miss Rosa DeBock, daughter of Leopold M. and Nettie (Coonan) DeBock, whose sketch appears in this volume. He is one of the pioneers of this region, well and favorably known, and Mrs. Hoyt grew up in Nebraska. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt, Edith, born January 17, 1900, in Sioux county.

WILLIAM A. WILSON, DECEASED.

William A. Wilson, deceased, was for many years prior to his demise a leading agriculturist and ranchman of Cherry county, Nebraska. He became widely known as a man of large intellectual ability, and his name will be long remembered as one of the strong and capable settlers of western Nebraska.

Mr. Wilson was born in Hannibal, New York, February 2, 1863. His father, James G. Wilson, was a farmer by occupation, born of Irish-American stock, and his mother, Phoebe A. Perkins, of an old Vermont family. Our subject grew up in his native state, and at the age of twenty years came west and settled in Cherry county, Nebraska, taking up a homestead in the German precinct. There he lived in an old sod shanty, where he "batched it" for a short time. When he first came to this region he rode here from Antelope county, and this was a hard and dangerous journey in those days, as the country was very thinly settled and the Indians roamed at will all over this section. He began by building up his farm at once and spent many years on it. He had all the experiences of a pioneer life, went through the drouth periods and met severe losses and discouragements, but stuck bravely to his post and proved up on his homestead and pre-emption, principally engaged in stock raising during later years. He constantly added to his possessions until he owned a fine ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, all well improved, with one hundred and twenty acres cultivated, on which banner crops are raised. In 1898 he left the farm and moved to Georgia, purchasing a house and five lots, besides an eighty-seven-acre tract on which he built a good house and barn, still running the ranch, and engaged in stock buying up to the time of his death, which occurred June 28, 1903. Mrs. Wilson has filed on a five hundred and twenty-acre Kincaid homestead in sections 19 and 20, township 34, range 30.

Mr. Wilson was married in Hannibal, New York, December 16, 1884, to Miss Nina V. Henthorn, born in Sterling, Cayuga county, New York, a daughter of William and Mary (Doyle) Henthorn, the former a native of Ireland, the latter of Oswego county, New York. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, named as follows: Carrie, a teacher of Cherry county, born November 21, 1885; Seward, a graduate of the Nebraska Normal College at Wayne, born November 10, 1889; Vera, born October 31, 1892; Hazel, born December 21, 1899, and Cyrenius, born November 9, 1902. When Mr. Wilson brought his bride to Nebraska buffalo trails and wallows were plainly to be seen, while antelope, coyotes, swifts and prairie chickens were plentiful. A view of the residence of Mrs. Wilson is shown on another page in this work.

Mr. Wilson was among the first white men to settle in this region and took an active part in the development of the state from its early settlement. He was a leading man of affairs in his community, serving as president of the Farmers' Alliance; also president of the Farmers' Institute Association, and politically campaigned all over this part of the county in the interest of the Populist party, of which he was a leader. He was, with his family, a member of the Methodist church and affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

HARRY FINDLEY.

Harry Findley, residing in Alma township, Harlan county, is a well known pioneer of western Nebraska, coming to Adams county with his parents when a mere infant. He was born in Wapello county, Iowa, in 1873, his father settling on a homestead in Juniata township, Adams county, twelve miles west of Hastings, where the family lived up to 1885, when the father, Frank Findley, died at the age of fifty-two years. The mother still makes her home with our subject, who is the youngest of a family of nine children. The father owned two hundred and forty acres of good land in Adams county. He was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, and was left an orphan when a babe. Our subject's mother's people are from Germany, and on his father's side from Scotland.

In 1903 Mr. Findley bought the farm on which he now lives and erected a good residence and farm buildings. He has built up this farm and home, putting many improvements on the place, and has since been engaged in mixed farming. He raises thoroughbred red hogs, keeping about one hundred and fifty on hand all the time, and sells these at private sale in this and other counties. He has had excellent success in this line of work, his herd being headed by strains of Improver Juniors and Second, also Gold Dust, which are the best animals to be found anywhere. He keeps about fifty graded cattle, and is constantly improving his herd, but gives most of his time and attention to the proper care of his herd of Duroc Jersey hogs, which are his especial pride. His sales are attended by breeders and farmers from all over this section of the state, and he obtains A1 prices for his stock.

Mr. Findley was married in 1899 to Miss Estella Robinson, daughter of George W. Robinson, of Tekamah, Nebraska, who is an old settler in that locality. Mrs. Findley's mother died when she was a babe. Our subject has no children. A brother of Mr. Findley, Robert, lives in Omaha, and is engaged in the restaurant business. One sister, Mrs. Clare Robinson, also resides there, and another, Mrs. Lizzie Willis, wife of Lee Willis, lives in Alma township, this county. The third sister, Mrs. Lina Bowers, lives in Adams county. Mr. Findley has always been a Republican.

JACOB MARTIN.

One of the best known of the old-timers of Cherry county is Jacob Martin, familiarly known as "Jake," who settled in this locality when it was practically a wilderness. He now resides on the southeast quarter of section 23, township 34, range 28.

Mr. Martin was born in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, July 22, 1859, where his father, Jacob Martin, Sr., was a farmer of Dutch extraction, whose parents were born in Holland, coming to this country early in life. Our subject, whose mother was Mary Butterbaugh Martin, is the fourth in a family of nine children, all reared in Pennsylvania, where he grew up accustomed to all kinds of hard farm work. At the age of twenty-one he left his parents' home and came west to Lanark, Carroll county, Illinois, working for two years on farms in that locality. He then came on to Valentine,

Nebraska, which was then a wild and lawless western town, arriving there at daybreak, May 7, 1883, just in time to see a band of cowboys shooting up the signs on the streets, which spectacle was something entirely new to eastern eyes. Had he not spent nearly all his money in coming he would have boarded the next train for the east. He filed on a claim May 8, on the place he now occupies, putting up a rude shanty, seven by twelve, of second-hand boards, roughly made and without any floor or windows, lighted, though, by the cracks between the boards. Soon after he built a better house of pine poles, which served as a residence for a number of years. Having no money, he exchanged labor for the use of a team to haul the poles and help to erect them. For some time he worked as a butcher, and was also employed by the government, freighting with ox teams, going through a regular pioneer existence, but withal succeeding very well at it. He at one time owned ten yoke of oxen and a carload of cattle, but the Texas fever broke out in his herd, killing all but one steer and two calves, and he was obliged to start afresh. Hiring out as a cook, he served at a government camp on Big White river in the Rosebud reservation. Here he saved his money and bought more cattle, again losing twenty-four head in a severe snowstorm, which left him only about ten head. In all he has lost one hundred and seventy-three head of cattle since coming to this state. However, he had plenty of grit and never gave up courage, but moved to Cherry county and started in the merry-go-round business, this venture also proving disastrous, his loss here footing up about thirteen hundred dollars. During 1890 and 1891 he worked in the Rocky mountains, then returned to Pennsylvania, where he worked in the mills for seven years. In the fall of 1899 he went to Yakima county, Washington, for two months and then found work in Seattle working on the street car line and at a sawmill planing the lumber for building the bridge streets of that place. From there he went to Vancouver by boat and at Calgary, Alberta, invested in railroad land, which he sold two years afterward, doubling his money. In 1890 he returned to this county, but being unable to sell out his homestead decided to remain and went to work improving and increasing his property. His farm now comprises twelve hundred acres, with two hundred acres under cultivation, all fenced, with good substantial farm buildings covering two acres of ground, four of these buildings being built entirely of cement and stone and all of his own construction. He has spent over a thousand dollars for water supply, drilling wells to the depth of two hundred and twenty-five feet.

Mr. Martin tells many interesting experiences connected with the development of this county, one of which was when he returned to his cabin to find it in possession of two families, who could find no place else for shelter and took possession of his house. He had been away for ten days buying cattle at Norfolk and finding the house occupied shared it with his new neighbors until they could erect cabins for themselves.

Mr. Martin was married to Miss Eva Chaufy, October 23d, 1894. Her father, Henry Chaufy, an old settler of Cherry county, came from New York state, where he was born. He is now a resident of Oklahoma. The mother was Miss Effie Huntington. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are the parents of one daughter, Effie. Mr. Martin is a public spirited citizen, takes a keen interest in all the affairs of the county and state, having held local office at different times. He is an Independent voter. Both Mr. and Mrs. Martin are members of the Dunkard church. The hardships through which Mr. Martin has passed seem almost inconceivable. On one of his freighting trips in the Black Hills he endured three days without food, at one time slept for a week in water several inches deep. In 1899 his feet were crushed by a heavily laden wagon passing over them, from the effect of which he is suffering a partial paralysis, though now slowly recovering. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have travelled extensively, going in their travels as far as California and Oklahoma. On another page in this work will be found a view of the residence, with portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Martin.

SAMUEL PIERSALL.

Samuel Piersall, whose name will be readily recalled by all familiar with the farming population around Ainsworth, is one of the prominent and successful agriculturists of Brown county, Nebraska.

Mr. Piersall was born on a farm near Pontiac, Michigan, May 22d, 1853. His father Thomas Piersall, was a mechanic of English and Dutch descent, born in New York state. Our subject was reared and educated in the state of Michigan, supporting himself from the time he was nine years old, by working at anything he could find to do. He spent several years in the lumber woods in that state, rafted on the rivers there, and followed a lumberman's life for eighteen years, from the cutting of the trees until the logs were sawed into lumber.

In 1886 he came to Brown county, and took a homestead in southeast quarter section 9, township 30, range 22, proved up on this claim and lived here for two and a half years. His first building was a shanty made of logs. After leaving this place he moved five miles northeast of Johnstown, remaining there for six years. In the spring of 1894 he settled on a farm in section 19, township 31, range 21. There he went through many hard times during the dry years. He stayed on this place for twelve years, and raised only six crops off the land during all that time. July 4th, 1897, when everything gave promise of a bountiful harvest, the worst hail storm ever known here, beat everything into the ground. Again, in 1898, when prospects for a good crop were the finest, a similar storm struck the vicinity and laid everything low. However, he persevered and stuck to his farm until March, 1906, when he moved to his present location. This place comprises one hundred and seventy-nine acres all in one piece, and two hundred and forty acres of leased land located east of the line, besides one hundred and sixty acres of fine hay land, also held under lease. Although he suffered heavy losses at different times during the bad years, the whole family worked industriously, and by their united efforts were able to make a good living, never wanting for the necessary comforts of life as other families did. Mr. Piersall tells of an experience in which he saved the life of John Anderson, living five miles northeast of Johnstown. The latter was engaged in sinking a well and was on a platform down in the earth some sixty feet from the surface, and over a hundred from the bottom of the well when the curbing gave way and the ground caved in on him. Mr. Piersall was at work near by, and he saw the trouble and hastened to his assistance. Others came to help in the work of rescue, and after several days of constant effort to extricate Mr. Anderson from his precarious condition, they received answers to their signals made by pounding, which showed them that he was still alive. The digging was continued with renewed vigor, and in about nine days he was rescued, not much worse for his incarceration, except weak from lack of food and sufficient air. The only thing that saved him was the fact that the curbing and staging in the well had supported the dirt so that he was not crushed and smothered by its falling on him. However, it was a terrible experience, and during all this time Mr. Piersall was unable to sleep nights, and had it not been for him Mr. Anderson would never have been taken out alive.

On June 18, 1876, Mr. Piersall was married to Miss Emalora Westover, born in Canada, a daughter of James E. and Emaline (Barnes) Westover. They have a family of twelve children, named as follows: William S., George F., Edith L., Myrtle B., Amos Dale, Emiline P., Earl, Ray, Charles E., Hazel L., Walter D. and Vera Alberta.

Mr. Piersall is now situated so that he can enjoy the fruits of his hard labor, and is well and favorably known all over the community in which he resides. He is an adherent of the People's party, a member of the Methodist church and affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Ainsworth.

OLE OLSON.

Ole Olson, residing in township 21, range 15, Garfield county, is proprietor of a well developed and valuable farm in section 12, which he has operated successfully for the past twenty years. He is one of the well-to-do residents of his locality, and is held in the highest esteem by all who know of him.

Mr. Olson is a native of Sweden, born in 1847. He was raised and educated in his native land. He remained with his parents until he reached the age of eighteen or twenty years, then left home and struck out for himself, coming to America in 1867. In 1889 he came to Nebraska and took up a pre-emption of one hundred and sixty acres on which he proved up, later homesteading one hundred and sixty acres more in the same locality. He worked faithfully, and though often meeting with discouragements, sometimes having partial failure of crops, did not give up hope and kept on building up his farm and adding improvements as he was able, and also succeeded in putting some money away for a rainy day. He has a large portion of his farm under cultivation, growing oats, corn and other small grains, also raises some stock and marketing several carloads of hogs each year, which net him a nice sum. He is engaged to quite an extent in dairying, keeping a large herd of cows for that purpose, and also raises milch cows for the market. His place is well supplied with water for his stock and household use, all of which is obtained from a deep bored well, pumped by wind mills into large supply tanks placed at different points on his farm.

Mr. Olson was married in 1871 to Miss Frances Russell. Mrs. Olson was born and raised in Illinois, and came to Nebraska in 1889, where she met and married Mr. Olson. One child has been born of this marriage, Lillie, now aged twenty-six years.

Our subject is a Republican, but has never aspired to office, although he takes an active interest in local affairs which tend to improve conditions in his locality, and is always ready and willing to do his full share in aiding any movement to that end.

C. E. MAGNUSON.

Among the enterprising and prominent business men of Phelps county, Nebraska, none is better known or more universally esteemed and respected than the subject of this review. He is located at Loomis, and is one of the leading citizens of that place.

Mr. Magnuson is a native of Sweden, born in 1863. Mr. Magnuson's father, Carl J., was born in Kalmare Lan, Smoland, Sweden, in 1829, and came to American shores in 1865, locating on a farm in the above county, where he officiated as a minister of the Swedish Mission church. A large number of that congregation having settled in Phelps county, they sent for him to come to them, which he did, preaching for several years. From his boyhood our subject worked on his father's farm up until 1892. He was the only child of his parents, and the family came to Nebraska in 1879, his father homesteading one hundred and sixty acres in Laird township. He accumulated a large property, and at the present time is owner of five hundred and sixty acres of land in Phelps county. He resides in Loomis, retired from all active business interests.

Mr. Magnuson started in business in Loomis district in 1892. He, in partnership with C. L. Grandlund, opened a general merchandise establishment in a large brick store built by the former's father, Rev. C. J. Magnuson. Loomis district is one of the best and richest farming communities in western Nebraska. In 1898 Mr. Grandlund retired from the business on being elected treasurer of Phelps county. (A sketch of Mr. Grandlund appears in this book on another page.) Since then Mr. Magnuson has carried on the business alone, which has grown and developed from the beginning until it is now one of the leading general stores in Phelps county.

In 1892 Mr. Magnuson was married to Miss Emma Julia Burgland, of Kirkwood, Illinois. They have three children, named as follows: Verne, now attending the leading school in the city of Holdrege; DeEtte and Gladys, at school here at home. Mrs. Magnuson is of great assistance to her husband in his rapidly increasing business, taking full charge of the books of the establishment, besides attending to her home duties. She taught school six years previous to her marriage, both in Illinois and Nebraska.

The family is highly respected in the community in which they reside, and have a host of warm friends and acquaintances. Mr. Magnuson is a Republican.

GEORGE O. WEISFLOG.

George O. Weisflog is a well-to-do young farmer of Cherry county, Nebraska, who has, through his thrift and industry, accumulated a competence in a comparatively short space of time. He was born December 18, 1870, in a small village in Pennsylvania, where his father, Herman Weisflog, was a shoe-maker, following this trade until 1885, when the family came to Nebraska and settled in Cherry county, being one of the pioneers in this locality. Both the mother and father of our subject were born and married in Germany, where their first four children were born. The subject of this sketch was the first of the family whose birth occurred in America. The greater part of his boyhood days were spent on the farm in Morgan county, Ohio. The family moved here from Pennsylvania. At the age of thirteen he and his brother Emile came to Nebraska. In the spring of 1883 they took up a claim in what is now called the German settlement. In two years the father, George, Oscar and Clara, followed the mother, with Henry and Annie remaining in Ohio until the fall of that year. They built a sod shanty in which they lived the first year, breaking up the land with ox teams which they used for three years in all their work. All the water for their family use and for stock had to be hauled four and a half miles, from the Niobrara river, while their nearest trading post was at Valentine, twenty miles away. During this time our subject was living with his father, but at the age of twenty-one years he took a pre-emption on which he proved up, then took a homestead, and still occupies the latter as his place of residence. His ranch now contains nine hundred and sixty acres, most of which is in grazing land, although he has one hundred and fifty acres under cultivation on which he raises fine crops. He has a good set of farm buildings, plenty of water and windmills, fences and all the farming implements necessary to carry on the work of his large estate.

Mr. Weisflog has gone through many hard experiences during the dry years; for two years in succession he raised practically nothing except grass and little of that. His farm is situated in section 33, township 34, range 30, where he has resided continuously since homesteading it, excepting one year, 1905, when he had charge of a store at Gresham. Mr. Weisflog had a severe misfortune on September 28, 1901, when he lost his left arm in the accidental discharge of a gun which he was carrying.

On August 6, 1896, our subject was married to Miss Minnie Tonniges, a native of Seward county, whose parents were born in Germany and came to this country when young people. They settled in Cherry county in 1891, where the father died. Four children have come to bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Weisflog, named as follows: Willie, Artie, Viola and Leona.

Mr. Weisflog has always taken an active part in local affairs, and has held different offices. He is a Republican and strong party man. He holds membership in Camp No. 4207, Modern Woodmen of America, of Crookston.

G. A. FORSLING.

Among the younger members of the farming community in Kimball county, G. A. Forsling takes high rank for his successful operations during the past several years. He has a valuable estate on section 26, township 15, range 57, and is classed among the well-to-do and progressive farmers of the locality.

Mr. Forsling was born in Sweden, July 21st, 1877, and at the age of six years came to America with his parents, brothers and sisters. A history of two brothers, Clarence and Alfred, is given in another part of this volume; also a review of the family history.

They settled first in Chicago, then came to Phelps county, Nebraska, and landed in Kimball county about 1885. The father homesteaded on section 12, township 14, range 56, and there our subject grew up, assisted in carrying on the home ranch until the death of his father, October 16th, 1904. For sometime after the death of his father, he lived on and operated the home place, in the meantime securing his present location. This ranch contains one thousand five hundred and twenty acres of deeded and more or less leased land. He has about fifty acres under cultivation, while the balance is used for pasture and hay land for a large bunch of cattle and some horses. Their residence is on section 26, which is a Kincaid homestead owned by Mr. Forsling's mother. The ranch is well improved with good buildings and everything about the place shows good management and painstaking care in its operation. He is engaged principally in stock raising and dairying.

On April 15th, 1908, Mr. Forsling was married to Miss Hilda Bergquist, the event taking place at Chappel, Nebraska. Mrs. Forsling was born in Colorado, coming to Nebraska with her parents, who were old settlers in western Nebraska, living near Chappell, Deuel county, for a number of years. Her father, F. W. Bergquist, was a Lutheran minister and a prominent man in his profession. Mrs. Forsling's parents are now living at Skandia, Kansas.

Mr. Forsling takes an active part in all affairs of public interest. He is now serving as treasurer of school district No. 21. He has also served as road overseer for two years, and has done his full part in improving and developing the country in which he lives. He is highly esteemed and is one of the representative men of western Nebraska.

MARTIN CHRISTENSEN.

Martin Christensen, one of the old settlers of Nebraska, occupies a prominent position in Cherry county, and enjoys the respect and esteem of his associates.

Mr. Christensen was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1865, and his father Gottlieb Christensen, was a prominent citizen engaged in the stock buying business. Our subject was raised and educated in the town of his birth, and after leaving school learned the painter's trade, which occupation he followed in his native country until 1883, when he took passage for America, landing in Castle Garden, New York. After working at his trade in Chicago and Omaha for a time he came to Cherry county, Nebraska, spending several months here, then going to Omaha where he remained until the following year. In 1884 he returned to Fort Niobrara, where he secured a painting contract at the fort. The excellence of his work secured him further contracts at Forts Robinson, Sidney, and Niobrara and was employed by the government in various parts of Nebraska until 1890, at which time he settled in Valentine. Here he followed his trade constantly, and has erected a fine residence, and owns one of the finest equipped paint shops in Valentine, dealing in wall paper, paints, oils, varnishes, etc., and is doing a flourishing business.

Mr. Christensen was nominated by the Democratic party for county treasurer in 1892. He has held the office of chairman of the county central committee for the past ten years, and was one of the delegates who nominated William J. Bryan for president at the national convention in 1896.

In 1890 he was married to Miss Clara Evarts, whose father, Burt Evarts, was one of the first settlers in Valentine, taking up his homestead in that part of Valentine, where the flourishing mill and water power plant are now located. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Christensen, who are named as follows: Marie, Albert, Carl, and Genevieve. Mrs. Christensen nee Evarts, died in 1898. He was married in 1899 to Miss Mary White, daughter of Bartlett White, a farmer and stock raiser near Valentine and they have three children as follows: Leo, Martin and Francis.

RICHARD M. DUNN.

Richard M. Dunn, one of the leading ranchmen and farmers of Sioux county, has a valuable estate in section 1, township 32, range 57, which he has improved in fine shape by his energetic labors and perseverance. He has spent the past twenty-one years in this locality and has become one of the foremost citizens, highly esteemed as a worthy citizen and a good business man, locating here in 1887.

Mr. Dunn is a native of Jefferson county, Iowa, born in 1863 on a farm. Both parents were born in Ireland, coming to this country in the early days and settling in Colorado in 1866, where the father, Patrick, followed the life of a pioneer cattleman and ranchman for many years. In Colorado they were located on a farm near Denver, and there Richard was raised, attending the country schools and helping the father in the work on their farm. The family lived on that place for twenty years, and then Richard came to Sioux county, Nebraska, locating on a pre-emption and homestead, the first location being on Squaw creek. At that time Harrison was merely a town of tents and the surrounding country practically a wilderness, with but few settlers in this region. When he landed here Mr. Dunn had a few head of cattle, and he immediately put up a log shack and "batched it" for twelve years. He first started in the cattle business during the early days of his settlement here, herding his own cattle and camping out at night in all sorts of rough weather, leading a typical frontiersman's existence. During the years 1897 and 1898 Mr. Dunn was engaged as foreman of the Guthrie ranch, near Douglas, Wyoming, for two years. In 1899 he came to his present homestead, and here he has erected good buildings and put on many improvements, owning all together about one thousand acres, situated in and about section 1, township 23, range 57. Eight hundred acres of this is used for ranching purposes, and the balance is under cultivation, devoted to the raising of grains, yielding good crops each season.

Mr. Dunn was married in 1891 to Eva Sherrill, whose father, John, is an old settler in this county. Her mother's maiden name was Lucy Reynolds. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Dunn: Henry, Lester, Margaret, Arthur and Vernon. The family is highly esteemed in their community, and take an active part in all social and school affairs in their neighborhood. Mr. Dunn is a loyal Republican, active in party politics.

BENJAMIN F. HOBSON.

Benjamin F. Hobson, whose pleasant and attractive farm home may be found in section 23, township 35, range 28, is widely known as one of the largest and most successful farmers and land owners of Cherry county, and his name is familiar to business men in all this region of Nebraska. The Hobsons are an old American family, and it's Cherry county representatives bring no shame on an honored name. They are true to the best principles of American citizenship, are linked in with whatever makes for a better community, whether in education, morals or business.

Mr. Hobson was born on a farm in Lee county, Iowa, January 20th, 1855, where his parents, William and Mary (Colwell) Hobson, were well and favorably known. The Colwells were an Irish family, and his mother was a native of the Emerald Isle. She was the mother of a family of nine children, two daughters and seven sons, of whom the subject of this sketch was the fifth in order of birth. He was reared on the farm in Poweshiek county, Iowa, whither the family moved about 1858, and remained at home until he had reached the age of twenty-eight years, assisting his father, and bearing his full share of the family burdens. He was married February 27th, 1883, to Miss Adelia Janecroft. Her parents, John and Melissa (Murphy) Janecroft, were born and bred to a farming life, and were very successful in their chosen vocation. Mr. and Mrs. Hobson have become the happy parents of a family of ten children, Mary M. (Salmon), Elizabeth J. (Sharp), Grace V., a teacher in the Mission school on Rosebud reservation, Eliza A., Edna A., Belle, Frank, Fern, John and Eunice.

Mr. Hobson came to Cherry county, Nebraska, and filed on a homestead in December following his marriage, moving with his young wife to their new possessions in June, 1884. Their first dwelling was a board shanty, twelve by sixteen feet in its dimensions, to which was added a sixteen foot addition in the fall, but it was sufficient to meet the requirement of the Hobsons for the coming three years. These years were not without their trials and troubles. Mr. Hobson kept on steadily improving the conditions of his home and business. He secured a more convenient and comfortable farm home, constructed various buildings, as they were needed, built some fence and broke some land. Among the many discouragements two crops failed entirely for want of rain, and hail destroyed everything six seasons. Forty-six head of cattle died on his hands from eating green corn stalks, and the first fall he spent in Cherry county was signalized by the loss of a span of mules in a great prairie fire. To-day he owns nine hundred and sixty acres of land, of which at least three hundred and fifty acres are under cultivation, and the rest is devoted to hay and pasture. Besides the house in which he lives, and the farm buildings around it, Mr. Hobson has another set of buildings on a distant part of the farm in which hired help may be housed. A view of the family residence and surroundings will be found on another page in this work.

Mr. Hobson is a Republican, and takes a very active interest in local affairs. He has served as justice of the peace, as road overseer, and has been on the school board for years. He is also a member of the election board, and helped organize the first schools of the neighborhood. His knowledge of section, township and range lines is not excelled by any man in this region. He is a member of Minnechadua lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, at Valentine, where he also holds membership in the Modern Workmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Together with the hardships and discouragements of crop failures the settlers along the line of the reservation have from time to time been disturbed by Indian uprisings. In the spring of 1890 Mr. Hobson took his family further from the seat of troubles and drove to Jacob Martins, where a number of settlers were congregated for protection. The house being so crowded Mr. Hobson's family concluded not to remain and returned home. The Indians remaining unsettled, the family spent one week in Valentine and have had since no fear of disturbance.

MRS. ADDIE M. WOOD.

The lady whose name heads this review is a highly esteemed resident of this region, where she owns and operates an extensive ranch, and the prosperity and order which surrounds the whole place is ample evidence of her ability and good business judgment. Mrs. Wood is counted among the leading old settlers of Dawes county, and she has always done her full share in aiding in the development and growth of the region in which she chose her home, and is one of its foremost citizens.

Mrs. Wood was born in Ogle county, Illinois, in 1862, and is a daughter of Reuben Marker, a native of Pennsylvania and farmer by occupation, who settled in Illinois and was one of the pioneers of that state, where our subject was reared and educated. When she reached the age of fifteen years her parents came to Iowa and settled in Floyd county. In 1879 she was married to Addison Wood, and they were blessed with four children, who are named as follows: Reuben and Robert (twins), twenty-three years of age, Vern, sixteen years old, and Clark, thirteen. All live with the mother, except Robert, who lives on his homestead adjoining his mother's estate.

In 1887 our subject came west with her family, locating on a farm near Hay Springs, where they lived for one year, and went through pioneer experiences, occupying a dug-out, in which they were fairly comfortable. They next moved to Box Butte county, where they filed on a pre-emption and started to build up a home and farm. In 1888 they came to Dawes county and settled on section 27, township 31, range 47, and again began as pioneers. Here they built a shanty and started out with no capital at all except strong hearts and willing hands. Their first team were oxen, although they got some good horses, but with the oxen they broke up some land and put in a crop the first year and were able to raise good crops for several years, then were overtaken by the drouth periods and well-nigh became discouraged by constant failures, when for five successive years they were unable to even raise sufficient feed for their chickens; but though often becoming discouraged, Mrs. Wood stuck to the farm and as times grew better was more successful, and gradually improved and built up the place. She has personally conducted this farm since 1896, and is a progressive and thorough agriculturist, and everything is in perfect order and bespeaks the energy and good management of the owner. Her ranch now consists of six hundred and eighty acres of good land, and one son owns a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres adjoining. One hundred acres is under cultivation, and she is extensively engaged in stock raising, principally cattle, running sixty to seventy-five head annually. She has lately remodelled her house, putting in a fine basement. Mrs. Wood has been director of school district No. 46 for more than eight years.

THOMAS MOORE.

Among the prosperous farmers and early settlers of Phelps county, Nebraska, the subject of this review, Thomas Moore, occupies a high position. He resides in Sheridan township, where he has a fine farm and comfortable home, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Moore is a native of county Antrim, Ireland, where he was reared until fifteen years of age, then came to the United States, settling in Illinois in 1863 and remained there for several years engaged in farming. He came to Phelps county in 1885 and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land from the railroad company, situated in section 27, Sheridan township, comprising the northeast quarter and has lived on this ever since. He at once went to breaking up the land, and built horse barns and farm buildings, adding improvements constantly. He also bought about the same time one hundred and sixty acres of school land in Laird township, but disposed of this ten years ago. He is engaged principally in grain raising, and last year his wheat crop tested sixty-three pounds to the bushel, and was the best on the market, averaging up equal to any place that he knows of. His first crop of corn in 1889 showed a yield of over four thousand bushels. He has farmed in Macon and Macoupon counties, Illinois, and states that a man can farm more land in Nebraska, and get an average crop as good, as in Illinois it is generally too wet, which is more harmful than the dry weather here. He keeps a number of grade cattle and some well-bred Percheron horses. He was for a time proprietor of a farm of three hundred and twenty acres located near Holyoke, Colorado, which is a valuable property, but he disposed of this in 1908. The farm on which he resides is almost adjoining the town of Holdrege, so that from his residence he can overlook that progressive place. The quality of his land and its nearness to Holdrege makes it very valuable, and his present success is a reward for his perseverance and industry, as he has stuck to this place through many hardships during the pioneer days.

Mr. Moore is a son of Robert and Mary (Murphy) Moore, both born in Scotland, settling in county Antrim, Ireland, after their marriage, and emigrating to America in 1863. They located in Illinois in the pioneer days of that state, where the father soon after died. The mother, with five sons and two daughters, still reside in Macon county, Illinois. Our subject was married to Hattie H. Stennett, of Logan county, Illinois, in 1892, and they have five children. The family is held in the highest esteem by all who know them. Mr. Moore is a member of the Presbyterian church. Politically he is a Republican.

ARTICE A. WENTWORTH.

Among the earliest settlers in Keya Paha county, who have been largely instrumental in the growth of the financial and social interests of that region, a prominent place is given the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review. He has always been found ready to further the interests of the community where he chose his home, and has gained a wide and enviable reputation as a worthy citizen and substantial agriculturist of Pine precinct.

Mr. Wentworth was born on a farm near North Appleton, Maine, February 1, 1854, and was reared and educated there during his early years. His father, Thomas A. Wentworth, a native of Hope, Maine, came to Fontanelle, Washington county, Nebraska, in 1868, taking up a homestead there, where the family lived for some years, then moved to Burt county, and in 1887 settled in Keya Paha county, where the father died November 16, 1887. The mother, Nancy B. (Hall) was born near Magog, Maine. She resides in Keya Paha county with her son. Our subject is the second child in a family of eight; four were pioneers in Nebraska. When he was twenty-one years of age, he started out for himself, following farm work; purchasing a farm in Burt county, he continued on that place for several years, coming to Keya Paha county in 1883, where he located on a homestead in section 2, township 32, range 20, which he still owns. When he first settled here there was not a thing on the place except a little timber on the creeks. He put up a nice house and other improvements, and then bought his present home on section 24, where he has four hundred and eighty acres of good farming land, part of which is used for pasture. He keeps about eighty head of cattle, twenty horses, and each year markets eighty hogs. He has a good orchard on each farm, with apples and other fruits, and besides a lot of natural timber has planted a large number of forest trees. For eighteen years he lived in a log house, but now he has one of the finest country residences in the county. He has had a hard time in acquiring his present possessions, and during the dry years had heavy losses and often became discouraged. When he first landed here all he had was a team, wagon and a few tools, and three dollars in money, and was obliged to haul wood to Atkinson, which he traded for flour and provisions. He has done his share in building up this region, and would not care to go through homesteaders' experience again. We present on another page a fine view of this beautiful country place with the new buildings and picturesque surroundings.

On July 11, 1878, Mr. Wentworth was married to Miss Ellen Hill, from Noble county, Indiana, a daughter of Edwin and Henrietta (Thorp) Hill. They are the parents of two children, namely: Fern E. and John Orson, both now living in Pueblo, Colorado, in the real estate business.

Mr. Wentworth is a Populist and strong Bryan man. He has always been active in local affairs, and in 1892 was elected county commissioner, serving for six years.

ARTHUR D. BAKER.

Arthur D. Baker, a highly respected resident of his township, has spent many years of his life in this region, and is one of the leading old settlers of Dawes county, where he has devoted his energies to the interest and welfare of his adopted town and county.

Mr. Baker was born in Waterloo, Blackhawk county, Iowa, January 24, 1857. He is a son of David Baker, of old Puritan stock, born in Maine, a farmer by occupation, who died here November 25, 1906. The mother, Rebecca Able, was a Quakeress, born in Ontario, Canada. Our subject was reared in Iowa until fourteen years of age, then with the rest of his family moved to Kansas, locating in Elk county, where his young manhood years were spent on a farm. In 1888 he left Kansas, driving overland in a covered wagon, and struck Nebraska, locating on a homestead in section 5, township 30, range 51. The trip took six weeks, and the time was full of incidents and rough experiences, camping out at night in the wagon beside the roadway. He immediately went to work building a log house, and occupied this for six years, employing his time in breaking up the farm, and cutting logs which he hauled to the town of Crawford and traded for flour and provisions. He went through many hard times, witnessing the drouth periods and other discouragements, but has never had a complete failure of crops. Success attended his efforts, however, and he is now in comfortable circumstances, being proprietor of four hundred acres of good land, about seventy acres of which is cultivated and the rest in pasture land and timber. There is an abundance of wild fruits on his place, and he has at different times cut lumber from the place for buildings, etc. He has a good house, barns and other buildings, and all his land is fenced. He has a number of good horses, and keeps quite a large herd of cattle and hogs.

In 1880 Mr. Baker was married to Miss Ellen Long, whose father, Peter L. Long, was a farmer in Elk county, Kansas, and her mother, Miss Annie Stuck, was of Pennsylvania German stock. Mr. and Mrs. Baker are the parents of the following children: Chester R., married, Arthur D., Jr., Charles O. and Florence E.

Mr. Baker is a staunch Republican. He has helped organize and establish schools in his section of the county, and was the first director in his district, serving in all for sixteen years in that capacity.

EMIL ZALESKY.

A striking example of what may be accomplished by persistent effort and good management is found in the life of the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. For many years Mr. Zalesky has resided in Cheyenne county, and he has gained a valuable estate by his own efforts, and incidentally has become well known and is universally respected.

Mr. Zalesky was born in Hanover, Kansas, February 25th, 1879, and grew to the age of eight years in that locality, at that time coming with his parents to Nebraska, settling in Cheyenne county. The father took up a homestead, improved it in good shape, and our subject has also become owner of two hundred and eighty acres on section 12, township 13, range 48, which he has built up into a good farm and ranch. He has put good buildings on the ranch, and cultivates about one hundred acres, running also thirty head of stock. He is considered one of the well-to-do men of his community, and is progressive and up-to-date in his methods of operating his farm. His parents occupy a homestead on section 18, township 13, range 47 where they also have a valuable property.

Mr. Zalesky was married in Sidney, Nebraska, August 2d, 1905, to Agnes Henzl, who was born in Bohemia July 24th, 1882, and came to America with her parents in 1888. Her father, Anton Henzl, settled in Cheyenne county with his family, filed on a homestead in section 14, township 13, range 47, where he now has a good home and ranch of three hundred and twenty acres. He has about one hundred and fifty acres under cultivation, and keeps about twenty-five head of stock. Mrs. Henzl died here on April 15th, 1907, leaving the following children: Agnes, wife of our subject, Joe, Frank, Josie, Mary, Tony, Jerry, John, James and Annie, all at home.

Mr. Zalesky and his good wife have two children, Emil and Blanche. In political views Mr. Zalesky is a Republican, and firm in his convictions. Like many of his countrymen, he was reared in the Catholic church.

JAMES R. CHAPMAN.

James R. Chapman, a prominent old-timer of western Nebraska, resides on section 14, township 34, range 23, Keya Paha county, where he has built up a good home and farm and is well known throughout the locality as a leading citizen and successful farmer.

Mr. Chapman was born in County Cornwall, England, in 1861. His father, Richard Chapman, was a farmer, and lived and died in his native land. Our subject was the youngest in his parents' family, and was raised and educated in England, starting out to make his own way in the world at the age of nineteen. He came to America, landing in New York city, May 3d, 1880, and went direct to Platteville, Wisconsin, where he followed farm work for two years, then went to Calumet, Michigan, and worked in the copper mines for two years. He then returned to England for a five months' visit and again came to Wisconsin, in 1885 coming to Nebraska and locating in this county. He settled on a pre-emption in section 13, township 34, range 23, and put up his first building, which was a dugout slabbed on the inside, "batching it" there for a couple of years. The first year he broke up part of his land with a yoke of oxen and started farming, living on the place for three years, then went to the Black Hills and was in Lead City for three years, working in the mines there. The work there was very hard and extremely dangerous, and he had several narrow escapes from accidents and death, so decided to go back to Keya Paha county, which he did, and lived on his tree claim for five years. In July, 1900, he settled on his present homestead, situated in section 14, _____ township, which was an entirely unimproved piece of land. He put up a combination log and frame house and opened his farm, with eighty acres in cultivation and the balance of his section is used for hay and pasture for his stock, of which he has a large number. He went through the dry years and had heavy losses which set him back considerably, also was hailed out three times, but stuck to his place and now has a valuable piece of land, well improved.

Mr. Chapman was married in 1887 to Miss Eliza Switzer, whose father was an old settler here, originally from Ohio. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chapman, named as follows: John, Victor, Margaret, James, Annie, Paul, Earl and Bessie.

"CHURN RANCH," PROPERTY OF SHADBOLT BROS. & FLEISCHMAN,

Mr. Chapman helped build up the schools in his locality and did his share in the up-building of this region since coming here. Politically he is a Republican.

"THE CHURN RANCH."

Among the most successful ranch enterprises of Cherry county none has merited a wider reputation than that known in local parlance as "The Churn." The ranch house is situated on section 5, township 31, range 36, and is without doubt one of the largest and finest dwellings in the ranch region of western Nebraska. It was erected in 1902, is two stories high, containing fourteen rooms, including a large bath-room with running water to supply domestic needs. The barn is also one of the largest in the range country, and is but one of a number of large buildings and sheds with which the place is equipped. An elevated reservoir, served by its own windmill, gives water pressure sufficient to throw a stream above the house in case of fire. There is shed room for the sheltering of three thousand head of stock, with convenient corrals surrounding, and all supplied with an abundance of good water. Not the least attractive feature of the ranch is the groves, five in number, which have attained a growth far beyond the usual planting in the west. There are sixteen wells and windmills on the place affording an abundance of good water. The ranch contains something over four thousand acres, much of which is fine hay land with five hundred acres seeded to alfalfa, which in this region attains luxurious growth. There are at all times about two thousand head of cattle and two hundred head of horses on the place, all of a high grade of breeding. The company that established this ranch was organized January 1st, 1886, consisting of Shadbolt, Fleischman, Trowbridge & Gates, the latter of whom sold out to his three partners. Later Trowbridge sold to Hubert Shadbolt (brother of George E. Shadbolt), and the firm name was then changed to Shadbolt Bros. & Fleischman, William Fleischman still retaining his interest throughout the different changes of ownership.

The Shadbolt brothers were born in Sheboygan county, Wisconsin, Hubert, the elder, now residing at Emmetsburg, Iowa. He left home to make his own way in life at the age of sixteen, while George lived with his parents until completing his eighteenth year. After spending four years in Colorado, mostly following the range, he travelled as far west as Oregon, looking the country over for a good location for an enterprise such as they have since organized, and finding nothing in the far west seemingly superior to Nebraska, came to Cherry county in 1886 and became a partner in organizing the ranch afterwards known as "The Churn."

William Fleischman is a native of Germany, and after immigration lived in Wisconsin a few years prior to joining the company organizing "The Churn," which he did January 1st, 1886.

Mr. George E. Shadbolt was married on December 14th, 1904, to Miss Anna Thompson. They have two daughters, Viola Theresa and Ella Leona.

The hospitality of "The Churn" is proverbial. Everywhere western hospitality is cordial, but that dispensed at the above ranch is the essence of the best, it being made the stopping place of freighters and travellers going to or from the railroad stations, as well as for those passing through the region east or west. An interesting picture of the "Churn Ranch" property will be found on another page of this volume.

CLARENCE E. PARK.

Clarence E. Park, who, within the past several years has acquired a valuable estate in section 6, township 34, range 42, is a gentleman of rare intelligence and much enterprise, and a worthy and highly esteemed resident of Sheridan county. Since coming to this section he has met with some discouragements in the way of financial losses, but in the main has prospered and is now recognized as one of the substantial agriculturists of his community.

Mr. Park was born in Sarpy county, Nebraska, in 1869. His father, Gilbert G. Park, was a native of Pennsylvania, farmer by occupation, and came west, settling in Nebraska in 1885, and located in Sheridan county, where he died in 1889, leaving a family of five children, of whom our subject was the third member in order of birth. He was raised on his father's farm in Sarpy county and in Omaha City while a youngster, but since fifteen years of age his life has been spent in Sheridan county. When he reached the age of twenty years he started out for himself, working out on a ranch in the vicinity of his home up to 1886, when he located on a homestead containing eighty acres of land in 1896 and later took an additional one hundred and sixty acres under the Kincaid act, and began to establish a farm and home. During the first years on his father's farm the drouth caused him severe losses to crops, and he had a hard time in keeping up, but managed to get along and gradually conditions grew better and he was able to save a little money and add to his property. He now owns nine hundred and sixty acres of good land, deeded property, and of this he has fifty acres cultivated and about eight acres in alfalfa. He runs quite a bunch of stock, and now has seventy-five head on his place.

Mr. Park was married in 1891 to Miss Elizabeth C. Margrave, a native of Richardson county, Nebraska. Her father, Charles T. Margrave, is a farmer, who was born in Iowa and who has followed ranching since coming to Sheridan county, Nebraska. He now resides in this county, having located here in 1885 with his wife and three children, Elizabeth being the eldest. Mr. and Mrs. Park have a family of five children, named as follows: Beth, Sarah, Margaret, Jeannette and Charles, all born and raised in this county.

Mr. Park devotes his entire time and energy to the improvement and building up of his home and farm, and has never sought public preferment. He is a strong Prohibitionist and has never voted any other ticket.

JAMES H. WIKER.

James H. Wiker, an old timer in western Nebraska, now living in Davison precinct, Cheyenne county, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, December 11th, 1849. He was one of a family of twelve children, of whom ten are still living, he being the third in order of birth. The family moved to Muscatine county, Iowa, in 1858, where our subject was raised and educated, following farming during his boyhood.

In the spring of 1887 he came to Cheyenne county, bought one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land and began stock raising. He then went to Omaha and lived for eight years, employed at the stock yards and at carpentry, and at the end of that time, returned to Cheyenne county, filing on a homestead on section 6, township 16, range 50, now being proprietor of half a section of good farming and ranch land. He has about one hundred and fifty acres cultivated, and runs from fifty to seventy-five head of cattle and twenty-five horses. His place is well improved with good buildings and fences, well supplied with water, and altogether is one of the valuable estates in the county.

Mr. Wiker was married on January 27, 1877, in Muscatine county, Iowa, to Miss Barbara A. Smith, who is a native of the state of Ohio. They are the parents of one child, William H.

Wiker, born in December, 1879, now living at Spaulding, Nebraska, where he is engaged in the jewelry business.

In political sentiment Mr. Wiker is a staunch Republican and takes a deep interest in county, state and national affairs. He is prominent in local and school matters, serving at present as moderator of district No. 61.

CHARLES L. VAUGHT.

Charles L. Vaught is a native of Iowa, and was born on a farm in Jefferson county in 1861. His father, Jacob, was a native of Indiana and served as a veteran in the Civil war. The mother, Nancy Dole, was American born, but was of Dutch descent.

Our subject was reared in Iowa, in Jefferson and Jasper counties on a farm, assisting his father. He left home in 1883 and for a year worked out. Then in the spring of 1884, he came to Plum creek in Nebraska, on the Union Pacific Railroad, and from there he drove over to the Middle Loup river. He and a partner, who was with him, bought a ranch and our subject located a pre-emption claim and a tree claim west of Halsey, Nebraska. Then he worked for what is familiarly called a "cow outfit" for five years, roughing it and camping out with the cow boys. He was on the range all over western Nebraska, to Alliance on the west, and over Cherry county. He helped to organize Blaine county and took a leading part in the affairs of the early days. He located on his present ranch in 1891 and now has four hundred acres thoroughly improved. On the farm adjoining stands an old log house, built in 1872, one of the landmarks of the pioneer times. Our subject saw many hardships during his pioneer life and "batched" it for a number of years and was accustomed to privations of all kinds.

Charles L. Vaught was married December 12, 1893, to Carrie Perkins, daughter of Daniel Perkins. She was born in the state of Iowa. At the age of eight came to South Dakota with her parents, stayed one year, then moved to Custer county, Nebraska, remained there four years, then moved to Thomas county in 1887.

Mr. Vaught has a home to be proud of. His fine farm lies along the Middle Loup river, with plenty of water, grazing land and a soil that will raise splendid crops. He has plenty of timber for all purposes and has his farm fenced and cross-fenced in excellent shape. In spite of hard times and crop losses and the burning of two hundred tons of hay one season, and many other setbacks that came to him during these years, Mr. Vaught has maintained a steady courage and good feeling and has won out in good shape. He is fine companion, a fluent conversationalist, and is always full of good cheer and friendliness. These characteristics have won for him a large circle of friends who always have a good word for Charlie Vaught.

JENS THOMSEN.

Jens Thomsen, who resides on section 1, township 34, range 29, in Cherry county, is one of the leading old-timers in this section, who has always done his full share in the betterment of conditions throughout the community in which he lives. Mr. Thomsen was born in Denmark, July 29, 1856. His father, Thomas, was engaged in making wooden shoes for many years in his native land and died in Denmark in 1892.

There were seven children in his father's family, of whom Jens was the fourth member, all being reared in Denmark. In early life he worked out on farms in the vicinity of his home, and learned the brickmaker's trade, following this occupation for many years. When he was thirty-two years of age he left his home and came to America. After landing in New York city he came west to Omaha, Nebraska, where he secured work in the brick yards and remained for some time. He next went to Schuyler, Colfax county, and there engaged in ranching and farm work, but in the spring of 1890 returned to Omaha and again obtained work in the brick yards for one summer. During that fall he moved to the western part of Cherry county, establishing a brick yard, but owing to hard times could not sell the product of his first kiln. The following spring he returned to the brick yards at Omaha, where he found work for one season. During the years of hard times his debts accumulated and for money to purchase a team he was required to pay twenty-four per cent., which, running for four years, virtually caused him to pay double for his horses. It is over such obstacles as these that the early settlers have come through to success.

In 1892 Mr. Thomsen moved to Gordon, taking up a homestead in the western part of Cherry county. Here he lived in a sod shanty, and went through many hard experiences, losing crops by drouth and hail, everything seeming to be leagued against him for a time. He stuck to the farm, however, and proved up, then sold out and went to Valentine, where he rented a truck farm located south of the town. Here for seven years he devoted his time very successfully to gardening, and with a good market in Valentine for his produce, of which he raised an excellent quality.

In the spring of 1906 he bought his present farm located northwest of Valentine, comprising three hundred and twenty acres, over one hundred of which are cultivated. Besides operating this he leases considerable land in the vicinity, and is engaged in dairying as well as grain and stock raising. It is equipped with good substantial buildings, windmill, tanks and so forth, making it one of the most desirable estates on the table.

Mr. Thomsen was married in 1891 to Miss Caroline Stopp, a native of Denmark, who came to this country in 1890. Nine children were born to them, named as follows: Thomas, Sophia, Minnie, Lauritz, Emma, Jens, Lina and Lily (twins), and Annie, all except the eldest born in Cherry county.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomsen are members of the Fraternal Union of America and of the Lutheran church.

A view of the family residence and its surroundings will be found elsewhere in this work.

LORENZO J. WILSON.

The gentleman above mentioned is counted among the oldest settlers in Sioux county, Nebraska, and since locating here, in 1889, has taken a foremost part in the development of this region. Incidentally he has built up a good home and farm in section 21, township 33, range 57.

Mr. Wilson was born in Springfield, Keokuk county, Iowa, in 1860, descended of Dutch-Irish stock. His father, John P. Wilson, was a well known physician in Iowa, practicing there for many years, and died in Springfield when our subject was a small boy. Lorenzo Wilson's great-grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was captured by the British, held in irons for nine months, and nine months without irons, total eighteen months in prison. Until he died there plainly showed on his legs the cruel scars made by the irons he was bound in so long.

Our subject's mother was Frances A. Linville, of an old Quaker family, born in Pennsylvania.

Our subject grew up in Iowa, obtained a common school education, and was early obliged to make his own way in the world, starting for himself at the age of fourteen years, working on farms in the vicinity of his home town. In 1880 he came to Frontier county, Nebraska, where he remained for a short time. That part of the state was at that time entirely undeveloped country, and he was not very favorably impressed with the region, so returned to Iowa and followed farming for nine years, where he managed his grandfather's farm. The latter, Isaac G. Wilson, was one of the pioneers in Iowa, and died there in 1887, at the age of ninety years. Mr. Wilson came to Nebraska to locate permanently in the summer of 1889, filing on a pre-emption and tree claim situated in section 21, township 33, range 57, and here built a log shack and "batched it" up to 1903, continuing to improve his farm in good shape. He was quite extensively engaged in the cattle business during the first years he was in this locality and made some money in his stock raising operations. Mr. Wilson is now in very comfortable circumstances, but passed through many hardships and privations during his early settlement here, being obliged to work as a cowboy when he roughed it, camping out on the ground in all sorts of severe weather for weeks at a time, and suffering from exposure. He is now the owner of a ranch of eight hundred and eighty acres, also leases six hundred and forty acres near his ranch, and besides this extensive place manages his mother's farm of six hundred and forty acres located in sections 15 and 21.

JOHN R. WORTHLEY.

Among the men who came to Nebraska in the early seventies is the subject of this sketch, John R. Worthley, now retired, residing at North Platte, Lincoln county.

Mr. Worthley was born at the top of Worthley Hill, near Manchester, New Hampshire, and was reared and educated there. In 1859 he obtained employment with the Hannibal & St. Joe Railway and was connected with that road during the Civil war. In 1868 he came to Nebraska and went to work for the Union Pacific Railway, being pit boss and machinist in the shops of the company at Omaha. He had learned the machinist's trade while still living in Manchester during his boyhood days. In 1873 he moved to Lincoln county, continuing at railroad work for eleven years, and then in 1885 he settled on a ranch located three miles north of North Platte, engaging in the live stock and milk business. He remained on this ranch up to 1905, then rented the place and moved to North Platte. The ranch comprised one thousand acres of good land, part bottom and part hill land, and is a valuable property. Mr. Worthley was very successful in its operation, and has been well rewarded financially for the years of hard labor he put in there.

Mr. Worthley was married in 1861 to Miss Mary Parke, of Brookfield, Missouri, daughter of John and Sarah (Berry) Parke, who came west from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1840, settling in Iowa. A son of Mr. Worthley is connected with the Union Pacific Railway at Ogden, holding a responsible position with the company at that point.

The Worthleys came from England and Scotland to America during the seventeenth century, settling in New England, and the family name and history is among the first and best of the old New Englanders. Our subject's mother was Miss Phoebe Roby, whose family was one of the first to settle in New England.

Mr. Worthley is one of the leading citizens of North Platte, and a man who has always striven to identify himself with the best interests of his community, and is respected and esteemed by all who know him. He is a member of the Masonic blue lodge.

WILLIAM M. IODENCE.

William M. Iodence, one of the old settlers of the region where he chose his home in the early days, occupies a good home and valuable property in section 30, township 28, range 47, Box Butte county. He has done his share in the upbuilding of his locality, and is well and favorably known throughout this part of the state.

Mr. Iodence is a native of Christian county, Illinois, born on a farm in 1860. His father, Henry, was born in Germany and came to America when a boy twelve years of age, and is the only member of his family who ever left the mother country. He married Jane Miller, a native of Illinois, whose parents were Kentuckians and early settlers in Illinois. Our subject was raised in his birthplace until he was eighteen years of age, receiving his education in the country schools and helping his father work the home farm, and in 1878 the whole family came to Nebraska, settling in Seward county, where William started out for himself. He had a pretty good practical training in a business way, a fair education for those days, and made some money by teaching school in the vicinity of their home, also keeping up his own studies and constantly forging ahead. He soon afterwards began studying law at Seward, and was admitted to the Bar in 1887, and the same year located in this county, at Hemingford. He began practicing law at Hemingford, and was one of the first attorneys to open an office in that town, and remained there for sixteen years, building up a good practice and an enviable reputation extending throughout Dawes, Sheridan, Sioux and Scotts Bluff counties. In 1897 he started purchasing land and laid the foundation of his present extensive ranch, moving to the place in 1903. He now has one of the most valuable estates and best improved ranches in this section, engaging almost exclusively in horse and cattle raising. He owns in all thirty-six hundred acres in sections 17, 18, 19, 20 and 30, in township 28, range 47, and also in sections 13, 23 and 26, in township 28, range 48.

Mr. Iodence was united in marriage at Seward, in 1885, to Mary Culliford, who was born in England in 1860 and came to America when a young girl. Her father, Thomas Culliford, was a well-to-do seed merchant of Bath, England. Mr. and Mrs. Iodence are the parents of two children, Charles Gladstone, aged twenty years, and Mary, eighteen years of age.

Mr. Iodence is a strong Democrat and has held public office, serving as county attorney, being elected in 1896.

JOHN TIMM.

Among the prosperous citizens of Brown county who have spent many years in this locality is the subject of this review, John Timm, owner of a valuable estate in Garfield precinct.

Mr. Timm was born in Henerau, Holstein, Germany, January 16, 1854, and there raised on his father's farm. He is the fourth member in a family of six children, and lived at home assisting his parents on the farm until his father's death, when he left home and began a career for himself. In 1879 he came to America, sailing from Hamburg in November on the steamship Selesia, and landed in New York. He came to Valparaiso, Indiana, which he reached December 4, and where he remained for ten years, working on the railroad during this time. In 1889 he traveled farther west, locating in Brown county, Nebraska, and settled on his present farm in section 6, township 31, range 21, where he built a log house of one room, in which he lived for several years. His start was on a very small scale, consisting of one horse, one pony and one cow. He at once went to work breaking up the prairie land and improving his farm, and was getting along fairly well when, in 1897, he lost his entire crop by hail and suffered other losses the same year, so he was obliged to give up the place. He then took a homestead in section 1, township 31, range 21, put up a shanty, and lived in this for five years, proving up on his claim. In 1905 he moved back to his first farm, where he built a fine new two-story house, a new barn, granary and other buildings, until he now has a ranch of one thousand acres, of which two hundred and twenty acres are cultivated, the remainder being in pasture and meadow. He engages principally in the cattle raising business, which he finds most profitable, and had he devoted his attention to this line of work in earlier years he would have been much better off, and would not have been affected so much by the dry years which caused him such heavy losses when he first came to Nebraska. In the spring of 1907 he rented the farm and purchasing a small place adjoining Ainsworth, is taking life easy in town.

Mr. Timm was married March 7, 1877, while living in Germany, to Miss Katie Storm, whose parents came on to America after their daughter had settled here, locating in Grand Island, Nebraska, where her father's death occurred in 1886. One child came to bless this union, Anna, born in Germany in 1879. She is now Mrs. Arthur Daniels, living in this locality. Mr. Timm is one of the old settlers in this part of the county, and has done his full share in the building up of the country, well meriting his high standing as a substantial business man and worthy citizen. He is independent in politics and a member of the Lutheran church.

JAMES A. BROWN.

James A. Brown, proprietor of one of the most valuable estates in Franklin county, Nebraska, has been a resident of that locality for twenty-five years. He is prominently known throughout the western part of the state as one of the foremost farmers and stockmen in Nebraska, and after many years hard labor in building up his business is now prepared to enjoy the remaining years of his life in peace and comfort, surrounded by a host of good friends and acquaintances. He still looks after his farm and business. Mr. Brown is a native of Massachusetts, and was born in Rowe, four miles from the Hoosac Tunnel, in 1849. His father was Hezekiah Brown, son of Captain James Brown, who fought in the Revolutionary war.

Our subject was raised in the east and came to Iowa in 1876, where he was engaged in farming and stock raising for a number of years. In 1883 he located in Grant township, Franklin county, Nebraska, where he purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land, also leasing six hundred and forty acres of school land, and began farming, continuing at this work up to the present time. During the years he has followed farming he met with marked success in every enterprise, and from his experience in other states, finds Nebraska far ahead of some eastern states.

Mr. Brown owns one thousand one hundred and twenty acres of good land in all, and has three houses and three large barns on his estate. He rents a part of the land now, having tenants living on the land. He has about one hundred and fifty cattle, all thoroughbred Shorthorns, and forty-five grades. The thoroughbreds are from stock brought here from Iowa by Dr. Finley, and the herd is one of the finest in this part of the state. He also has a great many Poland China hogs, and he feeds all the grain he raises on his place and then is compelled to buy some. Mr. Brown has one brother, John, who owns a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Grant township. Wm. D. lives at Rosehill, Kansas, and Ida in Massachusetts.

Our subject was married in 1889 to Ella Olson, who was born in Wisconsin. Mrs. Brown has two children from a former marriage, Ellery and Paul. Mr. Brown is a Republican, and takes an active interest in local affairs in his community. He has been a member of the school board for a number of years, and is one of the substantial and worthy citizens of his county, held in the highest esteem by his fellowmen.

WILLIAM W. STICKLER.

In compiling a list of the representative farmers and ranchmen of Keith county, Nebraska, a prominent place is accorded the name of William W. Stickler. For many years past he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits in Paxton precinct, and has done his full share as an old settler towards the development of the better interests of his community, and enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him. He has a comfortable home on section 22, township 14, range 35, and is the owner of a good farm.

Mr. Stickler was born in the city of Joliet, Illinois, July 10, 1863. His father, Jacob, was a farmer, born in Pennsylvania, of German stock, who married Sarah Bentz, also of German parentage. Our subject grew up in Benton county, Indiana, where his parents moved when he was a small child, remaining at home until he was twenty-one years of age, then emigrated to Lexington, Dawson county, Nebraska, where he spent a short time, then came to Keith county. Here he filed on a homestead, taking possession May 1, 1886, the claim being located on section 12, township 12, range 37. When he landed in the region all the money he had in the world was thirteen dollars, and he worked out during the first summer, and earned money with which to put a few improvements on the place. His first team was of oxen, which he broke and used for two seasons. His first buildings were of sod, his shanty being a rude shack, and in this he lived, "batching it" for five years. Much of his time was spent working out in the vicinity of his homestead, and during these years he witnessed all the pioneer times, going through droughts, losing several crops by the dry seasons, also experienced severe hailstorms which destroyed what the droughts did not take. However, he stuck to his claim up to 1900, then sold out and moved to a rented farm, which was situated in the North Platte valley, remaining there for three years, when he purchased his present homestead on section 22, township 14, range 35. This was an old farm which had run to weeds, and he went to work improving it, putting up good buildings, fenced it, and now has everything in good shape. He has nice large hog pastures, keeping quite a drove of this stock, thirty acres of alfalfa, ten acres of sugar beets, the same amount in oats, and thirty acres of corn. This is for the present season of 1908.

Mr. Stickler was married on August 1, 1900, to Miss Lena Lark, born in Boone county, Iowa. To them have been born the following children: Mildred, Erma and Wilma. Mr. Stickler takes an active interest in local affairs, voting the Populist ticket. He is a member of the Paxton camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

LUTHER LYDELL.

Luther Lydell is a native of Missouri, and was born on the White river, in Berry county, May 11, 1873. His parents, Lyman Lydell and Laura (Scott) Lydell, were farmers by occupation and emigrated to Loup county, Nebraska, in 1879. They drove through from Missouri in a covered wagon in the orthodox emigrant way and located near the village of Taylor. During the first fall they lived in a tent, enduring many hardships and often having to fight prairie fires for hours in order to save their property from utter destruction. Once, when the father was away, a fire swept up, partly consuming the tent, and the most strenuous efforts of Mrs. Lydell and the children were necessary or everything would have been destroyed. At this time the nearest railroad point was Central City, one hundred and twenty miles away, and many times Luther and his father camped out and slept on the ground on their long trips for supplies. They built a sod house and other buildings in the fall, and winter found them more comfortably situated. It was on this farm that Luther grew up and learned the ways of farming.

The subject of our sketch remained at home working for his father until the spring of 1892, when he struck out for himself, working out at different kinds of labor until the spring of 1895. At this time he drove overland with team and wagon to Walla Walla, Washington, enjoying on the trip many interesting experiences, camping out, hunting, etc. From 1897 to 1899 Mr. Lydell lived in Taylor and conducted a prosperous freighting business. He settled at his present farm in 1899, giving his principal attention to stock raising, at which he is making a good success. He is well and favorably known as a successful business man, farmer and stock raiser, and he has in many ways added to the material growth and solid improvement of the community.

In the spring of 1897 occurred the wedding of Mr. Lydell and Miss Minnie Clark, whose father was a pioneer of Illinois and a veteran of the Civil war. In an early day her father came to Loup county, Nebraska, where he died. Mrs. Lydell's mother was Katherine Ridgeway before her marriage.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lydell has been blessed with five children—Edna, Esther, Ruth, Ralph and Theresa—a most interesting group, and all go to school near their home.

ADAM S. GARMAN.

It would be impossible to give a sketch of the history of western Nebraska without including a sketch of the life of Adam S. Garman, who is one of the most prominent of the old settlers. He was born in York county, Pennsylvania, March 15, 1849. His father, Peter Garman, was born in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, and was a farmer by occupation. His mother, Mary Swartz, was also born in the Keystone state.

Mr. Garman lived in Pennsylvania for several years and received a good common school education. In 1871 he came to Illinois and settled in Fulton county, where he farmed. He then went to Iowa, where he spent one summer, after which he returned to Fulton county, going into the well drilling business, which he followed for eight years in Fulton and McDonough counties before coming to Hall county, Nebraska, in 1883, where he farmed for four years.

In the spring of 1887 he came to Deuel county, Nebraska, and settled on a homestead thirty-five miles northwest from Ogallala. He built a sod house on the claim and after proving up he sold the homestead and returned to Hall county after seven years' absence. During the hard times of the early nineties Mrs. Garman taught school to keep the family in provisions while Mr. Garman attended to the heavier duties of the ranch.

He returned to Ogallala in 1899 and opened a restaurant, which he conducted for fifteen months. He opened his present fruit and confectionery store in 1900, and since that time he has added to the stock from time to time. He also buys and ships cream, and from a very small beginning he has built up a very successful business and is regarded as a good type of the old settler. He owns three lots and a comfortable residence in Ogallala.

He was married in 1879 to Miss Cristine Weese, who was born and reared in Fulton county, Illinois, where her father, Samuel Weese, a native of Tennessee, was a successful farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Garman have five children—Charles, Frank, Dolly, formerly a teacher, now the wife of Leroy Dodson, now living in Detroit; Sam, and Cora, bookkeeper and typewriter in the county judge's office.

Mr. Garman is a Republican and a member of the Lutheran church.

PETER RIEGE.

Prominent among Cherry county's old settlers is Peter Riege, who since the fall of 1883 has made this region his home and done his share in the developing of the agricultural resources of this section of the country. Mr. Riege lives in section 10, township 33, range 30, where he has built up a valuable property through his industry and good management.

Mr. Riege is a native of the village of Rosenweide, province of Hanover, Germany, born September 4, 1840. His father, Peter, Sr., was a gardener and laborer in the fatherland, where both he and his wife lived and died. There was a family of six children, our subject being the only one who grew to manhood. He was reared in his native country, following gardening until he was forty-one years old, when he came to America. Sailing from Hamburg, March 9, on the steamship Lessing, he landed in New York city March 27, and immediately started for the west, arriving in Platte county, Nebraska, where he had friends from the old country. Here he rented land for three years, then left and moved to Cherry county, driving from Valentine with an ox team and wagon, in which he carried his household goods and farming tools. He located on the Niobrara river and put up a log house and the necessary sheds for the stock and then found himself two hundred dollars in debt. He worked hard, broke sod and planted his first crop, reaping a bountiful harvest. During the succeeding years he saw hard times and had a struggle to make a living for his family. By perseverance he added to his land, erected a better dwelling and several miles of fence. He is now proprietor of nine hundred and sixty acres in this county, and operates besides this one hundred and sixty acres adjoining, belonging to his son Herman. This place is well supplied with timber, and a large part is used for hay land, with quite a portion of it in a high state of cultivation.

Mr. Riege was married in Germany, April 15, 1864, to Miss Lizzie Richman. Her parents were also engaged in gardening in the old country, and lived and died there. Mr. and Mrs. Riege had a family of six children, three of whom are dead, the surviving three named as follows: August, now employed in San Francisco; Herman, who lives with his father and assists him in the management of the home farm, and William, who is farming four miles west of his father's farm. Mrs. Riege died February 28, 1886, only a few years after the advent of the family to Nebraska. All are members of the Lutheran church of German precinct.

When the family first came here they suffered many hardships, especially during the dry years, and when their crops failed had a hard time to get the necessary supplies, being often compelled to go without coffee for want of money to buy it, but in spite of many discouragements and hardships they prospered and now enjoy the fruits of their hard labors. In 1906 Herman visited his native village, where he remained three months among childhood scenes with relatives.

JOSEPH S. KALBLINGER.

Located very pleasantly in section 20, township 34, range 28, is to be found the somewhat notable gentleman whose name introduces this biographical writing. He has been identified with the history of Cherry county from a very early date, and his contributions to the making of northwestern Nebraska, while they have largely consisted of those unobtrusive ways and habits of which little mention is ordinarily made, have been such industrious habits, such persistent and invariable honesty of purpose and force of character, and such an earnest desire to live the best American life, that he is widely known as one of the leading and influential early settlers of the county.

Mr. Kalblinger was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, May 26, 1858, his birthplace being a farm house, and his associations from the first being with agricultural interests. It is natural therefore that he should be a farmer, and that he should find success in life's endeavors in the tilling of the soil.

Andrew Kalblinger, the father of Joseph S., was born in Germany and found a home in the United States in 1855. His wife, Barbara, died when the subject of this sketch was six months old, leaving him the youngest of a family of seven children. The father did not long survive the loss of his wife, and with his death the young orphan became a member of the household of his uncle, where he remained until he had passed the age of six years. For the ensuing twelve years he made his home with John Heyls, of Prospect, Butler county, Pennsylvania, and when he was eighteen years of age betook himself to the oil country, where he was employed at Petroleum, Pennsylvania, as a tool dresser for some two years. In 1877 Mr. Kalblinger came into Nebraska and engaged in farming near Nebraska City for some six years. While here he was married in March, 1885, to Miss Sarah J. Mapel. Her father, William Mapel, was of German descent, and her mother, Martha (Jenkins) Mapel, belonged to an old American family. Mr. and Mrs. Kalblinger have a bright and interesting family of nine children—Eunice Maude, Nettie Belle, Andrew Joseph, Harold Ernest, William Melvin, Harry Clinton, Jennie Gladys, Roy Arlington and Guy Kitchner—all of whom were born in Nebraska.

In the spring of 1886 Mr. Kalblinger came to Cherry county and filed on a claim on section 29, township 35, range 28, and built a sod house. Mrs. Kalblinger joined him in the fall following and their home has been in Cherry county ever since. In 1898 they bought the farm where we find them at this writing. Then he acquired a title to two hundred and eighty acres, consisting chiefly of raw prairie land, which they have greatly improved with the needed farm buildings, fences and the bringing of some fifty acres under cultivation. Mr. Kalblinger is largely engaged in dairying, and plans to do much more in this line in the very near future. So far as he knows he is the first to discover that western Nebraska is adapted to dairying and the first to ship cream as a farm product, consigning to the Hygia Creamery Company, of Omaha.

Mr. Kalblinger passed through the famous four dry seasons that proved so ruinous to the hopes and endeavors of thousands of the early settlers, and though facing much privation and suffering, did not give up. During the Indian scares the family slept two nights in Valentine and two nights the neighbors held fort in Mr. Kalblinger's big sod house in section 29, not knowing what minute they might be attacked. He now holds a fine standing in the local circles in which his useful life is passing. Politically he is a Republican, but has never sought or held office. He is noted as always speaking well of his neighbors, and one and all in turn bear high tribute as to his character and genuine worth. Mr. Kalblinger is a member of the Ancient Order United Workmen lodge at Valentine and together with his family is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

A view of the family residence will be found on another page in this work.

THOMAS A. GREEN.

Thomas A. Green, residing on section 5, township 26, range 50, of Box Butte county, Nebraska, is regarded as one of the leading citizens of his locality. He has always been one of the important factors in the upbuilding of his region, aiding materially in its development and growth from the time of its early settlement.

Thomas A. Green was born in Rutland county, Vermont, in 1858, and was raised and educated there. His father was of English descent and his mother of German descent, both born and reared in America. The father died at the good old age of eighty-six years and the mother died at the age of forty-eight.

When our subject was twenty-four years of age he learned the carpenter's trade, and worked at that for a number of years in his native state, leaving there in 1883 and starting for the west. He spent several years in Iowa, working at his trade near Council Bluffs.

He came to Box Butte county in 1885 and filed on a pre-emption and tree claim, on which he lived and proved up, and the following year took up a homestead in section 5, there erecting a sod cabin and began farming. When landing here he was obliged to go to North Platte for all his supplies, purchasing a team for this purpose, and also broke up some land, on which he planted a small crop.

When the Burlington Railroad was put through this section he worked for three days for that company. Mr. Green saw many hard times from the drouth periods; he was hailed out also and lost three crops from these causes, one season being completely burned out by the hot winds. However, he kept on trying to improve his farm, also purchasing more land as he was able, and is now the owner of five full sections, over three sections of which is deeded land, all of it fenced and fitted up with many improvements. He farms one hundred and sixty acres and engages principally in the cattle and horse raising business, running sixty head of the former and one hundred and fifty of the latter. A picture of the ranch property appears on another page.

Mr. Green is an independent voter.

AUSTIN E. DIXON.

To the men of perseverance and stalwart determination who went to Nebraska when it was yet undeveloped as an agricultural and commercial region, the present prosperity enjoyed there is due. Among the early settlers of Harlan county who has been intimately identified with its development and has gained an enviable reputation as a citizen may be mentioned Austin E. Dixon, a prosperous and successful farmer of Alma township.

Mr. Dixon is a native of Licking county, Ohio, and came here from Boone county, Iowa, where he lived for a number of years as a young man. His father, Jacob Dixon, died when our subject was a young boy. His grandfather, Joseph Dixon, came to America when a young man from England, and fought in the Revolutionary war in the New England militia. There were eleven children in his father's family and he was the youngest, the family being scattered all over the United States and engaged in different enterprises, but he stuck to farming and stock raising all his life and is amply repaid for his efforts in the ownership of a fine farm and competent fortune, which will insure him comfort for the remainder of his days. When he first came to Nebraska in 1877 he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres in Alma township, and has since bought more until he now owns three hundred and twenty acres of fine land, and has been very successful in every venture. Mr. Dixon served in the Civil war for eight months with the Eighteenth Missouri Regiment. He was at the last battle of Nashville, then through Alabama and North Carolina, the battle of Roundhead, and with the regiment in the grand review at Washington at the close of the war.

Our subject was united in marriage to Miss Christina Johnson, of Boone county, Iowa. They are the parents of three children, namely: Ernest S., who married Myrtle Prettyman, daughter of Lewis Prettyman, assistant county treasurer of Harlan county, residing at Alma. They have two children, Lewis and John. The second son, James M., married Emma Prettyman, sister to Myrtle, and both reside with their families on this section, having comfortable homes of their own. Mr. Dixon's only daughter, Mary A., lives at home with her parents, and she with her mother and father spent 1906 on the Pacific slope visiting Mr. Dixon's brothers who reside there. Mr. Dixon is a member of the Evangelical church and a highly respected citizen of his community. In political sentiment he is a Prohibitionist.

JAMES M. ALDERMAN.

James M. Alderman is a wholesale dealer in choice Elkhorn valley hay, with headquarters at Newport, Nebraska, and meets a constant demand for his goods from many quarters. A man of push and energy, he asks no favors as he meets the competition of trade. He is resourceful in emergencies, knows what he wants, and meets to the letter every engagement or representation that he makes. Newport counts him among its most enterprising and pushing citizens.

Mr. Alderman was born in Kansas City, Missouri, August 16, 1870, a son of James M., Sr., and Sarah J. (Kinder) Alderman. Alderman blood comes from Germany, though the parents of the subject of this writing were American-born. The senior Alderman was for a time a nurseryman in Brownville, Nebraska, where our subject was reared and educated. He is the fifth child in a family of seven sons and one daughter born to his parents.

When Mr. Alderman was twenty years of age he took upon himself the direction of his own life, and in the month of June, 1890, he came to Newport, Nebraska, with the intention of learning the telegraphic art. Here, however, he found his brother already well established in business, and the younger Alderman was appointed postmaster, a position which he held for some four years, proving very acceptable to the patrons of the office. When he finally left the postoffice he did so that he might go into another line of business that did not seem to be fully covered by any enterprise already established in Newport. In 1895 he went into the hay business, in which he has increased his dealings every year. In the territory stretching from Wood Lake to Stuart he has bought hay very extensively, and has maintained offices at both Wood Lake and Bassett. For a time he worked in partnership with W. H. Allen, but of late years has operated alone. How extensive his operations have been may be judged from the fact that in 1907 he shipped from Newport alone over twelve hundred carloads of hay.

Mr. Alderman was married November 14, 1898, to Miss Grace Barr, whose father, John Barr, was at one time much interested in the oil business in Pennsylvania. The mother, who was Eva Mason prior to marriage, in after years became an old settler in Nebraska, and for a time lived in a sod house on a homestead claim, quite a contrast to the comfortable dwellings of the east. To Mr. and Mrs. Alderman have come three children to bless their union—Geneva, Donald and Anona.

Mr. Alderman is a staunch Democrat, is a member of the Royal Highlanders, and with his family is a communicant of the Episcopal church.

JOHN H. WILLER.

Among the leading old settlers and public-spirited citizens of Dawes county, Nebraska, the gentleman above mentioned deserves a foremost place. Mr. Willer has aided in no slight degree in the developing of the commercial resources of this region, and has done his full share in building up the schools and doing all in his power for the betterment of conditions socially and politically.

Mr. Willer is a native of Kendall county, Illinois, born on his father farm January 26, 1863. His father, William H. Willer, was born in Ireland and came to America when a boy, as also did his mother, whose maiden name was Anna Kelley. Our subject was reared in Illinois until he was twenty-one years of age, and in 1884 he left home and started out to make his own way in the world, working in that state at anything he could find to do for three years, in the tile factories and sawmills, etc. In 1887 he came to Crawford and took up a pre-emption and tree claim, proving up on them in due time. He built up his farm, and also helped build the Hall grist mill at Crawford, and was afterwards employed by the concern for seven years. In 1892 he filed on a homestead but did not settle on it until 1896, then proved up. He bought the west half of section 35, township 31, range 52, where he now resides. He now has a ranch of nine hundred and twenty acres, and has one hundred acres of this in a high state of cultivation, raising splendid crops of small grain. His place is all fenced, and he has about sixteen miles of good fencing, with plenty of timber and running water on the ranch. He raises cattle, horses and hogs, running one hundred and nineteen head of cattle, fourteen horses and quite a number of hogs. Everything is kept up in the best condition possible, and bespeaks the thrift and industry of the owner.

In 1895 Mr. Willer was united in marriage to Miss Maud L. Marquis, daughter of Charles Marquis, who died when Mrs. Willer was a child, five years old, her mother is still living in New York state. To Mr. and Mrs. Willer three children have been born, namely: Herman, Clara and Bessie.

Mr. Willer has made a success of his ventures, and richly deserves his good fortune. He is a good citizen, well liked by all, and enjoys a happy and comfortable home. He is a reformer in his political views.

W. O. RUSSELL.

W. O. Russell, a well known real estate dealer of McCook, Nebraska, is one of the prominent business men of the town. He is thoroughly versed in his line of work, and is a highly respected and worthy citizen, and one of the old settlers in this locality, having resided for the past thirty-six years in Redwillow and Furnas counties.

Mr. Russell is a native of Pennsylvania, and was raised there. His father, John C. Russell, served in the Civil war for three years and three months in the Thirty-second Iowa Infantry, and during this time was in the field all over Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, taking part in all the battles of these campaigns under the command of General A. J. Smith. During the time he was serving as a soldier his wife, accompanied by her son, the subject of this sketch, and one daughter, visited him at Island No. 10, and the impressions he received of an army in the field are still quite fresh in his memory. Our subject's mother was Miss Maria A. Prime, born in Indiana, and she has four brothers—George, Daniel, J. T. and Jacob Prime—all of whom settled in Furnas county, Nebraska, many years ago, two still living here and two in California. One son, John P. Russell, is road foreman of engines, located at Birmingham, Alabama, in the service of the Memphis & Northern Alabama Railway. Prior to 1888 he was connected with the Burlington & Missouri Railway at this point. Our subject's great-great-grandfather, Mr. Coleman, of Pennsylvania, was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was killed during battle. In 1884 the Russell family held a reunion in Furnas county at the home of Jacob M. Prime, and at this affair there were over seventy relatives present.

Mr. Russell came to Nebraska in 1872, locating one-half mile west of Edison, Furnas county. His father settled here with his family, coming from Hamilton county, Iowa, where he had farmed for many years, being a pioneer settler there, who, prior to this, had lived in Illinois. When the family came to Furnas county our subject was fourteen years old, and this was then almost a wilderness. There were but few settlers here, and the Indians were camped all along the Republican river, and the pioneers experienced many hard times and scares from the red skins, but never had any severe trouble through them. Lowell was then the trading point, and this was eighty to ninety miles distant from Edison. They went to farming their land and managed to get along very comfortably, hauling their supplies from Lowell, and often having a hard time in making the trip. In 1874 a bridge was built across the Platte river, and after this was completed they hauled wheat to Kearney, a distance of sixty-five miles. The second mowing machine in this district was owned by our subject's father. This was purchased in Lowell at a cost of one hundred and ten dollars. He also built the first wire fence in this section.

Mr. Russell has been sheriff of Redwillow county. He held this office during the years 1888 and 1889, and that was one of the busiest times in the history of the county, being the time of the great railway strike, and he was kept busy attending to the duties connected with his office, conducting a large number of foreclosures, etc. He was the man who started the first livery barn in McCook, in 1882, having moved into the town in the month of April of that year. He has resided here since that time, and also owns a fine farm in Redwillow county. He has served on the local school board, and is a charter member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a Republican.

Mr. Russell married Miss Louisa McCorkle, of McCook, and they have three sons—Harrison, Lovel and Wray—living, and those dead are Ora O., William W. and James. The daughters living are Jessie E., Floyd A., Mary M. and Lottie May. Mr. Russell's father, also his sisters, with the exception of one, who lives in Oatville, Kansas, all reside in California.

Our subject's father, J. C. Russell, has a history, as follows: His grandparents, Christopher and Isabella Russell, came from England to Pennsylvania in 1807. His father, William Russell, was born in England in 1799 and came to Pennsylvania in 1807. William Russell was married to Sarah Coleman in 1835. John S. Russell, our subject's (W. O. Russell's) father, was the son of that union, being born in 1838. When John C. Russell was eight years old the family moved to Ogle county, Illinois. The father, William, worked at carpentering for one dollar and a quarter a day for two years. Later the family moved to Bureau county, Illinois, and bought forty acres of prairie land, which was operated by his son while he (John C.) still followed the carpenter's trade. The son operated this farm for five years. They then sold and came to Hamilton county, Iowa, in 1852. The father, William, bought some land, which his son operated while he still clung to his former occupation, that of carpenter. John C. Russell worked the farm until about 1857. He was a great hunter and spent winters hunting deer, turkey, geese, ducks and quail. John C. Russell was married to Miss Marie Angeline Prime in 1857.

In 1862 he enlisted in the Iowa Volunteer Infantry, Company K, Thirty-second Regiment, and served three years and thirteen days, during which time he participated in about fourteen hotly contested battles. In 1872 he came to Furnas county, Nebraska, with his family, among whom was his son, William O. Russell. They spent four weeks on the road with their teams and covered wagons, the same time taking care of a small herd of stock which they brought along with them. They located a homestead on the northeast quarter of section 34, township 3, range 22. He farmed here in Redwillow and Furnas counties until 1893, when he moved to California, where he now resides at Turlock. The first Republican convention was held on his homestead in a very early day, during the time when wild game was still plentiful on the prairies.

Our subject, William O. Russell, has three uncles, Samuel Russell, James C. Russell and Milton Fisher, all of whom are pioneers of this part of Nebraska. He also has four sisters—Eva A., Sarah R., Mary and Angeline; also three brothers, John P., Warren N. (deceased) and Roy.

Mary Prime, our subject's mother, was born in 1838 in Indiana. Her father, John Prime, and her mother, Rebecca (Hutto)

Prime, were both residents of that state. They came to Hamilton county in the early days and settled near Homer. Mary Prime had six brothers and two sisters—George, Daniel, Nathaniel, John V., William, Jacob, and the sisters, Mary Ann and Margarette.

CHARLES S. HAWK.

Prominent among the leading old settlers of Dawes county, Nebraska, the gentleman whose name heads this personal history is entitled to a foremost place. Mr. Hawk is a man of active public spirit, always lending his aid and influence for the bettering of conditions in his community, and has served his district in the capacity of justice of the peace, and as school director for many years past. Mr. Hawk resides in township 30, range 47, where he has a pleasant home and valuable estate.

Mr. Hawk is a native of Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, born in 1867. His father, William Hawk, was a farmer, also a native of Pennsylvania, born of German parentage, and he married Martha Speelman, also of German stock, born in that state. The family came to Ohio about 1872, settling on a farm in Darke county, where our subject was reared and educated, attending the country schools when he was not assisting in the farm work on the home place. At the age of nineteen years he left home and came to Washington county, Nebraska, locating near Blair, and there followed farm work for one summer. In the fall of 1887 he went to North Platte and did not settle permanently during the first two years in this section of the country. He worked at different occupations, being employed as a grocery clerk, hotel clerk and at other work, and then returned to Washington county and went back to farming in partnership with a brother, William L. Hawk, and continued at that during 1890, 1891 and 1892. He next moved to Thurston county, locating on the Omaha reservation, where he leased Indian lands and farmed for some time, leaving there in 1901, when he came to Dawes county and bought his present ranch. Here his buildings are on section 6, township 30, range 47, and his ranch consists of fifteen quarter sections, all adjoining in one solid body. Antelope postoffice is located on this ranch. He has one hundred acres under cultivation and thirty acres of fine alfalfa, with a splendid grove of ash and cottonwood trees. There is plenty of good water on the place, and he has three wells and windmills, comfortable house and good farm buildings. He has a nice orchard and lots of small fruits planted, and everything to make a model farm home. He has built fifteen miles of fence enclosing his ranch, and also cross fences. He is largely engaged in raising Hereford cattle and horses and mules, which he finds most profitable.

When our subject landed in Herman, Nebraska, March 3, 1887, he had a very common outfit of clothes and but ten dollars in cash. This was the extent of his worldly possessions. After spending two years in the North Platte country he returned to Washington county, Nebraska, going to the village of Herman. Like most farmer boys, while working on his father's ranch he had the ambition to move to the city and live the gentleman's life, wearing fine clothes and leaving the so-called dreaded farm work, but, after working as a clerk in a grocery store for a year, he found that city life was much more monotonous and tiresome than he had expected and that there were a great many more temptations and a great deal more strife there than back on the old farm, and he was anxious to return to the simple life of the country. Our subject was very fond of horses and cattle and decided to own some. So in the winter of 1889 and 1890, he and his brother William borrowed three hundred dollars from their father with which to make partial payments on horses and machinery in order that they might start to farming. They rented one hundred and eighty acres of land in Washington county, Nebraska, and farmed there for about a year with fair success. The next year William, our subject's brother, decided to quit farming, so our subject rented one hundred and sixty acres and "batched it" for about two years. During these two years he barely realized enough to pay rent and interest. Our subject then moved to Thurston county, Nebraska, and leased land on the Omaha Indian reservation. It was at this time that he went to Avoca, Iowa, and was married, and then he returned to his ranch, where with the assistance of his estimable helpmeet he began to accumulate a little money. After living there for eight years our subject decided to leave the reservation and buy a home in some other locality, so they sold out most of their belongings, realizing about six thousand dollars. They moved to Dawes county, Nebraska, where he purchased his present home, then amounting to nineteen hundred and eighty acres of land, and also one hundred head of cattle.

Not being satisfied with raising common grade cattle he went to Cumming county, Nebraska, and purchased sixty head of registered Hereford cattle, never regretting this purchase. Later in the same year he bought a Spanish jack. At this time he had twenty-six head of horses; now he has one hundred and five head of horses and mules, one hundred and fifty head of cattle, of which one hundred and twenty head are thoroughbreds. They sell their surplus stock every year and realize a fine profit. Our subject has added three hundred and twenty acres of new land to his ranch and also has not forgotten to improve the conveniences of their home, the house being piped for water, this doing away with the old pump and carrying of water. They still have some inconveniences to overcome, one being the distance of thirty miles which the two daughters have to go every week in order for them to take their music lessons.

Each member of the family has their little interest in the ranch, owning cattle and horses, and thus the interest in caring for the stock is kept up. Since coming to this section of the country our subject has seen material changes in the country, values of land being quadrupled. Our subject is a firm believer in the old tried and true maxim, "Honesty, practical economy and industry will lead to success."

In the spring of 1893 Mr. Hawk was united in marriage to Miss Sarah M. Beistline, daughter of Simon A. Beistline, a farmer of Pennsylvania German stock, who settled in Nebraska in 1894. To Mr. and Mrs. Hawk have been born three children, named as follows: Howard F., aged fourteen years; Stella G., aged twelve, and Ruth A., aged nine years.

Mr. Hawk is a Democrat and a strong party man.

TAYLOR S. NORTHUP, DECEASED.

Taylor S. Northup was born in Sandy Hill, Washington county, New York, in the year 1831. His father, American-born, was a manufacturer of note in his day and made the first steel plow produced in America. Our subject's mother was Ruth Taylor before marriage, being of American nativity; her father was a farmer in New York state.

Taylor S. Northup was married in 1860 to Miss Helen Amigh, of Hudson, New York, where her father was a leading merchant. The noted Rev. Henry Ward Beecher officiated at the wedding. Mrs. Northup is a lady of scholarly attainments and of wide literary culture and was principal of Rutgers' College, New York, for some time, and was the first woman in America to be appointed to a professorship of mathematics. She is a graduate of Utica Female Seminary, at Utica, New York, one of the celebrated institutions of learning in the eastern states.

Taylor S. Northup was reared in New York state, graduating from the high schools. He then took up work with his father and was foreman of the foundry until he went to Brooklyn, where he secured the contract for and built the main sewer in the city. He afterwards entered the government employ and was United States assessor for five years; then a custom house gauger for nine years, and for three years was mine superintendent at Nevada, New York. In 1893 he came west to Blaine county and went into the cattle business, remaining on a homestead until 1903. He then purchased the present farm on section 17, township 17, range 28, in Logan county, where he made a marked success at farming and stock raising. The farm of three hundred and twenty acres is located eight miles south of Gandy. Mr. Northup was one of the leading old settlers of Nebraska and was well and favorably known over several of the western countries. Mr. Northup died October 7, 1908, of heart failure.

FRANK TELLER.

Frank Teller, long and prominently known in Perkins county, Nebraska, was born in Wayne county, New York, in 1852, coming of old American stock, his father being a native of New York state and his mother of good old Yankee ancestors. The former died in his native state, while the mother was for several years a resident of Nebraska, and died in Buffalo county in 1892.

Our subject made his native state his home until he was twelve years of age, when the family came to Illinois and lived there for nine years, he attending the common schools and following farm work as a boy. In 1871 they came to Nebraska and were among the earliest settlers in Lancaster county, locating on Rock creek. From the time Mr. Teller left New York state he had supported himself and helped take care of his mother, and on coming to Nebraska he began farming on a small place which he bought, succeeding in making a very good living. He distinctly remembers the town of Lincoln when it was a mere village and has watched the growth of different sections of the state from their earliest settlement by white men. He has passed through all the Nebraska times, witnessing grasshopper raids, drouths and suffering hardships and privations of every kind in building up a home. In 1875 he went to Iowa, spent one year there, then was in Texas for about two years and in Indian Territory and Oklahoma for some little time, traveling from one state to another with a team and covered wagon, leading a typical nomadic existence for several years.

In 1881 Mr. Teller returned to Nebraska, settling in York county, and remained for four years, following farming. He left that section and moved to Perkins county, landing here in 1885, locating seven miles from the Colorado state line, taking up a homestead on section 30, township 10, range 40. Ogallala was his nearest trading point and postal station, and that town was thirty-five miles from his claim. He built a sod shanty, started to break up land for crops, and went through the drouth seasons during 1893, 1894 and 1895, being scarcely able to raise half a crop, but stuck to his place and finally proved up on it. A part of this time he went to Richardson county, where he was able to secure work, also spent a short time in Buffalo county, coming back to western Nebraska in 1899, and settling near his old homestead, remaining there up to 1903. He then located near Madrid and spent two years, purchasing his present farm on section 24, township 10, range 37, in 1905, and now has a quarter section of good land. He has improved this with good buildings, including a house costing one thousand dollars, of commodious size, substantial barns and other outbuildings, and engages in mixed farming and stock raising.

On January 20, 1887, Mr. Teller was married to Miss Lizzie Alexander, daughter of Samuel D. Alexander, who was an old homesteader in Perkins county and well known as a shoemaker, following that occupation for many years in the vicinity. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Teller—Edna Belle, Lloyd and Harlow.

HENRY R. NEUMANN.

Henry R. Neumann, residing in Lodgepole precinct, Cheyenne county, is a typical representative of western Nebraska, and has the honor of having been born and reared in the county in which he now lives. His father, Henry, came to this region before the Union Pacific Railroad was put through this section and he is one of the genuine old-timers in this locality. His marriage to Miss Fedelia McMurray, of Sidney, in 1867, was the first wedding to be celebrated in the young town, and together they built up a good home and reared their little family of three children, meeting with much sorrow in being obliged to lay to rest in death five other children who died in childhood. Those who grew to maturity were Rosebud, Henry and Ray, all being reared and educated in Cheyenne county. The family of Neumann is closely identified with all the early history of western Nebraska, Mr. Neumann traveling here overland immediately after the close of the Civil war, in which he was a soldier, and saw much hard large cottonwood trees in his yard, where the children of the two races played together. The father and mother retired from active life and moved from Nebraska to Denver, Colorado, in 1902, taking life easy in their declining years. During his active years he accumulated about four thousand acres of Nebraska land, most of which he sold before retiring. After our subject grew to manhood he bought the old homestead in section 31, township 14, range 47, comprising three hundred and twenty acres, on which is the substantial rock dwelling in which the family lived for years, with rock barn and other buildings. His fine ranch land is situated on Lodgepole creek, with a good supply of running water, making it well adapted to stock raising as well as farming. He farms about fifty acres, and deals in cattle, running about sixty head, and also half a hundred horses, and is one of the progressive and well-to-do ranchmen and highly esteemed citizens of his community.

Mr. Neumann was married to Pluma E. Dickinson, daughter of Friend Dickinson, a well known ranchman, owner of the ranch by the same name, located near Lodgepole, Nebraska, of whom an extended sketch appears on another page. Mrs. Neumann's mother died June 20, 1886, and the father at present resides in Lodgepole. The marriage of our subject and Miss Dickinson was celebrated on the bride's father's ranch on March 28, 1894, and was largely attended, by the friends of the contracting parties. In political views Mr. Neumann is a loyal Republican.

WILLIAM A. PETTYCREW.

William A. Pettycrew, a successful and prominent business man of Valentine, is one of the old settlers of Cherry county, and a man who has done his full share toward the upbuilding of the community. He well merits his high standing as a citizen and the success which has attended him.

Mr. Pettycrew was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, May 19, 1855, a son of James Pettycrew, of Scotch-Irish descent, who followed farming and merchandising in Pennsylvania prior to his emigration to Iowa. Our subject, the fourth in a family of eleven children, was reared and educated in Iowa, residing there until he was thirty years old. He followed farming as an occupation, owning a farm of one hundred and twenty-six acres, which was well stocked and kept in a good state of cultivation. In 1885 he came to Cherry county, pre-empted a claim and after computing title took a homestead and tree claim situated six miles northwest of Valentine, where he remained until 1895, establishing a comfortable home on a farm comprising four hundred and eighty acres. After enduring and surviving the devastating drouths of the early nineties he decided to quit farming and enter the business world, so moved to Valentine in 1895, where he established a grocery store, later adding other departments until he is now the proprietor of one of the leading general stores here.

In 1878, Mr. Pettycrew was married to Miss Adelia E. Carpenter, who died leaving three children, namely: Archie D., Inez A. and Floyd M. In 1906 Mr. Pettycrew married Miss Fannie D. Muchmore, a successful teacher in Cherry county, and a very estimable lady.

Mr. Pettycrew enjoys an enviable reputation as a business man of great ability, and has the respect and confidence of all who know him.

GARROLD O. FAIRHEAD.

Garrold O. Fairhead is one of the old-timers who has seen his share of the hard times that fall to the lot of the pioneers in an undeveloped country. He has gone through many tough experiences, but in spite of everything has always managed to enjoy life, making the best of hard situations, never complaining at his lot, and now he has a comfortable home and is surrounded by hosts of friends in the locality where he chose his home.

Mr. Fairhead was born in England September 9, 1861, and came to Canada with his mother in 1873, where they remained for seven years, before Mr. Fairhead crossed the borderland to the United States. His father, James Fairhead, died while the family lived in England, and his mother's death occurred in 1901, in Nebraska. Our subject is the fifth member of a family of ten children. At the age of twelve years he started out to make his own living, working on farms during the summer months and attended schools in the winter months. He landed in Sioux City, Iowa, in 1880. There he followed farming for a time, then took charge of the C. C. Orr ranch and remained on it four years. In the latter part of 1883 he came to Cherry county, locating sixteen miles southeast of Gordon on a homestead, holding this tract of land for several years. In making his start here he was compelled to sell one horse to buy the relinquishment on pre-emption land and later sold the other one, and with this money he bought six heifers, and this was his start in the cattle business. Since then he has done exceedingly well, in 1896 purchasing his present home of nine hundred and sixty acres, four hundred and eighty acres being a Kincaid homestead, besides operating a tract of leased land. He always has about five hundred cattle and twenty-five horses on the range. When he came to this country he was obliged to walk to Valentine and back again, there being no railroad through here at that time. There were no settlers on the Niobrara river and he had no neighbors, this part of the county then being almost a wilderness. Soon after this the dry years struck the locality and he lost all his crops, and in addition to this one of his horses was stolen which he later recovered east of Valentine. After these years he met with success in his work, his crops brought good returns, and he now has a well improved ranch, all fenced, and he has erected a fine two-story house costing three thousand dollars, and is proud of the fact that he has the finest hay meadow in this locality, extending two and a half miles along Bear creek. His place is fitted with all the machinery necessary for his ranch operations, and he is a thorough and systematic ranchman, owning a very valuable estate. A fine view of the residence will be found elsewhere in this book.

In 1888 Mr. Fairhead was married in Sioux City, Iowa, to Miss Julia Boden, a native of Ontario, Canada, of Scotch-English descent. Mr. and Mrs. Fairhead have four living children, named as follows: Gladys, Joy, Lee and Grace, two dying in early life.

In political faith Mr. Fairhead is a Republican, and although he takes no active part in county affairs, he is wide-awake and keeps abreast of the times in all matters of public interest. The family are members of the Methodist church.

JOSEPH FICKEL.

Joseph Fickel, one of the prosperous farmers of Sheridan county, Nebraska, has resided on his well improved estate in section 23, township 34, range 41, for the past twenty-two years, and is well and favorably known all over this section of the country.

Mr. Fickel was born in Putnam county, Ohio, in 1859. He is a son of Eli Fickel, also a native of Ohio, and a farmer by occupation, who, with his wife and family of ten children, moved to Iowa, where our subject was raised on a farm, working with his father until he was twenty-six years of age, and then struck out for himself. In 1885 he left home and came to Sheridan county with three other young men, and located on the place where he now lives, he being the only one to settle permanently in this locality. When he first came here he drove through from Valentine to his homestead, and at that time there were very few settlers around here, the nearest neighbors living four miles away. He "batched it" for nearly fifteen years, and was so busy in building up and improving his place that he never felt lonesome or homesick. He had brought three horses with him and a supply of feed, and started to farming at once. He had good crops for several years, and was just getting nicely started when the dry years struck him. He could not raise anything, so quit farming and started in the stock business, and had such good success that he has continued in it since then. He has accumulated a nice property, constantly adding to his farm until he now owns one thousand seven hundred and sixty acres of land. He and his brother together own nineteen quarter sections, part farming and part pasture land, but do not cultivate very much of it, preferring to devote the time and attention to stock raising. Our subject has acquired all of his property through hard and persistent labor, and by buying when the land was cheap. It is now worth a good round sum, but he would not care to sell, as he is perfectly contented in this locality. He has seen his share of hard times since coming here, and would not care to go through a pioneer existence again, but feels that he did right in coming here, as he could not have gotten together as much property in Iowa as he has here, and when he lived in Iowa he was made aware of the fact that it was the landowner who made the money, so he decided to go into a country where he could get free land and grow up with the country.

Mr. Fickel was married in 1899 to Miss Esther Nelson, a native of Denmark, who came to America with her parents when but five years old. Her father, Hans Nelson, located in Sheridan county on a homestead in 1885, and is still living in Sheridan county. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fickel, namely: Martha and Dorothy, both born and raised in this locality.

Mr. Fickel is an independent voter, but leans toward the Democratic party.

VICTOR C. CARLSON.

Victor C. Carlson, who occupies a prominent place among the younger members of the farming community of Phelps county, Nebraska, is proprietor of a valuable estate in Sheridan township. He has spent his entire career as a farmer in this state, and is a citizen of worth who commands the esteem of all with whom he has to do.

Mr. Carlson was born in Henry county, Illinois, in 1867. He is a son of C. J. Carlson, who, at the age of sixty-seven years, is still residing on his five hundred and eighty-acre farm three miles north of the town of Holdrege, which adjoins his son's farm. The father came to America from Smoland, Sweden, in 1864, and settled in Henry county, Illinois, where he farmed successfully up to the time he came to Phelps county, in 1880, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres. He afterwards sold this place and bought one hundred and sixty acres where he now lives, which he has improved with good buildings—house, barns, etc., and has added to his original holdings until he has a farm of five hundred and sixty acres, all A1 land, which he, together with the help of his sons, still operate. He is a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal church of Holdrege, and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. When our subject reached his majority he went to Colorado and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, remaining there until 1894, when he sold this place and returned to Phelps county, purchasing the farm where he now lives, consisting then of eighty acres. He erected a good house and barns, and has steadily improved the place, adding to the acreage until he now owns four hundred acres of good farming land. His only brother, Fred B. Carlson, assists his father in the operation of the latter's farm. Our subject and brother also own seven hundred and twenty acres jointly in Cottonwood township, which is used for pasture land, and this they intend to convert into an alfalfa ranch at an early date. He also owns six hundred and forty acres of land across the road from this seven hundred and twenty acres. Our subject engages largely in stock raising, and has from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and forty Shorthorn cattle, and one hundred and ten pure bred Poland China hogs. He keeps a sufficient number of horses for farming purposes and also breeds horses and mules for the market. His brother, Fred, farms on a large scale with his father, and in 1905 harvested a crop of two hundred and twenty-five acres of corn, seventy-five of wheat, and thirty of oats. For the year 1906 our subject put in three hundred and forty-five acres of wheat, and reaped a banner crop, and also had one hundred and fifty-five acres of corn in that same year. He has unlimited faith in the future of Nebraska farming and stock raising, and thinks this is the best country on earth for this purpose.

In 1893 Mr. Carlson was married at Akron, Colorado, to Miss Laura A. Anderson, daughter of Andrew M. Anderson. Five children have been born to them, who are named as follows: Lawrence, Warren, Wesley, Vernon and Vincent.

Mr. Carlson takes a commendable interest in local affairs, and was school director of district No. 20. In politics he is an independent voter.

HENRY WARNEKE.

Henry Warneke, a very successful and fore-handed ranchman of Bowen precinct, has been a resident of Sioux county since its organization, having voted at the time the county was formed and has helped considerably to bring about the present prosperity of the region.

Mr. Warneke is a native of Germany, born in Hanover in 1857. His father, August, was a farmer and came to this country with his family in 1872, and is now living in Iowa, near Kingsley, Plymouth county. After landing in America Mr. Warneke came directly west, locating in Wisconsin, where he remained for eight years, then came to Sachs, Iowa. He started for himself in Iowa, at first engaging in the meat business at Odebolt, Iowa, following that line for some time, then bought cattle and grain at Odebolt, remaining in that part of the country up to 1886. In the fall of 1886 he came to Harrison, Nebraska, and opened a general mercantile store, his wife being the third white woman to settle in that place. He run that business for two years and did very well, then took up land and established the "Warneke Ranch," which is situated on Running Water creek at the head of the Niobrara river, southwest of Harrison, and close to the Wyoming line. At the time he went on this ranch it was entirely unimproved land, and he was obliged to start at the beginning, putting up buildings, fencing it, etc., and spent considerable money on it in getting it fitted up right. The ranch now contains three thousand acres, which extends for four miles along the river bank and is splendidly located for ranching purposes. He has put in two irrigation ditches, and has about four hundred acres of hay land under irrigation, also some cultivated.

The place is all fenced, and has a handsome residence which he built at an expense of three thousand dollars. This dwelling is fitted with all modern improvements and is one of the most imposing buildings in the county.

Mr. Warneke keeps about six hundred head of cattle, all of the Hereford breed. He has a large number of trees on the place, many of which he planted himself, and the ranch shows every indication of the best management and attention to details, presenting to the chance traveler through this section a most pleasing picture of rural comfort and elegance.

Mr. Warneke was married in Iowa in 1881, to Hannah Kellmer, whose parents settled in Iowa as pioneers, both having been born and raised in Schleswig, Holstein, Germany. To them have been born the following children, namely: Mildred, employed as a stenographer in the county clerk's office at Harrison; Edna, married and living in Chicago, and Mabel, occupying a position as clerk in Omaha. Mr. Warneke is a Republican, and stands firmly for his convictions.

LESLIE W. CRANE.

Leslie W. Crane, a well-known ranchman and farmer on section 27, township 33, range 57, is a leading old settler of western Nebraska. He came here when this country was new and very thinly settled, and has stayed to enjoy the prosperity which has come to the region, now enjoying a pleasant home, and is classed among the truly worthy citizens of his community, who has always assisted materially in the development of his locality.

Mr. Crane was born in Sandusky county, Ohio, on a farm, in 1866. His parents were of American stock, and his father's father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, being a musician and was killed in battle. The mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Hawk, raised her family of four children, and after her husband's death, left the east and moved to Iowa, settling in the western part of Audubon county, in 1871, locating near Council Bluffs. As a boy, Leslie worked hard, doing a man's work on a farm when little more than a child, also attending the district schools during the winter seasons. In 1886 he left Iowa and emigrated further west, locating finally in Wyoming for one year, then he went to Leadville, Colorado, where he spent a while.

Mr. Crane first came to Nebraska in 1887, and landed in Sioux county in the spring of that year, locating in the Hat Creek basin, filing on a pre-emption. He made that place his home for about ten years, during that time improving the farm and working out by the day and month to make a living and keep up his expenses on his pre-emption. Part of this time he worked as a ranchman, cowboy, and anything he could get to do, and many nights were spent out of doors, sleeping on the ground exposed to the inclement weather with no sort of a covering to protect him from the elements. For weeks at a time he did not know what it was to sleep in a bed or under a sheltering roof. He was obliged to travel over the region on horseback, making trips through Wyoming and into the Big Horn basin. One year was spent at Harrison, where he worked at general work, and went back and forth to his home to see after his cattle. In 1898 Mr. Crane located on his present ranch, and at the same time he took up an additional Kincaid homestead in sections 27, 33 and 34, in township 33, range 57. He has added to his possessions, improved the whole place, at the present time owning in all six hundred and forty acres of good farm and ranch land. Mr. Crane has quite a herd of cattle and horses and makes a snug sum each year by marketing several carloads of his stock, mostly horses. During the summer of 1906 our subject was hailed out, losing all his crops, which was a severe loss to him, although it was the only time he had a complete failure from any cause whatever, since coming to this region.

In 1891 Mr. Crane was united in marriage to Emma Sherrell. They have one child, Ellen, born the 24th of July, 1893.

Mr. Crane is active in local and county affairs, and votes the Independent ticket, always trying to elect the best man on the ticket.

JOHN H. BUSH.

John H. Bush, now of section 28, township 33, range 28, belongs to that large number of thoughtful and experienced men, widely informed as to affairs and public interests, and linked in with all forward movements that Germany has contributed to the welfare of the United States. He is most industrious in his daily habits, and thoroughly conscientious and upright in all his dealings with his friends and neighbors.

Mr. Bush was born in the village of Reichebach, province of Darmstadt, Germany, April 18, 1856, where his parents, Henry and Gretchen (Goetz) Bush, were engaged in farming. He was bred to that career himself, but early in life learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for a number of years, working at that industry in Switzerland, France, Holland and England. In the last named country he was employed in the city of London, and became quite familiar with the great metropolis of the world. On the twenty-first day of May, 1881, he sailed from London in the steamship Canada, and after a voyage of fourteen days landed in the city of New York, where for the first time his feet pressed American soil. It seemed to him that he would do well to see what he could of this new world before settling down to make any portion of it his abiding place, so accordingly he traveled much, and followed several kinds of labor before we find him in Cherry county. He was a gardener on the Hudson river, and a farm laborer in the state sixty miles northwest of the city. He worked at Pittsburg, Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans, largely following his trade, and for some three years in Peoria, part of the time at 512 North Adams street. He followed shoe-making in Kansas, at Anthony, for a time, and on the 5th of May, 1888, came into Cherry county, bringing his wife, Mary (Baker) Bush, to whom he had been married in March of the previous year. Her father, Henry Baker, was of German blood. She was born at Cologne in the Rhine province. They sailed from Hamburg on the steamer Neckar, landing in New York where they lived some years. The mother died in Germany.

Mr. and Mrs. Bush have reared seven children: Frank, Albert, Elizabeth, Julius, Mary, George and Charles.

Mr. and Mrs. Bush made their first settlement some fifty miles southwest of Valentine, where he secured a pre-emption claim on Bordman creek, making his home for a time in a sod house, and carrying on his farming operations with oxen. Mr. Bush soon built a considerable log house, which the young couple furnished suitably for the times, and prepared to enjoy their home. Their dreams, however, were shattered by the disaster of a fire which consumed the house and all its furniture, leaving them nothing but the clothes upon their backs, whereupon Mr. Bush disposed of his interests at that point, and settled on a homestead entry, where we find him at this writing. He began with one hundred and twenty acres, which his industry and hard work have since increased to a full section of choice land. Here his handsome gROUT house, built with his own hands, faces the Niobrara river, and the entire ranch shows the management of a successful farmer, a man not afraid of hard work and familiar with the best methods of modern tillage of the soil. He has a fine orchard, devotes part of his land to market gardening, and runs a dairy of fifteen to twenty cows.

Mr. Bush is highly respected and trusted and for a year was mail carrier on the route between Valentine and Chesterfield postoffice. He has at times served his county as judge of elections. He is a member of the Valentine Camp No. 1757, Modern Woodmen of America. On another page will be found a picture of Mr. and Mrs. Bush, together with the residence.

SAMUEL TAYLOR.

Samuel Taylor, one of the practical and successful agriculturists of Brown county, has been a potent factor in the development of the farming interests of the community in which he resides. Mr. Taylor was born April 22, 1833, in Grayson county, Virginia, and is a son of Francis Taylor, a native of the state of Virginia, who died there in 1873 at the age of seventy-eight. Our subject is the seventh member of a family of thirteen children, and was reared and educated in Virginia. In 1855 he started out for himself, coming west to Nebraska City, but remained only a short time, going to Missouri, where he lived for the next fifteen to eighteen years. At the end of this period he moved to Monona county, Iowa, and rented a farm on which he lived for five years. He finally drifted back to Nebraska in 1885, settling on a homestead in Brown county, one mile from the mouth of Plum creek, and proved up on this claim. Then he went to Meadville, in Keya Paha county, where he received the appointment as postmaster under Cleveland's administration, which position he held for five years, still running his farm in connection with this work. After the expiration of his official term he came back to Brown county, near the mouth of Hazel creek, where he bought land on which he made his home for ten or eleven years. This is a splendid piece of property, covered with a fine growth of natural timber, and here he built up a pleasant home, adding many improvements, including irrigation of part of the land, and then took a homestead under the Kincaid law, where he erected a good set of buildings, and is residing on this property at the present time. He had a hard time in getting started in early days, and experienced many of the discouragements that fell to the lot of the pioneers in this locality, going through the drouth periods, when no crops could be raised, damage by severe hailstorms, and having a hard time to get along, but has gained success through persistence and hard labor, and enjoys a goodly share of prosperity. In 1858 Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Nancy Wilkinson, a native of Iowa, whose father was a farmer by occupation, and an old settler in that state. Mr.

and Mrs. Taylor have a family of four children, who are named as follows: George, Frank, Eliza, wife of Frank Stevenson, and Charlie. The family is well known in the community in which they reside, and is highly respected.

Mr. Taylor is a man of energetic character, and classed among the leading men in this part of the county. In political faith he is a staunch Democrat. Mrs. Taylor is a member of the Baptist church.

HARM A. FECHT.

In the person of Harm A. Fecht, mentioned above, we have another of the sturdy sons of Germany who left their native land in their young manhood and came to America to carve out for themselves a name and fortune in the land of liberty and freedom, and well has he succeeded, now being one of the prosperous and well-to-do ranchmen of Union Valley precinct, Cheyenne county, highly esteemed by his fellowmen as a good citizen and progressive farmer.

Mr. Fecht was born in the village of Wiesens, near Aurich, province of Hanover, Germany, on March 5, 1862, receiving a common school education, following farm work as a boy. There were five children in his father's family, and he was the fourth in order of birth. Both parents, Albert and Tatje (Huls) Fecht, spent their entire lives in Germany, and the children are now scattered in different parts of the country, our subject coming to America at the age of seventeen, sailing from Bremen Haven March 2d, on the Maine, since wrecked, and after a voyage of eleven days, landed in New York, with barely enough money to pay his way to Golden, Adams county, Illinois, where he joined a cousin, Herman Miller, who was living there. He immediately went to work to make his own way in the world, taking anything he could find to do. Later, he made his way to Hancock county, where, after two years at farm labor, he rented land, which he cultivated for about seven years. In the spring of 1888 he came to Cheyenne county and filed on a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, in section 2, township 16, range 48, on which he made final proof and received a patent from the government. Although he has seen some hard times during the bad years, and often found it difficult to make a living, he persevered, and gradually improved his place, putting up good buildings, fenced his land, and worked into the stock raising as he became more prosperous: he now owns one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of deeded land besides controlling under lease six hundred and forty acres of school land. He has about two hundred acres under cultivation and raises good crops of corn and small grain. He also has plenty of hayland and pasture for his stock, running one hundred and fifty head of cattle and twenty horses. Mr. Fecht was married in the Lutheran church at Weyerts, Nebraska, September 26, 1889, to Miss Martha S. German, who was born in Illinois and came to Nebraska with her parents, Charles and Sophia German, who were early settlers in the region; the mother is now residing at Jacksonville, Illinois. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fecht, all of whom are living at home, named as follows: Henriette J. M., Anna H., Albert C., Viola E. L., and Arthur H.

The family has a fine six-room, two-story residence, with excellent barns and out buildings. They enjoy all the comforts of ranch life, and are among the leaders in neighborhood affairs, well liked by all. Mr. Fecht takes an active interest in all matters relating to state and local politics, and has served in different capacities on the township board. He is moderator of school district No. 54. Politically he is a Republican. The family are members of the Lutheran church.

PLACER TUCKER.

Placer Tucker, a large ranch owner and successful agriculturist of township 21, range 34, Hooker county, Nebraska, resides in section 28. Here he has spent many years of his career and has become a prominent member of his community, having taken an active part in its up-building from the early days of its settlement. He is a native born Nebraskan, and is a splendid representative of the western state.

Mr. Tucker was born in Thomas county in 1885. His parents were of American blood, his father, Clancy Tucker, a well-known ranchman and farmer who came to Hooker county with his family in 1881, traveling by team from North Platte, and after arriving here took up a location on Dismal river. During his first years in that locality the father was obliged to haul posts to North Platte, a distance of seventy-five miles, camping out nights under his wagon, in many instances, in order to make a living for his family. As soon as he got a little start he began in the stock business, settling on his present homestead in 1886, and there built up a permanent ranch and good home. He was elected county commissioner and held the office for several terms, also served as county surveyor, assessor, and took an important part in county affairs up to the time of his death, which occurred November 3, 1904, and the mother also died September 2d, in the same year, they leaving a family of eight children, who are named as follows: Martha L., who was appointed post-mistress at the Eclipse station in 1905, the postal station having been established in that year on the home farm; Placer (the subject of this sketch), Waldron, Ora, Francis, Susie, Lester and Ezra.

Since his father's death Placer, with his brothers and sisters, has operated the home ranch, consisting of eight hundred acres of deeded land and one thousand two hundred and eighty of homestead, and besides this extensive place they lease one section of school land. The place is well supplied with clear running water the year around, and splendidly improved with good buildings and every convenience for its successful operation. Nearly all of the ranch is devoted to stock raising, but about eighty to one hundred acres is used for farming purposes. Placer Tucker was elected county surveyor of Hooker county in 1907, and now holds the position. He is a very satisfactory official and merits the high opinion in which he is held by the people.

FLETCHER N. WHIPS.

Fletcher N. Whips, one of the leading "old timers" of western Nebraska, resides on section 31, township 9, range 38, Perkins county, where he has a valuable estate. He is also a prominent veteran of the late war, and a man of wide reputation as a worthy citizen and good neighbor.

Mr. Whips was born in Perry county, Ohio, in 1847, of American stock. His father, Simon P. Whips, was born in Maryland, married Mary Ann France, a native of Ohio, they settling in Indiana on a farm, where our subject was reared. When he was a lad of fifteen years he enlisted in Company I, Thirty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, and went south with his regiment, saw active service in Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Missouri and Texas. He was among the detachment that helped clean out the rebels all along the Mississippi river clear into Texas. During his service his regiment took part in the following engagements and sieges: Riddles Point and Island No. 10, Missouri; Fort Pillow, Tennessee; Grand Prairie and Duvalls Bluff, Arkansas; Yazoo Pass, Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Raymond, Big Black River, Champion Hill, Mississippi; Pleasant Hill, Spanish Lake, Louisiana, also Vermilion Bayou and Carrion Crow, Louisiana, and Palmetto Ranch, Texas. Besides these was at the siege of New Madrid, Missouri, Vicksburg and Jackson, Mississippi.

After being discharged from the army Mr. Whips returned to Indiana and entered school, afterwards spending five years in teaching in the public schools near his home. He came to Nebraska, locating in Butler county in 1872, and was one of the party who located the county seat of that county, lived as a pioneer and made it his home up to 1889, building up a good property and becoming one of the leading residents of his locality. During his residence in that part of the state he taught school at different times. He finally sold his farm and engaged in the hardware business at Octavia, ran it for five years, then disposed of it and came to Perkins county, purchasing his present homestead. Here he has one thousand one hundred and twenty acres, including some leased land. His place is fitted with good buildings of all kinds, fences and every convenience in the way of farm machinery, wells, wind mills, etc., and engages principally in stock raising, although he cultivates a portion of the land, raising small grains mostly.

In 1870, on September 4th, Mr. Whips was married to Miss Mary E. Goodwin, daughter of Rev. Smith Goodwin. Five children were born to them, who are named as follows: Mary E., Jennie B., Ruth, Sarah and Frank M., all of whom are grown up and married, and settled in homes of their own.

He has been instrumental in a large measure in building up different localities where he has resided, and helped establish two schools and three different churches at different times.

ABIJAH B. OVERMAN.

Among the prominent citizens of Crookston, Nebraska, who is also one of the oldest settlers in western Nebraska, a first place is accorded the gentleman whose name heads this review.

Mr. Overman was born in Boone county, Iowa, December 23, 1863. His father, Levi H. Overman, is a well known farmer and old settler in Cherry county, locating here about the year 1886. He is of American stock, born near Terre Haute, Indiana, and the mother, whose maiden name was Susanna Eckles, is a native of Ohio. Our subject was reared in Iowa, and at the age of nineteen years came west to Nebraska, settling in Cherry county where he opened up a homestead in section 29, township 35, range 30. When he landed here he had one horse, four cows, and his household goods. He put up a rude sod shanty and broke up his first piece of land with a team of cows, driving these animals like oxen. He had a hard time getting started and keeping his family in provisions, and spent many days working through the harvest for fifty cents per day. To get a start in poultry he planted ten acres of trees for a dozen chickens. Things looked dark to him for a long time, but he stuck to his farm and proved up on it, and after that bought a farm of four hundred and eighty acres on Minnechaduz creek, nine miles northwest of Crookston, remaining there for thirteen years; and while on this place was extensively engaged in stock raising and at times freighting through western Nebraska and South Dakota, many times camping out on bitterly cold winter nights under his wagon. In 1902, while on a trip through the country, he spent four days traveling through a severe storm, in all that time never being inside of a house, getting what comfort he could around a camp fire; this was on Cutmeat creek, South Dakota, and the second day he ran out of food and finally struck an Indian camp, where he secured some "jerked meat" and coffee and remained recuperating for one day.

Mr. Overman came to Crookston in 1904, and ran a saloon for two years, and in the fall of 1906 he opened a grocery store. He has a fine line of goods and a large floor space, carrying a complete stock of groceries and provisions and has a good trade throughout the surrounding country. He is a good business man, attending strictly to his business and does not seek public preferment in any way, never having held any office except local. Politically he is a Republican and is a charter member of Crookston lodge, Modern Woodmen of America.

In 1882 Mr. Overman was married to Miss Rosetta Lamb, daughter of Andrew J. and Edith (Griggsby) Lamb, of American stock. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Overman, of whom seven are living, named as follows: Herman, Laura, Guy, John, Olive, Susie and Della.

JOHN NOVAK.

The gentleman above named resides on section 29, township 35, range 28, in Cherry county, Nebraska. Mr. Novak has lived in Nebraska for the past score of years or more, and has done his full part in the upbuilding of the community in which he chose his home.

Mr. Novak was born near Prague, Bohemia, under the Austrian government, February 24, 1844, a son of Joseph and Leby (Doorak) Novak. He grew to manhood there and came to America with his parents in 1862. Landing in New York city the emigrants at once struck out for the west, settling near Eastport, Tama county, Iowa, on a farm where their young family grew up. He remained at home until he reached the age of twenty-eight years, then started out for himself, purchasing eighty acres of land. Not meeting with sufficient success he disposed of his land and for fourteen years was engaged in railroad work in the round house, repairing engines and as extra fireman. In 1884 he came to Cherry county and took up his present farm as a homestead and tree claim. He went through hard times in getting started, and at first was unable to build a home for himself, for two months occupying the log cabin of Jacob Martin, jointly with John Rychon and his family, so that there were sixteen persons in all under one roof, only twelve by fourteen in extent. The stable built for two horses was occupied by four horses and two cows. Mr. Novak at once began building his first house, which was a sod structure and his family lived in this for ten years. He had but very little capital to begin life here—a team of horses, a cow and a yoke of steers, all of which soon after his arrival died, part of them of Texas fever, a disease prevalent at that time. At one time his only live stock consisted of one calf, which had been given him during the time this disease was raging among the stock in this section of the country. This one calf was Mr. Novak's start in the cattle business, to which he has added largely since those hard times. Being devoid of implements his first breaking was done with plows borrowed, when the neighbors were not using them. Nowadays, he has a full equipment of the latest farm implements all his own. He had many severe losses through failures of crops on account of the drouths and hail, etc., but he persevered and through his industry has accumulated a fine property with a substantial house, a large barn, twenty-eight by thirty-two, and numerous outbuildings, all in good condition. He now owns three hundred and twenty acres of land, well improved, and has a fine grove of forest trees, an orchard including apple, pear, peach and plum trees and smaller fruits, such as grapes and berries. Mr. Novak began in Cherry county with seventy-five cents and at one time was reduced to two quarts of meal with two feet of snow on the ground. A chance service to a couple of soldiers replenished his empty pocketbook, and soon after a favor to a "squawman" supplied the family with a hundred pounds of flour. Since then times have never been hard again.

Mr. Novak was married in Tama county, Iowa, February 24, 1869, to Miss Kate Hencal, a native of Bohemia, and a daughter of Joseph and Anna (Marsi) Hencal. Five children have been born to them, namely: Mary, Joe, Julia, Willie and James. Mr. Novak is a Republican, and takes a leading part in all local affairs of importance. He was appointed postmaster of Britt postoffice in November, 1906, and accepted the position to prevent the closing of the postoffice, which is now located at his residence.

Mr. Novak is a member of the Presbyterian church, while Mrs. Novak is an adherent of the Catholic faith.

On another page of this work will be found a view of the residence of Mr. Novak.

JAMES M. POLLARD.

James M. Pollard, owner of the "Little Klondike Ranch," of Grant township, Franklin county, Nebraska, is one of the oldest settlers in this county. He has been a prominent member of the community since locating here, and one of the foremost in every movement to develop the resources of the locality. He was supervisor for district No. 6, elected to that office in 1903, and served a second term. He has held many local offices in the gift of the township, and has been a member of the school board for many years. Mr. Pollard was born in Waterville, Maine, where his ancestors settled in the early days. His father, George Pollard, died there, while the mother, after being left a widow, moved to Wisconsin late in the fifties with her two sons, our subject and his brother George, the latter still living there. Our subject grew up there, and in 1871 he took a trip through the western states, visiting western Nebraska, locating here in 1884, taking a homestead. Since then he has added to his possessions constantly and now owns five hundred and twenty acres, covering land in Thompson Creek valley near the forks of West and East Thompson creek, where it widens out into a fertile valley. During the first few years he had rather a hard time to get along, and was compelled to run in debt, but after getting a start was very successful and has made a good thing here. His place is called "The Little Klondike Ranch" because of the productiveness of the valley, his corn crop averaging forty, and as high as sixty bushels per acre, wheat from twenty to thirty-five. He cuts four crops of alfalfa in one season, and always gets three big yields, with an average of a ton per acre each crop. He has always been more or less engaged in stock raising, keeping only high grade stock, and has plenty of pasture for all his stock including from one hundred to one hundred and fifty cattle, and from two hundred to three hundred Poland China hogs, selling a large number each year. Mr. Pollard has several acres of Russian mulberry trees, in which thousands of blackbirds live, and also has a fine orchard including apples, peaches, cherries and plums. He takes the greatest pride in building up his home and farm, and his efforts are well repaid in the well-kept place, which shows the best of care in its management. Mr. Pollard was married to Miss Jennie F. Taplin, daughter of William Taplin, of Cheboygan county, Wisconsin, who died in service during the Civil war. He was a member of the Twenty-seventh Infantry from that state, and was a highly esteemed citizen and brave soldier. Mr. and Mrs. Pollard have one child, Ivan M., aged sixteen years, who is at home with his parents. The family are members of the Baptist church, and active in the Spring Valley Union Sabbath school. Our subject is active in public affairs in his locality, and a strong Republican. In 1896 he ran on that ticket to represent his district in the state legislature. He is a Master Mason, also a member of the Fraternal Aid. Mr. Pollard is the possessor of the mane of a buffalo which he shot in the pioneer days of this region.

EDWARD SATEREN.

The gentleman herein named is well known by the residents of Dawes county, Nebraska, as one of the leading old settlers of his locality, and a man who has done his full share in the upbuilding of the agricultural and commercial interests of his community. Mr. Sateren resides in section 16, township 31, range 47, where he has a fine home and valuable estate, and enjoys the esteem and respect of his fellowmen.

Mr. Sateren was born in Goodhue county, Minnesota, on a farm near Zumbrota, in the year 1860. He was raised there until he was about nineteen years of age, when his parents settled in Cuming county, Nebraska, where they were pioneers. The father, John Sateren, was born in Norway, and came to this country in 1849, where he was soon after married to Miss Mary A. Johnson, who had arrived in America in 1851, coming from Norway with her parents. After locating in Nebraska, our subject only spent one winter here, then returned to Minnesota where he remained for three and a half years, and in 1881 he came back to Cuming county and began farming, continuing at that work for a few years. In 1889 he came to Dawes county and leased school land, which he has farmed up to the present time, building a log cabin in which he lived up to 1904. When he arrived here he had three horses, and he put in a crop on rented land, raising a sod crop of corn. The drouth periods soon came on and although he never had a total failure, his losses were heavy and he was unable to get ahead very fast, but was able to get a fair corn crop each year, which helped out considerably. He began in the stock business and gradually forged ahead and now owns three hundred and twenty acres of deeded land and leases five hundred and twenty acres of school land, operating all of this. He cultivates seventy-five acres himself and rents out one hundred and ten acres, and engages in the dairy business, which he finds very profitable. In the summer of 1907 he was unfortunate in losing his cattle shed, seventy by thirty feet, and quite a number of fence posts by a fire, and this was a serious loss to him, but he soon built up again. Mr. Sateren's mother lives with him, and is quite active at the age of seventy-seven years at her last birthday, April 17, 1908.

Mr. Sateren is a man of active public spirit, and is keenly alive at all times to the best interests of his community. He has held school office for many years, and assisted in building up the schools in his locality. He is a Republican and strong party man.

FRANK PIERCE.

Frank Pierce, one of the well-known pioneer settlers of western Nebraska, resides on section 35, township 30, range 52, Dawes county, where he has built up a good home and farm and become one of the prosperous and highly esteemed citizens of his community.

Mr. Pierce was born in Nora, Illinois, in 1860, and is a son of Arleigh Pierce, a prominent physician of that section. His mother was Betsy Sweet Pierce. When our subject was a small boy his parents removed to Dane county, Wisconsin, where he was reared and educated, attending the common schools. He came to Custer county, Nebraska, in 1881, and was one of the pioneers there, working for a large cattle company for a year, then returned to Wisconsin for three years. He next located in Iowa, where he remained for three years; then came to Dawes county, where he has since lived. He first settled on a farm six miles from Belmont, and there went through many hardships which are familiar to all settlers in a new country, living in a log cabin for some years. He started his farm and proved up on his pre-emption, remaining there up to 1893, when he moved to a homestead located three miles east of Belmont, on which he proved up, afterwards selling it at a good figure.

Our subject bought his present farm in 1902, where he has put up good buildings, fences and all necessary improvements, making a fine farm and home. There is plenty of natural timber on the place, and clear springs of running water, and he has one of the finest places in his locality. He is progressive and up-to-date in his farming methods, and one of the successful and prosperous men in the county.

In 1887 Mr. Pierce was married to Miss Della Wheeler, whose parents were early settlers in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce have a family of seven children, who are named as follows: Helen, Florence, Bessie, Howard, Arthur, Lillian and Ronald.

Mr. Pierce has helped in the building up of his territory, taking an active part in local and county political affairs, also lending his influence and financial aid in all matters for the development and growth of his community. Politically he is an Independent.

CHARLES A. HANSON.

Charles A. Hanson, one of the early settlers in Sheridan township, Phelps county, Nebraska, is a gentleman of unusual perseverance and thrift and has always been a potent factor in the development of the agricultural interests of that region.

Mr. Hanson was born in Boslund, Sweden, and came to this country in 1871. He re-visited his native land in 1906 in company with his brother, Fred Hanson, a prosperous farmer of Divide township, Phelps county, and states that after years of absence the country of their nativity was to them, as to all who so return, a disappointment to them. Their life in America has been so free and full of splendid opportunities and successes, especially to the Swedish settlers here, that while they properly cherish the fatherland, its customs and language of their ancestors, this land has become a home to them in every sense of the word, so that there is no desire left for any other. Mr. Hanson came to Phelps county in 1878 and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, where he now resides. In 1891 he bought a timber claim in section 2, and a year later purchased eighty acres lying opposite, so that he now owns four hundred acres of land. He is engaged principally in grain raising, and his crop in 1905 amounted to three thousand bushels of wheat and five thousand bushels of corn. He has gone through every pioneer's experience since locating here, and has seen some hard times, but does not regret his hard labors, for through them has come success and he now has a valuable estate surrounded by all the comforts and conveniences of a model rural home. He is the proprietor of a one hundred and sixty-acre farm located in Sheridan county, which he rents out, and in all his holdings are five hundred and sixty acres. He keeps from forty to fifty hogs and common grade cattle, with enough horses for his farm work.

Mr. Hanson was married in 1882 to Miss Anna Johnson, of Sweden. They have five sons, Oscar, Joseph, Hilmer, Emil and Gustave, and one daughter, Emma. The family occupy a fine residence, and there is a beautiful grove of trees surrounding the place, with orchards and all kinds of small fruit for family use. Mr. Hanson has been a member of the school board for several years, and is secretary of the Lutheran church at Holdrege, also a deacon in that church. In political faith he is a Republican.

PETER C. GIPSON.

Peter C. Gipson, who for the past twenty years has resided in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, and during that time has acquired a fine property as a result of his industry and good management, is widely known in his locality and held in the highest esteem as a farmer and citizen. He has a pleasant and substantial home in Pine precinct, and is recognized as one of the prominent men of his community.

Mr. Gipson was born on a farm in Denmark, January 3, 1857. His father came to America and died in Davenport, Iowa, where he was residing at the time. Our subject lived with his parents until he was sixteen years of age, then started for the new world, sailing from Liverpool to New York city in 1873. He came west and settled in Lorain county, Ohio, where for two years he worked in the stone quarries in Lorain, thirty miles west of Cleveland; thence he went to Woodbury county, Iowa, intending to go to the Black Hills, but hearing of the burning of wagon trains by troops to prevent settlement of the Black Hills at that time, he gave up the trip. He lived in Woodbury county up to 1885, and followed the work of a farmer. After this he went to Yankton, South Dakota, and was there for one year, then came to Nebraska and located in Keya Paha county in 1886, settling on a farm in section 5, township 32, range 19. He took a homestead and proved up on it, having built a log house which he lived in for several years. Here he experienced the usual hardships and privations of the early settler, going through the drouth periods, etc., and lost two crops successively. Since that time he has been very successful in his efforts, and has bent all his energies to building up his farm and improving his property. When he first struck the county he was obliged to pay two hundred dollars for his land, which was considered to be the poorest ground in the whole neighborhood, but he stuck to it, and made a success of his venture, and has since bought land adjoining his farm after his neighbors gave up trying to farm. He has cultivated this land and now owns as good a farm as anyone in the locality, and is proprietor of over one thousand two hundred acres, all improved, fenced and cross-fenced. He has planted small fruits, and has a fine orchard of cherry, plum and apple trees in good bearing condition. There is a fine growth of natural timber on his farm besides groves planted around the dwelling, and altogether he has one of the best places in the section. He has been engaged to quite an extent in stock raising, and also raises splendid crops of grain, most of which he uses on his farm. He cultivates about two hundred and fifty acres, and the balance is used for hay and pasture lands for his stock. A view of the place is presented on one of the illustrated pages of this volume.

Mr. Gipson was married in 1884 to Miss Serena Jepson, born in Denmark, whose death occurred in this county in 1894. Four boys were born of this union, namely: Oscar, George, Charlie and Almer. Mr. Gipson is a Populist in politics, a member of the Lutheran church and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

FLOYD JONES.

Floyd Jones, a representative old settler and prominent agriculturist of Deuel county, is a resident of Lisco precinct, and owner of a fine estate comprising about eight hundred acres situated in the vicinity of section 14, township 17, range 45. He is widely known throughout the region as an energetic and thrifty citizen, and enjoys an enviable reputation as a progressive and thorough stockman.

Mr. Jones was born in Waupaca county, Wisconsin, on March 3, 1856. There were three children in his father's family, he being the eldest. The father was a native of New York state and the mother of Pennsylvania, the former now deceased and the latter still living. Our subject grew up in Wisconsin on a farm, receiving a limited schooling through attendance at the district schools during the seasons of year when farm work was rather dull, and he remained at home until about thirty years of age, then came to Nebraska, settling in what was then called Cheyenne county, and later known as Deuel county, where he now resides. He took a pre-emption and timber claim and proved up on the former only, going through the usual pioneer experiences during the first few years, witnessing the drouth periods, etc. He has added to his original holdings as his circumstances justified, and now has a valuable property, having much of his land in hay and grazing land for a large bunch of stock, running one hundred head of cattle and twenty horses. He has made a specialty of the stock business and has been most successful in this branch of work. His ranch is supplied with a complete set of good buildings and improvements of all kinds, and he is called one of the wealthy residents of his district. He started the ranch from the wild prairie land and has done wonderfully well.

In September, 1891, Mr. Jones was married in Chappell, Nebraska, to Miss Mary Henderson. Mrs. Jones was a native of Illinois, coming to Deuel county in 1888, and after her arrival here took up a pre-emption and also filed on a tree claim, proving up on both of those, and this land is now a part of the home ranch. She is a woman of more than ordinary intelligence, energetic and of charming personality, and, together with her husband, is much admired by all who know them. They have no children. Their ranch is beautifully located on the bluffs near the Platte river, and is one of the most sightly spots in the locality. Besides the home ranch, Mr. and Mrs. Jones have about nine hundred acres situated in other parts of Deuel county, which is used in connection with the home ranch.

Since locating in Deuel county Mr. Jones has been regarded as one of the leading citizens and public spirited men of the times, having been a potent factor in the development of the agricultural resources of this section. Politically he is a Democrat. Mrs. Jones' father (John Henderson) still lives in Illinois at the age of eighty-five, which anniversary he celebrated December 25, 1908. He is a hale and hearty old gentleman and still looks after his own affairs, which is of no small amount.

PER ANDERSON.

The life of a pioneer is a hard one in any country and serves to bring out all the resourcefulness there is in a man, and, if he succeeds, he must have pluck and energy and sturdiness of character to back him. The subject of this sketch had these characteristics and has wrought his way to success at his chosen calling, farming.

Per Anderson came of good stock, being born in Sweden July 28, 1851, on a farm. Left without a father at eight and a half years of age, he had to work hard at farming and in the mines of his native land.

Our subject was married in Sweden, in 1880, to Tilda Rassmussen, who was born in 1851. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have five children, named: Gusta, Oscar, Hilda, Maud and Amanda.

Mr. Anderson came to America with his wife and one child in 1885, landing in New York city, and from thence came west to Nebraska, locating in Burt county, where he worked out for eleven months. Then he went to Blaine county, arriving there July 20, 1886, and locating on a homestead a day or two later about five miles north of the North Loup river. Our subject built a sod house, twelve by fourteen feet, and settled down to pioneer life. He had two cows which he used for a team the first year and then he got a team of colts which he worked when they were two years old. He broke up a little land and raised a sod-crop, which was about half destroyed by hail. In 1888, the crops were good and our subject kept on breaking more land with his team of cows. Then came the drouth years and several crops were almost complete losses, and the family had to depend on the cows and milking to make a living. Mr. Anderson kept on buying land, some of it on time; his cattle increased and the farm steadily improved. He also took a Kincaid homestead and sold his right when he sold his farm. On June 24, 1906, our subject sold out everything, cattle, land and improvements, realizing three thousand five hundred dollars. For six months after he lived with his son-in-law, and in December, 1906, he purchased the farm where he now lives. He has a fine farm of two hundred and eighty acres of good land in Loup county near Taylor. He lives in a nice new house, just completed, and has about him all the evidences of success and prosperity. In 1907 he sold five hundred dollars' worth of corn from the farm and the whole crop that year brought him one thousand dollars. Mr. Anderson has been deeply interested in public affairs and has won the esteem of his neighbors for his sturdy and irreprouchable character.

MOSES A. SWIFT.

Probably no one of the citizens of Lodge Pole precinct, Cheyenne county, has shown a more active spirit, or done more for the upbuilding of the better interests of his community than the gentleman whose name heads this review. Mr. Swift has resided in Cheyenne county for over twenty-three years, during which time he has formed a wide acquaintance and is held in the highest esteem as an agriculturist and worthy citizen. He is a man of unquestionable character and well merits his success and enviable reputation.

Moses A. Swift was born in Brecksville, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, on July 8, 1839, and grew up there, receiving a common school education. On August 10, 1861, he enlisted in the United States regular army, at the New England hotel, Cleveland, Ohio, being assigned to Company B, Sixth United States Cavalry, and saw active service for three years, receiving his final discharge on August 11, 1864, at Washington, District of Columbia. He took part in the battle of the Wilderness and other engagements, also did detached duty at Fortress Monroe, where after recuperating from a six weeks' illness he was assigned to the dispensary, where he was continued on duty some eighteen months. After leaving the army he returned to his home place and remained there for a little over a year, then went to Montana, traveling by wagon and following the trail through the country via Bozeman Cut-off; the last settlement in Nebraska was Columbus and a lone blacksmith shop near Guide Rock. When he reached his destination he started to do work at placer mining at Helena, going in the winter to Red Mountain City, where he worked in the mines of the Liggett Company until July; thence he returned to Helena remaining until October 7th, when he turned his steps toward Ohio, on the way spending some time in Wisconsin. He remained in Ohio for one year, then emigrated to Fremont county, Iowa, where he followed threshing and corn shelling, then a profitable employment, for about eight years. In the fall of 1875, he left Iowa and moved to Sedgwick county, Kansas, farmed there for about nine years before coming to Cheyenne county. During President Harrison's administration Mr. Swift was postmaster at Lodge Pole, and at that time was also engaged in the retail meat business. He followed that work for a number of years, and in 1892 filed on a homestead in section 20, township 13, range 46, and has been engaged in ranching ever since. He has filed an additional homestead for one hundred and sixty acres of good land under the Kincaid law and on this keeps about one hundred and twenty-five head of stock. Interested with him in the stock business is his son, Ray Swift, who is a very energetic and industrious young man, owning a quarter section adjoining his father's original homestead in which he owns a reversionary interest.

On June 23, 1874, Mr. Swift was married to Marcia Evarts, in Pottawattomie county, Iowa. She died April 3, 1882, leaving three children, Riley Clark, a railroad conductor, living at Nahant, South Dakota, Ray Richard, interested in ranching with his father, and Charles Henry, a physician of Nahant.

Our subject was married the second time to Gertrude Evarts, a native of Mexico, Oswego county, New York, and one child resulted from this union, Mary Marcia Swift, who is now attending high school at Kearney, Nebraska.

Mr. Swift has always been prominent in local and state affairs, and has had genuine western experiences, going through all the pioneer times in the west. He is a staunch Republican, and has always been one of the leading citizens of his community. Mr. Swift cast his first vote, in 1860, for Abraham Lincoln and has voted the Republican ticket ever since. While living at Tabor, Iowa, he joined the Masonic order, of which he was a member many years.

WILLIAM T. BULLIS.

Among the substantial business men and old settlers of Valentine, the gentleman whose name heads this review is probably one of the best known. He has been closely identified with the commercial interests of this locality for many years and has gained the respect and confidence of his fellowmen.

Mr. Bullis, the eldest in a family of nine children, was born August 22, 1838, in Niagara county, New York, on the banks of Lake Ontario. He is the son of Arnold Bullis, who removed at an early day to Lee county, Illinois, where our subject was reared and educated. During the war he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and saw service from Chattanooga to Atlanta, thence in the Fourteenth army corps with Sherman in the world-famous march to the sea and up through the Carolinas, followed by the most imposing military spectacle on the western hemisphere, if not on the globe, the grand review at Washington.

Mr. Bullis possessed an iron constitution, never knowing a sick day, and was always ready for duty from the time of his enlistment to the close of the war. After an honorable discharge he came back to his old home in Illinois, remaining for a time, then removed to Iowa in the fall of 1865, locating in Franklin county, where he farmed for ten years, acquiring in that time a fine one hundred and twenty-acre farm. In 1886 he sold his farm and came to Cherry county, settling on a homestead fourteen miles northwest of Valentine. Here he remained for three years until appointed deputy sheriff, when he moved to Valentine, serving for four years. In 1890 he was appointed postmaster at Fort Niobrara, which office he held for two years, resigning to return to Valentine. Shortly after this he moved to Britt, and opened a general merchandise store, being instrumental in establishing a postoffice there, remaining in Britt for seven years. At the end of this time he sold out and again came back to Valentine, purchasing a fine house, and opened a pool hall in the building he at present occupies, of which he is the owner.

Mr. Bullis is a Republican in politics, and takes an active interest in all local affairs; he served as marshal of Valentine for about seven years in the early days.

In 1859 he was married to Miss Eliza Zorn, of German ancestry, who has presented him five children, named as follows: Melinda, William, a farmer; Charles, now in the livery business in Valentine; Nellie, and John, proprietor of an undertaking, furniture and hardware establishment in the Red Front store, Valentine. They are all married and well established in life, a comfort and credit to their parents.

Mr. Bullis is a member of Colonel Wood Post No. 208, Grand Army of the Republic, of Valentine. For over forty years he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity and was one of the organizers of the local lodge, of which he served some twelve years as worshipful master, having filled that position in the Iowa lodge. Through his long membership he is an honorary member of the state grand lodge.

HENRY A. COOK.

Among the early settlers of Keya Paha county, who have been instrumental largely in the growth of the financial and social interests of that region, a prominent place is given the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review. He has always been found ready to further the interests of the community, where he chose his home, and has gained a wide and enviable reputation as a worthy citizen and substantial agriculturist of Burton precinct, where he has built up a fine farm and home, and boasts of the finest yard to be found in his county.

Mr. Cook was born in Schuylkill county,

Pennsylvania, February 10, 1862. His father, Louis Cook, was a farmer of German descent, also timber contractor, and at the present time lives on the place on which he was born. He married Sarah Headinger, of Welsh stock, whose ancestors came to America in 1772; they were the parents of ten children, of whom Henry A. was fifth in order of birth. He was reared on his father's farm, where he learned to do every kind of hard work, helping to grub and clear their place. At the age of seventeen years he left home and came to Carroll county, Iowa, where he followed farm work for three years, then went to Yankton, but remained but a short time. He next located in Cedar county, Nebraska, and there worked on a farm for three years, then came to Keya Paha county in 1885. Here he took a homestead on section 14, township 34, range 20, which he relinquished to the government after two years. He next took up a pre-emption on section 23, and still owns this place. He planted fifteen acres of trees of all kinds, including one hundred apple trees, eighteen cherry trees, besides crab-apple, peach, apricot, pear, German prunes, quince, mulberry and walnut trees, also hickory and chestnut. He has a fine shrubbery, the finest in fact in Keya Paha county, with cedars trimmed neatly as in Italian gardens. The entire place has a parklike appearance, with its many groves dividing the different lots. The garden contains gooseberries, currants, raspberries, grapes and strawberries, and altogether he has one of the finest orchards and fruit farms in this section of the country, much of the stock brought from the east, all of which are cared for by himself. He has thirty acres growing in alfalfa, from which a fine yield of hay is produced annually.

Mr. Cook's farm consists of nine hundred and sixty acres, two hundred acres under cultivation, and the balance used for hay and pasture for his stock. He keeps fifty cattle of his own and winters two hundred and fifty additional head; he raises annually about fifty hogs and twelve horses. He has erected substantial farm buildings, and has a pleasant and comfortable home for himself and family. A view of the home surroundings showing orchards, walnut plantation, garden and lots surrounded by tall groves is presented for inspection elsewhere in this work. Our subject has done his full share in the development of this region as an old settler, and his success and high station is a fitting reward for his labors.

Mr. Cook was married in Cedar county, July 13, 1887, to Miss Eva Withrow. Her father was of English descent, born in Kentucky, and her mother, Mary Wolf, of English-German stock; from the age of fourteen until the time of her marriage Mrs. Cook resided in California. To Mr. and Mrs. Cook the following children have been born: Fern V., Perry H., Pearl M., Bertie H., Russell O., Hazel V. and Kenneth R., all living at home at this writing

Mr. Cook is a Republican in politics and with his wife are members of the Methodist church. He affiliates with the Royal Highlanders. He has traveled much in the east as well as the west, including Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Canada and Michigan, but finds no place like Nebraska in general, and Keya Paha county in particular.

OSCAR B. WEISFLOG.

Oscar B. Weisflog, the subject of this personal history, resides on his well improved property located in section 35, township 34, range 30, Cherry county. He is an early settler of western Nebraska, and has watched the development and growth of this region from the start, lending his aid in the upbuilding of the community, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Weisflog was born in Bridgeville, Ohio, January 31, 1874, and is a son of Herman and Amelia (Grosser) Weisflog, who were early settlers in Nebraska. The father was born in Saxony, Germany, in 1835, coming to this country with his wife and four children when a young man. Our subject was reared in his native state until he was eleven years of age, then with his parents came to Cherry county, assisting them in carrying on the farm up to 1895. After leaving home he went to Wyoming, where he clerked at the post exchange at Fort D. A. Russell, but did not remain there for a very long time, as he was not satisfied with conditions and decided to return to Nebraska, arriving in Cherry county in 1896. For three years he was engaged in carpenter work in that vicinity and on Rosebud reservation, and during that time filed on his present homestead and proved up on it. Here he has built up a fine ranch of six hundred and forty acres, farming twenty acres, and has good buildings and all improvements necessary to the proper running of a model ranch. He is engaged more in ranching than in farming, running a large bunch of stock, and is counted one of the prosperous and successful men in this region, having made every dollar of his fortune by his own unaided efforts. A view of the residence and surroundings will be found on another page in this work.

Mr. Weisflog has met with losses and discouragements. In March, 1888, the family was burned out by prairie fire, and at other times were compelled to fight this danger both night and day in order to save at least a part of their farm property. They saw many hard times, and during the early days were often without any food save hard biscuits and scanty other supplies to save them from hunger. Their water supply was also very scarce and the first two years they lived here were obliged to haul water five miles from the Niobrara river for both stock and household use. Their first possessions of live stock consisted of a yoke of oxen and one cow.

On June 19, 1902, Mr. Weisflog was married to Miss Maude H. L. Markl, a native of Chicago, daughter of Alois and Cecelia (Newgabauer) Markl, the former a native of Hungary, whence he came in early manhood. Mr. Weisflog is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Valentine.

PETER JOHNSON.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history is the owner of a well improved estate situated in section 27, township 34, range 41. Mr. Johnson was born in Denmark in 1862, and came to America when eleven years of age. His father, John P. Johnson, came here in 1873 and now resides in Knox county. Our subject's mother died when he was a boy only five years old, and he was the second member in her family of five children, he being one of a pair of twins.

When he was eighteen years of age he started in on his own account, and went west locating at Pine Ridge, where he carried mail from Fort Robinson to Pine Ridge. He filed on his first land in 1884, settling on this land the following year and remained until he had proved up. This was a tree claim and pre-emption, and after a time he sold these out and took his present place as a homestead in 1887 and has engaged in farming. He lived here through the dry years and had a hard time to get along at that time, losing all his crops for several years in succession and becoming pretty well discouraged. However, the better time soon came along and he was able to raise good crops and caught up so he began to improve his place and has added to his farm until he now owns one thousand five hundred acres in three different tracts, cultivating about two hundred acres of this, and using the balance for hay and grazing land for his stock, of which he keeps about one hundred head all the time. He has been living in the town of Gordon since 1901, keeping a man on his farm, as he wishes to give his children the advantage of the better schools, but personally superintends the management of his farm.

Mr. Johnson was married in 1891 to Miss Cena Nelson, daughter of Hans Nelson, then a resident of Cherry county, but now a resident of Sheridan county. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have six children, namely: Charles, born in 1891, Albert, born in 1894, Anna, born in 1897, Clara, in 1900, Eunice, 1903, and Richard, born in 1906, all reared in this locality. Mr. Johnson is well satisfied with conditions in this section of the country and has no desire to live anywhere else. He would not care to go through his earlier experiences again, although he states that those were his happiest days.

Politically Mr. Johnson is a Populist but does not pay much attention to politics. Says he is well satisfied with the present administration, and content to let others do the work of running the government.

JAMES W. WOLVINGTON.

James W. Wolvington is one of the leading old settlers of western Nebraska, coming to this section of the country in the early stages of its development, and through industry and perseverance has succeeded in building up a comfortable home and valuable estate, and incidentally gained an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen and progressive agriculturist. Mr. Wolvington resides in section 8, township 31, range 47.

Mr. Wolvington was born in Iowa City, Iowa, in 1858. His father, David Hamilton Wolvington, was of American blood, a painter by trade, and died when our subject was a small boy. He married Miss Helen Landry, born in Ohio, of American stock. At the age of nine years James started out to earn his own living, going out among strangers and working on farms for his board and with the chance of attending school at times when he was unable to find work to do, which was not often the case, and he grew up used to hard labor from the time of his early childhood. He had many rough and sad experiences in this occupation, and not until he was fourteen years old was he able to obtain any wages for his labors. He remained in the vicinity of Iowa City and Cedar Rapids up to 1889, working in the latter city for seven years, engaged with a transfer company.

In March of 1889 he came to Sheridan county, where he filed on a pre-emption of eighty acres, five miles southwest of Hay Springs, and built a dugout in which he lived the first summer. Here he started a farm and home, but sold out in the fall of the same year, taking up his present homestead in Dawes county, and building a sod shanty, in which he lived for many years. During the first few years he had a hard time in getting started, the drouths effecting his crops materially, and for several years he was barely able to make a living. He kept on working hard to improve his property, constantly adding to his farm, and now owns a ranch of one thousand eight hundred and eighty acres, all of which is fenced, having in all about fourteen miles of good fencing. He has built good barns, a large and comfortable house, and all improvements on the place, such as wells, two wind-mills, etc. He engages in farming and stock raising, cultivating about one hundred and sixty acres of his farm, with the rest in pasture and hay land.

In 1882 our subject was united in marriage to Miss Mary Hamilton, of Iowa, daughter of Ed. A. Hamilton, a blacksmith and farmer of that place, he having come to this country from Ireland in the early days. To Mr. and Mrs. Wolvington have been born the following children: Frank, Willie, Walter, Minnie, Earl, Pearl, Raymond, Mary, Theda and Freda (twins):

Mr. Wolvington is active in local affairs, and is director of his school district and acted as a member of the board for the past ten years. He is a Republican, and makes a success in any official capacity.

a fireman, and remained at that until 1890, when he took charge of an engine. He is a faithful and efficient engineer, fully trusted by his superior officers, and has been more than successful in the work he chose. In 1893 he became insurance secretary of the order of Locomotive Engineers, and still holds this position for local Lodge No. 88. In 1896 he was made general secretary of the same lodge, holding this office at the present time, and was elected as a delegate to the international convention at Memphis, held in 1906. He is an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows lodge at North Platte, and a prominent worker for its interest.

Mr. Stuart was married in 1885 to Miss Frank I. Meagher, of Aurora, Illinois. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stuart, who are named as follows: Frank, a graduate of the North Platte high school, now attending Highland Park College, Des Moines, Iowa; he was captain of the high school cadets in 1905; two daughters, Irene and Maria, are with their parents in North Platte, and are very popular among the young people of the town. Mrs. Stuart's mother's name was Margaret Devine, a daughter of William Devine, who was a pioneer settler at Somonauk, on the Dixon & Galena road in Illinois.

Mr. Stuart is an active, intelligent man who keeps abreast of the time, and is conversant with all affairs of public interest, especially in matters pertaining to his business, and to the interests of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. He and his family are members and active workers in the Episcopal church at North Platte, and they have a beautiful home and fine property in this city.

HELMER RENSVOLD.

Helmer Rensvold, one of the prominent early settlers of Box Butte county, Nebraska, is proprietor of an extensive farm in and about section 14, township 26, range 51. He is a man of excellent business qualifications and in whatever enterprise he has embarked he has met with unbounded success. He has also been an important factor in the development of the agricultural and commercial resources of that region, and is widely and favorably known throughout this and the adjoining counties.

Mr. Rensvold was born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, in 1866, on a farm. His father, Hogen R., was a native of Toten, Norway, as was also his mother, Karn Rensvold. Our subject grew up in Iowa, attending the country schools and during odd hours and vacations helped his parents carry on the home farm, and at the early age of fourteen years he was competent to take a man's place on the farm.

In 1885 the father came to Nebraska, leaving Helmer, with the balance of the family, to run the farm in Iowa, and this he did successfully for two years; at that time they all left the place and moved to Nebraska, coming to Hay Springs by train, and from there drove by team to the homestead on which the father was located, and where the latter died in the spring of 1889. Helmer filed on a homestead in the vicinity a short time after coming here. The family went through the usual pioneer experiences, beginning with very small capital, but by dint of hard work and perseverance succeeded in building up a good home and farm.

Mr. Rensvold now lives on section 14, township 26, range 51, owning altogether fourteen quarter sections of good land. During the first years in this part of the country he went through the drouth seasons and saw many hard times, and at one time a whole year passed in which he never saw ten dollars all in a bunch. He is engaged in the sheep ranching business on quite a large scale, having started in this enterprise in 1893 with a drove of about one hundred sheep, and has made money by the venture, and is increasing his flocks largely; also is going into the cattle business on a large scale. His farm is well improved, and he raises some small grain and has plenty of hay and pasture.

In June, 1891, Mr. Rensvold was married to Miss Bramine Kvernum, who is a native of Norway, coming to this country with a cousin in 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Rensvold have four children, who are named as follows: Hans P., Hilda, Carl, and a baby, Palmer.

Our subject takes an active part in local and school affairs, has been a member of the school board for a number of years, serving as director and moderator. He is a Republican in politics. An interesting picture of the "Homestead Ranch" of Mr. Rensvold will be found on another page.

FRED W. HUCKE.

Fred W. Huckle, proprietor of an extensive and well cultivated farm in section 19, township 27, range 49, Box Butte county, Nebraska, was born in Iowa county, Iowa, in 1869, son of a farmer who came to this country from Germany when a lad of ten years, his parents settling in Iowa as pioneers. They came to Nebraska, locating in Box Butte county in the early days of its development, driving from Iowa with a team and covered wagon in 1885. The mother was born in Ohio of German parents. As a boy our subject worked out by the month in his native state, beginning to help support his parents at the age of fourteen years, and in 1886 he came to Box Butte county, Nebraska. After landing here he obtained work at freighting, from Hay Springs, also in winter logging in Pine Ridge, and also a portion of his time was spent in breaking up land for different farmers in their locality, as he had a good team of oxen which he bought on coming to this section of the country.

In 1891 Mr. Hucke filed on a homestead in section 4, township 27, range 50, "batching it" for one year, living in a dug-out and frame building combined. During the following year he was married to Miss Hester Ball, a native of Monroe county, Iowa, daughter of J. A. Ball, a well known farmer and ranchman who settled in this county in 1886. After his marriage Mr. Hucke started to farm, and his sole capital was fifty cents in money, two horses and a wagon, so he was obliged to go in debt to the extent of one hundred and sixty dollars. This was just about the time the dry years were coming on and he suffered loss of crops for several seasons, being compelled to work out by the day in order to make a living for his family, and through failures and discouragements he was slow in getting ahead very much, so left his farm and went west to Kansas in 1901, where he rented land and again tried farming, remaining for a year. This venture proved a failure and he gave up the fight, returning to Nebraska and again settling in Box Butte county, this time renting some land, and as the years were growing better all the time and he was able to raise good crops, he did very well and in 1903 purchased the farm. This was situated in section 5, township 27, range 49, and he has made money since locating there. He raises good crops, constantly improving his place by putting up good buildings, fences, etc. One hundred acres are cultivated, having about four hundred and eighty acres which he devotes to grazing and hay land for his stock, as he keeps about sixteen head of horses and forty cattle. When he came here he paid about seven hundred dollars per quarter for his land, and has since sold a part of it for three thousand two hundred dollars per quarter, which shows the rapid increase in value.

Mr. and Mrs. Hucke are the parents of five children, namely: Estella, Vern, Carl, Ina and Alta. The family are well liked and highly respected in their community as worthy citizens and good neighbors.

Mr. Hucke is an Independent voter, and while he does not devote much time to politics, has at different times held local office, and has always done his share as a loyal citizen in helping to build up his locality.

OLIVER P. BILLINGS, JR.

Oliver P. Billings, Jr., residing on section 24, is a prominent farmer of Keya Paha county. Mr. Billings was born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, in 1877, and is a son of Oliver P., an old settler in this county, born in Connecticut of good old American stock. He was a representative in the state legislature in 1898, and served one term, elected by the Populists. He has also held local office and has always taken a prominent part in politics, is well known throughout the state as a public speaker of note, and has stumped through Keya Paha county many times for his party. He has also served on different committees in the Populist party.

In 18— he was married to Nancy J. Smalley, of American blood, and they settled in this county in the early days with their little family of three children, of whom our subject is the eldest. Their first home was in Holt county, and they drove from there by team, a distance of two hundred miles, spending about two weeks on the trip, driving with them a bunch of cattle. Their first building was a dugout, and in this the family lived for two years, then built a log house, father and son handling ox teams and doing freighting through the country.

Here they went through the drouth periods, and during the hard times land could be bought for fifty dollars per quarter section, and they farmed all the land at this time they could handle, our subject starting to plow when but eight years of age. Together they handled two hundred acres of land and always had a crop, sometimes, however, not getting very much for their labor, and once losing their entire crop by hail.

Mr. Billings has been successful of late years in his farming operations and is now proprietor of a nine hundred and sixty-acre farm, two hundred of which is cultivated, the balance all fenced and used for pasture and hay land. He engages quite extensively in horse raising, and always has a large number of these animals on hand.

Mr. Billings was married in 1898 to Miss Pearl M. Bacon, daughter of William Bacon, an old settler in Keya Paha county, originally from England, who married Nancy Melchi, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. Mr. and Mrs. Billings have a family of three children, namely: Mabel, Jane and Ida.

In the summer of 1883 his father, mother and three brothers and a sister joined him, and the whole family emigrated to Phelps county, Nebraska, arriving there in the spring of 1884. They lived in that vicinity for about two years, then came to Kimball county, which was then a part of Cheyenne county, the father taking a homestead and beginning to establish a home here. Our subject did not come with the rest of the family, but went to Colorado, where he preempted a tract of land, proved up on it and sold out. He remained in Colorado for several years, then he, too, came to Kimball county in 1895, and located on school section 36, township 15, range 57, which is now the home ranch. He has built this up in good shape, putting up good buildings and adding improvements, and has broken up land so that he cultivates about seventy acres at the present time, raising good crops of grain, etc. The ranch contains nearly fifteen hundred acres, and is devoted principally to stock raising. Mr. Forsling running about three hundred head of cattle and one hundred and seventy-five head of horses.

Our subject was united in marriage to Ida M. Johnson, on March 12, 1890, in Holdrege, Nebraska. Mrs. Forsling was born in Sweden and came to America in 1881 all alone, both her parents being dead. Six children have been born to them, named as follows: Guy W., C. Luther, Elmer T., Agnes Beatrice, Ellen Amelia, and a baby born Aug-

HENRY A. WEISFLOG.

Among the early settlers of western Nebraska who has aided materially in the development and growth of the region in which he settled as a pioneer the gentleman above named deserves a foremost place. Mr. Weisflog resides on section 25, township 34, range 30, Cherry county, and has been identified with the county from the time the family located here, always aiding in any movement which was for the betterment of conditions in his locality.

Mr. Weisflog was born in Zanesville, Ohio, March 22, 1878. #### FRANK MASON.

Frank Mason is one of the leading citizens of Valley county, who owns a well improved farm in section 17, township 20, range 16, and has spent the past twenty years in this locality. Mr. Mason is a man of industrious habits, who has made many friends by his strict integrity and many sterling qualities of heart and mind, and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

Mr. Mason was born in Austria in 1856, and grew up there until a young man, following a line of general work, anything he could get to do. In 1884 he left his native land and came to the United States to seek his fortune and build up a home. He first located in New York, spending several years there working as a cigar maker. He came west and located in Nebraska in 1888, settling in Valley county, where he began farming. He went through hard times during the first few years, experiencing many discouragements from poor crops and different causes, but stuck to his work and succeeded in building up a good farm, now owning two hundred and forty acres of good farming land, and is engaged to quite an extent in grain raising principally, and also cuts a big crop of hay each year. He keeps quite a herd of stock on his place, raising cattle and hogs for the market.

Mr. Mason was married in 1885, while living in New York city, to Annie Havacek, also a native of Austria, who came to this country in 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Mason are the parents of six children, who are named as follows: Frank, Annie, Mary, Rosie, Joe and Charles. The family are devoted members of the Bohemian Catholic church of Valley county, and well liked by all who know them.

Mr. Mason has always voted the Democratic ticket up to several years ago, but now leans toward the Independent party, voting for the best man up. He is an admirer of Mr. Bryan.

HERMAN WATT.

Among the large ranch owners and well-known stockmen of Kearney county, Nebraska, the name of Herman Watt occupies a foremost place. He has resided in this locality for the past twenty-five years and has built up a good farm and home through honest effort and industry. Mr. Watt is a man of marked ability, occupies a high position socially, and is highly esteemed as a citizen.

Mr. Watt was born in the year 1864. In 1884 our subject located in Logan township, engaging in stock raising and farming, and has accumulated a nice property, being proprietor of nine hundred and twenty acres of land, three hundred and twenty acres in section 26, Logan township, and the balance in Newark township. He has recently gone into the stock business on quite a heavy scale, running about a hundred cattle, all high grade stock. He has now two hundred and fifty young pigs, which are the finest lot of hogs anyone ever saw. All are high grade Poland Chinas, averaging one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty pounds each, and certainly will be a nice lot when he markets them. Mr. Watt also handles quite a few horses, and has now about seventy, usually keeping from fifty to eighty on his farm. He has always had the best success with the Poland China breed of hogs. He raises plenty of grain on his farm, and feeds it all out besides buying some to meet his needs. In 1907 his wheat crop was four thousand bushels and corn crop three thousand. He has sixty acres of alfalfa and gets fine crops each season. In 1906-1907 during the winter, he fed and shipped two car loads of horses and two loads of cattle, and got a nice profit from their sale. His brother, W. R. Watt, of Minden, is one of the heaviest and most successful dealers in horses and mules in all western Nebraska. Neither our subject nor his brother are pioneers of Kearney county, but both are held in the highest esteem as business men of success, honesty and push, and deserve a high position among the worthy citizens of Kearney county.

FRANCIS H. HIGGIN.

Francis H. Higgin resides in section 10, township 32, range 27, Cherry county, where he has a large ranch, and is listed among the successful and prosperous men of the county. Mr. Higgin was born in Bancroft Hall in Lancashire, England, May 6, 1855. His father, also Francis H. Higgin, was a farmer and both of his parents died in England. Our subject, the third son, was raised and educated there and grew up with his seven brothers and sisters, assisting the family in the farm work, and in 1883 he started out to seek his fortune in the new world, landing in New York in the latter part of the year, and traveled across the United States until he reached Nebraska, where he located. This was his first experience in being away from his parents' roof, and it was a momentous trip for the young man among strangers in a strange land. He settled March 28, 1884, in Cherry county, taking a homestead in section 31, township 33, range 27, and still owns this tract of land. When he landed here this section was a barren country without any improved lands and very sparsely settled. He put up his first building himself, erecting a log house, and lived in this for some time, later putting up a sod house. His sole capital in money when he struck this county, after paying land fees, was three cents, and he was without any provisions to start with, but managed to hustle around and get work in the neighborhood and supply himself with a few necessaries and so was able to get along for a time. These were very hard times to him, and he was almost discouraged during the first winter, but he kept hard at it and succeeded in establishing his home and farm. At first he stuck to farming and tried to cultivate his land and raise crops, but soon found that this did not pay. He gradually got into the stock business and made much more money at that, so quit farming and gave his entire time to stock raising. He had given up trying to farm just before the dry years came on, so he was not affected by the drouth periods so much, and with the exception of losing some horses he has done well since coming here. Has his place well improved with a complete set of substantial farm buildings, and has put up about fifteen miles of fence. He has spent a large amount of money in building up his farm, and bent every energy to make it one of the best ranches in this section. He has planted a large number of trees on his farm, and has a fine orchard. His ranch comprises two thousand five hundred and sixty acres, all good land, and has about three hundred of this broken, but does not aim to raise grain for market, using it all on his farm.

Mr. Higgin was married December 26, 1882, to Miss Alice Ormesher, of English birth, who came to America a month after marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Higgin have one child, Mary A. Higgin, living at home with her parents.

Mr. Higgin gives his entire time to the work on his farm, and has never held any office, but votes the Republican ticket, and takes a keen interest in all affairs of the county and section in which he lives. He is one of the leading citizens of his locality, and has added materially in the upbuilding of his community. One of the interesting illustrations in this work is a view of the residence of Mr. Higgin.

THOMAS L. HOPKINS, JR.

Thomas L. Hopkins, Jr., a public spirited citizen and well known resident of Box Butte county, has a nice farm under first-class improvement, making for him a most creditable and desirable home. He is considered one of the old timers in this region, and has taken an active part in the development of the community in which he chose his home many years ago.

Mr. Hopkins was born in Dodge county,

Wisconsin, in 1874. His father, T. L. Hopkins, Sr., was a native of England who came to this country and settled when a young man, he having married a young woman who was also born and raised in England, a Miss Sarah Jackson.

Our subject grew up in Wisconsin and when he was thirteen years of age the whole family came to Nebraska, locating in Box Butte county. They settled near the Niobrara river, and there put up a rough sod building and began the regular pioneer experiences. The second winter they located here Thomas was obliged to walk a distance of three miles to the nearest school. They went through hard times, working at whatever they could find to do, and our subject did freighting, making long and tedious trips through the country, and many a night was spent lying on the ground in all kinds of bad weather. He put all his earnings into the family fund, and remained at home until he was twenty-one. During the dry years they were unable to do more than make a living and were unable to get ahead very much, and one year Thomas and some of his neighbors made a cross-country trip to O'Neil into eastern Nebraska, where they obtained a job husking corn, also working in the harvest fields, and anything they found to do, and thus made a little extra money.

When he reached his majority our subject filed on a homestead in section 23, township 28, range 48, and held down his claim, working out in Chadron part of the time until he was able to prove up on his land. He also took a business course at the Fremont Business College, spending two terms there, and when he returned to Chadron, had just twenty cents left in his pocket, so he was compelled to go to work to make a living for himself. This was in the spring of 1894, and he took charge of Putnam's ranch on the White river, and spent four years in that position. After leaving this ranch he settled on his homestead permanently, began farming, and met with good success in his work, all of which was gained through his own good management and hard labor, as he had absolutely no capital to start with. Mr. Hopkins' ranch consists of eleven quarter sections of deeded land, and he also leases seven quarters, all of which is fenced, and he has in all nine miles of good fencing on the place. He had erected good buildings, has a splendid supply of water, windmills, etc.

September 10, 1903, Mr. Hopkins was married to Myrta D. Bolin, whose father, Eldridge Bolin, is a farmer residing near Hay Springs.

Mrs. Hopkins was a teacher in the Hay Springs schools for three years, and also taught in other schools in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins are the parents of two sons, namely: Roscoe, aged three years, and Ronald, aged two years.

Mr. Hopkins is a Republican, and has held precinct and school offices and since coming here has taken a commendable interest in neighborhood and county affairs.

CHARLES L. LATTA.

Charles L. Latta, residing in Kennedy precinct, Cherry county, is one of the old timers of this region, having come here in 1887, and has done his full share in the upbuilding of the community in which he chose his home.

Mr. Latta is a native of Noble county, Indiana, born November 6, 1864, on a farm. His father, Robert S. Latta, followed farming, serving as minister in the Methodist church, of which he was for a time an itinerant preacher. He was a native of McLean county, Illinois, a man of superior mind with a vein of poetry in his nature which he was able to express in choice English. Of his many poems none perhaps excels in thought and expression "The Bells of Ligonier." The mother, Mary Trimbleson, was of English and Pennsylvania Dutch stock. Our subject is the youngest in a family of eight children, and was reared in Indiana, attending the country schools and assisting his parents in the farm work until he was sixteen years of age, then started out for himself, following farm work for a time near his home. In 1880 the family came to Nebraska, locating in Gage county, from which region Charles returned to Indiana in the spring of 1882, attending Purdue University at Lafayette until fall of 1885, three school years. In the winter of 1887 the family removed to Loup county, remaining until September, 1890, when they started overland to the Black Hills, settling near Custer City. Here they operated a saw mill and were doing well until the panic of 1893, which proved disastrous to many enterprises. Saving what they could from the wreck of their enterprise the family came to Cherry county in 1893, settling on Gordon creek, where the parents continued to reside until 1900. Our subject took up a homestead of four hundred acres in section 10, township 30, range 30, and proved up on it. He worked this place for himself, and then moved back on his father's ranch, running the two places, the latter situated in section 12, township 30, range 30. This latter tract containing one thousand one hundred and twenty acres Mr. Latta purchased, making a most desirable ranch, all located on Gordon creek. The places are well improved and well stocked, running about two hundred head of cattle and twenty horses, one favorable feature of the region being its freedom from swamp fever.

On the 1st of March, 1896, Mr. Latta was married to Miss Daisy M. Stilwell, daughter of Elias Stilwell, an old settler in Cherry county, now residing on his ranch at the east end of Hackberry lake, where, in 1907, he erected a fine new residence. He first came to Nebraska in 1883, opening a harness shop in Wilsonville, removing to Cherry county two years later, plying his trade in Valentine many years. He was married in Kansas to Miss Emma Crees, of Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Latta have a family of four children, named as follows: Willie, Ralph, Oliver and Idell. School is a difficult problem in the sparsely settled ranch country. Being in no district whatever, Mrs. Latta has solved the problem by holding school daily for the usual term in their home.

Mr. Latta devotes his entire time and attention to the building up of his home and ranch, and is highly esteemed as a worthy citizen and good neighbor in his locality. He is a Socialist and strong believer in the rights of that party. He is a member of the Valentine lodge Modern Woodmen of America.

A view of the residence with portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Latta, also portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Robert O. Latta, will be found on another page of this work.

C. E. JOHNSON.

C. E. Johnson, known all over Henry county, Illinois, and the adjoining counties by reason of his large purchases of cattle as "Ed. Johnson," came to this section twenty years ago, locating on the south one-half of section 35, Centre township, owned at that time by J. H. Anderson, our subject's father-in-law, now deceased. Mr. Johnson has been engaged in the stock business since that time, and during that time has bought and re-sold many farms in this locality, on all of which he has made large profits. Besides the half section on which he now resides, he owns a quarter section in 36, and 33, also a whole section in Cottonwood township, Phelps county. During all of this time he has been engaged in buying cattle, sorting out the feeders and shipping some forty to fifty cars to market annually in some years. He now ships from ten to fifteen cars each year. Before coming to Nebraska he fed cattle in Illinois, and states that in his opinion Nebraska is far ahead of that state for feeding purposes, and that cattle can be fattened much quicker and cheaper in Nebraska than in Illinois.

Mr. Johnson is interested in South Dakota lands, owning one hundred and sixty acres in that state. He has a fine residence in this county, and has built up a comfortable home here, where the family is well known and highly esteemed. He was married in 1887 to Miss Emma C. Anderson. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, named as follows: Martin (adopted), Joseph, Burnie, Ruthy, Roy, Carl and Walter.

Politically Mr. Johnson is a Republican.

RUFUS S. JONES.

Rufus S. Jones, who has done his full share in helping the settlers build up the farming interests in Nebraska, is a resident of Brown county, where he is engaged extensively in stock and grain raising. Mr. Jones was born August 20, 1841, in Stark county, Illinois. He is a son of Sheridan Jones, a farmer of Welsh descent, and his mother was Miss Ann Meek, of old American stock. The family consisted of six children, the youngest being our subject. He was reared on his father's farm, remaining under the parental roof until his enlistment in Company I, One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, seeing service in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, following a soldier's fortune for over a year, when he was discharged and returned home. He remained with his parents until 1871, then went to Iowa, settling in Clark county. Here he followed farming for the two years, when he grew discontented and wandered back to his old home in Illinois, remaining for ten years before turning again to the west. Coming to Brown county, he took up a homestead in section 32, township 32, range 21, and was among the first settlers in this locality, and from his farm not a single house could be seen in any direction. He had brought with him a team of horses, and went to work building a rude house out of logs. After this was completed he began breaking up his land, and at the same time continued working at his trade as a carpenter. He had a hard time in getting started, and when the drouth periods struck the locality for two years, he faithfully planted his crops but was unable to raise even enough for seed the next year. However, he stuck to it, and through sheer persistence, after experiencing all kinds of hardships and privations, succeeded in accumulating a nice property. His farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres, one hundred and fifty acres under cultivation, all improved with good buildings, fences, etc., and well stocked. There are a number of springs on the place and an abundance of timber in the canyons. He is engaged principally in stock-raising, which he finds very profitable.

In March, 1866, Mr. Jones was married to Miss Mercy Taylor, a native of Kentucky. They are the parents of seven children, all of whom were born in Illinois, and who are named as follows: Ralph E., Minnie L., Gertrude M., John L., Pearl C., Stella B. and Bert J.

Mr. Jones devotes his entire time and attention to the bulding up of his home and farm, and is a man of thorough and systematic methods in his work. He has gained success through his perseverance, industry and good management, and may be truly classed among the self-made men of this region. In politics he is thoroughly independent of party ties and the party lash.

THOMAS M. THORNTON.

Thomas M. Thornton, residing now with his son Benjamin on section 20, township 30, range 52, Dawes county, Nebraska, is one of the pioneer settlers of the western part of the state, and he has helped by every way in his power to build up the region where he chose his home in the early days of the state's history.

Mr. Thornton is a native of Pike county, Illinois, born in 1837 on his father's farm. He is the son of Joel Thornton, born in 1800 in Pike county, of English and Welsh descent. The father died May 5, 1876. Our subject's mother was Annie Honaker, of German stock, born in 1804, and died in Page county, Nebraska, in 1896.

The subject of our sketch enlisted August 12, 1862, in Company K, Iowa Infantry, and saw hard service during the war, engaging in thirty-two battles. He was severely wounded near Camden, on the Washita river, in Arkansas, April 7, 1864, and still carries the bullet in his leg. He was honorably discharged September 7, 1865.

Mr. Thornton came to Dawes county, Nebraska, May 17, 1888, settling on a farm nine or ten miles from Crawford, and there built up a fine ranch and home. He has been very successful since coming here and at one time owned five sections of good land in the western part of the county, where he was extensively engaged in stock raising. Of late he has sold out to his sons and their uncle, retaining for himself only about two hundred acres. The sons and their uncle, Mr. Abbots, own about eleven sections of land and they run from three hundred to five hundred head of cattle and from seventy-five to one hundred head of horses every year. They stand high as the leading stockmen of this part of the country. Their places are finely improved, supplied with several fine sets of buildings, three wind mills and many miles of fencing, in all about thirty miles of three wires. The Thornton farms are well supplied with natural timber, wild fruits, etc., and there are streams of good running water the year round on the north farm.

Mr. Thornton was married at Montgomery Iowa, February 28, 1869, to Miss Augusta F. Abbots, of American stock. To them have been born the following children: Walter J., Freeman C., Lewis M. and Benjamin A., all living here and on adjoining lands.

Mr. Thornton takes a deep interest in all local affairs and is classed among the prominent and leading citizens of his county, highly esteemed by all who know him.

ROBERT H. McNAMEE.

Robert H. McNamee, the subject of this personal history, resides on section 33, township 31, range 26, in Cherry county, Nebraska, where he has built up a fine home and farm through his industry and good business management.

Mr. McNamee was born in Jackson county, Ohio, June 5, 1852, and was reared and educated on his father's farm. He is a son of Hiram and Mary (Henry) McNamee, the former of Scotch-Irish, and the latter of Irish descent, though both American born. In 1860 the family moved by wagon to Harrison county, Missouri, the journey of one thousand miles consuming two months' time, where they remained for twenty-five years. Our subject at the age of nineteen married and began farming on his own account, which he continued in Missouri until his advent to Nebraska. November 12, 1885, he moved into Brown county, settling near Bassett, after a journey of four hundred and fifty miles by wagon, consuming fourteen days, the mother and children coming by train. He only lived there for one and a half years, then located in Cherry county, where he has lived continuously ever since. He took up a homestead near the town of Merriman, residing in the west end of the county seven years, about six years of this time acting as foreman on a large ranch near Pine Ridge reservation. Selling this tract Mr. McNamee located near Wood Lake, where he built up a fine home, which he sold in 1890 and moved to Wood Lake, where he engaged in the hotel business, putting up a large building and equipping it in fine style for a village hotel. Ranching had greater charm for our subject, so he disposed of his hotel after twenty months and came into possession of his present tract of two thousand and forty acres, which was improved and nearly all fenced. This is in five different fields, and is a valuable piece of property. He keeps three hundred cattle, and besides this runs stock for other people in the vicinity, in all pasturing about five hundred head. About eight hundred acres of this land is fine hay land, and he cuts a large crop each year, the surplus being sold.

Since coming to this state he has built up and improved three places, spending between four and five thousand dollars, building and furnishing the hotel, putting over two thousand five hundred dollars' worth of improvements on one ranch, and over two thousand in buildings, etc., on the ranch where he now resides.

Mr. McNamee was married March 19, 1871, to Miss Clara Butcher, born in Jackson county, Ohio, in 1850. They have eight children named as follows: Spencer R., Kenton B., Leonard P., Hesse E., Lolia, now Mrs. Arthur W. Richardson; Lillie, wife of W. T. Bailey; Hervey R., and Herman, of whom the five elder were born in Missouri, and the three younger in Nebraska.

Mr. McNamee has always been active in politics, and has never missed a vote since coming of age. He adheres to the principles of the Republican party. He holds fellowship in the Wood Lake lodge of Modern Woodmen of America.

A view of the residence with portraits of Mr. and Mrs. McNamee will be found on another page of this work.

ALBERT HALEY.

Albert Haley, postmaster at Sparks, Cherry county, Nebraska, is well known throughout the vicinity in which he resides. Mr. Haley is among the early settlers in Sparks precinct, and has watched the growth and aided in the development of this region from its beginning, and is counted one of the leading worthy citizens of the place.

Mr. Haley was born in Fayette county, Illinois, September 30, 1866, on his father's farm. The latter, John Franklin Haley, was of Irish descent, born in Illinois and lived there all his life, his death occurring in 1880. The mother, whose maiden name was Mary J. George, was also born and raised in the prairie state, dying there in 1867. Albert was the youngest in his parents' family of three children, and on the death of his father, started out for himself when fifteen years of age, going to Nodaway county, Missouri, where he followed farm work for two years. Coming to Cherry county, he drove ox teams, did freighting, hauled posts, etc., handling five and six yoke of oxen at a time. He was thus employed for about three years, camping out nights winter and summer under his wagon, traveling all over this part of the country when there was nobody but soldiers and cowboys here. At that time there was not a house on "the table" and only five or six along the river bottoms for thirty miles east of Fort Niobrara. In 1888 he settled on a homestead in section 14, township 34, range 25, and put up his first building, which was a log house with a sod roof. Here he built up a good home and farm, consisting of a quarter section all fenced, with ninety acres under cultivation when he sold the place in 1906. June 28, 1906, he sold out his farm and had shipped his goods to Missouri and started to drive with his family to that state. On the road he met C. F. Callen, owner of the Sparks store, and closed a deal for that emporium and has since been engaged in mercantile pursuit at that point, where he also serves as postmaster. For two years, while living on his farm, Mr. Haley drove the mail wagon from Sparks to Valentine and then disposed of his contract in this branch of government service.

In 1895 our subject was married to Miss Maud Allen, whose father, W. J. Allen, was an old settler in Cherry county. A sketch of him and his family appears elsewhere in this work. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Haley, namely: Jno. Floyd, Ervie P., Alma J., Martha E. and Everett Chauncey.

Mr. Haley is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in local party affairs.

HERMAN G. MILLER.

The opportunities afforded honest industry to gain a footing in America were embraced by the gentleman whose name heads this article, and he is now one of the recognized substantial and influential agriculturists and ranchmen of Cheyenne county, Nebraska. He came to that region in its early days of development, and has passed through all the strenuous Nebraska times, becoming by his labors in behalf of his adopted state one of the leading citizens and well-known supporters of all that goes to make up the locality a prominent section in the western part of the state.

H. G. Miller was born in the village of Papens, adjoining the city of Aurich, province of Hanover, Germany, October 14, 1845, and was the fourth child in a family of ten children, born to his parents, Gerd and Gische (Dirks) Miller; but five of these are living at this time. The family came to America in 1852, sailing from Bremen Haven, and after a voyage of eight weeks, landed in New York, thence they traveled by river, canal and lakes to Chicago. Here they took a flat boat down the canal to the Illinois river, which landed them at Peoria. At Peoria they took a steamer for St. Louis, and at this point they secured passage on an up river boat, which carried them to Quincy, Illinois; from Quincy they went direct to Clayton township, Adams county, Illinois. The thirty miles from Quincy to Clayton township, were made in a covered wagon, which also carried their possessions. They arrived at their destination on September 2d. There they farmed for about thirty years, our subject working for himself after he grew to manhood, and in the spring of 1884 he came to Nebraska, locating first in Johnson county and two years later in Cheyenne county. He filed at once on a homestead on section 14, township 16, range 48, taking up one hundred and sixty acres. He went through hard times during the first few years, and met with many discouragements in the way of financial loss from failure of crops, through drouths, hail, prairie fires and grasshoppers, but never gave up hope, determined to succeed in spite of all obstacles. How well he has succeeded is evidenced by his fine ranch of six hundred and forty acres, all fitted with good buildings and improvements, about one hundred and eighty acres being in a high state of cultivation; he engages in stock raising on quite a large scale, running about one hundred cattle and twenty-five head of horses.

Mr. Miller has an interesting career outside of his farming operations, having taught school for a number of years throughout Cheyenne county, and is well-known as a local educator, possessed of a good training, and a man of superior talents and broad character. He is also an auctioneer of wide repute, having acted in that capacity throughout the region, and is thoroughly familiar with the whole country from his travels in following his career as a teacher and auctioneer. For seven years he was a member of the Illinois National Guards, serving as lieutenant of Company I, participating in the East St. Louis railroad riots. Mr. Miller was secretary of the Bryan Political Club in Cheyenne county. He has also held various local offices, acting as justice of the peace, notary public, deputy county assessor, and is equally prominent in church and social life in the community. He served as superintendent of Sunday schools for some years, and is a trustee in the German Lutheran church near Weyerts, of which he is a member as are the other members of the family.

Mr. Miller has a pleasant home and interesting family. He was married in Adams county, Illinois, October 15, 1865, to Miss Trientje Behrens, who was born in Germany and came to the United States at the age of thirteen years with her parents, Ekke and Anche (Fecht) Behrens. Mr. Miller is the father of the following children: Sophia, wife of Henry G. Henrichs; Minnie, living at home; George, a thresherman; Anna, wife of John Henrichs; Rena, wife of Chris Jurgens; Mary, married to John Jurgens, all living near the home ranch; Hannah (deceased); Ekke Berney, Dirk G. and Herman J. are living with their parents and assist in the operation of the home ranch.

In political views Mr. Miller is a loyal Democrat, and lends his influence for good local government.

JAMES H. COOK.

James H. Cook, numbered among the old and honored settlers of Sioux county, Nebraska, was born at Kalamazoo, Michigan, in 1857. He was reared in that locality, having very poor schooling advantages, being only able to attend the common schools, but in after life his wide experience gave to him extensive knowledge of all affairs of state and nation, and today he is a well-read and intelligent gentleman with whom it is a pleasure to meet and converse. His father, Henry Cook, was an old sea captain, born in England, and all of his male ancestors for generations back were seafaring people.

When James was a lad of twelve years of age, he left home and went into southwestern Texas, where he secured work as a cowboy, and for years traveled over the plains of Texas and other western states, working as a rancher, scout and guide for the United States troops. He was with Captain McNally's celebrated Texas Rangers on trips at different times as guide and scout and his services were at times invaluable, as many desperate and lawless characters had often to be dealt with. He also acted as guide with the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth United States Cavalry, as a guide and had many thrilling experiences while acting in this capacity. During the late Indian campaigns near Pine Ridge, South Dakota, he was in the service of General Miles. These took place during the years 1890-91, and a number of those old Indian chiefs are still visitors at Mr. Cook's home, often bringing him valuable presents of beadwork, trinkets, etc., which help in a considerable degree to make his home one of the most interesting to the visitor in western Nebraska that is to be met with. He has many Indian relics, and with each of these is connected some interesting and historical anecdote.

During the time Mr. Cook acted as a guide, he traveled with the United States troops all over Arizona and New Mexico, and associated with the different classes of people, and in his roving has learned to speak fluently the Spanish language, as well as several Indian dialects. In reviewing the incidents connected with his early western life, mention should not fail to be made of the fact that he helped lay out many of the famous cattle trails from Texas into the northern states, and he also has the distinction of having aided in surveying the first trail into Yellowstone Park.

In the year 1886 Mr. Cook came to the old cow ranch in Sioux county, which was established by Dr. Graham, in 1879, and was located about twenty-three miles south of Harrison. Dr. Graham and Edgar Bronson were the first men who brought cattle to Sioux county. Thus Mary C. Graham, who came to the ranch in the following year, was the first white woman to settle in Sioux county. She held the first religious services ever held in that part of the state, for the cowboys on the ranch. She has since made her home on the ranch, and for several years was postmistress and had charge of the United States weather station at Agate for several years. At the time our subject took hold of the ranch it was nothing but an old time western cow ranch, with shabby buildings and scarcely any improvements. He has installed an irrigation system, dug ditches and made a lovely garden spot of the ranch home. Trees have been set out with the design of beautifying the place, walks and driveways built, and the residence, grounds and ranch house would be a credit to any city and compares favorably with the finest homes, both inside and outside. Mr. Cook's private den, with the best collection of Indian relics in the west, is one of the most pleasant corners of the house. The ranch consists of about eight thousand acres, extending along the Niobrara river; and about one thousand acres of it are under cultivation. The most interesting feature of this ranch is its deposits of fossils. It contains the most extensive deposits of vertebrate mammals of any place in America. Scientists from all over the country have been there to get specimens and study the subject, and Mr. Cook has entertained many of the most noted scientists of both hemispheres on their visits to this part of the west.

John F. Cook, a brother of our subject, has been one of the managers of the ranch, coming here in 1887. Agate postoffice, the mail station of our subject, was established in 1893, John F. Cook being postmaster for several years since its establishment. Before coming to Agate Springs ranch, he traveled all over the western part of the United States from Old Mexico to British Columbia. He was for several years associated with the ranch operated by his brother in New Mexico, and while there he had an active hand in the work of establishing law and order in that country. He is at present deputy state game warden and justice of the peace.

James H. Cook gave to the ranch its name calling it the "Agate Springs Ranch" on account of the many different kinds of agates found on the place. It is a wonderful spot and too much can not be said in describing its beauties and natural resources, Mr. Cook having made of it a model and ideal ranch home.

In 1886 Mr. Cook was married to Miss Katie Graham, daughter of Dr. E. B. Graham, of Cheyenne, Wyoming. Two sons were born to this union, namely: John, born in 1898, now attending school at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and Harold, born in 1888, who is a geologist and scientist, having been elected a member of the American Society of Vertebrate Paleontology, and has the distinction of being the youngest member of that body, and, considering his youth, this is a great honor. He went to the University of Nebraska in 1907 and 1908, and while there was a member of the geology department and the state geological survey. At present he is a member of the American Museum of Natural History staff and will continue his studies at Columbia University.

In politics, although never a candidate for office, Mr. Cook has always taken an active part locally. He has had considerable influence at Washington through his acquaintance with prominent easterners whom he guided through the western states during his early career on hunting trips, etc.

JOHN CLASEN.

The efforts put forth by the gentleman above named to make for himself a good home and comfortable competence have called out the heartiest praise of his fellowmen, and too much can not be said in his favor. Mr. Clasen has gone through many disappointments in his endeavors and often became discouraged, but through perseverance and hard work has overcome many obstacles and richly deserves the success he has attained.

Mr. Clasen was born in the village of Sassen, near Coblenz, in the Rhine Province, Germany, October 8, 1836. His father, Anton Clasen, was a farmer, and died in the fatherland in 1866, and the mother, who was Susanna Simon, died in the same year. Our subject grew up in Germany, following farming and cattle raising, also dealing in hogs and sheep to some extent, and during the war with France served in the German army in the pioneer corps and was stationed near Metz during the siege of that city. In April, 1872, he came to the United States, sailing from Hull by way of London. After a twelve days' voyage on a steamer of the German line he landed in New York city, April 28, 1872. He started west on April 30, in that same year, and settled in Fond du Lac county, Wisconsin. After working here in a brick yard for a year he removed to Mitchell county, Iowa, settling in Stacyville, where he resided for fifteen years. He next moved to Milford, Iowa, where he made his home for five years. In 1892 he came to Cherry county, Nebraska, and took up his present farm as a homestead, which is situated in section 32, township 34, range 31, and started a home. He built a farm house and first met with misfortune in the loss of a team of fine horses. The dry years followed and he was unable to raise a crop, making it hard to support his family. But he endured all the hardships and is now proprietor of two hundred and eighty acres of good land, improved with a good house and farm buildings, well of good water, windmills and fences. He is assisted in his farm work by his son Tony, and running ninety head of cattle, twenty-four horses and other stock. From eighty to ninety acres of land are under cultivation, and on this they raise good crops, and are counted among the successful and prosperous farmers in their vicinity. Prior to emigrating Mr. Clasen worked in the coal mines of Essen, Germany, some two thousand feet below the surface, but feeling safer above ground he found three months of mining enough. In 1902 a bolt of lightning running along a wire fence near which Mr. Clasen was driving in his stock, prostrated him. This is a shock from which few men recover.

Mr. Clasen was married in Wisconsin in 1873 to Miss Katherine Cramer, a native of that state, daughter of Anton and Mary (Brust) Cramer, of German descent. To Mr. and Mrs. Clasen the following children have been born: Mary, wife of Anton Long, of Iowa; Pete (deceased); Matt and Joe, living in South Dakota; Anton, Lambert (deceased), Annie, Frank, Henry, Rose and Caroline.

Mr. Clasen is an adherent of the Republican party and a member of the Catholic church.

ANSON B. McDOWELL.

Prominent among the progressive farmers of Sheridan county is the subject of this review, a young man of sterling character and good business judgment. He is energetic and industrious, and has gained a fine farm and pleasant home in section 2, township 33, range 41.

Mr. McDowell was born in Pennsylvania in 1871, and was raised there until he was fifteen years of age. His father, Cyrus F. McDowell, was of Scotch-American descent, and served his country during the Civil war, and was later in the navy. Our subject is the eldest of three children, and came with his parents to Sheridan county, Nebraska, in 1885, and one year later learned the printer's trade. He worked on the first paper ever printed in Gordon, and followed this occupation for two years, after which he clerked in a store for one year. He then started at farming, and during his first year at this business the dry season came on and ruined all his crops, which caused him to lose nearly everything he had saved. After this he started in the cattle business, putting what capital he had left in this venture and succeeded from the start. He had a brother interested in a ranch, and they worked together, and in 1902 he bought his present home, each year becoming more extensively engaged in the stock business, until he now owns one thousand six hundred and eighty acres of good land and devotes nearly all his time and attention to this work, doing but very little farming. He has a fine herd of one hundred and twenty-five thoroughbred Shorthorns, and this is from a start of fifteen head of cattle. His farm is well improved with good buildings and all fenced, and he is counted among the successful ranchmen of his community.

Mr. McDowell was married in 1902 to Miss Genevra Bresee, who was born in Iowa, in 1869. Her father, David Bresee, was an early settler in Iowa, and later a pioneer settler in Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. McDowell have no children. When he landed in Nebraska he was obliged to go in debt for the purchase price of his land, and he has steadily worked up, gradually adding to his farm until he is now owner of as valuable a piece of property as there is in this locality, his land being worth more than double the price he paid for it. His first impressions of Nebraska are very amusing, and he says he will never forget the time he first struck Valentine. He had never seen a tent until he landed here, and he was sure that every Indian he met was after his scalp. He is a Republican, and has held local office, always taking an active interest in all party politics.

IRVINE STREET.

Prominent among the well-known farmers of Phelps county, Nebraska, is Irvine Street, who resides in Westmark township. He has been a resident of this locality since 1885, and has passed through all the pioneer experiences that fell to the lot of the early settler in this state.

Mr. Street is a native of Iowa, born near the town of Martinsburg, Iowa, and was reared there, receiving a common school education. He is a son of Joseph Street, who died near Creston, Iowa. He started out for himself when young, and in 1884 began working as a thresher in his home county, and since that time has followed this business constantly. He came to Nebraska in 1885, settling in Williamsburg township, Phelps county. He bought eighty acres of land in Westmark township the following year, and still lives on this homestead, where he has built up a good home and farm. His place is improved with a good set of farm buildings, comfortable house, and all conveniences of modern farm machinery. He engages in mixed farming and operates a threshing machine during the threshing season. He has been engaged in this work since first coming here, all over Phelps and the adjoining counties, and through this has become one of the best known men in this section. He is considered one of the best threshers in this part of the state, and no one is better qualified to judge of a machine and its work, or to operate it with better success than he. One brother, Byron Street, came to Nebraska with our subject, and was associated with him in this business up to the time of his death, which occurred February 21, 1905. In the opinion of Mr. Street, this country is away ahead of his native state on account of the healthy climate, and it is a much pleasanter place to live, as there is no mud here during the spring and fall months as in Iowa. Grain is a better crop here, and the corn crop as good or better than there. He states that he has threshed wheat yielding as high as fifty-one bushels to the acre in Nebraska, and the grain is nearly always of No. 1 quality, bright and up to standard weight.

Mr. Street married Miss Eva Brooks in 1890. She is a native of Illinois. They have one daughter, Leila. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church in Williamsburg. Mr. Street is a strong Republican.

HOMER A. PRIDDY.

Homer A. Priddy, who occupies a prominent place among the younger members of the ranching community of Sioux county, is one of the early settlers in that region who has built up a fine estate and gained an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen and progressive ranchman. He has been one of the foremost men of his locality during the past many years, and has done his full share in the development of the resources of the country where he chose his home.

Mr. Priddy was born in Jasper county, Iowa, in 1861, on a farm. His father came of German stock, and his mother of English-Irish blood, she being a descendant of Sir Francis Drake, well known in the history of Great Britain. Our subject was raised in Iowa, as a boy learning all kinds of farm work, attending the common schools, and later the Greenfield high school, of which he is a graduate. He learned the trade of blacksmith at Greenfield and followed that occupation considerable during his entire career. While living at the latter place he was married to Miss Maggie Woods, daughter of William R. Woods, who had followed the trade of blacksmith from his boyhood days. Mrs. Priddy's mother was, prior to her marriage, Sarah Brinton, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock.

In 1888 our subject and his family came to Sioux county and filed on government land located on Monroe creek, and at that time there was but one white settler between that place and Harrison. He put up a log shanty twelve by fourteen feet, and started to develop a farm, having a team of mules and one horse. His entire cash capital was seventy-five dollars. He arrived in the region driving his mules, coming all the way from Iowa, camping out under the wagon, cooking their meals over camp fires. The first several years were hard ones, and they had difficulty in making a living, as several crops were utter failures, and Mr. Priddy finally opened a blacksmith shop in Harrison and followed his trade at that place for twelve years, driving to and from his homestead, and managed to make quite a little money in this way. During that time he improved his place in good shape and bought additional land, so that he is now owner of a fine ranch of one thousand two hundred acres, part of which is used as hay land, and the balance as range for his stock, as he runs quite a herd of cattle. There is plenty of running water the year around, and he has considerable natural timber on the place. He has good buildings, and about seven miles of fencing. His residence is on section 8, township 32, range 56.

Mr. Priddy and his estimable wife are the parents of five children, named as follows: Linley R., Dollie R., Karma D., Edouard T. and Noel M.

During the winters the family live in Harrison, where the children have a better opportunity for attending school. Our subject is active in local affairs, and for five years held the position of postmaster of Harrison, serving from 1902 to June, 1907. Politically he is a Republican and lends his influence for the best principles of his party. Mr. Priddy has a nice stream, Monroe creek, passing through his farm, well stocked with mountain trout, and it bids fair to be one of the best fishing places in the west. His place abounds in some fine wild game, such as deer, etc., and he is trying his best to protect them from the ravages of the hunters and sports.

JOHN AND HENRY MICHAELSEN.

The two gentlemen whose names head this personal history reside in section 15, township 26, range 50, Box Butte county, Nebraska, and are leading old settlers of the western part of the state who have made this region their home for the past twenty-three years, and are well known and highly esteemed by all who know them for their thrift and energy, as well as for being thorough farmers and good business men. We take pleasure in presenting portraits of both these gentlemen on other pages of this work.

Both John and Henry Michaelsen were born in Hanover Province, Germany, Henry in 1845, and John in 1848, sons of farmers, the father having followed the trade of a harnessmaker for many years, and both parents lived and died in their native land. The two brothers served in the German army during the war of 1870 and 1871, fighting for their country as all loyal subjects were compelled to do. John came to America in 1881, and lived in New York one year, then settled in Wisconsin where he remained for a time, then drifted to Omaha and spent four years there employed at different kinds of work in that city, where his brother, Henry, joined him in 1883, coming directly from the old country. In 1885 they came to Box Butte county, where each filed on a homestead, and upon their arrival here John had just seventy-five cents and Henry but ten cents in money in their pockets, and this was their start in a business way. They began their homes, living in the open air for a time, then built a sod house, cooking their meals over a camp fire in old tin cans which they found, and during the early days had a struggle to make a living. However, they stuck to their purpose through all kinds of hardships and privations, and finally proved up on the land, gradually improving it with buildings, fences, etc., and together now own a fine ranch of about nine hundred and thirty acres. They raise cattle and horses principally, and are doing well, and are worthy citizens. But a short time after coming here they bought two cows. One of these died soon after they got it, and the other, for which they paid twenty-five dollars when she was a two-year-old, was the beginning of their entire herd. They kept the increase from this animal, while using her product for their living, and from her have sold over two hundred head, and after keeping her for fourteen years sold her for thirty dollars.

The brothers are now classed among the prosperous and enterprising residents of their locality, and have succeeded beyond their wildest hopes since locating in this section of the country.

COLUMBUS A. DUNCAN.

Should the reader ask to see one of the very finest farms in Rock county, Nebraska, or become acquainted with one of the most thorough and capable farmers in all this region, he would be taken to the farm owned and operated by the gentleman with whose name this article begins. Here he would see careful cultivation of the soil, that thorough tillage without which success is not possible anywhere; the various farm buildings are modern and ample for all the needs of the day; the machinery that is needed saves labor and earns interest; the stock is of good grade, and year by year improves, and the farmer himself hale and hearty, now in the prime of life and at the maturity of his manly powers, "with his natural force unabated and his eye undimmed." A good farm to visit, and a pleasant gentleman to meet.

Columbus A. Duncan was born on a farm in Monroe county, Arkansas, March 6, 1855, the tenth child in a family of twelve children of Willis and Nancy (Matlock) Duncan, and inherits good American blood from both branches of his ancestry. In 1869 the family came to the north, to make a home in Watonwan county, Minnesota, where he grew to manhood and his education was completed in the public schools. The young Columbus from a very early age did what he could to help his parents and much hard work came to him as he grew older. When he attained his majority, he began for himself, and for some years followed farming in Minnesota. In 1877 he entered into marriage with Miss Mary Southerland, daughter of James and Martha (Green) Southerland. Her father was a farmer, and the family was well and favorably known in the state. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan have had five children come to bless their union: Charles E., Walter S., Nettie L., Nellie V. and Wilma M.

Four years after their wedding Mr. and Mrs. Duncan came to Nebraska to make a home on government land, where their homestead rights might still be exercised. They made the journey from Minnesota to Rock county in a covered wagon and brought two cows with them. When Mr. Duncan arrived here he had only two dollars in money and a debt of twenty-five dollars behind him which had to be paid, but he was rich in courage and strength, and rejoiced to live and labor for his wife and two children. For a time a dug-out made a home for this little family, but after two years he was able to replace it with a better shelter. At first he worked for others where he could find work to do, cut posts for barter, at the railroad points, and, as might be imagined, made but slow headway, but he persevered. The second year he was here he secured an ox team, and prospects brightened for success. It was in vain, however, as a protracted drouth swept away all chance of a crop, and after the drouth came sickness in the family. Twenty years have rolled by since the Duncans arrived. They no longer suffer and toil and all but starve—that has forever passed. He owns, as already noted, one of the finest farms in northern Nebraska, consisting of five hundred and sixty acres, on which he erected ample buildings, and has provided a full stock of farm machinery, a good house, barns, and a grove of forest trees which gives what fuel the family needs. He also has about two hundred apple trees. In addition his son Charles owns a tract of eighty acres of land acquired under the Kincaid homestead law, and together father and son have a fine pasture of at least one hundred and twenty acres, while Mr. Duncan's home pasture embraces an entire quarter section.

Mr. Duncan helped to construct the railroad when it was put through Newport, thereby securing funds to support the family during the famine years.

In political matters he has affiliated with the Populist party. He has attended many conventions as a delegate, and is now chairman of the Rock county central committee. He is a member of the Mariaville lodge No. 399, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which he is recorder and his son Charles is master workman. He has been president and general manager for a number of years of the Independent telephone line between Newport and Mariaville and has proved to be a very efficient officer. When Rock county was separated from Brown, Mr. Duncan was the first assessor of his precinct, an office he held a number of terms.

CHARLES W. HUDSON.

Among the leading and substantial agriculturists of Cherry county, Nebraska, the gentleman whose name heads this review occupies a prominent place. Mr. Hudson lives on section 4, township 34, range 25, where he has one of the valuable estates in that locality, well improved, and enjoys a peaceful and happy home.

Mr. Hudson is a native of Nodaway county, Missouri, born September 20, 1857, the third in a family of eight children. His father, John Hudson, a carpenter by trade, was one of the early settlers and farmers in this county, coming here in 1883. He married Miss Rutelia Lamar, of American stock, Saturday, December 31, 1853, and to them were born a family of eight children, two of whom died in infancy. He was reared in his native state, becoming inured to hard work during his boyhood years, and came with his parents to Cherry county where he helped his father to open his farm. He soon afterwards took a homestead and tree claim in the vicinity of his father's home, and with ox teams broke the prairie sod which he cultivated in addition to helping on his father's claim until 1892; when he made a home for himself, building a good house and other farm buildings, and he is now owner of three hundred and twenty acres, of which one hundred is under cultivation and the balance in prairie meadow and pasture. His farm is all fenced, has a bountiful supply of good water, from several wells, with windmills, and a fine young orchard. During the drouths in his locality he lost two crops, and from a patch of eighty acres of land one year got thirty-five bushels of corn. A severe hail in 1907 left nothing in its track. However, he kept his courage during the hard times, and has become one of the prosperous and successful farmers of Cherry county.

Mr. Hudson was married October 26, 1892, to Miss Hattie Berry, daughter of Preston Berry, a farmer and old settler in Knox county, Nebraska. He took up a claim in Holt county, where he died in 1873. He served in Company B, Tenth Iowa Volunteers, and was a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic. The mother proved up on the Holt county claim and in 1882 came to Cherry county, where she purchased the ranch of her son-in-law at what is now known as Berry bridge and which she still owns. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hudson, who are named as follows: Etta, Gladys, Edmund, Dorothy and John, all born and reared in this locality. The family is well-known and highly respected by all and enjoy a pleasant and comfortable home.

PER MATTSON.

Per Mattson, whose successful career demonstrates what may be accomplished by persistent labor and honest dealings, is proprietor of a valuable farm in section 30, township 15, range 43, and is known throughout Deuel county as one of the worthy citizens of this locality.

Mr. Mattson was born in Sweden, December 10, 1864, and grew up there, receiving a limited schooling, working on his father's farm during his boyhood. In 1882 he, with his father, mother and brother, came to America, they settling at first in Pennsylvania, where they lived for two years, then came to Nebraska, landing in Deuel county in October, 1885. The father homesteaded in section 30, township 15, range 43, and this is now used as the home ranch. Here they went through pioneer experiences in establishing their home, going through hard times during the drouth seasons, often having a bitter struggle to get along, but worked hard to improve the homestead and finally succeeded in proving up on the claim. The family were among the very first settlers in the region, and have taken part in every movement which was started to develop the natural resources, remaining to enjoy the prosperity which has overtaken the locality. The father died in 1891, while our subject's mother makes her home with her son on the home ranch.

Mr. Mattson is now proprietor of a good farm, owning in all four hundred and eighty acres, considerable of which is under cultivation. He has a complete set of good farm buildings, a good well with windmill attached, and all conveniences and machinery necessary, and has a pleasant and comfortable home. He has a herd of about eighty cattle, and a good bunch of horses, with plenty of pasture and hay land, also good groves, etc. In 1908 he built a fine residence, and altogether has one of the best improved farms in the locality.

Mr. Mattson was united in marriage to Miss Emma Olson, on December 15, 1907. Mrs. Mattson was born and raised in Sweden, coming to America in 1891 and located in Chicago.

C. F. McDOWELL.

For over a score of years the gentleman whose name heads this review has resided in Sheridan county, Nebraska, where he has built up a fine farm and comfortable home through his perseverance and industry, supplemented by his good business judgment and capability.

Mr. McDowell was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, in 1841, and is a son of Isaiah McDowell, of Scotch-Irish descent, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, who settled in Mercer county when it was first opened up. He had a family of twelve children, and our subject was the tenth member, all raised on the home farm. When the war broke out our subject enlisted in the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Regiment and served up to 1863, and after being discharged, then entered the United States navy and served until the close of the war. Just after the close of the war he learned the cabinet-maker's trade and opened a shop, but was not successful and lost all the money he had in this venture. In 1869 he located in the "oil country" in his native state and lived there until 1885. He stayed in the oil regions for seventeen years, and managed to save up one thousand three hundred dollars, then came west and landed in Nebraska in 1885, locating in Sheridan county on his present homestead, and has since that time lived on this farm continuously. When he first moved on this place there were twelve pine poles on the farm, and the balance of his timber needed for a house had to be hauled a distance of twenty miles, so he started to build a sod house, and put up a rough dwelling and waited until the first train should come through this section so he could have the lumber hauled by freight for the roof. He was the first to receive lumber shipped over the new road into Gordon, and also got some of the first flour made at the Gordon mills. He had a hard time getting started on his farm and lost quite a sum of what he had saved when he came here. He just got nicely caught up when the dry years struck him and this put him back again so that he had to make another start. During the late years he has been very successful, engaging principally in stock raising and not trying to farm very much, and now owns a farm of four hundred and eighty acres, and has some of the best land in this section of the country.

Mr. McDowell was married in 1870 to Miss Ella Berlin, born in Clarion, Pennsylvania, in 1849. Her father, Nicholas Berlin, of German descent, was an old resident of Clarion county, who died at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. Mr. and Mrs. McDowell have a family of three children, named as follows: Anson B., Elizabeth and Milton B.

The family have a pleasant home and are well and favorably known throughout the entire community in which they reside. Mr. McDowell has spent many years here and has watched the development of this territory from its inception. He is one of the very first settlers in this locality and the only one within a radius of four miles to stay on his original homestead. He has done his full share in opening up the country and is familiar with conditions which have existed here since the early days and tells many interesting experiences which he has passed through. Mr. McDowell has never acted in any official capacity, nor has he ever served on a jury in his life. He is a Populist, but always votes for the best man in local affairs.

MICHAEL BRENNAN.

Michael Brennan, a farmer of ability and progressiveness, resides in section 12, township 31, range 48, and is one of the leading old settlers and respected citizens of Dawes county. He has watched the growth of that section from its early development, succeeded in building up a good home and farm, and may be classed among the self-made men of his locality. He is now well-to-do and enjoys a pleasant home and peaceful surroundings.

Mr. Brennan was born in Carbon county, Pennsylvania, in 1845. He is of Irish descent, his father and mother both having been born in Ireland, coming to this country when young people and settling in Pennsylvania, where their family of children grew up, the father working in the coal mines for many years in that section. Our subject was also employed in the mines when but a young lad, and at the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Third Pennsylvania Cavalry, and served for one year, taking part in many campaigns and battles.

After the war he returned to his home county and remained there for some time, then started west with his family, locating in Boone county, Iowa, and later in Green county, spending two years in the coal mines there.

Mr. Brennan first came to Dawes county in 1885, driving all the way from Iowa with a team and covered wagon containing his family and household goods, the trip taking a month on the road.

He located on a farm ten miles from Hay Springs and sixteen miles from Chadron, and put up his first building of sod and logs, in which the family lived for quite a time. Their start was very small, and they had a hard time to get along during the first few years, witnessing the dry years when nearly everything he planted failed him. One year he sowed one hundred bushels of seed wheat, and did not even get enough back for seed. During these hard times he left home and went into Hooker county, where he worked out on a farm in order to make a living for his family, and also spent some time in Wyoming in the coal mines. However, he stuck to his farm through it all, and has now built up a good home, has improved much of the land, put up good buildings, three windmills, and has one well three hundred and twenty feet deep. His ranch consists of about nine quarter sections of good land, nearly all fenced, and he runs a large number of horses and cattle, and also farms one hundred and seventy-five acres.

Mr. Brennan was married while still living in Pennsylvania, in 1870, to Miss Mary Walsh. Her father, James Walsh, was born in Ireland, and worked as a coal miner in Pennsylvania, and in his later years farmed there for many years. He married Elizabeth Hoben, a native of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Brennan was born January 10, 1855, and reared in that state. She is a good, kind-hearted lady, full of jolly good cheer and hearty sympathy with any one in distress. No one is ever turned away hungry from her door. Twelve children came to bless the union of our subject and his wife, namely: Mart, James, Charles, Lizzie, John, William, Thomas, Fred, Terry and Joe. Alice and Maggie, both deceased, the former being killed by a cow on the farm; the latter dying in infancy. An interesting picture is presented on another page showing Mr. Brennan's family and some of his ranch property.

C. H. WOODRUFF.

C. H. Woodruff, of Alma, Nebraska, owner of "Ash Grove Farm", located on the eastern outskirts of Alma, comprising three hundred and fifty acres of the finest river bottom and second bottom land, is one of the leading citizens of his locality. He has lately erected a handsome residence on this place, and is a gentleman of sterling qualities who enjoys a wide circle of friends.

Mr. Woodruff was born in 1849. His father, J. H. Woodruff, came to Ogle county, Illinois, in 1840, from Great Barrington, Massachusetts, and in 1884 moved to Nebraska, settling in the village of Sutton, Clay county. He died at Alma in 1905, aged eighty-eight. He married Miss Frances Williams, of Illinois, born in Westfield, Massachusetts. One son, E. M., was a pioneer settler of Clay county, this state, and is now in the treasury department at Washington, District of Columbia. Our subject's mother is a descendant of Roger Williams of old colonial days.

In 1882 Mr. Woodruff, our subject, located at Sutton, Nebraska, living there for a time and then engaged in the general merchandise business at Keene, Kearney county, running this for five years. He also was at Norman for a time, and in 1894 came to Harlan county, starting a farm. He has since bought a number of farms here when land was cheap, and in 1903 realized on these and invested in his present fine property. He has one of the finest groves in the locality, and his place is all in a high state of cultivation, well improved with good buildings, fences, etc. The alfalfa crop and its possibilities bespeaks this farm a fortune. He now has seventy-five acres of alfalfa land. Mr. Woodruff has started a herd of Shorthorn cattle of the best strain—Scotch. The bull heading Mr. Woodruff's herd is Lord Linton. Also Lord Lancaster is a bull of Mr. Woodruff's breeding and raising. He will have fall and spring sales at Alma, Nebraska, in conjunction with F. A. Heath, of Naponee, making Alma one of the best Shorthorn markets in the country. He also has a herd of pure bred Poland China hogs, and raises a large number each year for the market.

September 10, 1879, our subject was united in marriage at Rockford, Illinois, to Miss Nettie Jewell. Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff are the parents of the following children: May, Inez, Chester (deceased), Harry, Henry, Grace, Frank, Percy (deceased), and Bertha. Mr. Woodruff's son Henry is engaged in the stock business with his father, and they have jointly established a dairy business. They have a breed of dairy cattle in the country, and some fine animals for sale.

Mr. Woodruff is an active member of the Congregational church here, and his family are prominent in social circles, and all are highly esteemed in their community. In politics Mr. Woodruff is a Republican. Mrs. Woodruff died April 7, 1904, mourned by a large circle of friends.

OLAF SATEREN.

As a citizen of integrity and worth and a man of industrious and energetic character this gentleman is well known to the people of Dawes county. Mr. Sateren is counted among the oldest settlers on the "table," coming to Dawes county in the year 1885, before that section was organized under its present name. He has been largely instrumental in its development and growth, and richly deserves a prominent place as one of its foremost citizens. He resides in section 15, township 31, range 47, and has a very fine ranch.

Mr. Sateren was born in Goodhue county, Minnesota, in 1856, and is a son of John Sateren, a native of Norway, who came to America when a young man, landing in New York in 1842, and who settled in Minnesota on a farm, where his family grew up. The mother was also born in Norway, and now lives with her son Edward, at the ripe old age of seventy-seven. Our subject helped his parents in the farm work from his early boyhood, and received his early education in the country schools, later attending school at Zumbrota, Minnesota, for some time. In 1877 he left home and came to Nebraska, locating in Cumming county, near Wisner, where he farmed for about three years, and also worked on the steamboats on the Missouri river, plying between Yankton and Bismarck.

In the spring of 1882 he went to Valentine, teaming from Long Pine, and there summered a bunch of cattle, camping out all through that summer and leading a typical cowboy's existence. In the fall of that year he went to North Dakota and remained three months, spending the time in Wells county, and up near the Canadian line, where he worked at the threshing business. He next returned to Nebraska, going to Wisner, where he spent some time, and in the fall of 1885 took up a homestead situated in section 15, township 31, range 47, in Dawes county. There his first building was a board shanty, and he lived in this for a time, then put up a sod house. During the first year he worked in the woods, getting out timber and teaming, but after that time devoted his entire time to farming his homestead. He remained on the place continuously up to 1890, then went to Wyoming, where he spent one winter in the log camps north of Lusk. He also put in two years in the Sand Hills in Cherry county, where he worked at ranching. In 1900 he again went into North Dakota with a large drove of horses. He came back to Dawes county in 1901 and again began farming and building up his estate. He was successful in his ventures and gradually added to his acreage until he is now proprietor of a ranch of eight hundred acres, well improved and in first-class shape in every way.

Mr. Sateren has always taken an active interest in affairs of interest in his locality and aided every movement for the betterment of conditions in his community. He has served his district as road overseer, also acted as director of the district school, and is a worthy and influential citizen. Politically he is a Republican.

JULIUS A. RAUER.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history is well known throughout Cherry county as possessing a broad and intelligent mind, taking a deep interest in all matters pertaining to the advancement of educational questions of this locality. Mr. Rauer resides on section 6, township 33, range 31, and is highly esteemed as a worthy citizen and good neighbor.

Mr. Rauer was born in Freiberg, Province of Silesia, Germany, April 6, 1865. His father, August Rauer, was a laborer in the old country and died when our subject was but a year and a half old; he remained with his mother, Mary (Ende), until he reached the age of twenty, then came to America, sailing from Antwerp on the Bergenland of the Red Star line, and landed in New York city in October, 1885, after a voyage of ten days. He located first at Mansville, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, where he worked in the coal mines for one year, then came west to Warren county, Iowa, and spent one winter working in the mines there. He next went to Omaha, securing work on the Burlington & Missouri railway in western Nebraska during March, April and May, 1887; he then came to Cherry county, and on May 15 of that year filed on the homestead which is his present home. During the first six months after coming he worked on the waterworks at Rock Springs and Green River in southwestern Wyoming in order to get a start. He built a sod house and a stable of the same material, breaking up his ground with a yoke of oxen which he used for a time before he was able to purchase horses. He went through the drouth periods and had a hard time getting a start, "batching it" for several years. In 1894 he sold off his chattels and went into the Black Hills and Big Horn mountains, and there followed ranching, mining, cutting ties, and anything he could get to do, remaining for three years. He returned to Nebraska and remained for two years, then went back to the mountains, where he spent a year and a half, and in 1902 came back to his farm and has lived on it constantly since that time. The house he had erected was destroyed by fire November 14, 1907. He has three hundred and sixty acres of good land and all well improved, and he is also part owner in a threshing outfit, which is run all over the neighborhood through the threshing season. Mr. Rauer has seen all the different phases of pioneer life, traveling from Omaha in a wagon and to the Big Horn mountains by the same means. When he first located here he was compelled to haul all the water for use on his farm from a creek two and a half miles away, and his nearest trading post was Valentine, a distance of twenty-eight miles from his home, or at Tuxton, nineteen miles distant. He is one of the old-timers, and has taken an active part in the history of the country from its beginning. Politically he is an independent voter, and is a member of the Georgia lodge, Modern Woodmen of America.

In June, 1903, Mr. Rauer was married to Mrs. Florence Bolles, born near Manchester, Iowa, daughter of George and Phoebe (Handcock) Draper. One son, Charles, was born of her first marriage.

W. R. VERNON.

Among the well-known railway men of the western part of Nebraska the subject of this review holds a prominent place. He has been in this line of work for many years past, and is thoroughly familiar with all branches of the business. He is a resident of North Platte,

Keya Paha County, Nebraska.

Nebraska, where he has built up a pleasant home.

Mr. Vernon is a native of Muskingum county, Ohio, and was raised there. His father, John Vernon, died March 17, 1903, at Boone, Iowa, where he had lived for forty-seven years. His mother was Miss Caroline Lambert, also of Muskingum county, Ohio. Our subject entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railway Company at Cheyenne, Wyoming, in 1880, and worked as a brakeman and conductor on that road for six years, traveling between Cheyenne and Sidney, and later from North Platte to Denver. In 1886 he moved to North Platte and was appointed yardmaster on February 15th of that year and has held that position continuously ever since. During the twenty-one years which he has held this position and had charge of the North Platte Union Pacific yards, not a person has been injured, nor has any animal or vehicle ever received a scratch, although the traffic over these tracks is very heavy. He has been a member of the Order of Railway Conductors since 1892, and held the office of secretary of that order, division 35, for ten years, serving up to 1904, and attended the Order of Railway Conductors' convention which was held at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in June, 1904. He is also a Mason.

Mr. Vernon was married November 7, 1873, to Miss Ida M. Templin, daughter of W. D. Templin, a veteran of the Civil war, member of Company D, Thirty-second Iowa Infantry, in which he was first lieutenant. He was in the Red River expedition, and on that expedition lost a limb. He served as mayor of Boonsborough, Iowa, and also held the position of agent at that place, and is one of the most prominent and highly respected citizens of that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Vernon have five sons, all of whom are now active and useful young men, each a promising member of the profession he has chosen. They are named as follows: C. L., a brakeman on the Union Pacific Railway; John, and Charles, both following the same occupation; William, who was connected with the same road; Jessie, at present attending school. Harry was killed in an accident on the Union Pacific railway at Lodgepole, February 28, 1904. His son John was married September 18, 1907, to Miss Jennie McMichael. She died October 23, 1908.

SOLON D. STUART.

Solon D. Stuart, one of the truly self-made men of Keya Paha county, is a prosperous business man of this community.

Mr. Stuart was born on a farm in Caledonia county, Vermont, July 6, 1856, of Scotch-German parentage and is the fifth in a family of seven. When a young boy his parents, Seth and Sarah (Harvey) Stuart, moved to Illinois, where they located on a farm in Stark county, and here he was reared and educated, receiving a common school education. In 1879 Mr. Stuart started out for himself, settling in Mahaska county, Iowa, where he followed farming for eight years.

In 1880 he was married to Miss Alice N. Guthrie, whose father, John D. Guthrie, was an American of Irish descent. To them four children have been born, namely, Inza F., Hazel L., Laura A. and Wayne. In 1885 our subject moved his little family to Keya Paha county, settling on a pre-emption in section 34, township 32, range 22. His start was very small, and his first home was a sod house in which he lived for two years. Here he experienced many hardships and privations, suffering from the drouth periods, and to support his family Mr. Stuart did contract work, three years of this time being spent in Iowa.

In 1900 Mr. Stuart came to Springview, where he opened a grocery and drygoods store, which he operated six years before exchanging it for a farm of four hundred and eighty acres on Turkey creek, three miles southwest of Springview. The buildings form a page of illustrations in our work. He has also done considerable contract and bridge work in this county.

Mr. Stuart is one of the oldest settlers in this county, a public spirited citizen, and has done his full share in the making of the history of Keya Paha county. In politics he is Republican.

JAMES W. COOK.

James W. Cook, one of the leading pioneer settlers in Nebraska, is a farmer by occupation, who has built up a good home and gained the respect and esteem of all who know him. Mr. Cook was born in Upper Canada, February 18, 1852, within twenty miles of London. His father, John Cook, was a farmer of Scotch descent, and came to Michigan with his family in 1861. His mother was Miss Louisa Whaley, born in England, who came to Canada with her parents at the age of eleven years. There were nine children in the family, of whom our subject is the third member in order of birth, and he was reared and educated in Michigan. In 1879 Mr. Cook came to Nebraska with his family, settling in Colfax county, purchasing a farm there, on which he resided up to 1899, the place comprising one hundred and twenty acres, for which he paid six dollars per acre. After he had worked this for several years, improving the farm to some extent, he sold it for thirty-five dollars an acre. He had done exceedingly well on this farm, and accumulated quite a snug sum, and after the sale moved to Brown county, settling on his present ranch of six hundred and forty acres located in section 23, township 32, range 21. Part of this is used for grazing, and he has part under cultivation and raises banner crops on the land. Nearly all the hay and grain he raises is fed out on his farm, as he is extensively engaged in stock raising, giving particular attention to mules and hogs, which he finds more profitable than other stock. On the Niobrara river bottoms he has his best farming land, on which he raises splendid crops, having twenty-five acres of alfalfa. A fine brook running through the place supplies the family and stock with an abundance of water. When desired this is turned into a flume, which carries it to a water mill, which grinds all the feed needed for stock on the farm. A fine stone arch cave furnishes cold storage for milk, butter, etc. Mr. Cook was married in January, 1876, to Miss Stella Sherman. Two children were born, one of whom, Elgin, survives. In June, 1879, while the family lived in Colfax county, Mr. Cook's first wife died, and on June 19, 1888, he was married to Miss Mary Sebert, two children resulting from this union, Celia and William. Mr. Cook takes an active part in all county and local affairs, and has served his school district in various capacities at different times. In political sentiment he is a Republican. In religious faith the family are followers of Mrs. Eddy in Christian Science.

R. F. DAILEY.

Another one of the prominent old-timers of western Nebraska, and a well-known cattleman who has passed through all the experiences of the pioneer of that region, is found in the person of the gentleman above named. He now resides on section 6, township 17, range 45, Lisco precinct, where he owns a valuable estate and is held in the highest esteem and respect by his fellowmen.

Mr. Dailey was born in Stevenson county, Illinois on April 17, 1857. He was the youngest child in a family of eleven, and with his brothers and sisters was raised on a farm, attending the country schools, where he received a somewhat limited schooling and remained at home until he was eighteen years of age. At that time he struck out for himself, going to Iowa, and spent ten years there, then went to Leavenworth, Kansas, remaining a year, coming to Greeley county, Nebraska, driving through the country by wagon train. After about a year in that locality he returned to Kansas, then returned to Nebraska and settled in Deuel county, then Cheyenne county, in the fall of 1887, where he has since remained. He filed on a homestead on section 6, township 17, range 45, and during the first few years met with many discouragements in getting his ranch started. He witnessed the drouth years, when for four seasons he raised no crop of any kind. He went through sod-house experience and often had a hard time to get along, but by dint of honest labor and strict attention to his ranch work he was able to add improvements in the way of erecting good buildings, fencing his land, etc., and became possessor of one whole section of land, which he devotes to stock raising and farming. He now has a herd of about one hundred head of stock, cattle and horses, for which he has abundant pasture, and raises a large amount of hay each year.

Mr. Dailey was married in April, 1882, in Butler county, Iowa, to Miss Ellen Noonan, who is a native of New York state, her parents being pioneers in Iowa, where she was reared. The parents of both Mr. and Mrs. Dailey are dead. Seven children have been born to our subject and his wife, namely; Bernard F., Patrick, who died April 19, 1884, Winifred, John E., Margaret, Mary, and Robert, who died September 8, 1900. Mr. Dailey is the only member of his family to settle in Deuel county, while Mrs. Dailey has one sister living here.

Our subject is one of the substantial and highly esteemed citizens of his township, has been an important factor in its development, and has filled different local offices. In political sentiment he is a Democrat. When he first settled here he had to haul supplies thirty miles, and many nights camped out on the roads, his meals consisting of potatoes and bacon, using a molasses can for a coffee pot.

JOHN G. STETTER.

Foremost among the early settlers in Nebraska is the subject of this review, who has seen the development and growth of Valentine from its start.

Mr. Stetter was born in Richmond, Virginia, August 1, 1856. His father, John G. Stetter, Sr., was born in Germany and came to this country when a young man, here following the occupation of a farmer and dairyman. Our subject lived with his parents in Virginia until he reached the age of twenty, when he struck out for himself, coming west to Fort Robinson, Nebraska, to what was then called Sioux county, driving by team across the country, camping out summer and winter in government service.

While at Camp Robinson he was he was appointed the first sheriff of the county, serving in this capacity for one year, when he was appointed head ambulance driver under General Crook. Later under Gen. E. V. Sumner, he saw service, driving teams all over the west where the country was literally overrun by renegades, horse thieves and stage robbers from the south. In Crook's expedition at Fort Robinson Mr. Stetter came to Fort Niobrara, where his brother handled the beef contract for the United States government and the same contract for the railroad, as the first railroad into Valentine was then in the course of construction.

In 1885 our subject was married to Miss Maggie Danley, who conducted the first Sabbath school in Dawes county, and they were the first couple ever married in that county. At this time he had the beef contract at Fort Robinson, and they lived in a dugout, where their first child, Leta A., was born, she being the first white child born in Dawes county. Miss Leta attended the Valentine high school, graduating with high honors, and entered the State University, graduating from that institution in 1906, and was elected principal of the Dewitt high school in 1906-'07, filling the same position at McCook in 1907-'08, teaching English literature, Latin and German. She is a brilliant writer and scholar and a young woman of rare talent and ability, of whom her father is justly proud. She is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa society.

In 1884 Mr. Stetter opened a saloon in Valentine, soon after closing this out and going into a meat market in Chadron, Nebraska, which he conducted until 1890, then returning to Valentine and again going into the saloon business. He is also the owner of saloons at both Cody, Nebraska, and Hot Springs, South Dakota. At one time he followed the fortunes of a prospector in the Black Hills country, and while there was nothing better to do, went on the stage as a comedian in the Gem Theater under the management of Al. Swarringer. He is a natural-born story teller and entertainer, a man of wonderful resource and conversational ability, and this fact has made it possible for him to mix with the greatest characters of the west in the early eighties. He has been intimately associated with men who stand high in the army and nation, among whom are General Miles, Major Woods, and others equally notable.

Mr. Stetter has resided in Valentine almost constantly since March, 1890, and after the death of his first wife, which occurred February 8, 1890, he was married May 20, 1896, to Miss Fanny Barling, who was born in England, and was a dressmaker in Valentine at the time of her marriage.

Mr. Stetter is a staunch Democrat, representing his community at different conventions, and takes an active part in all local and state politics.

GEORGE H. IRELAND.

Among the well-known residents of Sheridan county is George H. Ireland, a man of sterling character and active public spirit. He has resided in this locality many years and has become closely identified with its history. He has a well improved farm and pleasant home and enjoys the respect and esteem of his fellowmen.

Mr. Ireland was born in Illinois June 29, 1850, and in his infancy came west to Iowa with his parents, who settled near Iowa City, where his father had land warrants from the Mexican war, taking the land for them. His father, Lemuel L. Ireland, was of American stock, born in Ohio, and had served for two years in the Mexican war. He tried to enlist in the Civil war, but was refused on account of his age. Our subject is the oldest in a family of nine children, and at the age of twenty-two he started out for himself. Previous to this he had worked out at different times, being employed on his uncle's farm for two years. He went to Adair county, Iowa, where he farmed for eleven years, and there saved considerable money. In March, 1887, he came west, landing in Gordon, Nebraska, and has lived here ever since. For the first two years he worked rented land, then located on his present homestead. The first year he settled on this farm he built a sod house, in which he lived up to 1906, when he moved into a fine cement block house, thirty-two by thirty-eight feet, and he now has one of the most pretentious dwellings to be seen anywhere in this locality. During the dry years he planted his crops faithfully and spent much hard labor cultivating them, but could not even raise enough for seed, and to support his family he was compelled to work out by the day. At the time of the Indian war in this part of the country, during the years 1890-'91, they lived in fear for their lives, but bravely stuck to their home, and came through it without having experienced any serious injury. He now owns six hundred and forty acres of good farming land and forty acres of timber, the latter being in the vicinity of Wounded Knee. Of this, he has under cultivation one hundred and fifty acres, and the balance is used for hay and grazing. He also keeps a large drove of stock, which nets him a nice sum each year. Of late years he has been very successful in his farming and stock raising operations, and has improved his place with good buildings, machinery, fences, etc.

Mr. Ireland was married in 1878 to Miss Alice C. Wilkinson, born in Illinois in 1854.

Her father, Wilson G. Wilkinson, was a farmer of American stock, born in Virginia, and her mother, Elizabeth Slaughter, was born in Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Ireland have five children, namely: Roy, Earl and Pearl (twins), Ethel and Fred, all of whom were raised in this county.

In political faith Mr. Ireland is an independent voter, and takes an active interest in the affairs of his party. He has held local office at different times, and has gained the confidence of all who know him.

WILLIAM KADAS.

Should the reader ask for a representative German-American farmer of Cherry county, Nebraska, for a man who embodies in himself the best elements of the old German character who has quickly entered into the hopes and ambitions of modern America, the name that heads this sketch might well be given him. Mr. Kadas resides on his well-kept farm in section 31, township 35, range 34, where he has built up a comfortable home.

Mr. Kadas was born in the city of Alt Stettin on the Oder river, Germany, February 1, 1852. His father was a sharpshooter in the German army, and in 1848 received a severe wound at Verschen, Poland, while in the service of his country, from which he died in 1864. Our subject himself was in the Sixth Cavalry and served in the Franco-Prussian war, in 1871, receiving a slight wound in a skirmish at Sainte. His family were among the rich and influential Germans and he was never taught a trade, as all of the poorer classes in that country are obliged to do. When a young man he made a tour of Russia, England and France, and then embarked for the new world, coming to Wisconsin in 1873, where he began working on a farm and later was employed in a tannery at La Crosse. He came to Cherry county in 1885, and his first job after locating here was on the railroad as a section hand. He only worked at this a short time, and in the same year took up his present homestead and started a farm. He built a frame house of good size, sixteen by twenty-four, and went to work with a will in improving his property. He was one of the earliest settlers in this part of Cherry county, and has done his share in building up the region. He is well known all over the community, and commonly called by his friends and acquaintances "Dutch Bill," a sobriquet which was applied to him when he first worked on the section to distinguish him from "Calico," "Wild," and "Irish" Bills, there being four Williams at work at that time, and the name has stuck to him ever since. He has established a good ranch, owning nine hundred and sixty acres of land, with one hundred and thirty cultivated and the rest in pasture and grazing land. His residence is fourteen by twenty, and he has a good barn twenty by eighty, with necessary sheds, with wells and windmills, and his whole place is under fence. A fine view of the residence and surroundings will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Kadas was married in 1871, while living in Germany, to Miss Mina Schueler, a native of Germany, where she died after giving birth to two sons, both of whom also died in the old country.

Mr. Kadas is a jolly, sociable man, well liked by everyone with whom he comes in contact. He is a Republican in politics, and is a member of the Cody lodge, Modern Woodmen of America.

THOMAS M. FREEMAN.

In listing the self-made men of Cheyenne county, Nebraska, who have become well-to-do agriculturists, and have aided materially in the development of the farming interests of this region, a prominent place is accorded the name of T. M. Freeman. For many years this gentleman has followed farming in Cheyenne county, during which time he has met with pronounced success and is known as one of the substantial citizens and well merits his high standing.

Thomas M. Freeman was born in Champaign county, Illinois, on the 23d day of December, 1855. He was raised and educated there, living on his father's farm as a boy, attending the country schools and receiving a fair education for those days, while assisting his parents in carrying on the work on their farm.

He came to Wayne county, Nebraska, in 1885, spent about a year and a half there, then moved to Cheyenne county, landing here on May 18, 1887, immediately taking up a homestead in section 34, township 17, range 50, which is his present ranch, or the beginning of the extensive place he owns at this time, which consists of one thousand six hundred acres. He has developed a fine farm and ranch, erecting a splendid set of buildings, and has made a complete success of farming and ranching. He cultivates about two hundred acres, and runs about one hundred cattle and a large bunch of horses.

Mr. Freeman has passed through all the early Nebraska times, when he first located here there being but a few straggling settlers in the region where he chose his home, and he has watched its growth and development from its earliest stages. He is a true westerner in spirit and a genuine old-timer of the state, always taking an active interest in all that tends to the benefit of his locality. He is a stanch Republican in political faith.

The father of our subject is still residing in Champaign county, Illinois, also the other members of his family, but the mother has been laid to rest for about twenty years.

ANDREW LEONARD.

Andrew Leonard, residing in Washington township, Franklin county, came to Nebraska in 1884 and purchased the farm on which he now lives, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres in section 1.

Mr. Leonard was born in Ireland in county Galway, where he was raised. His father, James Leonard, came from Ireland with his family, settling in Champaign county, Illinois, where they lived for many years. Our subject enlisted in the Fourth Illinois Cavalry and served for three years under Grant and Sherman. He took part in the battles at Fort Henry, Fort Donaldson, Bedford Landing, Pittsburg Landing, Corinth, at the siege of Vicksburg, and then went with his regiment to Natchez, and during all the times he participated in these different actions he was only wounded four times.

After the war closed Mr. Leonard returned to Illinois, and spent some years in that state. He located in Franklin county in 1884 and at once started to build up a good farm and home, and has met with pronounced success in his work here, has a comfortable home and is highly esteemed by all for his good qualities as a citizen, neighbor and patriot. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the family are devoted members of the Catholic church. Mr. Leonard has been a member of the school board in his district for many years, and has also served as assessor for his township.

Mr. Leonard was married to Miss Rose Kellogg, of Champaign county, Illinois, and to them have been born the following children: Thomas, a farmer and living at home; Andrew, residing at Salt Lake City, Utah; Ruskin, of Nuckolls county, Nebraska, and Dan, a farmer in this county.

PETER BELGUM.

Peter Belgum, who owns a well improved farm in this section, has been a resident of Box Butte county for more than twenty years past, settling here in the year 1886. Mr. Belgum was born in Norway in 1864, his native town being about one hundred miles from Christiana, where he grew up and was educated until he was twelve years of age, when his father came to this country with his family of three children, of whom our subject was one member, their ship landing in New York city June 28, 1877. They immediately struck out for the western states, and settled in Boone county, Nebraska, where they were among the first pioneers in that part of the state. The father built a house and opened up a farm and met with good success while on that place and the father still lives in Boone county. Our subject's mother died in the old country when he was about eight years old.

When our subject was twenty-one years of age he came west and began working for himself, settling in Box Butte county, where he filed on a homestead, and he still occupies this claim, which is situated in section 33, township 26, range 48. He put up a sod house and broke up land for crops with an ox team which he brought with him, and during the early days he also worked out by the day and week on neighboring farms, freighting, and anything he could find to do. He did construction work on the Burlington railway, which was being built from Broken Bow to Newcastle, South Dakota. He was able to get along pretty well in this way up to the time the poor years struck this locality, and then for eight years was unable to get ahead to any extent, barely making a living on account of failures of crops due to drouths, etc. He kept hard at it, however, and as the years grew better, conditions becoming more favorable, he began to build up his farm and add to his land, so that at the present time he is owner of half a section of good land and has a good farm, highly cultivated and well improved with buildings, etc., and engages to quite an extent in raising cattle and horses. Mr. Belgum also operates one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of leased land, which he uses for pasture and ranching purposes for his herds of cattle and horses.

During the early years in this region Mr. Belgum camped out at night under his wagon when making trips through the country, and went through all the pioneer's experiences and privations. The section was very sparsely populated, there being only a few houses on the road between his farm and Hay Springs when he first settled here.

Mr. Belgum was married in 1885 to Lena Olson, born in Norway. Five children came to bless this union, namely: Oscar, Julius, Tillie, Albert and Juliar, who died at the age of sixteen, in October, 1901. Mr. Belgum had the sad misfortune to lose his good wife by death October 15, 1905.

Mr. Belgum has been on the school board for a number of years, and takes an active part in the upbuilding of his district.

W. R. HARLAN.

Persistent industry and patient perseverance has placed this gentleman among the prosperous agriculturists of Phelps county, Nebraska. He came to Nebraska in 1880, locating in York county with his father, Dr. Elihu Harlan, who bought a farm there, which he still owns and resides on it at the present time, now aged eighty-three years. Dr. Harlan was born and brought up at Liberty, Union county, Indiana. He was a skillful physician and pharmacist, practicing his profession in Iowa for several years, but on coming to Nebraska gave it up for farming.

Our subject began his farming career in Iowa, and came to Nebraska, locating in the above county in an early day. He purchased a relinquishment and homesteaded in Union township on one hundred and sixty acres, farming this for five years. Here he lost by death his wife. She left one son, Elroy, sixteen years of age. After her death Mr. Harlan went to Colorado, where he bought some irrigated land, remaining there for some years. While in that state he married Miss Wilson, a native of Ohio, and one child has been born to them, named Ralph. He sold his property in Colorado at a good advance over what it cost him, and came back to Nebraska, investing in land near Loomis, Phelps county, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres. He also bought one hundred and sixty acres near Bertrand and recently disposed of this, and has purchased one hundred and sixty acres situated two miles northwest of Holdrege, which he intends to keep for a home and not to sell. This farm is improved with a fine house, barns and outbuildings, and has a fine grove of trees growing nicely. It is one of the best located and the finest home farms in the county. Two years ago this was sold for one thousand dollars, and the price Mr. Harlan paid for it was twelve thousand dollars, and at the present time he could take an advance over this figure should he wish to do so, showing the rapid appreciation of lands in Phelps county.

When Mr. Harlan came here he had no capital, and worked for five years on his father's farm. Since then he has made all he has by his own hard work and shrewd business methods in buying and selling lands. He has had wide experience in Iowa and Colorado, and strongly states that Nebraska is the "best ever" and he considers the greater success of the last few years due to the fact that people have come to know better the country, its soil and requirements, as this was true in his own case. He now, after plowing, harrows down the land two or three times, making the soil fine and level so it will stand dry weather and still produce big crops. In 1906 on one piece of land he raised forty bushels of wheat to the acre, and a piece put in later made twenty-five bushels, but all of it went sixty-three pounds per bushel and was bright and A1 grain.

Mr. Harlan is a strong advocate of potato culture in Nebraska. In 1905, from a patch of forty-four acres, he raised four thousand bushels of potatoes, all fine stock. He has all of the best potato machinery and thoroughly understands the matter of growing this vegetable. One year in Iowa he raised one thousand bushels from a patch of ten acres, selling the entire crop at one dollar per bushel, and this year he is also getting the same price at the market in Holdrege. There is no better preparation for other crops than to use the land for potatoes the previous year, except that it sometimes makes the ground too strong for oats. More money can be made from the culture of potatoes than from any other crop, as one man can easily attend to forty or fifty acres. However, one should not plant here varieties that make many potatoes to the hill, as should there be a dry season the potatoes will be very small. The Ohio Acme, Daughter of Early Rose and Carmen No. 3 are the best kinds for this state, running about six large perfect potatoes to the hill.

LEWIS M. MCCOY.

In reviewing the history of Dawes county, Nebraska, the citizens who have contributed to her welfare must be given special mention, and a prominent place among their number must be accorded the gentleman above named. Mr. McCoy is a pioneer settler, coming here in 1886, and is one of the best-known and most highly respected men in his region. He is a prosperous agriculturist and has built up a comfortable home and fine farm near Crawford, where he enjoys a peaceful and contented life.

Mr. McCoy is a native of Washington county, Indiana, born in 1848. His father, Isaac L. McCoy, was of Irish-Scotch descent, a stockman by occupation, who married Deliatha Stuart, born of English parents. When our subject was five years old the family moved to Iowa, settling near Burlington on a farm and were pioneers in that section, but did not remain there for long when they moved to Davis county, living there for five years. They next went to Monroe county, and during this time our subject was acquiring a common school education and assisting his parents in the work of carrying on their farm. About 1871 he went to Kansas, where he spent two years, then came to Brownsville, Nebraska. He had traveled all through Nebraska while it was still a territory, and he and his father did freighting from Omaha to Denver, the former making the trip three times when the Indians were in a hostile state. From Brownsville Mr. McCoy went to Emerson, Iowa, where he was engaged in the hotel business for a time, and then to Kearney, Nebraska, where he remained for seven years. In 1886 he came to Dawes county, driving through the country with a covered wagon, and the first summer he was here lived in a tent, building a log house in the fall. He first settled on a pre-emption and later on a homestead. His first supplies were hauled from Chadron. Crawford was then merely a tent town. During the first years his nearest neighbor was five miles away, and Indians were numerous in his locality. He at that time owned three ox teams and hauled timber from his farm and for others in the vicinity, which he exchanged for provisions. He saw some hard times, being hauled out a few times and meeting other losses and discouragements. He engaged in the stock business a number of years ago, and is still following this and farming a part of his ranch of two thousand forty acres, all fenced and improved with good buildings, etc. There is a good grove of natural timber on the ranch, and good clear springs of running water, making it an ideal stock ranch.

Mr. McCoy was married in 1869, at Glenwood, Mills county, Iowa, to Miss Ellen Otis, whose father, Barnabas Otis, was a mechanic and machinist, and a prominent citizen of that county. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy have a family of six children, who are named as follows: Irving, Guy, Lulu, Bertha, Barney, and Ruby, all of whom are married and settled in homes of their own near the parental home. Mr. McCoy and his wife are grandparents to eleven children.

In politics our subject is a Democrat on reform movements and takes an active interest in all local and county affairs. He has held the office of justice of the peace for fifteen years, and is now a notary public.

JAMES H. SKINNER.

Foremost among the old settlers of western Nebraska who have aided materially by their influence and personal effort in developing that region, is the gentleman whose name heads this review. Mr. Skinner was one of the first to take up homestead rights here, and the first public school was held in his home, as was also the first Sabbath school, of which his wife was the leading spirit. Mrs. Skinner was also the first school teacher in the district, and the first religious service in this vicinity was held at their home, both our subject and his wife taking an active part in all these affairs. Both Mr. Skinner and wife are of the Presbyterian faith. They went through all the pioneer experiences, suffering the many hardships and privations so familiar to the people who settled here when the country was new, inhabited chiefly by Indians, and with all kinds of wild beasts roaming the forests. From the earliest days of settlement in this part, our subject and his wife have watched the growth and development and during those years have managed to accumulate a nice property by dint of good management and earnest effort, and are now in position to enjoy their declining years in peace and comfort. They have a pleasant home in section 17, township 25, range 49, and are held in high esteem by all who know them.

James H. Skinner was born in Waterford, Erie county, Pennsylvania, April 13, 1835. His paternal grandfather was born in Ireland, came to America during the early settlement of Pennsylvania, where our subject's father was born and lived all his life. He married Mary Ann Certson, of Erie county, Pennsylvania. Our subject was raised in his native state and lived with his parents there until he reached the age of eighteen years, then left home and came to Illinois. He only remained a short time, then returned to his parents' home and began working as a carpenter and painter, following that occupation for some time.

Mr. Skinner was married in 1867, to Miss E. T. Durham, whose father, Ezra Durham, was a capitalist, of English descent, and her mother's maiden name was Lucinda Head. In 1884 the young couple settled in Michigan, at Maple Valley, and spent two years in that locality, then struck out for the west, coming to Nebraska April 2, 1886. Here Mr. Skinner filed on section 17, township 25, range 49, driving to his new home from Hay Springs, which was the nearest railway point, seventy or eighty miles distant. They were obliged to camp out at night, as the settlers' homes were few and far between, and had with them their entire possessions.

They put up a rude shanty as a dwelling, and started to make a home, having a hard time during the first years, meeting with every form of disappointment in the way of failure of crops and other discouragements, but never thought of giving up, and finally succeeded in developing their farm in good shape, putting up substantial buildings and doing all the work of building up his home and farm with his own hands, aided by his faithful life companion, and today they own a fine estate of four hundred and eighty acres as a result of their perseverance and pluck.

Mr. and Mrs. Skinner have a family of six children, named as follows: Henry J., Eva, Edgar, May, Maud and Myrtle, constituting an interesting family. Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Skinner will be found on another page of this volume.

Our subject has always done his full share as a public-spirited citizen, giving freely of his aid in every movement which has been started toward promoting the best interests of his community. He has held different local, offices justice of the peace, school director and road overseer. Politically he is a Republican.

LEWIS L. MILLARD.

Lewis L. Millard, a prominent farmer of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, is one of the men who carries on a diversified system of agriculture in a most successful manner, with results that richly reward his thrift and industry. He resides on section 19, township 34, range 22, and is a splendid specimen of a clear-headed, progressive agriculturist, his well-kept farm bearing evidence of his tact and good management.

Mr. Millard was born in Jefferson county, Wisconsin, March 7, 1859. His father, George E. Millard, was a farmer and early settler in Johnson county, Nebraska, coming here in 1866 with his family. He was of old Welsh stock, born in America, and married Caroline Madison, born in New York, of American parents. Our subject was raised on the frontier, where he attended the country schools and assisted his parents in carrying on their farm, beginning this work when but seven years old. The family lived in Johnson county up to 1885, then settled in Merrick county, the father now residing in Scotts Bluff county.

At the age of twenty-six Lewis left home and struck out for himself, settling in Keya Paha county on a homestead located eight and a half miles northwest of Springview. Here he put up a rough sod shanty and remained on that farm with his family up to 1904, building up a good home and farm there, the place consisting of four hundred and eighty acres on which he had put good buildings, planted a large orchard, and carried on mixed farming on two hundred acres. He witnessed the drouth periods, but never actually suffered from hardships, always being able to make a good living and enough to keep constantly improving his property.

In 1904 he sold out that farm and purchased his present homestead, where he has nine hundred and sixty acres, three hundred and fifty of which is under cultivation. He has a good house, barn, granary, windmills and tanks, and all the equipment necessary for operating a model farm. Since coming here he has also planted many fruit trees and has a fine grove of forest trees.

Mr. Millard is a blacksmith by trade, and for eighteen years had a shop on his farm and did considerable work for his neighbors and people living in his vicinity.

On September 20, 1883, our subject was married in Helena, Nebraska, to Miss Charlotte Montgomery, daughter of Thomas M. and Prudence (Pierce) Montgomery, both of American blood, the former a painter by trade, residing in Vigo county, Indiana, at the time of his death, which occurred in Florida, whither he had gone in search of health. Mr. and Mrs. Millard have a family of five children, namely: Walter, living in Colorado; Guy, in Long Pine; George, living in Keya Paha county; Gladys and Myron.

From the time of his early settlement in this section of the state, Mr. Millard has been active in advancing the commercial and educational interests of the region. He was one of the leaders in establishing the schools here and deserves much credit for the part he has always taken in the upbuilding of his community. Politically he is a Populist and takes an active interest in party affairs.

JOHN J. MANDEVILLE.

John J. Mandeville is a native of Indiana, being born in Jasper county of that state, in 1857. His father, Giles, was descended from early colonial stock of Holland-Dutch blood. His mother, Mary (Krantz) Mandeville, was of Scotch stock and her family dates back to Revolutionary war times.

Our subject was reared on a farm in the state of Indiana until he attained manhood. His educational facilities were limited and in his young days he had but little schooling. He loved to go up into the woods and hunt for wild game and was a great hunter, his father's place at Beaver Lake being the headquarters of the hunters of a widespread country. Thus he acquired the spirit of the chase and hunted a great deal in his youth. He learned to read and write when he was twenty years old, and then became a great student, reading all the books on history and literature he could find, and by this means he picked up a good education.

The marriage of Mr. Mandeville occurred in 1888, when he was wedded to Miss Ruth Boaz, daughter of Robert E. Boaz, a dentist and old settler of Dunning, Nebraska. Her mother was Miss Lucilla Wiley in her maiden days.

Mrs. Mandeville is a graduate of the Humboldt high school and has taught school and is a lady of culture and refinement. Her parents trace their ancestry back to English people who settled in Jamestown, Virginia, in the early history of the country. Mr. and Mrs. Mandeville have one child, Robert G., the first child born in the village of Dunning, Blaine county, Nebraska.

Our subject's early life was full of varying experiences and he traveled into several states, going to Lincoln, Nebraska, thence to Dakota and back to Indiana. In 1883 he came west to Holt county, Nebraska, where he followed hunting as a business. He filed on a pre-emption claim and proved up. He then lived at Atkinson, Nebraska, for several years, where he did an extensive game business. In 1887 he went to Dunning and engaged in the same business, meeting with good success. The same year he located a homestead near the town of Purdum and proved up on the land in 1889. Later he proved up on a tree claim and secured a tract of Kincaid land. He now has a splendid ranch, known as the "Dusky Heights Ranch," of eight hundred acres of deeded land and six hundred and forty acres under twenty-year school land leases. He also has forty acres near Dunning and five acres of timber on the Middle Loup river. His ranch is splendidly improved in every respect and he may be justly proud over the success that has been wrought by his industry and intelligence. He gives special care to his fine orchard containing three hundred peach trees, one hundred apple trees, also pear trees and an abundance of small fruit. As he looks about him, he can hardly realize that when he came to the country his start was only a shot gun, a dog, and thirty dollars in money. There is certainly a vast difference between his fortunes then and now; and he has made it all by his own effort. Of his land he cultivates about one hundred and twenty acres, the balance being devoted to stock grazing and hay purposes.

John J. Mandeville has filled an important place in the affairs of his community and has held numerous positions of trust and responsibility. He was appointed county treasurer in 1889; has been county surveyor for five or six terms and has been for years an officer of his school district which he helped to establish. Our subject has been closely identified with all matters of local interest and no one can be more progressive and public-spirited than he. Through all the years of pioneer hardships, drouth, hail and hard times he has pushed his way upward till he attained the success that he so justly merits.

FRANK V. LOVENBURG.

Frank V. Lovenburg, residing on section 25, township 9, range 37, has for many years past been identified with the development and advancement of Perkins county and is proprietor of one of the valuable farms of that locality. He was one of the early pioneers here, and although considerable of his time has been spent away from the region, he has always looked upon it as his permanent home, and is a familiar personage to all who have called it their home since the early days.

Mr. Lovenburg was born in Tama county, Iowa, on a farm in 1863. His father and mother were both natives of Bohemia, coming to America during their youth, and settling in Iowa, where they resided up to 1870. They then went to Kansas, locating in Republic county, where our subject was reared and educated, spending his entire boyhood days on his father's farm until he was eighteen years of age, when he left home and has made his own way in life since that time. He went to Iowa and worked in the coal mining regions near Des Moines for two years, then returned to Kansas and was employed as a clerk in his father's store for a time. In the spring of 1887 he came into Nebraska, driving through the country with a team and covered wagon, and covering the entire distance from his former home in Kansas to this section in this way, spending the nights camping out under his wagon, the trip consuming nine days. He took a pre-emption on section 25, township 9, range 37, and proved up on it in due time. During the first few months he had no house to live in, but occupied his wagon as a dwelling, finally building a sod shanty in which he lived for two years. He went through hard times, having a rather difficult time to get started owing to unfavorable crop conditions, and in 1889 went back to his old home in Kansas, engaging in the livery business at Narka, Kansas, which he carried on for two years, but was not successful and lost money in the venture, so gave it up. He again returned to Perkins county, remaining for about a year, then went on the road as traveling salesman, and worked all over Kansas, Iowa and Dakota, and followed this business for about seven years, in the employ of the McCormick Harvester and Machine Company.

In 1897 Mr. Lovenburg again located at Narka, Kansas, and established himself in the implement business in partnership with his brother, William, and continued this for nine years, building up a successful trade. In 1906 they were burned out, suffering a severe loss, and after this misfortune gave up the business, and our subject came back to Perkins county, settling on his farm, and has since made it his home. Here he has four hundred and eighty acres, with about seventy acres used for grain raising, and the balance is devoted to the mule raising industry. He has some very fine young animals on his place, and is building up a good business in this line, being a thorough judge of his work and a capable business man. Mr. Lovenburg has good improvements on his ranch and everything is kept up in good shape, the whole appearance of the place bespeaking good management and thrift in its operation.

Our subject was married in 1887, to Miss Anthony Stranskey, who was born in Bohemia, she coming to America with her parents and settling in Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Lovenburg have a family of seven children. Mr. Lovenburg takes a commendable interest in the affairs of his community, and has held different local offices.

HERMAN E. MILLER.

Herman E. Miller, well-known as a leading farmer and public-spirited citizen not only in the vicinity of where his fine and admirable farm is to be found, but also throughout Sioux county and the adjoining country, where his many sterling qualities are familiar to all who know the prominent residents of the section. A portrait of Mr. Miller will be found on another page of this volume.

Mr. Miller was born in Trebto-on-Rege, Germany, in 1847 and lived there until he was ten years old. His father, Peter, was a farmer in that country, and brought his family to the United States in 1857, settling on a farm in Door county, Wisconsin, where our subject grew to manhood, assisting in carrying on the home farm and attending the country schools, where he received a limited schooling.

In 1874 Mr. Miller came to Central City, Nebraska, and farmed in that vicinity for about fourteen years, building up a good farm and improving it in good shape. He next moved to Sioux county, landing here in 1888, locating at first on Soldier's creek, six miles from Crawford. While living on that place his wife died, and soon afterwards our subject had the misfortune to be robbed by bandits and relieved of three hundred and sixty dollars in cash, and was also swindled out of three thousand dollars in a contracting deal. He had hard times during that period, was unable to get ahead any, and finally left the place and moved to the Pine Ridge country, in 1900, and has remained in that vicinity ever since, living on three different farms and improving all to quite an extent, and has gone through many bitter experiences.

Mr. Miller finally settled permanently on the place he now occupies, which is situated in section 14, township 32, range 54, and here he has put on good improvements in the way of buildings, fences, etc. The place is well supplied with timber and fine trees of all kinds and well supplied also with good water for all purposes. The ranch contains four hundred and eighty acres, and he uses eighty acres as farm land, running a large number of stock on the balance of four hundred acres.

Although our subject has gone through many hardships and discouragements, he has succeeded in making the most of his opportunities and is at last the proprietor of a nice property. His handsome residence is connected by telephone with Crawford, and is supplied with every modern comfort and convenience, and is a model of rural progress.

Mr. Miller was married in 1870 to Bertha Miller, who was also born and raised in Germany. They have a family of eight children, namely—Theresa, Regina, Peter, Hannah, Magdalena, Antony, Annie and Eddie. The mother died in 1888. Our subject was married again the second time, taking as a helpmate, Mrs. Margaret Fricke, and they have a family of children as follows: Henry, Bertha, Agnes, Herbert, Anton and Emma, the last two mentioned being the children by a former marriage of Mrs. Miller.

Mr. Miller has done his full measure in development the commercial and agricultural interests of his community, but has steadily refused to take an active part in politics, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to his home and farm.

JOHN WEIRICH.

John Weirich, a well known farmer and ranchman of Cherry county, Nebraska, is one of the leading old timers of that section of the state. He has spent many years in this region, and has contributed in no small degree to the welfare and assisted in the development of the farming resources of the locality in which he chose his home.

Mr. Weirich was born in LaSalle county, Illinois, on the present site of Streator, January 20, 1859. His father, Joseph Weirich, was a coal miner, born in the Kingdom of Prussia, near the Rhine, and his mother was also a native of that country, both coming to the United States when young. There was a family of six children, of which our subject was the fifth. He lived in Illinois until ten years old, when the whole family came to Iowa and settled on a farm in Cass county. He remained with his parents until twenty-one years of age, then started out for himself, following farming as an occupation. He bought a farm in Cass county and farmed that for three years, then came to Nebraska, settling in Cherry county in 1887, five and a half miles south of Crookston. Here he took up a pre-emption and proved up, remaining there for two years, then moved to Sarpy county in the hopes of benefiting his wife's health. Here he secured a farm which he operated in connection with his trade, harnessmaker, which he had learned when a youth in Iowa. He returned to Cherry county in 1899, taking up a homestead on section 21, township 34, range 31, and there started to build up a farm and home. He has improved the place with good buildings, engaging in stock raising and ranching, and has added to his original holdings until he now has in all eight hundred acres of land, all enclosed with good fence. He has accumulated a nice property as a result of his industry and thrift, and is one of the representative citizens of his community.

Mr. Weirich was married in 1884 to Miss Clara Hegedorn, daughter of Fred and Mary (Abel) Hegedorn, both born in Germany, emigrating before their marriage, which occurred in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Weirich have one child, Elinora A., wife of John H. Fisher, who owns a ranch on section 22, adjoining Mr. Weirich's on the east. To this couple have been born three children, Daniel, Della and an unnamed baby.

Mr. Weirich has voted the Republican ticket for many years, and is a strong party man, but does not take an active part in politics, preferring to devote his entire time and attention to his home and ranch. All are members of the Baptist church.

FAY B. JAMES.

Fay B. James, a prosperous agriculturist and ranchman of section 18, township 25, range 31, Cherry county, is a leading citizen of that locality who has improved a fine ranch and met with marked success, incidentally gaining the respect and esteem of his associates by his sterling qualities and integrity of word and deed.

Mr. James was born in Grayson county, Vermont, in 1880, and reared in Texas and Nebraska on a farm. A sketch of his father, S. L. James, appears in this volume. During his boyhood years our subject, with his parents, moved to Texas, and after spending several years in that state, came to Cherry county, Nebraska, arriving there in March, 1888, when that region was just being started and settlers were coming in slowly. There they went through all the pioneer experiences, helping materially in building up the locality, Fay living at home with his parents until 1901. Then he filed on a homestead in section 18, township 25, range 31, and started a ranch of his own, putting up necessary buildings and improving it as fast as he was able. He had some hardships, but got along in good shape, and is now owner of a ranch consisting of six hundred and forty acres, all fenced, which he uses as a stock ranch principally, although he does some farming.

In 1904 Mr. James was united in marriage to Miss Sallie Holland, of Texas, daughter of Lafayette Holland and Isabella (Parks) Holland, of American descent. Our subject and his estimable wife have two children, Clara and Vera. They have a pleasant home, and have a host of warm friends and good neighbors in their community. A picture is presented on another page showing a ranch scene on Mr. James' property.

GEORGE VASEY.

One of the most enthusiastic, intelligent and successful farmers in Harlan county is the gentleman above named, and by his thrift and industry has accumulated a valuable estate, consisting of two hundred and forty acres, on which he has a handsome house fitted up with every modern convenience, including heat, bath with hot and cold water connections, etc. His farm is located in Eldorado township, and the soil is all good river bottom and second bottom land, on which he is able to raise banner crops of all kinds. He is treasurer of the Harlan County Agricultural Association, with the fair grounds at Alma, and is one of the up-to-date, progressive men of his county.

Mr. Vasey is a native of Yorkshire, England, and was raised on his father's farm there, the latter coming to America with his family many years ago, and settling in Nebraska in 1885, where he died in 1893, at the age of seventy. Mr. Vasey farmed in Christian county, Illinois, for several years before locating here, and from there he moved to Gage county, this state, for six years. His experience with the methods and soils of those places have been of great value to him in his agricultural pursuits here, and he considers, taking everything into account, that the Republican Valley is far ahead of any place he has ever seen. Since coming here he has made a special study of corn culture, and firmly believes in "thoroughbred corn," i. e., that each farmer should select the best possible seed and plant a patch by itself for seed, and in this patch he should pull out all the non-bearing stalks, as otherwise these will fertilize the others and much of the seed will thus be non-productive. It is his nature to study thoroughly whatever subject he has on hand, and in this way he reaches the best possible results in each part of his work.

Mr. Vasey first located in Harlan county in 1893, paying two thousand five hundred and fifteen dollars for his land, and at the present time it is worth more than fifteen thousand dollars, which is good evidence of the advance which has taken place throughout this part of the state in the past few years, due entirely to the efforts of such farmers and business men as our subject. He runs from fifty to one hundred high grade cattle on his farm, and about one hundred to two hundred hogs. He crosses Shorthorn cattle with the Red Polled, the former being his favorite for milk and beef. He feeds his calves flax meal, preparing them for market the first season, and sells them at an average price of fifty dollars per head, thus making a good profit, whereas he figures that keeping them for two or three years and then selling at seventy-five dollars per head is not making as much money. There are fine springs on his place for his stock, and he also has a splendid irrigation ditch in operation. To keep his farm free from grasshoppers he always keeps a number of guinea fowls, and finds this a very effective method of keeping those pests down.

Mr. Vasey was married in 1868 to Miss Margaret Tindell. To them have been born thirteen children. In 1895 Mr. Vasey was elected justice of the peace, and at present is serving as chairman of the Eldorado township board, having been a member of that board for some years. He is also on the school board, and one of the active members of that body.

WILBER DEHAVEN.

The gentleman herein named is prominently known as a citizen of integrity and worth who has given much of his time and financial aid in the upbuilding of his section, and who has always been found standing on the side of right and doing his full share toward meeting and providing for the public welfare. Mr. DeHaven resides in section 13, township 30, range 47, Dawes county, where he has a pleasant home and valuable estate. He also has a homestead over in Sioux county, Nebraska, where he spends a part of the time.

Mr. DeHaven was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1874. His father, Jehu DeHaven, was a farmer by occupation, and settled in Dawes county in 1885. Both he and his wife, who was Miss Margaret Beazell, were of American stock. They were among the pioneers in this region and raised their family here, going through all of the experiences familiar to the early settlers in western Nebraska. When our subject was two years of age they left Pennsylvania and settled in Marshall county, Iowa, where they farmed up to the time of locating in this county, where they took up a homestead south of Antelope Springs. Here their first building was a log cabin and they lived in this for about nine years, proving up on their land. Later they moved near Hay Springs to give the children the benefit of the better schools, and the mother still resides in that locality, the father having died in 1899.

At the age of nineteen years Mr. DeHaven started out to make his own way, going on a rented farm, on which he lived for some time, then began a home for himself. He took a homestead, and devoted all his time and energy to building it up and improving it, gradually adding to the place, and is now owner of a fine ranch consisting of four hundred and eighty acres, on which he engages in mixed farming and stock raising. His place is well improved, and he is one of the prosperous and progressive agriculturists of the section, highly esteemed by all as an energetic farmer and good business man.

Mr. DeHaven was married in 1895 to Miss Lulu Ferrel, daughter of Elijah Ferrel, an old settler in Sheridan county. The Ferrels were among the pioneers in that vicinity, locating there in 1884, and Mrs. DeHaven was raised and educated there. To Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven the following children have been born: Ida, aged eleven years; Delbert, aged eight years; Francis, aged four years; and an infant two months old.

Mr. DeHaven has served his township in different capacities, having been on the school board for some years, and is active in all local affairs. He is a Republican in political belief.

CAPT. C. H. BARRETT.

The above gentleman is one of the prominent business men of McCook, Nebraska, and well-known as a leading builder, contractor and architect.

Mr. Barrett was born at Syracuse, New York, and is a son of Henry J. and Sarah Cummings Barrett, both natives of New York state. His maternal grandfather was a soldier in the French army and served under Napoleon, and after coming to American shores was an administrator of a large estate near Syracuse, and was also a school teacher in that locality. At the breaking out of the Civil war Mr. Barrett enlisted in the Fourth Michigan regiment on May 16th. At this time the family lived at Tecumseh, Michigan, where they had settled. He served in Company G, as a private, then was promoted to corporal and soon afterwards sergeant. In the spring of 1865 the Fourth Michigan regiment was reorganized and he was commissioned as captain of Company C, which was composed of veterans from the old Fourth Michigan, all of whom had re-enlisted. This was a reward for meritorious conduct in action, and he was cordially congratulated by his superior officers a number of times, and is justly proud of this recognition. He was with the Army of the Potomac at the battle of Bull's Run, first and second, at Malvern Hill, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Laurel Hill, and in skirmishes nearly all of the time he served as a soldier. He was also at Spottsylvania Court House, and at the surrender of Lee, and on the latter occasion three hours after negotiations had been completed the tree and rail had all been cut into pieces and carried away as mementoes of this greatest victory in the history of our country. After this he went with his regiment to Texas and mustered out February 26, 1866, under special orders in favor of veterans. In 1898 his son, Henry J. Barrett, enlisted at Washington, D. C., in Captain King's command for the Cuban war. He was in the trenches before Santiago, and re-enlisted in the Second United States Infantry. He died in 1905. Another son, Ed. Bunker Barrett, enlisted in the First Missouri regiment to serve in the Spanish war, and afterwards in the Second United States Cavalry and served in Cuba. He now resides near St. Louis, Missouri. Mr. Barrett has two sons now living in Colorado and one in Oregon. One brother, Edwin Barrett, served in the Civil war with the Third Michigan Cavalry, and was killed in action. The men of this family were always among the first to respond to the call of their country for aid, and gladly gave their services wherever needed, all brave soldiers who risked their lives for the honor of their native land.

Mr. Barrett came west locating in Jackson, Missouri, where he served as marshal for two years, and afterwards as deputy sheriff for four years under Hon. Siebert, state auditor for Missouri. He then went to Colorado, settling eight miles from Denver, at the town of Armada, and after a short residence there he struck out for Nebraska and in 1902 came to McCook, where he has since continuously resided.

He has built up a lucrative trade here and has erected many of the finest residences in the city. He has gained the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen, and is recognized as one of the foremost citizens, always lending his influence to further the commercial and educational interests of the locality in which he chose his home.

Mr. Hall has developed a fine ranch through his hard work, and is now one of the well-to-do men of his locality.

Hamilton Hall was born in Montgomery county, Virginia, in 1859. His father, A. C. Hall, was a minister of the gospel in the Methodist Episcopal church and spent many years preaching in the eastern states. He married Miss May Cromer, of Montgomery county, Virginia. In 1864 the family came to Ohio, and there our subject grew up, his parents living at different places in that state during his boyhood years. He received a good education, and at the age of fourteen years started out for himself, following farm work and making his own way in the world from that time on. He finally left Ohio and drifted into Illinois, later spending some time in Oregon and in traveling through the western states.

In 1886 Mr. Hall first came to Box Butte county, locating near Lakeside, several miles east of Alliance. He took up a homestead on which he proved up and lived for four years. His first dwelling was a sod house, and for quite a while he lived alone in this, doing his own cooking, etc. In 1890 he moved into Dawes county, settling on the Niobrara river, east of Marsland, and here he engaged in ranching, starting first at raising cattle, and after a time began in the sheep business. He remained in that region for four years, then returned to Box Butte county and located on his present ranch, erecting a good set of ranch buildings and improvements, such as barns, corrals, etc., with everything fixed up in first-class shape. His ranch is located in and adjacent to section 23, township 28, range 50, consisting of six full sections of land, all of which is fenced and cross fenced. He has four wells and windmills in operation, and gets a bountiful supply of good water both winter and summer. He has made a great success of his venture, and has gained all his property by hard labor and perseverance, his sole capital, when he landed here being about two dollars in cash, and during the first few years here he was obliged to work out by the day in the country in order to make a living and start his farm.

Mr. Hall was married in Nebraska in 1889 to Miss Elizabeth Grant, daughter of John A. and Jemima (Rockhold) Grant, of Perry county, Ohio. #### GEORGE E. DOUGLAS.

The life of the gentleman named herein furnishes an example worthy of emulation to the rising generation. Through good management, persistent effort, strict integrity and painstaking care in the details of farming, Mr. Douglas has acquired a valuable estate and is known throughout the locality in which he resides as one of the leading old settlers. His home is in section 5, township 24, range 47, Box Butte county, and is one of the hospitable and pleasant places one would wish to visit.

George E. Douglas was born in Washura county, Wisconsin, in 1856. His parents were of American stock, his father born in New York state. He settled on a farm in Wisconsin during the pioneer days of that state, and there our subject was raised and educated, and during his boyhood attended school in the old log school house so familiar to the settlers in the early days. About 1861 the family moved to Minnesota and settled near Mankato and lived there at the time of the Indian massacre which took place in 1862, and they were there through all the excitement of the different encounters with the redskins for several years.

The father entered the service of his country, leaving the mother and her little family to keep the home going, and George, although a mere boy, was a great help to the family. When he was fourteen years of age his mother died and he was soon afterwards obliged to strike out for himself and make his own way in the world, following farm work in Minnesota, also working on the railroad and as a sailor on the Mississippi river. When he was eighteen he went to Wisconsin and worked for his uncle, who owned and operated a farm and store at St. Cloud. From there he moved to Fort Dodge, Webster county, Iowa, and there farmed for about seven years.

Mr. Douglas first came to Nebraska in 1878, and located on the old Pawnee Indian reservation, now Nance county, remaining there for seven years. In 1885 he arrived in Box Butte county, teaming from the eastern part of the state through the wild country and on the trip ran across many wild deer, antelope, elk, wild horses, etc. His first location has been his home all these years. This is located in section 5, township 24, range 47, and he has built up a good farm and ranch, living for a number of years in a rough shanty and going through many bitter experiences. He was obliged to haul all supplies from Hay Springs, fifty miles distant, and for a number of years did all his teaming and farm work with ox teams. For several years he made a good living and was able to save a little money by selling household goods through the country, also handled all sorts of kitchen utensils, etc., using a large wagon containing his wares. In the earlier days this was a familiar sight to the settlers, and the visits of the "peddler" was eagerly looked for by all.

Mr. Douglas is now proprietor of a ranch of five hundred acres, and one son, George, owns a section of land adjoining the homestead. He also leases other land, and engages in mixed farming and stock raising, dealing exclusively in hogs and cattle. His place is well supplied with good buildings and every improvement for properly operating it as a stock farm. Our subject has always devoted a great deal of his time to the culture of small fruits, and has a fine orchard containing all kinds of trees in good bearing condition. He is an authority on this subject, and in 1907 he had charge of the Burlington exhibit car, which was sent all through eastern Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri and Illinois. Mr. Douglas himself has prepared many exhibits for different affairs, showing the products of his own farm mostly. He will make a long trip this year through the east, with Burlington route farm products exhibit car; crops grown under irrigation and dry farming. He has made several such trips before with wonderful success and to the great good of his country.

In the fall of 1878 our subject was married to Miss Ida R. Merrill, whose father, J. B. Merrill, was a well-known ranchman and farmer in the Pawnee Indian reservation. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas have a family of nine children, namely: George A., Augusta (married), Earl, Frank, Clarence, Charlie, Etta, Lizzie and Louis. Mr. Douglas lost his wife November 5, 1906, and has never married again.

Mr. Douglas is prominent in local affairs and takes an active part in county and national politics, always voting the Republican ticket. A picture of George E. Douglas and family is presented on another page of this volume.

CORNELIUS HULSHIZER.

Among the early settlers of Nebraska who have labored for the upbuilding of that region, a prominent place is accorded the gentleman whose name heads this review.

Mr. Hulshizer was born on a farm in Ohio March 15, 1853. Godfrey Hulshizer, his father, a native of Germany, was by trade a miller, coming to this country when a young man, and his mother was Miss Phoebe Young, of English stock. Our subject is the seventh member in a family of eight children, there being also five half-brothers and sisters. The family came to Illinois, settling in Mason county, where he was reared and educated, assisting in the farm work until eighteen years of age, when he went to work for his father, who was at that time operating a mill. He followed this employment for about eight years, and at the end of that time had the trade thoroughly mastered. In 1872 he came west to Nebraska, spending two years in looking over the state and getting familiar with conditions here, and in 1874 located in Seward county, where he remained for nine years. He then came on to Brown county and took a homestead in section 30, township 32, range 20, where he put up a log house and built a shed out of hay in which to shelter his horses. His first years here were hard ones, and during that time he gained a livelihood by getting out timber, cord wood and posts, which were exchanged for provisions in town, these trips occasionally necessitating his being out late into the night. During the dry years all his crops were ruined and he found it hard to get along, but by perseverance and a determined will, he was able to overcome these difficulties, and succeeded to make a fairly comfortable living for his family. In 1896 he began to irrigate his land, and by this means is able to raise good crops. On a patch of six acres of ground one year he raised three hundred and sixty bushels of corn, this averaging sixty bushels to the acre, which is considered a pretty fair yield for that locality. His farm comprises six hundred and forty acres, of which he has fifty acres under cultivation, and the remainder is hay and grazing land. He has it well stocked and improved.

On March 4, 1877, Mr. Hulshizer was married to Miss Harriet Gordon, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock, whose father was one of the pioneer settlers in Seward county, settling there before the city of Lincoln was started. Mr. and Mrs. Hulshizer have three children, namely: Arthur, Roy, and Clarence. Mr. Hulshizer is one of the men who has always taken a deep interest in the educational affairs of the locality in which he resides, helping to build up good schools and using his influence toward the betterment of conditions in his community. He is Republican in politics.

KASPAR WOLF.

Kaspar Wolf, one of the very earliest settlers in Cheyenne county, coming here in 1879, when the region was practically in an entirely undeveloped state, has remained to build up a fine property and become recognized as one of the leading citizens of his locality. He is proprietor of a large and well improved estate, devoted to ranching purposes principally and has made a splendid success in that line. His residence is in Colton precinct, where he has a pleasant and comfortable home, and is one of the well-to-do and worthy citizens.

Mr. Wolf was born in the village of Nieder Elbert, Rheinisch Nassau, September 16, 1864, a son of Peter and Magdalena (Miller) Wolf, the father a miller in Germany. He died in 1875. Kaspar was given a good education and reared there until fifteen years of age, then started out in the world for himself to relieve his mother of his support; taking passage at Antwerp, on the "Rudolph," an emigrant ship, he earned his passage to America as a deck hand. After a passage lasting six or seven weeks he landed in New York and earned his passage thence to Baltimore on a coasting vessel. He came directly west, having enlisted in the United States army and was stationed at Sidney, and later at posts in Washington, Wyoming, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona. He became thoroughly familiar with the western country while in the army and made a brilliant record as a soldier, receiving prominent mention for his faithfulness to duty, and was discharged at Sidney, Nebraska, after a service of eight years and nine months. After leaving the service, he engaged in cattle raising and for a time prospected in the Black Hills and in Colorado but was not fortunate enough to strike a good lead.

Mr. Wolf first homesteaded in 1889, but after starting a farm he abandoned the place and allowed it to go back, and later homesteaded on section 2, township 15, range 48, taking this farm in 1896. He stuck to the place, constantly improved it, erected good buildings, planted trees, and now has a fine estate, consisting, of six hundred and forty acres of deeded land, besides controlling four hundred and eighty acres additional. About one hundred acres are in a high state of cultivation on which he raises splendid crops, and he is engaged to quite an extent in stock raising, running one hundred cattle and and a small bunch of horses. The ranch has a complete set of good buildings, corrals, all fenced, and every improvement necessary for the operation of a model ranch and farm.

On September 7, 1892, Mr. Wolf was married to Mary Freichs, at Sidney. She was a native of Adams county, Illinois, and came to Cheyenne county with her father, Herman Freichs, in 1886, they being among the pioneers in that region, and the family are well known to all the old timers. Six children came to bless the union of our subject and his estimable wife, named as follows: Rudolph, Magdalene, Mary, Paul, Katie and Alice, all of whom are living at home, each assisting in a large measure to carry on the home ranch.

Since his residence in this county Mr. Wolf has taken an active interest in every movement for the betterment of conditions, and his name will be remembered through all the coming history of the state of Nebraska as a leading man in the county's affairs. He is a staunch Democrat, uses his influence for the good of the party, and has attended numerous conventions of the party as a delegate. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America of Sidney.

J. BLOOMER HULL.

J. Bloomer Hull, better known as "James B. Hull," was born in Iowa in 1860 on a farm. His father, Henry Hull, was born in Ireland and emigrated to this country when a young man, and his mother was of Scotch descent, born and raised in Illinois. Our subject was the youngest in his father's family and was reared in Iowa, where he became familiar with all kinds of hard farm work. His father died when he was but a lad of twelve years, and he remained with his mother until he reached his twentieth year, when he began work as a brakeman on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, continuing at this for two years. In 1885 he came to Valentine and took a tree claim northwest of town, and for a time he had a pretty hard time. His first building was a sod house, and he spent his time farming and doing any kind of work he could get. One year later he began freighting, this work taking him among the Indians a great deal, and he stuck to it for about three years, going through many rough experiences, often being compelled to camp out at night. Subsequently he was on the Rosebud reservation for eight or ten years, where he ran a boarding house connected with the Industrial school.

After this he went to work as a bartender and in 1899 started in the saloon business for himself. He still owns the tree claim which he took up on coming to Cherry county, and also a fine house in Valentine.

Mr. Hull was married to Miss Annie Lan-ner, who is of German descent, born and raised in Iowa. In politics Mr. Hull is a Republican, and takes an active interest in all party affairs.

WILLIAM BATEMAN.

William Bateman, more familiarly known as "Uncle Billy," an old-timer of Sheridan county, was for years recognized as one of the representative citizens of this locality.

Mr. Bateman was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1832, was raised there and lived with his parents until he was twenty-three years of age. His father, John Bateman, was a stage driver before the railroad was introduced in their vicinity, and he and his wife never left the mother country. In 1885 our subject came to America and located in Wisconsin where he remained for thirty-two years with the exception of one winter which was spent in Idaho. He is a butcher by trade, and followed that occupation at different times in his younger days. In 1864 he crossed the plains and engaged in the stock business, which he has followed almost constantly since coming to America. In 1887 he came to Sheridan county and filed on the homestead which he occupied for many years, moving his family here the following spring. He experienced some pretty hard times during the dry years which struck the locality soon after he settled here, and lost all his crops for several seasons, and his finances got so low that had he paid his debts he would not have had anything left. He worked hard in establishing his farm, and gradually added to it until he became the proprietor of nine hundred and sixty acres of good land. His ranch was well improved and he built a good house, barns, etc., making a pleasant home and valuable estate, which he gained by dint of his industry, supplemented by the strictest integrity, and he well merited the success and high standing accorded him in his community. In 1907 he sold his farm property and returned to Wisconsin on a visit. He has bought property in Gordon, however, and intends to make that place his home.

Mr. Bateman was married in 1871 to Miss Elizabeth Caunt, who was born in England and came to America with her parents when a young girl. Her father never liked America and was dissatisfied after settling here. Her mother, who was Miss Anna Smith, was born in England, in 1825, and is now living in South Dakota and enjoying the best of health. Mr. and Mrs. Bateman have a family of eight children, namely: Nelson, William, Margaret, Louisa, Matthew, Fred, Elizabeth and Lillian, all of whom, excepting three which died in infancy, grew to young manhood and womanhood.

In 1904 Mr. Bateman returned to England for a visit, and intends to go again soon, as he enjoys revisiting the scenes of his boyhood and living over again the happy days he spent in the mother country. He is one of the oldest men in this part of the state, but is hale and hearty, does not know what sickness is. He is an inveterate reader, never using eye-glasses or any aid for his sight. He keeps abreast of the times, and is one of the best informed men in the community. He is a Republican. He takes an active interest in party affairs, but has never held any office in Nebraska but has served his party in different capacities while living in Wisconsin. He has a host of acquaintances and enjoys the friendship and esteem of everyone who knows him.

FRANK L. RUNDQUIST.

The above named gentleman is one of the old settlers in this part of the state of Nebraska, and has been closely identified in the development and growth of this locality, aiding materially in the upbuilding of the community in which he chose his home.

Mr. Rundquist was born in Wexeo, Sweden, in 1846, and came to America when he was twenty-one years old. He located in Minnesota, remaining there for some years, and in 1879 came to Phelps county, settling on a timber claim in Sheridan township, section 14. Here he built a sod house and went to work improving the property. He soon after built a frame dwelling. He planted trees on his farm, and had a grove of eighteen acres, and was very successful in his farming operations, raising grain, and mixed stock. He had a large number of chickens, and about fifty to seventy-five hogs. His wheat crop averaged twenty-two and corn fifty bushels to the acre. He remained on this place up to 1904, then sold his holdings, and purchased the eighty acres where he now lives, situated on section 32, of Sheridan township, Phelps county. This property adjoins the town of Holdrege. He has this farm well improved, and is very comfortably situated. In 1906 Mr. Rundquist visited Sweden, remaining for two months, and went all over the country around Stockholm. He visited the fair at Nochapin.

Railways have made a great change in that country, and many small towns have sprung up all around in the vicinity of his old home. The timber is rapidly being cut down, and everything much changed from the time he lived there. Every man is obliged to serve three years in the army, and the people are very slow in taking up modern improvements, and it is next to impossible to accumulate any great amount of wealth in that country.

Mr. Rundquist was married in 1876 to Miss Sophia Peterson, of Sweden, and they have a family of three children, namely: Anna, Sally and William.

Mr. Rundquist takes a commendable interest in all matters of public interest in his community, was assessor of his township for ten years, and under the new law, acts as deputy, which he has held since 1905. He is also a member of the school board. In political faith, he is an independent voter.

WILLIAM H. KENNEDY.

William H. Kennedy, a well known resident of Cherry county, Nebraska, is a man of enterprising spirit and good citizenship. He was born in Omaha, August 23, 1864, and is a son of Hon. B. E. B. Kennedy, an old settler of Cherry county, and now a prominent attorney, practicing in Omaha, where he settled in 1858. He was one of the first mayors of Omaha, and a member of the state legislature. Our subject's mother was Miss Frances Nims, of an old American family. Mr. Kennedy, the second in a family of three children, grew up in Omaha, attended the city schools, afterwards studied law and was admitted to the bar. For the period of two years he was identified with the Midland Guaranty & Trust Company, and at the expiration of that time associated himself with the Union Pacific Coal Company for one year.

In the year of 1885, Mr. Kennedy came to Cherry county, Nebraska, and took pre-emption in section 29, township 30, range 30, and proved up. Then he returned to Omaha for a time and assisted his father in the latter's law office until 1893, when he came back to Cherry county, settling near what is now Kennedy postoffice (which office was named after him), on his tree claim on section 31. In 1894 he was married to Miss Nancy E. McAlevy, a school teacher, daughter of Samuel E. McAlevy, who was a ranchman and one of the old settlers of Cherry county. Five children resulted from this union, named as follows: Benjamin, Samuel, Charlotte, Curtis and Elizabeth.

Mr. Kennedy is at present engaged in stock raising and ranching, and is the owner of a six-hundred-and-forty-acre ranch, located in section 31, township 30, range 30, and section 5, township 29, range 30, Cherry county, Nebraska. His brand is known as the "Flying E. Bar" ranch. He is one of the substantial old settlers of this county, and has done his full share in the making of history of this section of the country. He has passed through many hardships and discouragements in reaching the success to which he has attained, and is respected and admired as one of the leading citizens of Cherry county, Nebraska.

Mr. Kennedy is a staunch Democrat, and has held local office at different times. Since November, 1906, he has served as postmaster at the office which bears his name.

OCTAVE HARRIS.

Octave Harris, the subject of this personal history, was born in Biddeford, Maine, in 1860, came west during the pioneer days of Nebraska, and is now living in peace and plenty on his handsome and well-appointed farm in section 5, township 28, range 54, Sioux county. He is well entitled to the rich measure of success that has come to him through hard work and thrift, as a result of many years of endeavor and economy, and is now reaping well-deserved reward. Mr. Harris resides in section 5, township 28, range 54, and is one of the well-known and highly respected citizens of his locality.

The father of our subject, John B. Harris, was a farmer all his life, he settling in Colorado in 1878. When Octave was two years of age his mother died. He lived in his native state until he was nine years of age, then came west with a sister, locating in California, remaining there for one winter. In 1871 he went to Fort Collins, Colorado, and worked out on ranches as a cowboy, and while yet a young lad rode all over the western country, rounding up cattle along the Powder river, and all the streams in this western county. For five years he lived with and was employed by Andrew McGinley, who is a prominent old settler and well-known ranchman of Sioux county. Octave located in this county in 1880, and for about five years worked as a cowboy, riding on horseback all through the country from Platte City to South Pass, Wyoming, and was familiar with every part of western Nebraska.

In 1885 Mr. Harris located on a ranch of his own, situated on Running Water river, which was, at that time, entirely unimproved prairie, and he had to start at the very beginning to build it up. He first put up a log house and remained on the land up to 1892, then came to his present location, filing on it as a homestead. He is now proprietor of one thousand six hundred acres, also operates a large tract of leased land as a ranch. He has a fine brick house of commodious size, 36x36 feet, two full stories high, with a nine-foot basement, and is one of the handsomest residences in the locality. He is engaged principally in the cattle and horse business, raising many animals each year for the market and breeding purposes.

Mr. Harris was married on March 7, 1885, to Caroline N. Abler, whose father, Lewis M. Abler, was a carpenter and wheelwright, and emigrated from France to this country during young manhood. Five children were born to our subject and his good wife, namely: Lewis, James Lester, Fred Abler, Frank and Addie May, all born and raised in this county.

Mr. Harris is a Republican in political belief.

KARL LURZ.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history, owns a fine estate in Cherry county, Nebraska, located in section 13, township 31, range 26, where he has built up a comfortable and pleasant home.

Mr. Lurz was born in the village of Augsburg, Kingdom of Bavaria, October 28, 1843, and is a son of Gottlieb Lurz, a huntsman by occupation, living in Augsburg, where he raised his family of eight children, of whom our subject is the second member. At the age of twelve he began work, brick making, at which he was engaged for many years. At thirty he was superintendent of a large brickyard and seven years later established a business for himself, which he conducted until emigrating to America. Sailing from Antwerp on the Red Star liner Wiessland, in 1891, he landed in New York after a voyage of twelve days. Settling in Buffalo, he remained for nearly four years, working as a brickmason, while his son followed carpenter work in an ice box factory in that city. May 7, 1894, the family moved to Cherry county, where they took a homestead, the father on section 13 and the son on section 14, both of whom still live on and own these farms. Mr. Lurz has spent considerable money in improving the farm, building fences, barns, etc. The farm consists of one thousand four hundred and forty acres, most of which is hay land. For some time he was engaged in stock raising, but of late he has sold off the stock and has now turned his entire tract into a hay farm, shipping large quantities of baled hay each season.

Mr. Lurz was married in Germany, in 1867, to Miss Eva Schnelle, who died in January, 1884. They had a family of children, namely: Fannie, now Mrs. Oley Brockley, living in Montana; Mary, wife of Karl Hoffstedder, and Karl, Jr., born October 29, 1875. The latter is his father's right-hand man, and the two are associated together in all their dealings. When they came to this section they lived in sod houses for some years, then put up substantial frame houses and have pleasant homes. Karl, Jr., was married July 4, 1904, to Miss Ida Wilke, a native of Nebraska, born in 1888. They have two children, Elsie and Millie. Karl, Jr., is a member of Wood Lake Camp No. 2947, Modern Woodmen of America. Both father and son are staunch Democrats. They are highly esteemed in the locality in which they reside and are prosperous and worthy citizens. Mr. Lurz and his family are members of the Catholic church.

WINFIELD S. PHILLIPS.

Winfield S. Phillips, a leading old settler of Dawes county, Nebraska, is the owner of a fine stock and grain farm in township 30, range 52, where he, with his family, enjoy a pleasant and peaceful life, surrounded by a host of warm friends and good neighbors, living on his Kincaid homestead.

Mr. Phillips is a native of Van Buren county, Iowa, born in 1855. His father, Moses Phillips, was of Irish-German extraction, a farmer by occupation, and married Miss Sarah Silvers, of Ohio. Our subject was reared and educated in Iowa, where he was brought up to do all sorts of hard farm work, and during his boyhood years learned the lesson of responsibility and energy from his sturdy parents, which stood him in such good stead in later life. In 1879 he left Iowa and driving overland settled in the western part of Kansas, locating in Decatur county. The trip was made in a covered wagon and took many weeks, the nights being spent in camping out along the way. The first year he was in Kansas the drouth destroyed his small crops, but after that had better success and he remained there for seven years, when he sold out his holdings for a good sum and returned to Iowa. He spent three or four years there, then decided to go back to Kansas, and in the fall of 1890, left the latter state and came to Nebraska, settling in Dawes county, where he began farming on rented land, which he worked for a couple of years, then bought his present farm in section 18, township 30, range 52, and later took a Kincaid homestead adjoining this farm. He and his wife now own one thousand one hundred and forty acres of good land located on Dead Man's creek, and here he has fine running water for his stock, of which he keeps quite a large number. There is plenty of natural timber on the place, wild fruits, etc., and he raises good crops of small grains, cultivating about seventy acres, while from forty to fifty acres can be irrigated. He has been very successful in his different ventures, and is counted one of the wealthy men of his locality, all gained through his thrift and industry, supplemented by good business judgment and honesty of dealings. When he lived in Kansas he dwelt in a sod house for a time and had to start farming with wild, raw prairie land, utterly unimproved, and succeeded in building up a good home there.

Mr. Phillips was married in 1877 to Miss Malinda Hughes, daughter of Jerry A. and Elizabeth (Wycoff) Hughes, and to them have been born eight children, seven of whom are living, named as follows: John, Hollie, Rollie, Mose, Elsie, Lottie and Winfield. Timothy, second of the children, is deceased.

In political views our subject is a strong Republican.

JOHN W. DANIELS.

John W. Daniels is well entitled to a prominent place among those who have helped to make Cherry county a prosperous section of Nebraska. He has worked hard, faced many privations with a strong and courageous spirit, and managed his affairs wisely and well, so that, while still in the forties, he is deservedly written in this history as one of the leading citizens of this region. His home is in section 3, township 30, range 29, and here he has built up one of the leading agricultural establishments in Cherry county.

Mr. Daniels was born near Morrison, Whiteside county, Illinois, April 29, 1860, where his parents, David and Mary (Potter) Daniels, had long been established as successful tillers of the soil. Both were American born, the father a native of Massachusetts, the mother of Ohio. John W. was their second in a family of eight children. He was reared on the farm, where he remained until reaching the age of seventeen years, when he left home to determine his destiny for himself. Naturally he followed farming, to which he had been reared, and for which he seemed to have a special fitness. For a time he worked in this line in Iowa, and then went into the southern part of Nebraska, where he rented land for two years on a farm in Adams county. In 1884 he made his first appearance as a settler in Cherry county, and in August of that year located on a pre-emption claim. Here he lived alone for some years, and had for his "bachelor" home a sod house, a most modest and unassuming structure, but equal to his needs in those early days. He did his farm work with oxen, and carried on such grain and corn farming as was customary at that time. His constant effort, however, has been to get away from grain as his main line, and become a stock breeder. This he is doing and on a very large scale. He owns an extensive ranch consisting of twenty-four hundred and eighty acres, well watered by Gordon creek and Watts and Meadow lakes, which border it, and suitable alike for pasture or hay, and here he is developing a very important horse, mule and cattle industry. He has taken advantage of the homestead, pre-emption and tree claims in securing his land, and has a Kincaid homestead of four hundred and eighty acres.

Mr. Daniels was married May 8, 1889, to Miss Minnie E. Davis, a native of Kane county, Illinois, reared in Bureau county of that state. Her father, William S. Davis, an old settler in Cherry county, is a native of Warren county, New York. After fifteen years' residence in Illinois he migrated to Thayer county, Nebraska, in 1880, and five years later to Cherry county, where he took up a homestead with a tree claim on Schlage creek. Her mother, Margaret Swartout, is of German descent, a native of Dutchess county, New York. To Mr. and Mrs. Daniels two children have been born, Carl A. and Ralph R.

Mr. Daniels has taken an important part in local and county affairs and has repeatedly been elected to high positions by the Republican party. He has attended many conventions and other political gatherings and conferences as delegate and a leading member of the party. In the fall of 1898 he was elected clerk of Cherry county, and served four years in that position, proving in every way a competent and trustworthy official. He affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Valentine.

On another page of this volume we present a picture of Mr. Daniels' ranch residence and the family group.

EDWARD G. GREEN.

Nebraska has much to be grateful for in the achievements of its hardy pioneer settlers who dared to penetrate into what were then dry and desert regions to make fertile homes and farms with the assurance of better things in store, and an irresistible faith in its future. Heated winds swept its arid prairies and all vegetation seemed to perish, but they saw possibilities, and sod houses and shacks arose and fringes of settlement continually crept to the west, until the state becomes imperial in its agricultural development, with its forests of fruit and timber, and its magnificent herds of horses and cattle. Among those who are honored as the veterans of this great struggle is Edward G. Green, of Kirkwood precinct, Rock county, who is still at the prime of his life with his natural powers still unabated or his manhood unbroken—so new and young is this Nebraska in its making and history.

Mr. Green was born in Monroe county, Arkansas, February 8, 1868, and is the fourth member of a family of seven children born to his parents, George W. and Amelia C. (Duncan) Green, both of whom were descendants of old American stock and lived to the best traditions of their ancestry. In the spring of 1878 the family removed to Watonwan county, Minnesota, and the following year to Rock county, Nebraska, making their journey overland from Minnesota in what was called a "prairie schooner," propelled by oxen, and requiring four weeks for the completion of the trip. The family home was made on section 18, township 32, range 17, and here the varying fortunes of pioneer days were experienced to the full.

When Edward G. Green had reached the age of twenty years he was united in marriage with Miss Cora White, whose father, Ezra White, was a farmer and miller in Iowa. To this union have come four children—Roy, Blanche, Delpha and Elden. After his marriage Mr. Green pre-empted land in the southern part of Rock county, where he built a sod house which became the home of the new family for some three years. At that time many were attracted by the promise of the new country just being opened up to the world by the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Mr. Green and his wife spent two years in Oregon, but were not entirely satisfied with the country, and returned to Rock county in 1893, and for the ensuing three years were residents of Long Pine or vicinity. Later Mr. Green rented land near the old homestead, which he cultivated for four years, after which he bought his present farm in sections 19 and 20, township 32, range 17, and here we find him at the present time well situated and becoming prosperous to a marked degree. He has remodeled the dwelling house, put up good buildings, and in general greatly improved the place. The evergreen grove filling the front lawn is an especially attractive feature of the place. His farm is one of the choice quarter sections of the county.

Mr. Green is a Republican in his political associations, and takes much interest in local conditions and questions. He has been precinct assessor and is regarded as one of the most reliable and substantial citizens of the day. The family are members of the Kirkwood Methodist church.

ZACARIAH C. HARRIS.

Zacariah C. Harris, who lives on section 30, township 21, range 17, has not always been a farmer. For years he was in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company as a fireman and locomotive engineer and is familiar with hundreds of miles of the company's roadbed in Nebraska. Mr. Harris is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and still keeps up his membership, although he does no railroading. He purchased his present model little farm in 1895, but did not move upon it till 1907, since which time he has made it his home.

Mr. Harris is a native of Marine City, Michigan, where he was born in 1863. His father, Orsemus Harris, was a shipbuilder at Marine City, Michigan, born in Vermont, and was of English ancestry. His mother was Miss Lovicy Allen before she was married and was of German descent.

When our subject was a year old the family moved to Wisconsin and settled in the little city of Waupaca, where they lived until 1877. In this year the family came to Nebraska, driving through in a covered wagon, and, after a trip lasting five weeks, they settled in Greeley county. Here our subject grew to manhood, engaged in farming on the home place and elsewhere. He remembers the old sod shanty, the first home of the family, and also that he farmed over the ground where the city of Greeley Center now stands.

It was in the city of Greeley Center where Mr. Harris was married in 1885 to Miss Ida Henderson, daughter of Nels H. Henderson, a pioneer farmer of Greeley county and formerly a resident of Wisconsin. Her mother was Miss Lena Larson before marriage.

In 1886 our subject went to Valley county, Nebraska, and settled near Burwell on the North Loup river, where he farmed for two years. Then for two years he worked in a lumber yard, and in 1890 he quit that business and went to railroading, first in Burwell and later in Lincoln. He started work as a locomotive fireman and later became an engineer, following the employment for sixteen years. He lived in Lincoln for a number of years up to 1900, and had runs on the railroad both ways from the city. Mr. Harris is a good citizen and possesses the business intelligence and push that always characterize the successful railroad man.

C. J. OLDAKER.

C. J. Oldaker, who is one of the old-timers on the table, in Kimball county, Nebraska, resides on his well improved estate in section 8, township 16, range 55, and has become one of the influential citizens of his locality. He is a man of industrious habits and excellent business ability, and well merits his success and enviable reputation as a farmer and citizen.

Mr. Oldaker was born in Johnson county, Iowa, August 10, 1860, and was the second child in a family of ten. He lived in Johnson county until he was twenty-one, then went to western Montana and remained in that vicinity for four years. After that he drifted around to different points, finally returning to his home place. He came to what was then Cheyenne county, now known as Kimball county, in the fall of 1888, took up a homestead of a quarter section, and proved up on the land. Here he has passed through all the pioneer times, gradually adding to his original farm until he is now owner of four hundred and eighty acres, all well improved, and about one hundred and forty acres under cultivation. He has placed good buildings on the ranch and runs a large bunch of cattle and horses. His place is one of the valuable estates in the section, and he is counted among the prosperous and successful farmers and ranchmen of his region.

Mr. Oldaker's father is dead, while his mother resides in Wellman, Iowa. He also has five brothers and three sisters living, residing in different parts of the country.

Our subject was married to Miss Clara K. Kennedy, a native of Illinois, whose parents now live at Boulder, Colorado. Eight children have been born to our subject and his good wife, as follows: Royal C., April 19, 1889; Elmo M., April 18, 1891 (died August 13, 1891); John Gilbert, May 31, 1892; Bessie Fay, July 2, 1894; Lolo M., July 30, 1896; Clarabel A. L., June 15, 1898; Earl F., June 14, 1902; Clifford L., July 15, 1907. The children live at home with their parents, where they have a pleasant home, and all are popular among the younger residents of their locality. Mr. Oldaker has been connected with the local schools in different capacities for a number of years, and takes a commendable interest in all local affairs. In politics he is independent of party.

CLAYTON KELLAM.

Clayton Kellam is one of Franklin's most prominent public-spirited citizens. Mr. Kellam for many years was engaged in farming in Franklin and Gage counties, coming to Nebraska from Macoupin county, Illinois, in 1881, and through exceptionally good management and persistent labors acquired a valuable property here and a comfortable and pleasant home. Mr. Kellam moved to Franklin in 1901, where he takes an active interest in local affairs along the lines of improvement and development of his locality.

Mr. Kellam is a son of David Kellam, a native of Delaware, and Ruth (Peter) Kellam, who settled in Illinois in 1830. Mrs. Kellam last resided at Beatrice, Nebraska, where she died at the age of ninety-one years. She enjoyed good health and an active mind up to the last. She was a daughter of Rev. William Peter, a pioneer preacher in the Methodist Episcopal church of Kentucky. He rode the circuits with Rev. Cartwright and the pioneer band who carried Methodism into the wilds of the west. Rev. Peter was born in Kentucky, grew up there, and in 1830 he came west to Illinois, where he lived for only ten days, then died, leaving a widow with a large family of children.

Mr. Kellam, our subject, grew up in Illinois. After coming to Nebraska he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land in Midland township, Gage county, and conducted this farm up to 1901, also being interested in the real estate and insurance business with offices at Beatrice, where he had a large patronage and handled many deals in farming lands throughout that locality. He is a capable business man and was one of the foremost men of his section to push the development of the country, and has been an important factor in its growth. Six years ago he purchased the E. B. James farm, located one mile south of Franklin, on the river bottoms, the bluffs of this place overlooking the town. This farm has a good dwelling house and all improvements, and is a nice property. Mr. Kellam sold the place in 1906, as he wished to give up working hard, and is now prepared to spend his years in comfort and quiet, enjoying the fruits of his long years of labor.

Mr. Kellam married Nettie Forwood, daughter of T. B. Forwood, a native of Delaware, whose parents were pioneers in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Kellam have the following children: Alfaretta, married to C. J. Furry, in business in Franklin; D. M., a druggist, and Mildred, at home.

Politically our subject is a Republican, and he has always been an active worker in his party. Mr. Kellam was appointed postmaster at Franklin by President Roosevelt in 1907.

JAMES E. PETTYCREW.

James E. Pettycrew, who resides in section 26, township 35, range 28, Cherry county, Nebraska, was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, on a farm, November 10, 1852. His father, James Pettycrew, and his mother, Miss Magdalena Bash, were both of American stock. Our subject is the third in a family of eleven children and grew up in Marshall county, Iowa, where his parents settled in 1855 on a farm. Here he found plenty of hard work to do during his boyhood years. At the age of seventeen he left his parents' home, first buying one hundred and sixty acres for himself, which later he allowed to revert and then purchased eighty acres in Marshall county, which he farmed several seasons. For five years he resided in Marshalltown, dealing in pumps and windmills. In 1884 he came to Cherry county, arriving here February 1, bringing with him a team of mules and three cows, together with his household goods. Here he located on his present farm, his first dwelling being a mere shell of a house, in which the family lived until a better one could be erected later. His present large, commodious dwelling, with modern improvements, was completed in the fall of 1907. He endured many hardships and privations, witnessing the drouth, during which time his crops were utterly ruined two years, leaving him but scant forage for his cattle and little food for his family. However, he endured to the end, and now owns a farm of sixteen hundred and eighty acres, of which three or four hundred are under cultivation, with the balance devoted to meadow and pasture, seeded with alfalfa and brome grass. His ranch is improved with a fine set of farm buildings, well and windmill, and he also has a twenty-acre grove of splendid trees.

November 1, 1876, Mr. Pettycrew was married to Miss Julia M. Carpenter, whose parents, John Milton and Frances M. (Billings) Carpenter, now deceased, were both old settlers in Cherry county, hailing from the state of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Pettycrew have two children, namely: Edyth, now Mrs. Frank Cowden, of Garnett, Kansas, and Earl, who lives with his parents. When Mr. Pettycrew settled on his present ranch his was the first white family living this far out in the country on what is called "the table."

In political sentiment our subject is a Populist and has served as a delegate to conventions at different times, always taking an active interest in party affairs. He has always maintained that western Nebraska is a great country for the poor man, there being greater opportunities for advancement if one has energy and determination.

RUBEN BUCHANAN.

This is a name very familiar to those acquainted with the leading ranchmen of Dawes county as that of a man who has acquired more than a local reputation for his industrious habits and high personal character. He is the owner and operator of one of the largest ranches in this part of the state, his residence being located in section 6, township 32, range 49.

Mr. Buchanan was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, in 1856, a son of Ruben M. and Christina (White) Buchanan. His father was born in Kentucky, our subject believes, while his mother was a native of Ohio. When our subject was sixteen years of age his father died, after which he left his native state and went west into Missouri, settling in Gentry county, which place he made his home until 1885. In the spring of the year 1885 he came to western Nebraska, where he drove a team out of Valentine, filed and proved up the claim which is his present home. Only one who has had the experience of the early settler in this western country can well understand the hardships with which they had to contend in those early days. Many a time our subject walked to Chadron, from which place he pushed his supplies to the dugout which was the first home he knew in Nebraska. His first team was a yoke of oxen, broken in by himself. Too much credit cannot be given for the success which he has attained, and by his good management and unremitting labor he has made his ranch one of the finest in Dawes county. He was not discouraged by the droughts of this western land, which he successfully withstood, but met all reverses in a business-like manner.

Mr. Buchanan now is the proprietor of a well appointed ranch of twenty-two hundred and sixty acres, located on Deadhorse creek, fifty to one hundred acres of which are under cultivation. He has a large amount of stock, making a specialty of horses and cattle.

In politics Mr. Buchanan holds to Republican principles. He has always been quite prominently identified in local affairs, having held various school offices for years.

In 1905 Mr. Buchanan and Miss Ollie Brodick were united in marriage. Mrs. Buchanan's parents are both deceased. One child, Christina Lorene, born July 24, 1906, has come to bless this union.

The name of Mr. Buchanan will surely be found on any list of the prominent old settlers of Dawes county. He has always been the first to lend a helping hand to one in need, and the many warm friends who have had the pleasure of his hospitality will be glad to read of his successful and honorable career.

DANIEL ADAMSON.

Daniel Adamson is one of the prominent citizens of Cherry county, Nebraska. He was precinct assessor, elected by acclamation, and takes an active part in all precinct affairs. Mr. Adamson himself got up and circulated the petition for the installation of the Cody-Rolp mail route, which gives him a mail box within two and a half miles from his home.

Mr. Adamson was born in County Sligo, Ireland, September 17, 1867. His father was Walter S. Adamson, born and reared in Scotland, and was one of the leading stockmen of the section in which he resided. His mother was Miss Mary J. Higgins, who came of good old Irish stock. They had seven children, of whom Daniel was the fifth. When he was but seven or eight years old both parents died, and at the age of fourteen years he started out in the world to make his own fortune. He took passage for America from Liverpool in the City of Chester, of the Inman line, and landed in New York city the day on which President Garfield died. In 1881 he came west to Marathon county, Wisconsin, and there lived with an uncle until he was sixteen, when he wandered on to Jones county, Iowa. Here he remained for one year, then came to Cherry county, Nebraska, in 1884, and started as a cowboy, working on the T. O. ranch for W. E. Waite and later for the Enlow Cattle Company. Subsequently he worked on cattle ranches in Wyoming during the years of 1884, 1885 and 1886, then went to Wyoming in 1887, working there for seven years for different ranchmen. In 1890 he came back to Cherry county, took up a homestead, and from this time on made it his home, though for three years worked during the summer seasons on Wyoming ranches to maintain himself. This homestead is located on section 24, township 30, range 34, and consists of nine hundred acres of fenced land, with good house, barns, windmills and many other improvements, besides three hundred and eighty acres on the Niobrara river adjoining the Niobrara forest reserve.

Mr. Adamson has experienced many pioneer hardships. One peculiar incident of the winter of 1884 and 1885 is worthy of mention. With a comrade he had a camp in the center of a hay stack. This was gradually eaten into by cattle, and one morning a steer got on top of the stack and fell through, necessitating their finding another camping ground. He and his companions made a camp in another stack, which in the course of a few days caught fire and burned up. Then they were driven to make a dugout, in which they lived for a time.

On January 1, 1904, our subject was married to Miss Adda E. Ainslie, a native of Canada. Her father, James Ainslie, was a farmer and an old settler of Cherry county, Nebraska, who married Miss Catherine Wigle. Mr. and Mrs. Adamson have a family of three boys, as follows: Walter A., Arthur D. and George I., all born in Cherry county.

In the fall of 1903, just previous to Mr. Adamson's marriage, his range was burned off by prairie fires, and it was a desolate home to which he brought his bride. However, he went to work with all the energy and courage born of a hardened ranchman, and built up a comfortable home, and is now one of the successful men of the county. Mr. Adamson began with only ordinary range cattle, and has bred them up until now he has one of the finest bunches of Hereford cattle in the state of Nebraska.

Mr. Adamson has many personal friends and is universally esteemed and respected. He has always voted the Democratic ticket. The family holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal church.

Attention is called to a view of the residence and surroundings shown on another page of this work.

A. S. ERICKSON.

A. S. Erickson, a prominent resident of Funk, Divide township, Phelps county, Nebraska, is one of the foremost business men in his community. He has large interests in various business enterprises here, and the success which attends him in every venture is sufficient evidence of his ability and good judgment.

Mr. Erickson is a native of Sweden. His father, Andrew Erickson, came west in 1882 and purchased six hundred and forty acres of railway land, paying two dollars and fifty cents per acre for it, and later bought four hundred and eighty acres, making in all eleven hundred and twenty acres of land. He was very active in bringing settlers into Phelps county, and aided materially in the development of the commercial and farming interests of this locality. He farmed his lands here up to 1894, then removed to Idaho Falls, where he now owns three hundred and twenty acres of land so centrally located that it is worth one hundred dollars per acre. While a resident of this county he served on the county board for some time, and was recognized as a successful business man and active citizen. Our subject began business in Funk in February, 1897, being appointed postmaster in May of the following year. He established a hardware, lumber and agricultural implement business, and this has developed very rapidly and has grown into a most profitable business for the owner. The town of Funk is a very progressive place, and does more business than any other place of its size situated on the Burlington railway. For the year ending June, 1905, the freight receipts at Funk reached the sum of sixty thousand dollars, and of this amount over twenty thousand dollars was paid by Mr. Erickson. Previous to 1903 he had farmed extensively in this locality, and was engaged in raising and feeding stock, but in that year he sold his three hundred and twenty acres of land and since then has given his exclusive attention to his present business, which has increased twenty-five per cent. each year for the past four years, which proves conclusively the great prosperity and rapid growth of this section of the state.

Mr. Erickson has four brothers, as follows: J. E. Erickson, superintendent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy stock yards at Montgomery, Illinois; C. L. Erickson, extensively engaged in the sheep business in Idaho, and who has recently started a bank at Newcastle, Wyoming; F. Erickson, a farmer of Idaho Falls, Idaho, and Henry Erickson, treasurer of Phelps county, whose sketch appears in this book.

Mr. Erickson was married in Holdrege in June, 1891, to Miss Risberg. They have a family of two children, Harold and Svea.

Mr. Erickson is a man of active public spirit, and takes a commendable interest in all local and state affairs. He is an independent voter, and from 1890 to 1894 held the office of clerk of Phelps county. He was also clerk of Center township for a number of years. He has built up a comfortable home in Funk, and enjoys the respect and esteem of his associates.

LEONARD DOUT.

For many years past the gentleman whose name heads this personal history has been a leading citizen of his community. He opened up a farm from wild prairie land, was intimately associated with the development of the region where he chose his home, and by his untiring perseverance and integrity gained an enviable reputation. His estates lie in section 8, township 33, range 56, Sioux county, Nebraska, and every corner of his ranch bears evidence of painstaking care and good management in its operation.

Leonard Dout was born in Perry county, Pennsylvania, in 1861. His parents were both born in Germany and came to America when young, settling in Pennsylvania, where they followed farming for many years. Leonard grew up there and worked in Philadelphia as hat finisher when a boy of fourteen years of age, two years later coming west and locating at Decatur, Illinois, where he remained for one year. He then went to Waterloo, Iowa, landing there in 1878, spending about three years in that vicinity, and there cast his first vote. He next went to North Dakota, locating in the Red river valley, and settled near Erie, North Dakota, close to Fargo, and was there for about two years. His next move was to Fremont, Nebraska, where he spent one winter, and in the spring of 1886 came to Sioux county. Chadron was the nearest railroad-point to his location, and he came by team from that place, stopping at Crawford and looked carefully over the country around Harrison, and finally picked out a location on War Bonnet creek, using his covered wagon as a house, and camping out in the open many nights before settling. He took a pre-emption, built a log cabin and "batched it" for about a year, then went to work to improve his place and proved up and worked the farm for about nine years, building up a good ranch. He also filed on a homestead and proved up, making a good success of his ranching ventures. He built ditches and put in an irrigating system, farming forty acres. Wild game was plentiful while he was in that locality, and he shot many deer and other animals. In 1895 he sold out that place and purchased his present ranch, consisting of twelve hundred acres, which was slightly improved when he took it, and he has improved it in good shape, building a reservoir and ditches, having quite a large tract under irrigation. His buildings are all on sections 7 and 8, in township 33, range 56, the ranch being situated on Jim creek. There is considerable timber also on the place, a fine water supply and everything to make it an ideal situation for ranching purposes.

Mr. Dout was married in 1896 to Miss Myrtle M. Zimmerman, daughter of William H. Zimmerman, who was an early settler in Sioux county, locating here in 1886, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Dout was born in Pennsylvania, the family moving to Nebraska when she was a small girl, where she was reared and educated. Two children have been born to their union—Irva L., born in 1898, and Clarence H., born in 1902.

While Mr. Dout takes a commendable interest in local affairs, he has never sought public preferment, devoting all his time to his home and ranch. In political sentiment he is a Republican.

WILLIAM H. HARVEY.

As an old settler of Keya Paha county, an agriculturist of untiring energy and perseverance and a worthy citizen, the gentleman herein named needs no introduction to the people of his locality. He has spent over twenty years of his life in their midst and has gained a host of staunch friends and incidentally gained a comfortable home and placed himself and family in position to enjoy the declining years of his life in peace and quiet. He is a resident of Simpson precinct.

Mr. Harvey was born in Fulton county, Illinois, March 14, 1840, the eldest in a family of eight children. He was reared and educated on a farm, where he was brought up to do all kinds of hard labor. His father, Samuel D. Harvey, of Pennsylvania Dutch blood, settled at Altoona, Knox county, Illinois, in 1847. During the Civil war he served with honor in the Waterhouse Battery. When our subject was twenty-one years of age he enlisted in Company D, Seventeenth Illinois Infantry, and served three years and thirty days, during that time taking part in four big battles and many skirmishes.

After the war he returned to Illinois and began farming in Knox county, which he later abandoned for a position on the Burlington road, rising during the ten years' service to conductorship of a freight run between Galesburg and Aurora. In the year 1882 he moved to Des Moines, Iowa, where he spent the first winter putting the trucks under narrow gauge cars on a branch line of the Wabash. For the following four years he followed farming in that locality. In 1886 he came to Keya Paha county, locating seven miles northeast of Carns, on section 29, township 33, range 18, and still owns this place, but is now living on another tract of his land. He improved his homestead, built a sod house in which they lived for fourteen years; in fact, the family "wore out" three sod houses before they finally erected a frame residence. During the early years he went through many hard times, losing three crops in succession through drouths, but was fortunate in not losing much stock through cattle rustlers, as did so many of the pioneers of this region. Many times the family were unable to buy shoes, wrapping their feet in rags as substitutes for regulation footwear. He became discouraged at so much hard luck and often felt like leaving the place, but stuck to it, and won success, as he now owns two thousand acres of land, while each of his three sons acquired six hundred acres. He runs three hundred head of cattle and forty hogs, all registered stock, and also forty horses and mules for use on the farm, as he cultivates about a hundred acres each year. His home place is one of the best improved in this county, and he is counted one of the most successful men throughout the region, as he had only fourteen dollars in money when he first crossed the Niobrara at Carns, and now is as well off as any one in the locality. He gives his sons credit for part of his success, as during the hard times they worked at whatever they could get to do to support themselves and assist in taking care of the family. During the first years he was obliged to sell his pre-emption for the mortgage and ten dollars, but from that time has steadily advanced and improved his place. In 1908 Mr. Harvey leased his ranch to the two eldest sons that he and his wife might retire and take life easy during their declining years.

Mr. Harvey was married December 20, 1866, to Miss Mary B. Scott, born in New York state, her parents, James and Eliza (Ronk) Scott, being early settlers in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey have three sons—George D., Arthur P. and Claude L., the last named being the Chicago & Northwestern agent at Merri-man, while the first two are still living at home.

Mr. Harvey richly deserves the success he has won, as he has been a potent factor in the upbuilding of the region where he chose his home, and has always maintained the strictest integrity in all his dealings with the residents of this county and vicinity. He is a Republican, but does not take an active part in politics, never having had the time to devote to public affairs. A view of his fine country residence, with its barns and outbuildings, is presented to the reader on another page.

FRANK LESSIG.

Frank Lessig, whose well tilled farm in Brown county is carefully operated and yields a good annual income, is a gentleman of thorough business methods and progressive spirit. He has spared no pains in bringing this tract of land to a high state of cultivation, and well merits the success which has attended his efforts.

Mr. Lessig was born in Fannettsburg, Pennsylvania, July 19, 1869. His father is a carpenter by trade and one of the pioneer settlers in Brown county, Nebraska, and a sketch of this gentleman will be found on another page in this volume. Our subject is the eldest in a family of four living children, and was raised in Pennsylvania, there receiving a common school education. At the age of sixteen years he left home and started for the western states, traveling through Colorado, Kansas and southern Nebraska, visiting Omaha and other points of interest in this territory. After an extended trip he returned home and remained with his parents until he was twenty-four years old, assisting his father in establishing his farm, then began farming for himself, taking a homestead in section 3, township 31, range 21, on May 29, 1894. He put up a sod house here, in which he lived for ten years, going through many hardships during the dry years, when he suffered severe losses through the destruction of his crops, and this nearly compelled him to throw up his farm. However, he then started in the cattle business, and this proving successful he was enabled to pull through the hard times. In the fall of 1905 he erected a comfortable two-story house of commodious size and has barns, corn cribs, two granaries and a blacksmith shop which make him the possessor of a fine a set of buildings as can be found in this county. Mr. Lessig is engaged principally in stock raising and mixed farming, and of late years has been very successful in both lines.

On November 22, 1893, Mr. Lessig was married to Miss Lillian Galligan, a native of the state of Michigan, reared and educated in Brown county, Nebraska, where her father is an old settler, having located here in 1882. Mr. and Mrs. Lessig have two children, named James and Orva. They have a pleasant home and comfortable surroundings, and enjoy a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Lessig takes an active part in local political affairs, and has held different offices in his county. In the fall of 1905 he was elected county commissioner, now serving in that capacity. In political faith he is a Republican. Mr. Lessig and family are members of the Methodist church, and Mr. Lessig is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Ainsworth.

HARRY D. LUTE.

Harry D. Lute, one of the most prominent ranchmen and well known old settlers of western Nebraska, resides in Paxton precinct, Keith county, where he has been associated with the farming interests for nearly a quarter of a century, going through pioneer experiences with his parents and becoming one of the potent factors in the development and growth of the natural resources of that section.

Mr. Lute was born in Holstein, Germany, January 8, 1870. His father, John Lute, had come to America a few months before our subject was born and when he was an infant the mother followed her husband to the new world, where they together started to build up a home. They made their first settlement in Omaha, but after remaining there for about six months came to Lincoln county, and the father followed railroading, and for ten years was section foreman with headquarters at Nichols. In 1873 they moved to Julesburg, living there for five years, then went to Brule, Nebraska, all of the time working as section foreman, until January, 1882. Mr. Lute purchased land near Ogallala, gradually worked into the cattle business, and made that his home, increasing his herd as he became able, and finally gave his entire attention to the business. In 1886 the family moved to the North Platte valley, locating near Paxton, where the father built up an extensive ranch, also devoting considerable time to farming. He was the first man to hay feed cattle in the winter in his section of the country. He was also instrumental in getting the first irrigating system into operation in that part, and was one of the foremost men of his time, always using every endeavor to aid his locality in bettering conditions. He died in August, 1901, and his death was a severe loss to the community. While living in Brule he served as county commissioner and in 1898 was again elected to the office.

After his father's death our subject took the management of the home ranch and has continued it ever since. The place consists of nine thousand acres, lying along the North Platte river on both sides, and is one of the most valuable properties in that part of Nebraska. It is devoted almost exclusively to ranching purposes, Mr. Lute having a herd of eight hundred to a thousand cattle. There are all kinds of excellent improvements, good buildings, plenty of trees and everything to make it a model ranch. John Lute was one of the first men to begin the raising of alfalfa and his success demonstrated the fitness of the soil for this product. About two hundred and fifty acres of the ranch are under irrigation, while twelve hundred acres may be placed under ditch. In 1908 the large ranch was divided into a number of farms and the mother built an elegant modern residence on her son's place.

Mr. Lute was married in 1904 to Miss Lulu Woods, daughter of Mathew Woods, an early settler in Chase county, and a veteran of the Civil war. Her mother was Agnes Hanna before marriage.

Mr. Lute is a graduate of the State Agricultural College, class of 1904. He is county crop reporter for the United States agricultural department and regular correspondent for the Nebraska Farmer, the Twentieth Century Farmer, the Iowa Homestead and other agricultural journals. In addition to the old home ranch Mr. Lute owns fifteen hundred acres along the North Platte with one hundred acres under ditch and fourteen hundred acres of it irrigable. His large barn, destroyed in May, 1908, by a cyclone, was immediately replaced by a much finer one, constructed of concrete blocks, one of the best built and equipped barns in the region.

Mr. Lute is a Republican in politics and a member of the Episcopal church.

A. L. DAVIS.

A. L. Davis, widely known throughout this part of the country as a prosperous farmer and stock raiser, has been a resident of that locality for many years, and has aided materially in its development and growth. His home is in township 33, range 42.

Mr. Davis was born in Ohio in 1861. His father, Andrew Davis, was a native of Ohio, of American stock, and served in the Twenty-third Regiment during the Civil war. The family moved to Indiana when our subject was a small lad, and there he was reared and educated. He was the seventh member in a family of eight children, and struck out for himself at the age of thirteen, working around on different farms in the vicinity of his home, and in following this occupation he received many hard knocks and rather rough treatment which sometimes falls to the lot of young men in his position. In December, 1884, he came to Sheridan county, Nebraska, and settled on the place he now occupies. He immediately began farming, but had practically nothing to start with. However, he had a pair of strong hands and a willing heart, and with his sole possessions—a trunk containing his clothes and sixteen cents in money in his pocket—he went to work. At first he met with many discouragements, and during the dry years lost all his crops, as so many others did. At that time land in that locality could be bought for one hundred and fifty dollars per quarter section. He stuck to his homestead through all the hard times, and since then the rise in value of the land here has placed him in good shape financially and he has gradually added to his property until he now owns nineteen hundred and twenty acres of good tillable land. He engages in both farming and stock raising on a large scale, cultivating about three hundred acres, and the balance is used for hay and grazing for the large bunch of stock which he usually keeps on hand. His place is improved with a fine set of farm buildings, and all the machinery necessary to operate a large farm in good shape. He is proud of his success and is perfectly satisfied with the locality in which he chose his home.

Mr. Davis was married in 1889 to Miss Mina Coon, who was born in Wisconsin in 1872. Her father, Abraham Coon, was a native of Ohio, and her mother, Cornelia Curtis, was born in Illinois of American stock. She was the youngest member in a family of thirteen children.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis are the parents of ten children, who are named as follows: Andrew H., Claude C., Cora B., Lillian M., Mary G., Pearl E., Howard L., Glen, Elmer and Leo, all of whom were born and raised on the homestead which they now occupy.

OLAUS BOGSETH.

Olaus Bogseth, one of the early settlers and now prosperous farmers of Wheeler county, Nebraska, lives on his well tilled farm of four hundred and forty acres situated in Clear creek township and vicinity, where he has spent the past twenty years of his career, principally in Wheeler county, Nebraska.

Mr. Bogseth was born in Norway in 1857 and grew up there, coming to America in 1888 when thirty years of age. He is a son of Andrew and Anna (Holderson) Bogseth, both of whom died in their native land, his father in 1893 and his mother in 1895. Our subject was a very poor man when he first came to this part of the state, and was obliged to work out by the day in order to obtain the money necessary for filing on a government claim. He first bought one hundred and sixty acres and later took up a homestead and pre-emption, and proved up on it. He now owns two hundred and eighty acres of good farm lands in the county. He rapidly developed a good farm, built up a comfortable home, has fine and substantial buildings, and is now comfortably well off. He cultivates a goodly portion of the land, growing small grains, potatoes, etc., also raises some stock for market each year. He is particularly interested in the breeding and raising of good horses, and has quite a large number of fine animals on his place.

In 1884 Mr. Bogseth was united in the bonds of wedlock to Christine Warner, she born and reared in Sweden. Mr. and Mrs. Bogseth are the parents of six children, who are named as follows: Alfrida (deceased), Axel, Carrie, Olive, Hilma and Lola, which form an intelligent group. Parents and children are devoted members of the English Lutheran church of Ericson, and are highly respected members of society in the community in which they reside.

EDWARD CRIGLER AND FAMILY.

Politically Mr. Bogseth is an independent voter, always for the best man and good government. He has served for years as township assessor, and filled this office with good ability and honesty.

EDWARD CRIGLER.

Edward Crigler, who is a resident of township 30, range 49, and who has demonstrated his own ability as a farmer and his standing as a man and citizen, was born on a farm in Gallia county, Ohio, in 1843. He is a son of Ruben Crigler, who was a farmer and a native of Virginia. His mother, Annie (Fortner) Crigler, was also born in Virginia.

When our subject was ten years of age the family moved to Illinois, where they settled on a farm in Knox county, and were among the pioneers of that state. When the Civil war broke out, realizing the duty he owed his native land, Mr. Crigler enlisted in Company L, Second Nebraska Cavalry. While with this regiment he saw service in Dakota and Nebraska, where he participated in several engagements with the Indians.

At the close of the war Mr. Crigler returned to Illinois, where he remained until 1879. He then went to Iowa, where he spent a short time in Madison and Adair counties. He is a pioneer of Nebraska, having settled in Gage county this same year, 1879. He remained there for eight years, and in 1888 came to Sioux county, where he settled on government land. Here he built a log cabin and remained two years. He then came to Box Butte county, where he took a homestead located on the Niobrara river. He proved up his claim, built a nice home and put in many improvements. He has successfully withstood the many hardships which the pioneers of this western country experienced, and reclaimed from the wild prairie a good farm, which by his own thrift and economy he has converted into a comfortable home for himself and family. In 1903, having sold his claim in Box Butte county, Mr. Crigler purchased land in Dawes county, locating about ten miles east of Belmont, where he remained for three years. He then settled on the land which is his present home, having his residence on section 10, township 30, range 49. Here he engages extensively in the raising of live stock with his son-in-law, Alva Robbins.

In 1873 Mr. Crigler and Miss Jane Miller were united in marriage. She is a daughter of Joel Miller, who was a farmer and blacksmith, and a native of Pennsylvania. Her mother was Mary (Rolston) Miller. Mr. and Mrs.

Crigler had two children, namely: Annie R. and Ilah P., both deceased, and have one adopted son, Harry, who is a bright young fellow and a great help to his mother and father.

Mr. Crigler devotes his attention very closely to his ranch, takes an active interest in all matters of local interest, and is quite prominently identified with the growth and development of both Dawes and Box Butte counties. He has worked hard and the success with which his efforts have met is well deserved. He has a large circle of friends in the surrounding community, who consider that he has done wonderfully well, and that his career is to be regarded as a marked success. A picture of Edward Crigler and family will be found on another page.

CASPER F. NICKEL.

Casper F. Nickel, a prosperous, progressive and enterprising farmer of Blaine township, Kearney county, Nebraska, is one of the leading old settlers of this locality. When he came here he settled on a wild prairie farm and through industry and energetic efforts has succeeded in building up one of the valuable estates of the locality and is considered one of the substantial agriculturists of his community.

Mr. Nickel was born in 1852 in Germany, and came to this country when a young man. In 1879 our subject homesteaded and took up a tree claim in Kearney county, afterwards adding to his farm until he is now the owner of eight hundred and eighty acres of good land. Valentine Nickel, a brother of our subject, has a place located directly across the road from the old military reservation of Fort Kearney. He was in this locality in 1876 when the United States soldiers were stationed here. Immediately after taking up his homestead he started to build up his farm, also going into the raising of stock, and has continued at the work ever since. He runs from one hundred and fifty to five hundred cattle annually and a number of hogs, marketing about three carloads of the latter each year, and intends to increase this line of business right along. He handles registered Duroc Jersey hogs and the Poland China breed, and prefers the Poland Chinas, which he has had experience with in former years. He keeps high-bred Shorthorn Scotch cattle, male and female, and feeds all the grain and hay he raises on his own farm. He has been most successful in his stock raising operations, but deserves the best of success, as he gives all his time and attention to the business. He keeps about twelve horses for his farm work, and raises horses for market, having from thirty to forty for shipment each year. He has a thoroughbred Percheron stallion and ten brood mares. His stallion, "Dewey," captured first premium at the Kearney county fair as a two-year-old, and in his opinion the Belgium Percheron is the only horse to breed.

Mr. Nickel was married to Miss Augusta Engbert, daughter of John Engbert, who came from Germany and located in Logan township, Kearney county, in 1886, and who has the reputation of being one of the most successful farmers in the county. One son and three daughters have come to bless the union of our subject and his good wife, namely: G. August, who is on the ranch with his father; Minnie, wife of Patsy Ryan, of Blaine township; Annie, living at home, and Lillie, attending college at Kearney, Nebraska. The family are members of the Minden Lutheran church and worthy members of society. Our subject is highly esteemed for his sterling qualities by all who know him.

ARTHUR H. GROVE.

Arthur H. Grove, one of the best known pioneers of Box Butte county, considered among the early settlers of this region as a business man of more than ordinary capacity, is possessed of a wide knowledge of the history of the development and growth of this section of the state, and has been an important factor in its success. He and his father handled the first United States mail in this section of the country, first at Grand Lake, then at Alliance, also a postoffice on section 4, township 25, range 48, where our subject now lives.

Mr. Grove was born in the city of Freeport, Illinois, in 1868, and reared there, attending the city schools, where he received a good education, graduating from the high school, and later was a student at Mt. Morris College, Illinois. He came west to Dakota in 1885, where he lived about one year, then moved to Box Butte county, settling with his parents, who were on a homestead in section 4, township 25, range 48. Here they had built a sod house, also a dugout addition, in which they lived during the early days. The father and son Arthur opened a store at Grand Lake and in the city of Alliance, handling the United States mail there also. They had a small store on their farm, also handling United States mail there, our subject himself selling some of the first goods that were ever sold in Alliance, which at that time was called Grand Lake.

They kept the store after the change of name from Grand Lake to Alliance. Arthur knew very little about farming as a boy, but he started in to breaking up land for crops and put in some grain and after they had been here a short time he bought out his father's rights to the homestead, sold his mercantile interests, and gave his whole attention to farming. He handled ox teams and led a typical pioneer life, freighting, and when making long trips through the country camped out many times under his wagon, and many times while going long distances would be caught in a heavy snow storm and obliged to sleep on the snow covered ground. During those days he "batched it" on his farm, doing all his own work, cooking, etc., often feeding a whole threshing outfit.

He was very successful in building up and improving his place and gradually added to his land until he now owns one thousand four hundred and forty acres, situated six miles from Alliance. He farms one hundred acres of this, and in good years had as high as two hundred acres in crops. In 1898 he lost his barn, five hundred bushels of corn, one hundred tons of hay and feed, also other property by fire, suffering a loss of $3,000. Mr. Grove engages to quite an extent in cattle raising, and has made a great success of this branch of the business, handling the Aberdeen Polled Angus breed.

Mr. Grove was married in 1897 to Matilda Zobel, whose parents were old settlers in Kearney county, Nebraska, and came to Box Butte county in 1893; here they settled near Hemingford, Box Butte county, Nebraska. To Mr. and Mrs. Grove the following children have been born: Phillip T. and Arthur W., both of whom are now going to school in Alliance.

Politically our subject is a Democrat, and has served his county as commissioner for several terms. He has always been active in local affairs, and has been an important factor in building up the schools in this region. In 1904 Mr. Grove went to old Mexico, engaging in the mining business for about one year, then took a trip through the southeastern part of the United States as far south as New Orleans, but finally decided that old Box Butte county was good enough for him, so returned to his ranch here.

J. H. ROSENFELT, DECEASED.

J. H. Rosenfelt, deceased, was a prominent ranchman of Cambridge, Furnas county, Nebraska, and was numbered among the successful and prosperous stockmen of this section of the country.

Mr. Rosenfelt was a native of Illinois, born in 1856. He came to Frontier county, this state, in 1877, and opened up a ranch in the Medicine Valley, stocking his ranch with two hundred head of cattle. At this writing his estate has a herd of five hundred cattle and the ranch comprises one thousand eight hundred acres, which is all deeded land. He was one of the largest buyers and shippers of stock in this county, each year sending to market from Cambridge, a hundred cars of cattle and hogs. He owned a number of pure bred Hereford cattle, and kept mostly high grade stock. He located in Cambridge in 1893, and for three years was engaged in the grain business, but sold this out to Cooper & Lynn, of Humboldt, Nebraska. Since then until his death, he devoted his entire time and attention to the care of his stock, and found that it was a most profitable venture, as this country is especially adapted for stock raising and there is no place better fitted for the purpose, as there is plenty of pasture land and good water, besides the climate here is the finest to be found anywhere, with mild winters, so that there is no danger of losing stock through severe storms. When Mr. Rosenfelt was fourteen years old he moved to Lancaster county, Nebraska, where he was reared.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN HENDERSON.

Mr. Rosenfelt was married in 1883 to Miss Lucy A. Light. They had one son, J. Allen Rosenfelt, who took a course at the Kansas City Veterinary College, but now has charge of his father's estate.

Mr. J. H. Rosenfelt died here at Cambridge in April, 1907, greatly missed by numerous friends and business associates. He always took an active interest in public affairs and in reform measures. He was public-spirited and progressive.

ANDREW A. CARLSON.

Andrew A. Carlson, one of the successful and prominent old-time farmers and ranchmen of western Nebraska, is a man of sterling character and who through industry and good management has come to be one of the largest land-owners in Dawes county. He has a pleasant home in section 11, township 33, range 52, and is highly esteemed by his associates and all who know him.

Mr. Carlson was born in Osterjotland, Sweden, in 1851, and was raised and educated there. He came to America in 1873, and came west immediately after landing in New York city, locating in Pennsylvania, where he spent two years, then went on to Texas, where he was employed on the railroad up to 1883, after that spending one year in old Mexico, there also working on the road. He returned to Texas, and railroaded all over that state, Missouri, Louisiana, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Dakota and Wyoming, traveling besides in other states, and saw all of the western part of the United States while in this line of work.

In 1879 he came to Dawes county and took up a homestead in section 14, township 33, range 52, starting a farm and home. He put up a small shack and "batched it" up to 1893, then was joined by his father and mother, who had journeyed from their native land to spend their last years with their son, and after living here some years passed away, the mother's death occurring in about 1900, and the father's in March, 1893.

During the first years in trying to establish a farm Mr. Carlson went through some pretty tough times, losing several crops by drouth and other causes, but he stuck to the farm and as time went on conditions became more favorable and he succeeded in his ventures to a marked degree, adding to his original holdings constantly, until he and his wife together now own fourteen quarter sections of deeded land. He has put up good buildings and many improvements on the place, and has a big grove in fine growing condition, having set out all the trees himself. Big Cottonwood creek runs through his ranch, furnishing plenty of good living water the year round, and making an ideal farm for stock raising, in which work he is engaged extensively, and has always been since coming here, after the first four years. He now runs one hundred and thirty head all the time, and has been very successful in this branch of work. In 1905 he moved on to his present homestead in section 11, where he has another complete set of good farm buildings. Mr. Carlson was the first man in this part of the country to build a dam and water reservoir for cattle.

In 1893 our subject was united in marriage to Miss Ida Dickson, a native of Tama county, Iowa, of American stock. To them have been born the following children: Mary, Lizzie, Roger and Clara, and the family is well liked by everyone, and enjoy a pleasant and happy home.

Mr. Carlson has done his share in building up this section of the country and been a leader in developing its natural resources. He has held the office of assessor for one year, and also was road overseer in his district.

JOHN HENDERSON.

John Henderson, familiarly known as "Scotty" to all who reside in a large part of Box Butte county, is probably one of the best-known and most highly respected citizens of his locality, and is also an old settler and substantial farmer who has gained a competence through his energetic efforts and industrious habits. His residence is in section 7, township 24, range 51, and there he has a comfortable home, surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

Mr. Henderson was born in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, in 1861, on a farm. Both parents were born and raised in that country, and farmed there all their lives, and our subject was reared and educated there, attending the country schools during his boyhood. When he was but nine years of age he left home and made his own way in the world from that time on, his first job that of driving a burro delivering milk, and for the first six months at this employment received the magnificent sum of one pound of English money. He worked at different things there for a number of years, then decided to leave Scotland and try a new country, so took passage for America, landing here in 1879, and going directly west to Cheyenne, Wyoming. He worked his way on the ship over here, taking care of a herd of fifty-six black Polled Angus bulls, which were being brought here from Glasgow for breeding purposes.

The shipment was laid over for three months in Quebec, and our subject had a good chance to see the country there. After arriving in the west he secured employment herding sheep, and followed that for some time, then started freighting from Cheyenne to Fort Laramie, also worked as a cowboy on different ranches through Wyoming for a period of eight years. He traveled on horseback all over Wyoming, Montana, Dakota and Nebraska, and was familiar with all the old cow trails over those states. He finally gave up that occupation and came to Nebraska to locate permanently, filing on a homestead in section 7, township 24, range 51. During the first few years, all his work on the ranch, freighting, etc., was done with mule teams. As a cowboy, sheep herder, etc., he had managed to save up about four hundred and fifty dollars, also owned a team of ponies, and so had a fairly good start. He started at once to improve his farm, put up good buildings and lived a regular pioneer life, meeting with many hardships, losing several crops, etc. He worked hard and gradually bought more land, and is now proprietor of a ranch of four thousand acres, all deeded land. He purchased the old Hart ranch a number of years ago, which is now a part of his valuable property, and the famous old Sidney trail runs directly through his place.

Mr. Henderson engages exclusively in the stock business. He has a large herd of cattle for breeding and market purposes, and is one of the largest and most successful ranchmen in this region. During the winter of 1904 he lost seven hundred head of cattle through a severe storm, and at various times has suffered heavy losses of stock. His ranch is beautifully situated on the Snake creek, and he has it improved in the best possible shape. He has four wells and four windmills, has erected a handsome residence, and the entire place is fenced and fitted with good buildings, etc.

Mr. Henderson was married in 1888 to Miss Jennie Allen, daughter of Robert Allen, who is a Canadian by birth, and now lives at Ontario. Mrs. Henderson was one of the early homesteaders in Nebraska, coming here in 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Henderson have five children, named as follows: John A., Dick, Harold, James and Margaret. Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Henderson will be found on another page.

Politically Mr. Henderson is a Democrat.

LEONIDAS H. LILLY.

Leonidas H. Lilly is a worthy representative of the sturdy western pioneer, who has passed through every phase of frontier life and has been an important factor in the upbuilding of his community since coming to Nebraska many years ago. He is now a resident of the thriving town of Kimball, and one of the leading business men there, being engaged in the livery business, and also has a stage line and takes mail contracts.

Mr. Lilly was born in Indiana on October 5, 1854, living there until about two years of age, when his parents, with their family of four sons and four daughters, removed to Livingston county, Illinois. Subsequently there were four more girls born to the father and mother, making a family of twelve children. The parents remained in Illinois until their death. Our subject went to Montana in 1880, where he lived for about six years, and engaged in buying and shipping horses and stock. He remembers distinctly the days when buffalo were plenty in that vicinity, he himself having two hundred to his credit in 1881.

He followed the business of buying and shipping horses up to 1888, then went to Nebraska, locating in Kimball county, and went into the livery business in the town of Kimball, soon afterwards securing the mail contracts from the United States government, which he carried on for about four years. Two years were spent in Utah and one year in Cheyenne, Wyoming, where he carried on the livery business, finally returning to Kimball county in 1897. He then embarked in the ranching and cattle industry, following this up to 1905, at which time he moved into the village of Kimball and again established a livery barn and took mail contracts. He is considered one of the prosperous men of his locality, and has built up a good patronage through strict attention to business and honest and fair dealings.

RESIDENCE OF GEORGE W. LADELY,

In October, 1889, Mr. Lilly was married at Kimball, to Miss Flora Stanley, who was born in Indiana and raised in Illinois, where her parents settled about 1850. While on a visit to a sister living in Kimball, Miss Stanley met her present husband. Our subject's parents are both dead, while his wife's father and mother still live in Illinois. During 1889 and 1890 Mr. Lilly was deputy sheriff of Kimball county, and while serving in this capacity experienced numerous thrilling adventures, which he relates in a particularly interesting manner.

In 1891 he was elected county commissioner, serving for three years. He is a strong Republican.

GEORGE W. LADELY.

George W. Ladely, an influential and popular citizen of Cherry county, Nebraska, holds his enviable position in the community by force of character, industrious habits and unquestioned integrity. His home is in section 15, township 29, range 35, and here he has displayed those peculiar qualities that have made him so markedly successful in life's struggles.

Mr. Ladely was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, November 29, 1850, where he was reared to a rural life. His father, William Ladely, a farmer all his life, married Cornelia Slack, the mother of the subject of this personal history, and both were natives of the state of Pennsylvania, the former of Holland ancestry and the latter of German stock. They had a family of nine children, George W. being their second child, he remaining at home until he was twenty-one years of age, then started in life for himself, obtaining employment on farms in Iowa. In 1888 he came to Cherry county, where he took up a pre-emption claim, proved up and sold it. For two years he worked on the Gillaspie ranch, then settled on the place which he now occupies as a homestead. He has gone through hard times since locating here, and has put in many years of hard work, but has met with good success, now owning a ranch of two thousand one hundred and twenty acres known as the H. L. ranch, which is stocked with one thousand head of cattle and one hundred and fifty horses. He has good buildings on his place, his house costing one thousand four hundred dollars, and barn one thousand one hundred dollars, together with other farm buildings which are among the best to be found in this region. Mr. Ladely built his present house in 1906. Up to that time he had lived in a sod house, which was a very comfortable dwelling that he erected in 1882. The new residence is unusually large for a ranch house and is furnished in keeping with the exterior. Running water is supplied by one of the four flowing wells on his farm, which range in depth from fifty to three hundred and sixty feet, this making his ranch one of the best and most valuable in the county.

Mr. Ladely was married May 1, 1890, to Miss Elizabeth Kime, born in Iowa in 1858, daughter of Levi N. Kime, of German descent, and a native of Ohio. Her mother, Nancy Layport, before her marriage, was also a native of Ohio, of French-English descent. Mrs. Ladely's father and her husband were the first settlers on this part of Gordon creek, and have both lived here continuously since locating. They have been very successful, and the latter is satisfied that he has done much better than had he remained in Iowa, as the opportunities for acquiring land are far ahead of that state, and the climate and conditions better in every way. A view of the family home and surroundings will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Ladely is a Republican in political sentiment.

HORACE G. WALLINGFORD.

Horace G. Wallingford, a prominent resident of Cherry county, Nebraska, is one of the leading ranchmen of the country. He is one of the early settlers of the county, and after many hardships and discouragements has succeeded in the business which he has undertaken in no small degree.

Mr. Wallingford's father was A. J. Wallingford, an old settler in Cherry county, Nebraska, and his mother was Miss Matilda Gray, of Scotch and Irish descent, American born. Mr. Wallingford is twelfth of a family of thirteen children, and was reared in Franklin county, Nebraska, until he was eleven or twelve years of age. In 1884 he came to Cherry county with his father during the pioneer days, settling on the Snake river six miles from the mouth, they being the third family to settle on this river. Here the father established a saw-mill on Snake creek opposite the mouth of Steer creek canyon. After taking up their residence here, they handled ox teams, freighters, and passed through all the experiences familiar to the people of those days, enduring all the privations and discouragements which the pioneers had to contend with in the building up of a new country.

When twenty-one years of age our subject started in life for himself, taking up a homestead on Boardman Creek, on which his first habitation was a sod shanty. He was married in 1897 to Miss Etta Hoffman, whose father was an old settler in Iowa. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wallingford, named as follows: Edna, Willie, Mildred and Orval.

Mr. Wallingford proved up on his homestead and took a Kincaid homestead in 1904, and has since made many improvements in the way of building, stocking up his ranch with cattle and other live stock, etc. He is numbered among the old timers who have watched the growth of this part of the country from the start. Mr. Wallingford's ranch is located in sections 25 and 26, township 30, range 32, in Cherry county, Nebraska, and is stocked with two hundred and seventy-five head of cattle; he is called one of the successful younger ranchmen of the county. His first start in life was derived from the proceeds of hunting, and he is now the owner of six hundred and forty acres, comprising the ranch on which he lives and also has interests in other lands, his wife owning one hundred and sixty acres adjoining.

Mr. Wallingford well remembers Valentine when it was only a small side station. He has always taken an active interest in local affairs, and is a man of sterling character, universally esteemed by his fellowmen. In politics he is a Republican.

EDWIN B. SMITH.

Edwin B. Smith was born in the state of New York, in Warren county, in 1853. His father, John Smith, was also a native of New York. His mother, Experience (Hack) Smith, was born in Vermont, her parents being from a long line of American ancestors. The father was agent for a large lumber company, but lived on a farm in the timber country. Our subject lived on the old farm his grandfather cleared up when a young man. The family lived for about six years in Vermont, in the old town of Brandon, and later moved to Warren county, New York, where Edwin was reared, receiving a country school education.

In 1882 our subject came west to Nebraska, locating on a farm in Valley county, not far from the town of Ord, which was then only a struggling village with no railroad. After two years he took a homestead, and, as he had but little to start on, his improvements were very primitive. Materials and supplies had to be hauled from St. Paul, Nebraska, the nearest railroad point, and it was here that he had to do his marketing of hogs and wheat for some time.

In 1884 he came to Blaine county, finding a good location on the North Loup river. He came in a covered wagon and with few supplies. He worked hard and was getting things in good shape when a prairie fire swept away stable and sheds, killing one of his horses, and burning the wheels of his wagon and also some hay, lumber and his harness. This was very discouraging, coming just at the time when he was getting started, and Mr. Smith was almost at the point of giving up. But with unconquerable grit he held on and soon saw better times. Several good crops came in succession, and he had the best sod crops ever raised; grew potatoes, melons, beans and plenty of garden stuff, so that he got along very nicely, and, with six head of cattle to start in stock raising, the future looked much brighter. But next came the years of drouth and our subject was very much distressed. But he did not have enough with which to get out of the county, so he had to stay and struggle along as best he could. He came to his present location on section 25, township 23, range 21, in 1894. This was a tree claim which he purchased. It was wild prairie land with no improvements. He put up a sod home, twenty by forty feet, and bought a twelve by fourteen board shanty ten miles away and moved it to his farm, where it was used as a stable.

He stuck to his farm and made fine improvements. But he had a bad fire in 1893, losing a large frame barn, fourteen by twenty-four feet and fourteen by eighteen feet, harnesses, saddles, hay and several calves, and it took magnificent courage to bear the loss. Now he has a fine ranch, as good as can be found in all the county. He has five quarter sections of land along the North Loup river, and, with his sons' homesteads, controls several sections of excellent land. He has a good house, built in 1907-'08, good barns, sheds, corrals, dipping tanks, has fourteen to fifteen miles of fence, four hydraulic wells and cisterns, windmills, etc., indeed one of the most completely equipped ranches in Blaine county. He has fine groves of trees on different parts of the ranch, has a number of apple, plum and cherry trees and an abundance of small fruit.

Mr. Smith has been an intelligent participant in all local political matters and has been elected to various positions of trust and responsibility. He held the office of county clerk of Blaine county for two years, and has also been a member of the local school board. Our subject was here during the county-seat fights when Brewster, Le Dora and Blaine Center were hotly contesting for the honor of being the seat of the county government. Throughout all his frontier experiences and later life in Blaine county, Mr. Smith has been ever ready to sanction all movements tending for the betterment of his community and he has performed his share in adding to its material development.

Edwin B. Smith and Miss Anna L. George were married March 1, 1876. Mrs. Smith was a native of New York. Her father, an expert mechanic and boat builder, died September 27, 1908, in the state of New York. Her mother was Margaret Stillson, who died in 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have been the happy parents of eight children—Truman, Morvice, William G., Earnest (deceased), Mark, Wesley, Eva and Arthur.

WILLIAM L. WESTON.

William L. Weston, who for over a score of years has resided in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, and during this time has acquired a fine property as a result of his industry and good management, is widely known in his locality, and held in the highest esteem as a citizen and progressive farmer.

Mr. Weston was born in Linden, Iowa county, Wisconsin, February 20, 1861. His father, John H. Weston, was born in England, and came to this country when a young man, where he followed the profession of a teacher. He was a man of wide experience, and an extensive traveler, having been all through the European countries, also in South Africa. His health failed and after coming to this country he devoted his entire time to teaching as an occupation. He married Miss Carolina Brooks, whose parents settled in Wisconsin in the early days, going into the region of the lead mines, where she was born and raised. Our subject was the third member in his parents' family of four children, and he was raised in the vicinity of the lead mines, working in the mines as a boy. When seventeen years of age he went to Marquette, Michigan, and worked in the mines for a year; thence he came to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, working for two years before returning to Wisconsin, where for three years he was employed in a creamery at Edmund. When he was twenty-four years of age he came to Keya Paha county, traveling by rail to Ainsworth, landing there on November 4, 1885. From Ainsworth he was obliged to take a team and drive through, and while on the journey was overtaken by one of the worst blizzards in years, from which he took shelter in a dugout, one of the rendezvous of the famous Doc. Middleton. On locating here he at once put up a sod house, and lived in it for seven years, proving up on his homestead. He did everything that came to his hand in order to make a living and improve his farm, handling ox teams with which he broke up considerable land. This place was situated on section 11, township 34, range 23.

During the years 1893, 1894 and 1895, Mr. Weston lived at Hartington, in Cedar county, Nebraska, doing any work he could secure, and for one year was in the livery business at Armour, South Dakota, dealing in real estate much of the time. This was during the drouth periods and the panic. In 1895 he returned to Keya Paha county, living for a short time on section 11 before locating on section 34, township 34, range 22, where he lived for six years prior to taking up his present farm in section 10, township 34, range 22, both places being situated on Cottonwood creek, and which he still owns; his possessions altogether consist of five quarter sections of fine land. One hundred acres are under cultivation and the rest in hay and pasture land, with a fine orchard of plum, apple and cherry trees, with Cottonwood creek running through the place, supplying fine clear water the year around. Mr. Weston has erected a solid stone house, a milk house of the same material with barn, granary and other necessary buildings of frame construction.

Maribank postoffice was established on our subject's present farm in 1883, and since 1896 Mrs. Weston has served as postmistress, with the postoffice re-established in their home.

Mr. Weston is thoroughly familiar with conditions throughout this section of the country and has aided in the development and growth of the region from its early days. Politically he is a strong Republican, attending all the county conventions as a delegate, and one of the prominent public-spirited citizens of his community.

While still living in Wisconsin Mr. Weston was married November 14, 1883, to Miss Emma Jane Williams, daughter of John and Jane (Reed) Williams, both born in England and afterwards early settlers in Wisconsin. To Mr. and Mrs. Weston two children were born, namely: Earl, born in Wisconsin in 1884, and Velma, born in 1890, in Keya Paha county. The family are all members of the Methodist church. Formerly Mr. Weston was a member of the Pythian order and the Woodmen, but owing to distance from lodge has allowed his membership to lapse.

OTIS W. HAHN.

For over twenty years the gentleman whose name heads this review, has been identified with the development of the financial and social interests of Cherry county, has gained a high station as a citizen, and incidentally become one of the leading men of his community.

Mr. Hahn was born in Rio, Knox county, Illinois, December 2, 1860. His father, Moses Hahn, was a farmer and came of American stock. His mother, a native of Somersetshire, England, came to this country when a young girl. Our subject was fifth of twelve children born to his parents. Early in life he became inured to hard farm work and at the age of twenty, starting out for himself, bought a farm in Nodaway county, Missouri, whither his parents had moved in 1880. He spent four years on this farm, which he sold in 1884 and came to Cherry county, settling on a homestead in section 27, township 35, range 28, where he built a small house, covered with tar paper. As a start he had two good teams, a wagon, two cows and some farm machinery, and at once set to work building up his home. In the spring of 1885 he helped to organize the first school in this locality, the school being held in his own house, his wife acting as the teacher. During the drouth periods they were able to raise but very little besides the feed absolutely needed to supply their stock, suffering hard times but never despairing, and now his farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres, half of which is under cultivation. He has this improved with good farm buildings, including a large barn and granary with corn cribs, etc. Altogether Mr. Hahn operates at times nine hundred and sixty acres of land, and has also been extensively engaged in the cattle and horse raising business.

Mr. Hahn was married in Illinois in 1880 to Miss Lura Melton, of American parentage, and of this union five children were born, as follows: Mabel, Lloyd, Clement, Anna and Otis D.

He is a Democrat politically, and takes an active part in party politics, attending conventions as delegate, and is an earnest worker for his party. He has served a term or two as deputy county treasurer. He affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen lodges of Valentine.

WILLIAM LOCHMILLER.

William Lochmiller, who occupies a foremost place among the early settlers in Nebraska, has been engaged in farming in Brown county for many years, where he has a thoroughly improved farm. He has a wide circle of acquaintances, and is recognized as a gentleman of active public spirit, highly respected and esteemed in the locality in which he resides.

Mr. Lochmiller was born in Crawford county, Iowa, January 3, 1864. His parents, Caspar and Sophia Lochmiller, came to the United States from Germany in 1859 or 1860, shortly after the birth of their first child. They located in Iowa, where their family of seven children, of whom our subject is the fourth member, were reared and given the advantages of the country schools, assisting the father in the farm work during the time not spent attending school. In 1877 the father left Iowa and came to Nebraska, taking a homestead in section 10, township 30, range 22, Brown county. Here he put up a dugout as his first building, and started farming for himself, "batching it" for two years, with the assistance of some of the boys who had joined him, the remainder of the family coming in 1879. He remained on this homestead until his death in the spring of 1904. William, the subject of this review, remained with his father until his marriage, when he took up a homestead also in section 10, living here twenty-one years in all, going through hard and uncomfortable experiences during the drouth periods, severe winters, grasshopper raids, and all the hardships which the pioneer settlers had to endure at those times. After a hard struggle in getting started he came out all right, steadily improving his farm, putting up good buildings, and erected a fine house and large barn with accommodations for sheltering sixteen horses, granaries, carriage and machine sheds, windmills, fenced all his land, and altogether made his one of the finest farms in the county. He remained on this until 1904, when he moved to his present farm in section 35, township 31, range 22, having previously purchased three quarter sections of land here, and he also has a fine two-story eight-room house conveniently arranged and fitted up with many modern improvements. He has a large barn, built in 1903, granary, large chicken house, blacksmith shop fitted up with anvil, vise and bellows, and all the tools necessary for the repairing of farm machinery. He also has erected two windmills together with a fine milk house near by. At the time he bought this farm but ninety acres were broken up, and the whole place was overgrown with brush. He has since cleared all of the land, planted one hundred apple trees and a large number of cherry, plum and other small fruit trees, all growing in fine condition. He is engaged to quite an extent in stock raising, running fifty head of stock cattle and fourteen milch cows, which net him a snug sum each year. In the fall of 1906 he bought twenty acres in the western part of Ainsworth, where he erected a comfortable house, barns and other buildings and has practically retired, surrendering the operation of the farm to his eldest son.

In June, 1885, Mr. Lochmiller was married to Miss Bertha Sobel, who came to this country from Germany when a young girl. They have four children, namely: Otto, Willie, Hattie and Eddie, all born in Brown county. July 5, 1899, Mr. Lochmiller met with a sad misfortune in the death of his wife, who was accidentally killed during a cyclone. The family saw the storm coming up and they all ran to the cellar for protection, when Mrs. Lochmiller, supposing one of the children had been left behind, started to open the cellar door, and just at this instant the cyclone struck the house moving it so that she was caught under the timbers and instantly killed. This was a terrible blow to the family, the manner of her death making it all the more harrowing. In 1900 Mr. Lochmiller married Mrs. Henrietta Schneidereit, a native of Germany, who came to this country in 1882 with her husband, locating in Council Bluffs, where they lived for seven years, then moved to Blaine county, Iowa, where he was accidentally killed in 1898, leaving her with the following children: Herman, Fred, Lizzie, Anna, Albert, Rhinehart and Henry. When the family first settled in Iowa they went through much privation, and just as they were beginning to get a start, the husband and father lost his life by being shot. One child was born to Mr. Lochmiller as a result of this second marriage, Ella, born in their present home. They are members of the Lutheran church and in politics Mr. Lochmiller is a Democrat.

MICHAEL F. EGAN.

Michael F. Egan, a prominent ranch owner and stockman of Dawes county, will surely appear on any list of the old settlers of western Nebraska. He was born in the mining regions of Wisconsin in 1849, a son of Constantine and Jane (Morne) Egan, both of whom were natives of Ireland. Here he spent the earlier portion of his life, having started to work in the zinc and lead mines at the early age of twelve years. Twenty-two years of his life were spent following this occupation.

In 1885, Mr. Egan came west into Box Butte county, Nebraska, working for a time at teaming in Valentine. In 1886 he pre-empted a claim in township 32, range 47, and in February, 1887, proved up on his claim. Here he made the start which developed him into one of the most successful ranchmen in western Nebraska. He brought the lumber with which to build his home from Wisconsin. In the fall of 1887 he took a homestead, proved it up, and later sold it for one hundred and fifty dollars, realizing quite a small sum of money by the transaction. The following year, 1899, he purchased his present farm in section 26, township 32, range 47, located at the head of the Little Bordeaux creek. Here Mr. Egan has erected a nice home together with good barns and sheds in which to house his stock. From time to time he has purchased adjacent lands, until at the present time he has a ranch comprising an area of one thousand six hundred acres of deeded and leased land, three hundred acres of which are cultivated. His ranch is one of the largest in this locality, and a large portion of the land has been fenced. Some portions of the land are covered with matured timber. During the past six years Mr. Egan has equipped his farm with many modern improvements, until at the present time a more modernly fitted ranch could not be found in this part of the state. He has successfully withstood the drouth periods, and the many hardships which confronted the earlier settlers in this section of the country. Our subject engages extensively in the raising of cattle and horses, and has made an enviable reputation as one of the leading ranchmen of western Nebraska.

Mr. Egan was married in Wisconsin in October, 1875, to Katherine Kent, daughter of Patrick and Ellen (Egan) Kent, both of whom were natives of Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Egan are the parents of thirteen children, viz: Constantine, Ellen and Laura, both of whom are school teachers; Patrick, Katie, who is married; Michael, Daniel and Julia, eight children born in Wisconsin; Margaretta, Lizzie, Mary, John and Walter, five children born in Nebraska.

In political matters Mr. Egan generally takes strong Republican ground. He has always been prominently identified with educational matters here, having served as a school officer for many years, and has assisted in the building and opening of several of the schools in this county. He has always taken an active part in the development of Dawes county, and enjoys the respect and confidence of a host of warm friends in the community in which his useful life is passing.

J. M. BROWN.

J. M. Brown of Holdrege, Nebraska, is proprietor of a valuable estate in Phelps county, and among the pioneer settlers of this locality. He has spent many years in building up this property, and now has retired from all active business.

Mr. Brown is a native of Smoland, Sweden, born in 1845, and came to this country in 1869, locating near Burlington, Iowa. He is now the owner of three hundred and twenty acres including the west half section 17, of Divide township, and farmed this land from 1887 up to 1903, at the end of which time he located in Holdrege. He has his farm well improved with good buildings, fences, etc., and the place is operated by his son, Fred Brown. He has a herd of eighty pure bred Hereford cattle, also a large number of graded cattle, and a drove of Duroc Jersey hogs. He raises banner crops on his land, his wheat crop running up to forty bushels per acre. Year before last he procured some genuine Turkey wheat seed from the Nebraska Agricultural College at Lincoln, and from five bushels of seed he raised one hundred and five bushels of fine wheat. He sold a part of his crop, and from the seed he reserved, this year raised five hundred bushels, the yield being thirty bushels per acre.

Mr. Brown's son Fred is clerk of Divide township, and president of the Farmers' Elevator Company just completed at Funk, with a capacity of twenty thousand bushels, in which two hundred farmers are stockholders. One son, Eben Brown, operates a store in Funk, Nebraska. Another son, Elmer, is engaged in farming, and is recognized as one of the most successful young agriculturists in the locality. He, together with his father, operate about a thousand acres of land, and raise from ten to eleven thousand bushels of grain each year. Previous to settling here Mr. Brown farmed in Iowa, and he considers Nebraska far superior to that state for farming and stock raising. The country is healthier here, and the people get along better, and he says that had he remained there he would not have been nearly so well off as he is today.

Mr. Brown married Miss Matilda Johnson, a native of Sweden. Their family consists of the sons above mentioned, and two daughters, Mrs. C. R. Wegert, of Lincoln, Nebraska, and Miss Edna Brown, of Holdrege. The family are members of the Lutheran church, of which Mr. Brown has been a trustee for nine years. Politically he is a Republican.

CHRISTOPHER E. WEYERTS.

Christopher E. Weyerts is one of the pioneers of Cheyenne county who has been an important factor in the development and growth of the region, where he has spent the past twenty-five years. He has extensive ranching interests, all of which have been acquired by dint of his own energy and perseverance. He is known throughout the county and enjoys the confidence and esteem of all.

Mr. Weyerts was born in the village of Burhoffe, province of Hanover, Germany, on the 22d day of November, 1866, and was reared there until the age of fifteen years; he was the third in a family of six children born to his parents. The family sailed from Bremerhaven March 22, 1881, on the Elbe and after a voyage of nine days arrived in New York. They settled at first in Peoria, Illinois, and spent one year there and for three years our subject was employed in a store in Flatsville, coming to Cheyenne county in the spring of 1886. They were among the earliest white settlers on the table land, their first location being what was later called Weyerts Postoffice.

Our subject filed on a homestead on section 26, township 16, range 48, and there he began the farm which has now reached immense proportions, he being proprietor of two thousand two hundred and forty acres, and is classed among the wealthy residents of the county. He has two hundred acres under the plow, raising splendid crops, and has a complete set of substantial farm buildings, including a handsome residence, fine groves, and every convenience to be found on a model ranch. He keeps one hundred and twenty-five head of cattle and forty horses. The place is one of the best equipped in the county, and a drive over the entire ranch will convince the visitor that systematic efforts and painstaking care are used in the operation of the place.

Mr. Weyerts' parents, Tonges and Maria (Rolfs) Weyerts, are both dead, and he is the only remaining member of this prominent family now living in Cheyenne county. On March 16, 1892, he was united in marriage to Miss Anna Hinrich, a most charming and estimable lady, who was born in Golden, Adams county, Illinois, a daughter of Henry and Anke (Onnan) Hinrich, natives of the province of Hanover, Germany. Five children have been born to this union, namely: Tonges, Henry, Mary, John and Margaret, who form a most interesting family group. They have a pleasant home, surrounded by every comfort that a rural residence affords.

In politics Mr. Weyerts is a Roosevelt Democrat. He is active in neighborhood affairs, acting as a member of the school board in his community. The family are regular attendants of the Lutheran church at Weyerts, of which he is a trustee.

HENRY J. WINTON.

Henry J. Winton, who resides on section 19, township 26, range 51, Box Butte county, Nebraska, is the owner of a fine farm here. He has made his name and influence felt as a capable and worthy citizen since settling here in 1886, and is one of the prominent old settlers of this region.

RESIDENCE AND FAMILY OF MARTIN BECKER,
Cherry County, Nebraska.

Mr. Winton was born in Koblenz, Rhine Province, Germany, in 1848, and was reared in his native country, learning the mason's trade as a boy, and followed that work in Germany for a number of years, traveling in Westphalia and Rhine Pronzen. He served in the German army for four years and at the age of twenty-six was married to Mary Christine Kreuzberg, who was a native of the same town as our subject.

In 1878 he came to America with his family, landing in New York in 1880, and immediately struck out for the western states, settling in Iowa, where he bought a farm of eighty acres situated in Crawford county, and there engaged at farming for several years. In 1886 Mr. Winton came to Nebraska and settled in Box Butte county and selected the site which is his present homestead. His first dwelling was a sod building, as also were his barns, and he went to work to improve his place, breaking land for crops, and was obliged to haul all the family supplies from Hay Springs, which was a distance of seventy miles. When he came here he drove through the country from Iowa, also bringing along a herd of cattle. After he had settled in the sod shack with his family there was barely enough room for a bed and table, as he had the building filled with grain, etc. He was getting along very well when the drouth seasons struck him and for three years was hardly able to raise enough to get his seed back which he planted, although he managed to raise enough potatoes which furnished the chief food for the family.

Mr. Winton is now proprietor of a fine ranch consisting of three sections, all of which is fenced and well improved with good farm buildings, wells, windmills, etc. He has all kinds of modern farm machinery, and operates his farm and ranch along advanced lines. He has plenty of good grass to run his stock, a nice grove of trees, and always has a splendid garden and plenty of small fruits for domestic use, such as gooseberries, currants, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. Winton are the parents of the following children: Joseph H., Mary, Christine, Jacob, Gertrude and Henry.

Mr. Winton has held school office in his district for the past several years, and has always taken an active and commendable interest in local affairs. Politically he is a Republican.

MARTIN BECKER.

Martin Becker, a successful farmer and stock raiser of Cherry county, Nebraska, resides on a fine farm located in section 31, township 35, range 26, and has gained an enviable reputation as a citizen of true worth. Mr. Becker is a native of Schwarzen Hazel, Germany, born September 23, 1858. He was reared and educated on his father's farm in the fatherland, the fifth in a family of eight children. At the age of fourteen he became a wagon-maker's apprentice, serving several years, afterwards doing all kinds of work in the vicinity of his parents' home. In 1881 he took passage for the new world, landing in New York in the summer of that year. Coming to Ohio he worked at his trade in the Milburn wagon factory at Toledo, and in a factory at St. Marys, in Auglaize county, until 1884, and then, feeling an ambition to do for himself, came to Nebraska, settling in Otoe county, where he remained for one year. On April 6, 1885, he took up a homestead in section 31, township 35, range 26, and still lives on this place. His first dwelling was a sod house and the family lived in that for three years before moving into a more comfortable log dwelling. He went through the usual pioneer's life, experiencing many hardships and discouragements, but stuck to it through all, only giving up once and then went to Wisconsin looking for a better place to locate, but satisfied that this was the better state came back after an absence of seven weeks and started in again, making an enviable success of his farming operations in Nebraska. His entire capital on returning from Wisconsin, one hundred and twenty-five dollars, he invested in cattle and started in the stock business, in which he has been successful at both that and mixed farming. His ranch consists of six hundred and forty acres of land, improved with good farm buildings and fences. He keeps about one hundred head of cattle and also a number of horses and altogether has a fine farm and home.

Mr. Becker was married October 21, 1882, to Miss Anna Knierim, born in Erkshausen, Germany, who came to America on the same boat that brought him. They have a family of seven children, named as follows: Mary, Annie, Henry, Lydia, Otto, Martha and Edith, all born in this state except Mary, whose birth occurred in Ohio.

Mr. Becker takes a personal interest in the building up of his community and lends his aid in all affairs of importance regarding the educational and commercial advancement of his locality. He has been a director in the school for ten years, and one of the prominent men in the county. He is Independent in politics and looks for the best man on the ticket instead of voting blindly for the party.

Mr. Becker holds fellowship in the Modern Woodmen, the Woodmen of the World and, with Mrs. Becker, is a member of the Fraternal Union of America. His recollections of early struggles in the west are still vivid. During the period of hard times he supported his family by chopping and hauling wood from the canyons. The early Indian scares did not disturb them to a great extent, only one night did they abandon their home, holding fort with neighbors at Mr. Archer's, three miles east of their ranch. A view of the family residence will be found elsewhere in this work.

GEORGE W. FOWLER.

Among the progressive and substantial agriculturists of Sheridan county, Nebraska, a prominent place is accorded the subject of this sketch.

Mr. Fowler was born in Dane county, Wisconsin, in 1860. His father, Preston Fowler, was a farmer of American stock, raised in New York state, and he died when our subject was five years old. He was the only child, and lived with his mother until he reached his fifteenth year, when he struck out for himself, working at anything he could find to do. He followed factory work in Illinois for two years, and in 1880 came west and landed in southeast Nebraska, where he remained until 1884, when he came to Sheridan county, settling on the place he now occupies, and has lived here continuously since that time. When he located on this farm all he had to start with was a team and some farming implements. He at once went to work, and by perseverance and industry has accumulated a nice property, comprising eight hundred acres of good farming land in section 13, township 33, range 43, of which about one hundred acres is highly cultivated. He has his farm well improved and runs about eighty to one hundred head of stock. During the dry years he suffered heavy losses in the destruction of his crops and was almost back to where he started, but after the hard times had passed he was able to raise good crops, and has been very successful in his different ventures.

In 1884 Mr. Fowler was married to Miss C. Belle Gleason, a native of Wisconsin, born in 1860, of American stock. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler have a family of five children, named as follows: Ruby Elsie, Carrie Belle, Preston, Frank E. and George L., all born and raised on the present homestead. The family have a wide acquaintance and are highly respected by all who know them.

Mr. Fowler is an Independent in politics, and although he takes a keen interest in public affairs, both local and state, he has never held any office, as he has never had the time to devote to these matters. His whole attention is engaged in building up his farm and home, and everything bears evidence of thrift and good management in the operation of his estate. He is one of the old-timers of Sheridan county, and enjoys the confidence of his fellow-men.

FRANK S. CLAPPER.

Frank S. Clapper, one of the best known prominent pioneers of Brown county, resides on section 12, township 27, range 24, where he has a good farm and pleasant home, situated on the banks of a beautiful little lake. Mr. Clapper has endured many hardships in accumulating this property, and can recount many thrilling experiences of the early days in this part of the country.

Mr. Clapper is a native of Elk Horn, Wisconsin, born January 17, 1846. His father, Jacob Clapper, of German descent, was a tanner by trade during his early life and later a farmer. In a family of eight children our subject is the third member, being reared in the state of his birth, near the pineries, where he became familiar with life in the big woods. At the age of twenty-three years he emigrated to Kansas, where he took up a homestead in Republic county in the western part of the state. At the end of three years he moved to Gage county, Nebraska, where he lived for several years at Blue Springs and Wymore, following his trade as a mason. In 1884 he moved to Blaine county, Nebraska, near Brewster, where he took a timber claim. There he put up a sod building and lived in it for ten years, working with oxtteams for several years, being obliged to haul all his supplies for eighty miles, from North Loup, which was the nearest railroad point. During these trips he camped out at night under his wagon. At one time he drove one hundred and sixty miles with an ox team to get a gallon of kerosene. One of the children was sick and needed medicine at night, hence the long drive. Mr. Clapper had but twenty-five cents in cash at the time. Another time he was compelled to go for two or three weeks without flour, and again for several days had only a few potatoes to live on. Their nearest neighbor was twelve miles away, and it was weeks that he did not see anyone except his own family. These were hard times, and often did he regret having come here, but as the years grew better, and the country became more thickly settled times changed and he is now glad that he stuck to it, and is perfectly satisfied with conditions now. He moved to Brown county in 1894, settling on his present place. For seven years

RESIDENCE OF F. S. CLAPPER,
Brown County, Nebraska.

FARM PROPERTY OF ANDREW CARR,
Keya Paha County, Nebraska.

he lived in a sod house, adding a comfortable frame dwelling and other buildings since, there being no improvements whatever when he took the place. His ranch comprises twenty-four hundred acres, including his sons' two sections. He is extensively engaged in stock raising, and keeps one hundred and twenty head on his place, besides running a large number for other people. He has good buildings now, conveniently arranged, and with good water, fruits and other comforts of rural life, enjoys his possessions to the full in the declining years of his life.

On another page of this volume will be found a picture of Mr. Clapper's property.

Mr. Clapper was married, July 4, 1879, to Miss Mary Wilson, born near Independence, Iowa, a daughter of John J. and Almeda (Vining) Wilson. To them have come five children, namely: Florence, wife of John Hollowpeter, of Brown county; Carl, deceased; Charlie, who is mail carrier from Lakeland to Midvale; John and Frank, the latter dying in 1904.

Mr. Clapper politically holds with the Republican party.

ANDREW CARR.

The subject of this personal history was born June 25, 1850, near Clinton, Iowa, on his father's farm. The latter, Eli Carr, was of old American stock, a native of Pennsylvania, moving about 1853 to Winona county, Minn. He came to Nebraska about 1862, settling in Richardson county, and living there and in Nemaha county until 1883. Coming to Keya Paha county that year he became one of the leading citizens, his death occurring here in 1885; the mother, whose maiden name was Katherine Shults, of Pennsylvania Dutch parentage, died in Richardson county. Our subject was the oldest member in a family of nine children, and he was reared in Iowa and Nebraska and educated there, attending the country schools. At the age of twenty he started out for himself, on the railroad in Texas and on farms in Missouri and Kansas. After his marriage he rented a farm in Richardson county, and remained there for twelve or thirteen years. In 1883 he, with his family, came to Long Pine during the month of April, and located on his present homestead, situated in sections 27 and 34, township 33, range 20. Here he was about the first settler to take up land, there being no dwellings on the tables and few along the river; his first dwelling was a log house, in which they lived for some time, then put up a sod house addition. He kept on improving and building up the farm, and although meeting with many failures and discouragements in the shape of drouth periods and crop losses, he never thought of quitting, but was determined to stick it out and win, which he did. At one time, when times were particularly hard, he went into Cedar county, Nebraska, many miles from his home, where he secured employment at husking corn in order to support his family. As a first shelter on arrival in this county the family lived in a shack made of carpets hung on poles, and three times, before a house could be built, the family were drenched with rain, which poured through the carpets.

After putting in many hard years the good times came on and he was able to get ahead, and he now has a comfortable home and is proprietor of five hundred and twenty acres of good land, two hundred acres of which is cultivated, the balance being used for pasture land. There is a good growth of natural timber on his place. He has good buildings, a commodious barn and corn crib being built in 1908. The dwelling, with its outbuildings, situated on section 27, are presented in an engraving elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Carr was married June 24, 1880, in Richardson county, to Miss Elizabeth Calhoun, daughter of Zedic Calhoun, of Welsh descent. Mr. and Mrs. Carr have a family of thirteen children, all of whom are living, named as follows: Fred W., Harry C., Claude F., Clyde L., Maud M., Nettie P., Effie J., Ida A., George A., Echo M., Hazel, Charlie and Ernest. They are an industrious and energetic family, highly esteemed by all who know them. Mr. Carr and his sons engage extensively in contracting and building, residing in Springview.

Mr. Carr is a man of active public spirit, popular with his associates and always foremost in any scheme which tends to the betterment of conditions in his locality. In 1900 he was elected county commissioner and served for three years. He is a member of the Populist party, and is prominent in political affairs.

FRANK S. VOSIKA.

Frank S. Vosika, a well-known resident of Lodgepole, Nebraska, has won for himself a good standing by his integrity and honest dealings, and is highly respected for his many excellent qualities and manly worth.

Mr. Vosika was born in the village of Drahov, Bohemia, November 5, 1866, and grew up in that country, where he received the usual education of the youths of his class. He came to America in 1880, landing in New York, whence proceeded to Saline county, Nebraska, following farming seven years. In 1887 he came to Cheyenne county, and filed on a homestead on section 14, township 12, range 48, started a farm and remained for a number of years, proving up on the land, and later sold it at a good profit. He afterwards bought a large ranch of one thousand one hundred and twenty acres in and adjoining section 18, township 13, range 46, and still owns this property, using it as a ranch, called the Hillside Stock Farm, and on this ranch he keeps a large number of cattle and horses. About two hundred acres are used for grain raising and the whole place is in first-class shape, with good buildings, fences, and well improved and splendidly equipped for raising stock on a large scale. Mr. Vosika has been very successful in his ventures, and still operates the ranch, although he, with his family, reside in Lodgepole for the advantage of good schools; they reside part of the year on the ranch.

Mr. Vosika was married at Sidney, on December 24, 1894, to Miss Mary Kutis, who was born in Marshall county, Kansas, in 1873, her parents coming to Cheyenne county in 1887. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Vosika, named as follows: Mollie, Rosa, Mary, Josie, Annie and Kate, and are a bright and interesting group. Mr. Vosika's parents are at present residing in Gregory county, South Dakota, and his wife's parents live in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. Our subject is a representative citizen, and takes a commendable interest in local affairs. He is a loyal Democrat.

P. N. ANDRESEN.

P. N. Andresen, the subject of this review, is numbered among the representative farmers of Divide township. He is the owner of a valuable estate in section 18, Phelps county, where he has built up a pleasant and comfortable home.

Mr. Andresen is a native of Flensburg, Holstein, born in the year 1868, and came to this country when an infant with his parents, settling in Brooklyn, New York. In 1881 he came to York county, Nebraska, with his father, Christopher Andresen, who served in the Danish army during the war with Germany in 1864, and taken as a prisoner by the enemy. In 18— his father sold his farm in York county and purchased three hundred and twenty acres of farming land in Divide township, Phelps county, paying $10,000, and which is now worth $20,000. In 1903 our subject went in for himself, buying one hundred and sixty acres located in section 18, Divide township, for which he gave $5,000, and this has doubled in value since then. He has lived on this property since that time and farmed with good success, raising excellent crops, his wheat running twenty-five, corn forty, and oats forty-five bushels per acre, all of which is of A1 quality. He keeps from fifty to one hundred hogs, twenty cattle, and about a dozen horses, and has his place well improved, with good substantial buildings, fences, etc.

Mr. Andresen enjoys the confidence of his associates, and has held numerous positions of trust. He is at present secretary of the Farmers Elevator Company, located at Funk, Nebraska, with a capacity of twenty thousand. #### JACKSON METTLEN.

Jackson Mettlen, known throughout Sioux county as a gentleman of enterprise and prosperity, is owner of a well improved estate in section 3, township 28, range 54. He is an old settler in that region, and has developed his farm through earnest and persistent effort, supplemented by good management and honest dealings with all.

Mr. Mettlen was born in Petersburg, Menard county, Illinois, in 1855. His father, B. C. Mettlen, was of German-American descent, a carpenter by trade. Our subject was reared in his native state, starting for himself in the grocery business at Minier, Illinois, in 1879, and remained there up to 1885, then came to Nebraska, locating seven miles west of Hemingford, in Box Butte county. There he took up a homestead, bought a team of mules and farmed for seven years, and also ran a store and was postmaster for two years at Lawn, in Box Butte county. He came to Sioux county in 1895, and went on the old "33 ranch", remaining for several years, locating on his present homestead in 1896. This is situated on the Niobrara river, is well supplied with pasture and hay land, and good water supply, etc. There are one thousand one hundred acres in the place, and he has succeeded in improving it in first-class shape, putting up good buildings, fencing the entire ranch, and installing a fine system of irrigation. Mr. Mettlen is now in comfortable circumstances, has a pleasant home and lives in contentment, surrounded by all the comforts of our modern rural life.

On October 18, 1887, Mr. Mettlen was united in marriage to Sadie Irion. Her father, John Irion, was an old settler in Box Butte county, where she grew up. Her mother was Susan Osborn, and her parents were also among the earliest settlers in this region. During the early residence of Mr. Irion and his family in Box Butte county, he was obliged to haul water a distance of seven miles for household purposes, and they went through every hardship and suffered many privations incident to pioneer life in the region. Mr. and Mrs. Mettlen are the parents of six children, named as follows: Blanche, now married, residing in Sioux county; Clark, Grace, Bessie, Floyd and Vera, the last mentioned now deceased.

Our subject is a Republican, has always been active in local affairs, in 1899 having been elected county commissioner, serving one term.

TRUMAN P. MOODY.

Truman P. Moody is one of the oldest settlers in Dawes county and vicinity. He came here many years ago when this section had more population than the county could support, and many were forced to leave, but he was one of the fortunate ones who stuck to it, and has been amply rewarded for his perseverance and industry in the possession of a fine farm and home built up by hard labor and energetic effort. He has been of material aid in building up the locality since he chose this part of the country for his home, and deserves much credit for the part he has taken in local and county affairs.

Mr. Moody was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, in 1850, on his parents' farm. His father, Wilson B. Moody, was also a native of Illinois, and followed farming all his life. Our subject grew up in his native state, attending the country schools and helping with the work of carrying on the farm, remaining in Illinois up to 1876, then he moved to Iowa, settling in Adair county, at first farming on rented land and later purchasing an eighty-acre farm, where he lived for a number of years. He then came to Dawes county, Nebraska, and located on his present farm, in section 32, township 34, range 52, the country here being then but very thinly settled and he was among the first to locate in this township. His first building was a board shanty, fourteen by twenty-four feet in size, having but one room, and he occupied this for quite a time. He attempted to farm on this gumbo land, but it was a failure, so he gave it up and went to Iowa, where he spent one year. This was during the dry times throughout the section, and it was hard for anybody to make even a living on account of the loss of crops, etc., and Mr. Moody finally decided to go into the stock business, and picked up a few cattle and about one hundred and fifty sheep as a starter. He kept adding to his herd, and buying land, and now owns a ranch of two thousand acres, all deeded land, and his sons each own homesteads. Besides his ranch in Dawes county he owns four hundred acres in Custer county, and has plenty of good pasture for his stock, the farm also being well supplied with springs and running water. The ranch is all fenced, and he has put up good buildings and improvements, and devotes his entire time and attention to the stock business, raising both cattle and sheep, for which he finds a ready market at all times. This ranch extends along the Big Cottonwood creek, and is one of the valuable estates of the county.

At the age of twenty-one Mr. Moody was married to Miss Pauline Knapper, born and raised at Whiteside, Illinois, daughter of Gotlieb Knapper, a farmer of German descent. Mr. and Mrs. Moody have a family of seven children, who are named as follows: William, Katie, Clara, Perry, Albert, Robert and Thomas.

Politically Mr. Moody is an Independent and takes an active interest in local and county affairs, serving as assessor for his district several terms.

J. A. H. GOUDIE.

J. A. H. Goudie, one of the old-timers of Harlan county, Nebraska, resides on his present farm in Sappa township, where he enjoys a retired life free from all hard labor, after many years of hardship and responsibility. He has a beautifully kept place of forty acres, all set out to fruit trees of every kind, and takes genuine delight in keeping this in the very best condition, enjoying his declining years in a peaceful and comfortable home. He is a man of much experience, and intelligent and genial in his manners to all whom he meets.

Mr. Goudie is a native of Franklin county, Indiana, born in 1842. His father, James Goudie, was born in Pennsylvania, and his mother, who was Susannah Mathieson, was born in county Tipperary, Ireland, and came to America at the age of seven years. His grandfather, also James Goudie, was of Scotch extraction, and came to this country in the early days, via the north of Ireland, settling in Pennsylvania. Our subject grew up in Indiana, and in May, 1861, he enlisted when only nineteen years old in the Twentieth Ohio Infantry, and served for three months, in September of the same year enlisting in the Thirty-seventh Indiana, serving with the Army of the Cumberland at Stone River, Murphysboro, and later in Chattanooga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Chickamauga, Dalton, Resaca, Atlanta and all battles of that campaign. On the march to the sea he was one of the guards that delivered C. L. Valandingham to General Bragg of the confederates. Our subject was one of those who took part in the grand review at Washington, and then re-enlisted as a veteran for three years. During his life as a soldier he was wounded three times, twice at Stone River, and once while delivering dispatches in Tennessee. After the war he settled in Campaign county, Illinois, remaining there up to 1878, then came to Nebraska, where he took a homestead and engaged in farming, following that work up to 1890, when he retired to the forty-acre farm on which he now lives. He has been on the school board, township board, and has served as assessor for several years. He is also a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic of Orleans, and a man whom all delight to honor. Politically he is a Republican.

Mr. Goudie was married in 1866 to Miss Rowena Schultz, of Franklin county, Indiana, and they have one son, Edgar, living in Stamford.

GEORGE L. TAYLOR.

George L. Taylor, vice-president of the First State Bank, of Hemingford, whose personal character and conceded ability well qualify him for the position which he holds, and who takes a leading part as a ranchman and citizen of Box Butte county, where his many broad acres show him to be both industrious and persistent, was born on a farm in Madison county, New York, in 1862. In 1864 the family came west and settled in South Dakota. Here his father, Charles N. Taylor, was a dealer in merchandise and a farmer and stock raiser, and engaged in many different enterprises. His mother was Mary (Baker) Taylor.

Mr. Taylor spent the earlier years of his life in South Dakota, where he received his education and assisted his father in his business. He completed his education at the South Dakota University at Vermillion, after which he taught school in South Dakota and Nebraska. In 1885 he came to Box Butte county, Nebraska, driving from South Dakota with a team and covered wagon, and located on section 24, township 28, range 51, where his first building was a sod shanty. At this time Hay Springs was his trading point. Through years of adversity and prosperity he worked hard to make a home for himself, and by the practice of thrift and economy he has acquired an estate of three thousand seven hundred and twenty acres of land, and has many acres of leased land extending to the Niobrara river, a small portion of which he has under cultivation. His ranch is well fenced and cross fenced, and he has erected a substantial and commodious house together with other suitable buildings. There are good wells and wind mills on his place. On another page will be found an interesting picture showing a scene on Mr. Taylor's stock ranch.

The wedding ceremonies of Mr. Taylor and Miss Bertha White occurred in 1888. Her parents, John T. and Minerva (Parks) White, were prominent old settlers in South Dakota. Ten children came to bless this union, viz: Ruth, Edna, Olive, Charles, Helen, Harold, Amy, Arthur, Gladys and Mabel.

In political matters Mr. Taylor adheres to Republican principles. He has always been prominently identified in educational matters here, where he has assisted materially in the organization and building of the schools, and where he now holds the office of school director. He was instrumental in the organization of the First State Bank of Hemingford, of which institution he holds the office of vice-president. His career is a striking illustration of persistence, pluck and energy, and shows what possibilities this great western country has opened to the thrifty and ambitious man.

JOHN MEVICH.

The name of John Mevich will surely appear on any list of the prominent old settlers of western Nebraska, as he is widely known as an agriculturist of ability and a man who has taken an active interest in the growth and development of this western country.

Mr. Mevich was born in Kenosha, Wisconsin, October 3, 1860. He is a son of Peter and Mary Mevich. His father was a native of Germany and his mother of Ireland. When our subject was but a babe, the family moved to Bureau county, Illinois, where he was reared and educated, attending the public schools. In the spring of 1882 he left Illinois and went to Hamilton county, Iowa, where he engaged in farm work. He remained there until 1886, coming to Ogallala, Keith county, Nebraska, in the spring of that year. He made a filing for a homestead on the north-west quarter of section 7, township 16, range 42, in what was then Cheyenne county, but which has since been divided and now forms a part of Deuel county. He proved up on his homestead and purchased adjoining property, and his farm now consists of six hundred and forty acres. The ranch is located on the Blue creek, and is well equipped with good improvements. Mr. Mevich engages quite extensively in stock raising and runs about two hundred head. He is especially interested in the raising of hogs, of which he has a fine herd, some of his animals having taken several prizes. For three years he has taken first prizes at the Denver stock show. Our subject is well and favorably known throughout the vicinity as an agriculturist and stock raiser of ability. He has had his share of pioneer experiences, going through the hardships of those early days with a spirit of enthusiasm which has won for him one of the finest ranches to be found anywhere.

Mr. Mevich was married to Miss Grace White, March 31, 1890, at Hutchinson, Deuel county. She is a native of Minnesota, and a daughter of Wellington and Mary (Langton) White, who came to Deuel county in 1886. Her parents are both living and reside at Lewellen, Nebraska. The father of Mr. Mevich died about 1876, when our subject was a mere boy. His mother is still living, and resides in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Mevich are the parents of two children, Ruth and Charlotte, both of whom live at home with their parents.

Mr. Mevich is a Republican in politics. He has always taken an active interest in all affairs pertaining to the welfare of western Nebraska. He has spent his time on his farm and ranch, and leases two hundred acres of irrigated land, and on this raises the best of alfalfa.

ROBERT J. WESTOVER.

Robert J. Westover, of section 6, township 24, range 38, Grant county, Nebraska, is one of the best known men, largest land owner and ranchman of his locality. He has spent many years in western Nebraska, having occupied his present ranch for over twenty-one years, and during that time has developed a fine property and met with splendid success in his enterprise.

Mr. Westover was born in Delaware county, Iowa, in June, 1863. His father, A.

H. Westover, was a farmer by occupation, of Dutch stock from Pennsylvania, his father being of Pennsylvania Dutch blood, and his mother of Scotch-Irish. Our subject's mother was, prior to her marriage, Miss Ann Bella, a native of Ireland, of pure Scotch-Irish blood. The family settled in Iowa as pioneers and lived there up to 1870, then came to Nebraska, traveling by team to their new home in this state, camping out along the way and suffering from exposure during rough weather on the trip. Upon arriving in Nebraska they settled near Lincoln, in Lancaster county, and there went through the usual pioneer experiences, but remained there until our subject was seventeen years of age. He then left home and went into Colorado, locating near Greeley, where he worked as a cowboy and followed ranching for one year in that vicinity. He came back to Nebraska and settled at Lincoln, but only spent a couple of years there, then drifted into South Dakota and rail-roaded there during one summer. He next located in David City, Nebraska, for one year, starting in the horse business, working there for two years as a "broncho buster." Mr. Westover's next move was to Albion, Boone county, Nebraska, and there he was elected town marshal and served for three months. He went to Laramie City, Wyoming, from Albion, and worked on a cattle ranch for fourteen months, then came to Grant county, Nebraska, arriving there in the fall of 1887, where his wife was the first white woman to settle, and their's the first house ever built in that section that had a floor in it. They came into Grant county by team, driving from Laramie City, and also brought a bunch of horses with them. They lived for a time in Cherry county and, after filing on a homestead, went through hard times during a number of years, experiencing their worst times in 1892, when they had the misfortune to lose a large bunch of cattle on account of severe storms which swept that region. Mr. Westover lived in the latter vicinity three years, then moved to his present location and began in the ranching business. His place now consists of one thousand one hundred acres, all fenced and improved with good buildings, etc. He has a valuable estate, and keeps a bunch of five hundred cattle and seventy-five horses, handling almost exclusively the Hereford and Durham breed of cattle and heavy draft horses.

Our subject was married in 1884 to Miss Lizzie Christman, daughter of Philip Christman, a pioneer in Boone county, Nebraska. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Westover, namely: Harry, Alta, Mabel, and Lena, the youngest, now nine years of age. The family occupy a nice residence in Hyannis during the school session, in order to give the children better educational advantages. Mr. Westover is a Bryan Democrat.

THOMAS C. MORRISON.

Thomas C. Morrison, a resident of Kirkwood precinct, Rock county, Nebraska, a native of the Isle of Man, born December 5, 1858, exhibits the characteristic virtues of his Manx ancestry, and is a worthy representative of a race not largely known on this side of the ocean. Still in the prime of life he is a hard working and industrious farmer; and upon the broad foundation of integrity, industry and thrift, he has reared a very successful career.

Thomas C. Morrison is the only son of his parents, Thomas and Margaret (Corrin) Morrison, and from the time he was twelve years old has made his own way in the world. His father was a miner, and when the son shifted for himself he crossed the ocean, finding employment for about a year in the Pennsylvania mines; then he journeyed west to Illinois, Rock Island county, where he spent the next seven or eight years in various coal mines of that region, becoming master of every detail of the business.

In the spring of 1880 Mr. Morrison was married to Miss Maggie Atkinson, a daughter of Thomas Atkinson, English born and bred, and a successful farmer of Clinton county, Iowa. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Morrison made their home in that county for about a year while the husband was engaged at the coal chutes of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway. He farmed for the ensuing two years, and then moved to the western part of Iowa, where he occupied a farm two years in Ida county, and for the same period in Woodbury county.

In 1890 Mr. Morrison came to Nebraska and secured a home in Rock county, pre-empting at first in section 5, township 32, range 18, on which, however, he very soon filed homestead papers, proving up in due season and securing for himself and family one of the choicest farming tracts in the county. It consists of four hundred and eighty acres fronting the Niobrara river, and presents many charming scenes as the river sweeps along its way. Especially as a stock and cattle ranch does it afford possibilities which are already being realized in this region.

Mr. Morrison is broad minded and progressive in his agricultural ambitions, and has put down one of the best wells in the county, a notable improvement when one considers a drouthy past. He has planted fruit trees adapted to the soil and climate as well as a variety of small fruit. He has planted a grove which is doing well, and which is liberally supplemented by a native growth of timber, luxuriantly flourishing since the old devastating prairie fires have ceased. He engages in grain and stock farming, and is building up very extensive dairy interests, which have already become very promising. In 1894 he faced his worst year, when the crops were largely destroyed by heat and the dry weather, but in the main he feels that he has been exceptionally fortunate since his establishment in Rock county, and takes a justifiable pride in the results that crown his labors, "of which the end is not yet." In political views he is a Prohibitionist, and is a member of the Kirkwood Methodist church.

JEFFERSON D. TEETERS.

As an old settler of Cherry county, Nebraska, and an agriculturist and ranchman of untiring energy and perseverance, the gentleman above mentioned needs no introduction to the people of his locality. Mr. Teeters has spent the past twelve years in this section of the country, where he is building up a good ranch and is highly esteemed by all as a worthy citizen.

Mr. Teeters was born in Steuben county, Indiana, 1862, and is a brother of Wilson J. and Willis J. Teeters, whose sketches appear in this volume. They are of old American stock, the father having been a farmer in their native county in Indiana, and later an early settler in the eastern part of Nebraska.

At the age of about twenty-two, our subject started out for himself. He had received a common school education, and was familiar with all the work of carrying on a farm. His parents moved to Monona county, Iowa, when he was a lad of fifteen years, residing there for two years, then came to Nebraska, locating in Burt county in 1880. He farmed in that section of the country up to 1896, then moved to Cherry county, and in March, 1897, took up a homestead in sections 2 and 3, township 29, range 34, proving up on it, and in 1904 acquired four hundred and eighty acres additional under the Kincaid law in section 9. He lived in a sod house for a time, building a neat frame house in 1907. In 1904 he moved to his present location in section 9, which he has improved with good buildings, well fences, etc. He is engaged exclusively in stock raising, and is recognized as one of the prosperous and successful ranchmen in this vicinity. He is associated in this and other enterprises with his brothers, Wilson J., Willis J. and Morris L., whose combined holdings exceed five thousand two hundred acres.

Mr. Teeters' home ranch contains eight hundred acres, and he runs from seventy to eighty head of cattle the year round.

SAMUEL BUCKMINSTER.

Samuel Buckminster, a prosperous farmer of Cherry county, Nebraska, has built up a fine home and valuable estate in Merriman precinct.

Mr. Buckminster was born in New Hampshire October 29, 1849, and came to Council Bluffs, Iowa (then called Kingsville), when only a year old. His parents, Lenox and Maria (Waldo) Buckminster, were both of American stock. They settled near Council Bluffs, where our subject was reared and educated, being the younger of two children, and the only one now living. When but nine years old he began to support himself, doing all kinds of work. During his boyhood years he was employed driving team, freighting, and on railroad construction, within eighty-five miles of his father's home, and for the period of twelve years never once saw him. He made his first trip across Nebraska in 1863, and in later years was freighting and working on railroads, still considering Council Bluffs his home. In 1884 he settled ten miles south of Gordon, and engaged in farming, remaining here for six years, then moved on the Snake river, where he lived for eight years, engaged in the stock business. At the end of this time he moved to his present farm, and at once went to work establishing his home, engaging in the stock business and mixed farming, and has been very successful in raising excellent crops. He is located on what is called Missouri Flat, in section 25, township 33, range 37, where he owns one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of farming land, including two hundred acres of Kincaid homestead. His ranch will support two hundred head of cattle and a number of horses, as well as being well adapted to mixed farming. He has seen his share of the ups and downs of the state along with the rest of the old timers. He has a complete set of substantial farm buildings and a good supply of farm machinery for carrying on a well conducted farm. A view of the residence is to be found on another page in this work.

December 20, 1871, Mr. Buckminster was married to Miss Emily Debolt, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1853. Her father, George Debolt, was a French-American, while her grandfather served in the war of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Buckminster are the parents of eight children, namely: Frank, Mollie (dead), Flora, wife of Martin Lowry, Sadie (dead), Charles, Katie, George and Leo.

Mr. Buckminster thinks that Nebraska is the place for a poor man to come, and the success which he has attained is evidence that if a man goes to work with a will and determines to succeed, everything will come to him. He came here with practically no capital and has gained a valuable property, pleasant home, and has the respect and esteem of his fellowmen. Politically he is a Democrat, but is not a radical, always voting for the best man on the ticket. During the Indian uprising he did not, like many, flee the country, but held down his place.

CHARLES W. CRAMER.

Charles W. Cramer is one of the pioneers of Cherry county, and is known throughout this locality as a prosperous and energetic farmer.

Mr. Cramer, the third in a family of eleven children, was born in Knox county, Ohio, October 29, 1839. His father, Levi Cramer, was American born, of German ancestry, and one of the pioneers of western Ohio, dying shortly after moving to Nebraska, in 1884. His wife was Miss Rebecca Phillips, a native of Maryland, daughter of William and Polly (Walker) Phillips. Charles W. Cramer began hard farm work at an early age, being but fifteen when he first swung a cradle in his father's grain fields, and from this time on he made his own way besides helping to support his father's family. He lived with his parents at home until 1861, when he was married to Miss Phoebe Gaskill, daughter of Josiah and Catherine (Van de Vere) Gaskill, the former a farmer, of American stock. Three children have blessed this union, as follows: Melissa A., wife of E. D. Mason, living at St. Joe, Missouri, the mother of two sons; Harrison M., residing in Valentine, father of four children, and Thomas W., also married, who is a farmer, having four hundred and eighty acres lying in sections 7, 8 and 18, township 34, range 28, of Cherry county. While still in Ohio our subject had a small farm, on which he made his home until 1878, then went to Butler county, Nebraska, where he remained for three years, buying a forty-acre farm, which he sold, moving soon after to Knox county, in 1881, and took a homestead, remaining here for twelve years, living for a time in a dugout, twelve by ten feet in size. He drove into Knox county with ox teams and covered wagon. Hard times followed, brought on by grasshopper raids, drouths and all the privations usual to the pioneers of that time. In 1893 he traded his homestead for a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in section 18, township 34, range 28, Cherry county. This farm had no improvements, but Mr. Cramer at once built a house, barn and fences, and now has under cultivation ninety acres, also a finely growing young orchard. July 4, 1894, he had the finest prospect of a corn crop one could wish for, but hot winds sprang up and in the short space of six days a match would have burned the field up. It was with losses such as these that he had to contend. Mr. Cramer is one of those who has helped to make the history of Cherry county. Has held office at different times, serving a term as assessor, and since 1893 as school treasurer in his district. He is proud of the fact that his district is entirely out of debt. He has always been active in religious work, and when first settling in the county was superintendent of two Sabbath schools for four years. The family adhere to the Methodist church of Valentine. In politics Mr. Cramer is an Independent.

JOHN G. LEMONS.

A leading old timer of western Nebraska is found in the gentleman above mentioned, he having come to Dawes county about 1887, when that region was just beginning to be settled by many who had come to this new country to build up a home and fortune through industry and perseverance, and who by dint of good management and often-times much privations have accumulated a competence to last them through their declining years. Mr. Lemons resides in section 33, township 30, range 50, where he has a comfortable home and is held in high esteem by a host of warm friends and good neighbors.

Mr. Lemons was born in Monroe county, Virginia, in 1863, on his father's farm. The latter, James Lemons, spent his whole life in that state, and it was there that the early years of our subject's life were spent. He received a common school education, and was trained in the proper operation of a farm, remaining with his parents up to his eighteenth year, then left home and came west to Illinois, locating in Cameron, Warren county, following farm work in that vicinity for six years. He next went to Kansas, where he remained for a year, working in Ness county. Mr. Lemons first came to Nebraska, landing in Dawes county, in the winter of 1887-'88, and located on a homestead in section 33, township 30, range 51. He at once put up a log cabin and started to build up his farm, and during the first few years found it rather up-hill work owing to the new country, where it was hard to obtain the proper facilities for operating a farm to advantage, but he stuck to the work and devoted his whole time and attention to improving the place. The dry years overtook him and although he suffered losses at different times, never had a complete crop failure, and was able to make a living for his family and also to add to his acreage gradually. His ranch now consists of one thousand acres, of which he has one hundred acres in a high state of cultivation and always raises good crops. The farm is well improved and has comfortable and substantial buildings, fences, and everything in the best possible shape, showing good management in all branches of the business. In 1901 Mr. Lemons made a trip to Alberta, Canada, thinking he might find a place to locate, but found no better country anywhere than he has right here, and is well satisfied to spend the balance of his years in this part of the country.

Mr. Lemons has done his full share toward building up the region, and has aided materially in advancing its best interests, helping to establish schools, and taking an active part in the local government. He has served on the school board for a number of years, and has also held the office of assessor for one term. Politically he lends his influence toward reform movements.

In 1888 Mr. Lemons was married to Miss Harriet A. Forbes, of Dawes county, Nebraska. To Mr. and Mrs. Lemons eleven children have been born, who are named as follows: Guy, Leah, James, Mary, Opha, Velva, Ruth, Crete, John and Levina, and Asa, deceased.

J. N. BONNER.

J. N. Bonner, an estimable citizen of North Platte, Nebraska, is well known throughout the locality in which he resides, and highly respected by his fellowmen.

Mr. Bonner is a native of Wisconsin, and was born in Outagamie county, near Appleton. His father is John N. Bonner, Sr., and a farmer and old settler in Wisconsin, where his family was reared and educated. One son, Adelbert, was employed by the Union Pacific Railway Company as an engineer, and was killed in 1899 in an accident on that road. Our subject came to Nebraska in 1873, locating at North Platte, and went to work in the locomotive department of the Union Pacific railroad. He worked his way up and is now engineer on a passenger train, running from North Platte to Grand Island. He began in the locomotive department at the age of sixteen, beginning as fireman. He started running as an engineer in 1881 at the age of twenty-one years, and has followed it continuously ever since, and has a splendid record to his credit. He was the youngest engineer in years, when appointed, of any then serving. Through strict attention to duty and carefulness in details he has had the best of success and is one of the road's most trusted employes.

Mr. Bonner was married in 1883 to Miss Etta Stebbins, daughter of Hon. Lucian Stebbins, who came to Nebraska in 1873, and began as a ranchman. He was a native of Massachusetts, born in South Wilbraham, of Puritan stock, tracing back his ancestors to the Mayflower, and then on back to 1086, and his wife was Miss Elizabeth Perry Walsh, of Pike county, Illinois. In the early days Hon. Lucian Stebbins first crossed the plains in 1857, and was known all along the Pacific coast from British Columbia to Panama, and was one of the first to write and agitate for the formation of the Populist party, of which he is one of the foremost members at the present time. He served his country during the Civil war in the Fifteenth California Volunteers, and won high honors as a soldier. He has served his community in different capacities since locating here, and in 1897 was representative from the fifty-fourth district in the state legislature. He is the owner of two good farms located near North Platte.

Mr. and Mrs. Bonner have a family of four children, named as follows: Carl and Adelbert, both attending school, Elizabeth, who is an accomplished musician, and one of the finest pianists in this locality, now attending Lincoln Conservatory of Music. She was a member of the High School Sextette, a musical organization of North Platte, who have traveled over the state and sung in a number of the larger cities with great success. Helen, who is also at school. The family is highly respected in North Platte, and they have a pleasant and comfortable home. Mr. Bonner is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

LOUIS CARLSON.

Among the representative agriculturists of Brown county, Nebraska, who have become prosperous and substantial citizens through persistent effort and strict integrity, a prominent place is accorded the gentleman above named.

Mr. Carlson was born in the village of Hanbo, Sweden, July 11, 1848. His father, Lars Carlson, was a farmer, while his maternal grandfather, Michael Arbohm, was a copersmith in that country. The whole family came to America in 1850, father and eldest son coming in the spring of that year, while the mother, with her father and two small children, did not reach American shores until the week before Christmas, having been on the water since spring. The second birthday of our subject was celebrated on board ship in the middle of the Atlantic ocean. Each division of the family came across the states by way of the Hudson, Erie canal and the Lakes, landing in Chicago, going from there direct to Victoria, Knox county, Illinois. Here our subject was reared and educated, attending the common schools, the while assisting his father in the work of the farm, the elder brother, Michael, having died on August 20, 1862, throwing the burden of helping the father in the farm work on Louis, then a lad of some fourteen years. He remained faithfully at his post until 1871, when he began farming for himself, working at it for nine years in Illinois. He then came west to Iowa, where he bought a farm of one hundred and twenty acres, situated four miles southeast of Essex, which in three years he sold and bought a store in Essex. Two years later he sold the store and bought a three-hundred and twenty-acre tract three miles north of town, on which he lived for eleven years, when, selling this he assumed charge of the C. E. Anderson farm, containing eleven hundred and thirty acres, and acted as manager and foreman for eight years.

In 1901 Mr. Carlson first came to Brown county, secured a fine tract of land and at once went into cattle raising, also began operating five or six hundred acres of farming land. Here his sons have taken up homesteads and they control altogether, father and sons, five thousand acres of grazing and farm land, including some leased land. He and each of his sons have erected a fine set of farm buildings, and they have five windmills on the tract. Mr. Carlson has retired from cattle raising, but the sons keep five hundred head of cattle all the time. Mr. Carlson has been very successful in his farming ventures, has built up a valuable estate through perseverance and energy, and richly deserves honorable mention among the representative men of Nebraska.

Mr. Carlson was married at Victoria, Knox county, Illinois, May 1, 1871, to Miss Albertina L. Severin, born near the village of Soderham, Sweden. Her father, Lars Severin, was a merchant and surveyor, coming to America with his daughter in 1865, his wife having died prior to their emigration. He afterward returned to Sweden, married there and came back to America, settling in New Jersey, where he died. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carlson, of whom three are now living, namely: Sadie, married to Frank Stronberg, and living at Essex, Iowa, the parents of six children; Henry, who married Amelia Nordquist, the father of two children, Mabel and Ernest; Ernest Carlson, who married Stella Jones, the father of four children: Henry Glen, Donald A. and Dorothy A. (twins), and Leonard. Minnie, the youngest born of our subject, is deceased.

Mr. Carlson is a Bryan Democrat. He is a member of the Methodist church, and while living in Essex fraternized with the Odd Fellows.

SAMUEL M. THOMAS.

Of the prominent and leading old settlers of Sioux county, Nebraska, none are held in higher esteem by their fellow citizens than Samuel M. Thomas. He has been a potent factor in the development and growth of his locality and is a man of untiring energy, possessed of sterling characteristics, and has prospered in his chosen calling.

Mr. Thomas was born in Iroquois county, Illinois, in 1853, on a farm. He is of Welsh and Irish stock, the father born in Wales, while the mother, Emaline Cortright, was of Irish extraction, born in Illinois. Our subject's grandfather Cortright was one of the first settlers in Iroquois county, and was well known and highly respected by all who knew him. Samuel W. Thomas grew up in his native state, following farming with his father, as a boy and young man; at the age of twelve starting to hustle for himself, and has made his own way in the world ever since. Several years were spent in Iowa, where he farmed on rented land, but became dissatisfied with conditions there, and came to Nebraska in the fall of 1888, locating in Sioux county. He drove overland from Illinois and Iowa, carrying his goods in a covered wagon, in which his wife rode, camping out along the way on the journey, encountering many difficulties and suffering exposure from the weather, but reached their destination in safety.

On arriving in Sioux county Mr. Thomas settled on a homestead in Hat Creek valley, where he put up a log cabin, partly dugout, and began to make a home and develop a farm.

He had a team and wagon, and broke up land, putting in sod crops the first year, and eventually proved up on the place, living on it up to 1895. During the first five or six years he was obliged to work out in the vicinity of their home to make a living, spending a part of his time in the Black Hills, and also worked as a cowboy on different ranches in that region. One fall he made a trip into the Sand Hills near Hyannis, with a bunch of cattle to winter. He bought land in Sioux county and lived on it until 1901, then moved to his present location in section 10, township 23, range 57, and there put up house, barns and other improvements, having a valuable property, located on Squaw creek. There is a fine supply of water, one big spring having its source near his house, and altogether it is one of the most desirable ranches in the vicinity. The place contains six quarter sections of deeded land, with three quarters of Kincaid homestead, all fenced and a nice lot of timber, etc.

In 1873 our subject married Miss Adeline Burroughs, daughter of Abe Burroughs, a farmer of Iroquois county, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have five children, namely: Theresa, Charles, Ira, Henry and Samuel, all of whom are grown, three married and in homes of their own.

BENJAMIN HANEY.

Benjamin Haney, one of the earliest settlers in western Nebraska, and a man who helped organize the county in which he now resides, is also one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Grant county. He is a successful ranchman, although he now resides in Hyannis, where he owns and occupies a fine residence.

Mr. Haney was born in Moultrie county, Illinois, in 1849. His parents were both of American blood, and followed farming all their lives. Benjamin was raised in his native state until he was about seventeen, when the family came to Nebraska, landing here in 1866. They first settled in Gage county, and later Benjamin took a homestead in Saline county, where he was among the earliest settlers. There he went through the usual pioneer experiences, witnessing grasshopper raids, when he lost three crops in succession, and had a very hard time to get along and make a living. He was married there in 1872 to Anna M. Ryder, whose father, Thomas L. Ryder, was a farmer and an old settler in eastern Nebraska, her mother's maiden name being Jane Reed, of English descent. The young couple started out bravely to establish a home in that part of the state, and succeeded remarkably well, remaining there up to 1887, then struck out farther west, coming to Grant county in the same year. North Platte was then their nearest postoffice and trading station, and all supplies had to be hauled from that point. Here they went through many hardships, spending many nights camping out on the ground while making trips through the country by team, as the settlers' homes were very few throughout the region, and often for many miles one would not see even so much as a sod hut in driving through the country. He finally located on a ranch in the southern part of the county, put up rough buildings and started at ranching, and got into the stock business, and has met with decided success, succeeding in improving a good ranch, and at the present time owns and operates a whole section of good land, which is devoted principally to ranching purposes. He still personally superintends the running of this place, but resides in Hyannis, moving into the town in 1901.

Mr. Haney's family consists of nine children, named as follows: Thomas, residing in Saline county, Nebraska, on his own farm, James, Frank, George, Carrie, Mary, Rufus, Augusta and Homer. The sons have good ranches which lie near their father's place, and also successful ranchers and stock growers. A picture of the family group is presented on another page of this volume.

In 1905 Mr. Haney was elected county commissioner, serving in that capacity at the present time. He has always taken an active part in local affairs of a political nature, and is a man of superior attainments, broad-minded and liberal in his views, always standing for the best interests of his community. He is a Bryan Democrat.

WILLIAM O. LOVENBURG.

Persistent industry has placed this gentleman among the prosperous agriculturists of Perkins county. He is one of the earliest settlers of the region, and his home in section 23, township 9, range 37, Madrid precinct, has been gained only by the strictest economy and excellent management. The hardships which at different times have fallen to the lot of Mr. Lovenburg would have heartily discouraged one of a less persistent nature, but have only tended to make him more determined and spurred him to greater action. With undaunted courage he has faced misfortunes, suffering and hardships incident to the life of a pioneer of the western states, and he has remained to enjoy a fitting reward for his labors.

Mr. Lovenburg was born in Tama county, Iowa, in 1861. His father, John Lovenburg, was born in Bohemia, where his parents lived and died, he coming to America and was one of the pioneer homesteaders in Perkins county, arriving in this country in 1887 alone. He married Mary Kasl, also born in Bohemia, coming to the United States with her parents in 1857, the family settling in Tama county, Iowa. Our subject's maternal grandmother was Kate Kasl, born in Seci, in Plzen Bohemia, and his grandfather, Vaclav Kasl, born December 8, 1818, came to America in 1857, settling in Kansas in 1871, being among the earliest settlers in Republic county, of that state. They spent many years there, raising a large family, and now are the grandparents of forty-four grandchildren and fifty-six great-grandchildren. An uncle of our subject was a soldier in the Civil war.

Mr. Lovenburg was raised on a farm in Kansas, remaining with his parents until he was twenty-two years of age, and then farmed on rented land in Kansas for three years, coming to Perkins county in 1887. He filed on a homestead on section 23, township 9, range 37, starting on wild prairie land without any improvements whatever. During the first six months he was compelled to haul all water for domestic use a distance of five miles. He went through "sod shanty experience," and experienced also the usual pioneer hardships incident to drouths, crop failures, etc., his worst years being from 1890 to 1896, but managed to make a scant living and stayed through it all, gradually growing into the stock business when the years were unfavorable for grain raising. In 1901 Mrs. Lovenburg died, her death occurring on August 13th, and shortly afterward our subject returned to his old home in Kansas, engaging in implement business with his brother, Frank V. (a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume), at the town of Narka. They built up a good business, and as stated before, had the misfortune to be burned out in 1906, so quit the business and our subject came back to his homestead in Perkins county and has since lived on it. He is owner of a fine farm of four hundred and eighty acres, with about one hundred and sixty acres cultivated, and the balance in grass, engaging to quite an extent in stock raising. His place is well improved with good buildings, fences, etc., and is one of the valuable estates in the vicinity.

Mr. Lovenburg was married in 1883, his wife's maiden name being Anna Seka, born in Bohemia, and to them were born the following children: Sherman, now deceased; Lottie; Bertha, who died on the home ranch in March, 1908; Stanford; Walter, also deceased; Ellie, Linda and Olga.

Mr. Lovenburg has always had the reputation of being an active and public-spirited citizen and has exerted his influence in behalf of a better public service and morality, taking a leading part in local affairs, helping establish and build up the schools in his vicinity. He is an independent voter.

THEODORE F. GOOLD.

Theodore F. Goold was born in Kewanee, Illinois, December 25, 1877. His father, Henry L. Goold, was Scotch-Irish and his mother (Florence Hurd in her youth) was of German nationality. The family came west to Nebraska when Mr. Goold was ten years old, his father engaging in the stock business until 1897.

Mr. Goold was reared in Keith county, attending school there and later going to the State University, from which he was graduated in 1902, after completing the scientific course. He was associated with his father in the ranching business until 1906, at which time the Citizen's Bank of Ogallala was established and he became cashier of that institution. His efforts, combined with those of his associates, have made this bank a success from the start and it is now doing a good business. The deposits of this bank are guaranteed.

Mr. Goold was married in Ogallala, September 26, 1908, to Miss Jennie Smith, a daughter of Francis M. Smith, deceased. Mr. Goold is a member of the Masonic order, holding membership in the Blue Lodge at Ogallala and the Sisostris Temple, thirty-second degree Masons, at Lincoln, and also of the Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

His father, Henry L. Goold, now chairman of the board of county commissioners, held the office of regent at the State University from 1896 to 1902. He has taken an active part in Republican politics and has been honored with positions on committees of prominence. His birth occurred in Yates City, Illinois, December 26, 1851.

He lived in that city until grown and attended the Northwestern University, until his health failed, when he went to California, where he spent three or four years in educational work and farming. He went into the furniture business in Kewanee, Illinois, and also bought and shipped horses from Nebraska, doing an extensive business. In 1880 he moved to Nebraska, where he engaged in stock raising, in which he has been very successful. He has a ranch of six thousand acres, some six miles southeast of Ogallala.

Henry L. Goold has taken a great interest in the educational matters of the region and has been a member of the board of education in Ogallala. He helped to establish the experiment station in connection with the State University while regent of that institution. He has been a great success as a farmer and stock breeder, raising draft horses of the Shire breed and shorthorn cattle. He is an example of what perseverance will do for a man in either east or west.

JOHN V. GLOVER, DECEASED.

John V. Glover was, for many years prior to his death, a leading farmer and prosperous citizen of Sheridan county, Nebraska. His family still reside in this locality and are well and favorably known throughout the community.

Mr. Glover was born in Orange county, Indiana, in 1843. His father, John B. Glover, was born in Kentucky of American stock, and his mother was Elizabeth B. Childs, a member of the well-known Chase family of English descent. The family moved to Glenwood, Iowa, when our subject was thirteen years old. In 1862 he took a trip across the plains, and in the fall of the same year enlisted in the Independent Battery of Colorado Artillery, commanded by Captain William McClain, serving in this company for two years. During this time he contracted the measles and when this disease left him his health failed and he was discharged from the army. From 1865 to 1868 he followed the carpenter's trade in Lawrence, Kansas, and during the latter year he engaged in farming and continued at this for five years. At the end of that time he established himself in the mercantile business in Louisville, Nebraska. He was successful in this venture, and built up a nice trade, but in 1878 had the misfortune to be burned out, losing everything he had, and was obliged to start all over again. The following year he erected a large stone and brick store and opened up with a new general stock of merchandise, and soon had a profitable trade built up. From 1880 to 1885 he held the position of postmaster at Louisville. In 1884 he came to this locality and settled on his present farm as a preemption, moving on it with his family in the following year, and here he built a sod house in which they have lived ever since. This was the first white family to settle in this vicinity, and their sod house was the first building ever erected here.

RESIDENCE OF ANDREW STEELE,

Mr. Glover was married in July, 1865, to Miss Alma E. Wilson, born in Ireland in 1845, who came to America with her parents when a young child. Mr. and Mrs. Glover were the parents of four children, who are named as follows: Florence A., born August 17, 1866; George V., born August 15, 1868; Walter, born September 20, 1871; and Clara M., born July 6, 1875. The sons refused to take advantage of the college education which their father offered to give them, but the girls were eager to avail themselves of the opportunity, and each has received a full college course. On November 21, 1896, Mr. Glover died as the result of an accident. He was slightly deaf, and during a fire, while attempting to cross the street was struck by the hook and ladder truck. He was not killed instantly, but went to Los Angeles soon after, and died there from the injuries received in this accident. Since his death his wife has managed all his affairs and the well-kept home and surroundings bear evidence of her ability and good judgment. The family have gone through considerable trouble, but have always had the sympathy and assistance of good friends and helpful neighbors. Mrs. Glover now operates six sections of land, farming about one hundred and fifty acres, and keeps about four hundred head of cattle. The whole place is well improved with good substantial buildings, and all fenced. She devotes her entire time and attention to the affairs of the large property, personally superintending everything, but the labor attached to the management of a place of this size is almost too much for one person to undertake, and she is desirous of renting her place to a good, responsible person. Mr. Glover was a strong Republican, always took an active interest in party politics, but never sought any honors at the polls. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, of the Masonic lodge, and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was buried by the Odd Fellows with all the honors of the order.

ANDREW STEELE.

Andrew Steele resides on his large farm situated in section 35, township 34, range 35, Cherry county, and is well and favorably known by all in this locality.

Mr. Steele is a native of Scotland, born

February 20, 1848, and came to Canada with his parents when he was eight years of age. Leaving Scotland in a sailing vessel, they were buffeted by storms until the vessel sprung a leak. After a perilous time, during which the continued use of the pumps kept the vessel afloat, they reached Liverpool where Mr. Steele and his family re-embarked in the Black Star liner, Australia. Landing in New York they went by rail to Coburg, Canada, later settling near Trenton. His father, John Steele, a native of Scotland, emigrated to the county of Hastings, Ontario, settling on a farm near Trenton. Our subject is the third member in a family of five children, and at the age of sixteen years started in life for himself, securing employment in a saw mill. He spent one winter working in the pineries, then learned the miller's trade in Trenton, Ontario, and followed this for sixteen years in Canada. In 1872 he left Canada and moved to Minnesota, where he worked at his trade for twelve years, then bought a farm in that state, which he lost through a succession of crop failures. He then became discouraged and left his farm there with nothing to show for his hard labor. He came to Cherry county in November, 1886, his only capital being a team and four cows, driving overland the entire distance from Minnesota to Nebraska, requiring six weeks to cover the journey of six hundred and fifty miles. He located on the farm he now occupies, and went to work in building up his home. His first dwelling was a log house, which burned down about a year and a half later, consuming the entire contents. He then erected a stone house with a sod roof and occupied this for many years. He has improved his place wonderfully, adding to his acreage until he is proprietor of twelve hundred and eighty acres of good land, of which four hundred acres can be cultivated, and has one hundred and twenty acres of good hay land. He is engaged in both farming and stock raising, also dairying on a large scale, milking about thirty cows and shipping the cream to Lincoln. He has the record of receiving the largest check for cream sent to anyone at Cody, his product amounting to two hundred and sixty dollars for six months during the summer of 1906. Mr. Steele has a fine grout house, 20 x 36, erected in 1903, with a commodious cellar under it, besides a vegetable cellar, 12 x 18 feet. His barn is a good, large building, 20 x 114, and he has one hundred and eighty feet of stone shed, granary (14 x 20), and a large hen house. He has spent considerable money in these buildings, and to show for it has as finely improved a place as can be found in this locality. He raises good crops each year, his crop in 1906 amounting to over three hundred bushels of potatoes and thirty hundred bushels of corn and other grains. He keeps one hundred and twenty-five head of cattle, about thirty head of horses and some hogs. His farm is well supplied with water, extending two miles along Bear creek flowing through his farm, and he has a beautiful spring of clear water which never fails. A view of the residence and surroundings will be found on another page in this work.

Mr. Steele was married in 1871 to Miss Julia H. Sabin, born in London, England, in 1855. She came to Canada with her parents when a young child, her father's death occurring soon after settling here. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Steele, namely: John T.; Annie G., wife of J. Truax; Mary J., wife of George Johnson; Edith B., wife of James McDowell; Ira O., James A., William F., Ada J., wife of Chas. Wilson; Alice R., Lyle J. Six of these were born in Minnesota and the four youngest in Nebraska.

In 1902 Mr. Steele spent the summer in Canada, and in 1906 he made another trip accompanied by his wife, and during the latter journey Mrs. Steele was taken ill with heart failure and died in Peterboro, Ontario, on May 6. During the Indian war in Nebraska, in 1891, Mrs. Steele was the only woman on the flats who did not leave, she preferring to remain with her husband through the dangerous times rather than leave without him.

Mr. Steele has always been one of the public-spirited citizens of his community and his hospitality is proverbial. Politically he is an Independent voter, at times having served the community in local offices.

MESSRS. PATTERSON & WINGARD.

The above firm is one of the most successful in Kearney, where they are engaged in buying and selling alfalfa seed and other grains. The business was established in January, 1903, and since that time they have built up a trade that reaches all over the country, enriching Buffalo county and western Nebraska. They are the largest dealers in the west in alfalfa, buying the best grades, cleaning and assorting this, so that the product they send out is the very best on the market. This is sold all through the western states and as far east as Ohio. During the year 1905 they shipped a large amount to Russia, where some parts of the country is admirably adapted to the growing of this grass. In the same year the firm handled at Kearney alone five hundred thousand pounds of the seed. It is a recognized fact by all the large and small dealers in field corn, and sweet corn seed, that the seed grown in Nebraska is superior to the product of any other region, and in this line also the firm of Patterson & Wingard are leaders. Nebraska now grows three-fifths of all the sweet corn seed used in the United States, and its reputation is growing constantly so that it is impossible to estimate the wealth that this industry, together with the alfalfa seed business, will grow to in the years to come, and the great value it will give to Nebraska corn and alfalfa lands. The reason for the success of this industry is in the fact that the nights here in the late summer and early autumn allow these grains to come to perfect maturity. The seed corn handled by the firm is grown by farmers under contract with Patterson & Wingard. The firm is this year (1906) offering cash prizes of five hundred dollars for the best farm products in each line which they handle, and these will be competed for at the harvest festival to be held in Kearney during the month of October.

Patterson & Wingard also have an increasing demand for millet seed, which is largely grown in this section. One St. Louis firm has this year contracted for the product of seven hundred acres, to be used in the manufacture of poultry food. The firm is this year growing a special strain of field seed corn, six hundred acres, which receives the closest care, and will bring a handsome price from the eastern firm for which it is contracted. These successes show the splendid possibilities of western Nebraska as a grain country to all who are alert, resourceful and industrious.

One of the largest implement, wagon and buggy establishments in western Nebraska is conducted by Patterson & Wingard, and their trade in this line extends over a large territory around Kearney and vicinity.

OSCAR F. SHAW.

Oscar F. Shaw, residing on section 20, township 35, range 52, is numbered among the leading old timers of Dawes county, who has done his full share as a settler and ranchman in building up the region where he chose his home.

Mr. Shaw is a native of Crawford county, Indiana, born in 1865. He is a son of John E. and Elvira Williams Shaw, old settlers in Custer county, Nebraska, coming here in 1880. Our subject was reared in his native state until fourteen years of age, then with his parents came to the central part of Nebraska, where they were among the pioneers in starting a farm and home. Custer county was then wild prairie land, and there was plenty for our subject to do in assisting his parents in the work on their homestead, and he remained with them until he was eighteen, then left home and moved to Cherry county, where he worked on a cow ranch as a cowboy for some time. This ranch was located seventy-five miles south of Valentine on the Loup river, and after working there for a time he found employment on different ranches in that section, and became thoroughly familiar with the whole of Cherry county.

In 1892 Mr. Shaw came to Dawes county, locating twelve miles north of Crawford, where he started in the cattle business, remaining there for three years, then moved to his present ranch in section 20, township 35, range 52. Here he put up a log cabin and began at once to make a success of the ranching business, and has certainly made a success of it. He has a good set of substantial farm buildings, corrals, etc., with five miles of fencing. He is now owner of six hundred and forty acres of land, and ranges over several sections in South Dakota and Nebraska, running six hundred head of his own stock, cattle and horses, besides twelve hundred head of sheep, the latter being his main line of the work. His nearest neighbor is two and a half miles from his home.

Mr. Shaw was married in 1894 to Miss Kate L. Moody, daughter of Truman P. Moody, an old settler in this locality, whose sketch appears in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Shaw four children have been born, namely: Lloyd, Truman, Berenice and Emerson.

All of Mr. Shaw's time is taken up in superintending the work of his home and ranch, and he has never sought public preferment, although he lends his aid and influence in all movements for the betterment of conditions in his community.

JOHN HAYS.

The gentleman above mentioned is one of the oldest settlers of Alliance, Nebraska, locating there when the town consisted merely of a few tents and board shanties, and since coming here he has been one of the leading citizens, assisting in every movement in the development of the region, doing his full share in building it up and in the making of the history of this part of the state. He lives in section 10, township 25, range 47, where he has a pleasant home and valuable estate.

Mr. Hays was born in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, in 1831. His father, James Hays, was a farmer by occupation, American birth, descended from Irish stock. He married Mary Kuhn, of German-Scotch parentage. Our subject was reared in his native state and followed farming and building as a young man. In 1853 he came to Henderson county, Illinois, there engaging in farming and remained for seventeen years, and became owner of a farm of eighty acres, did fairly well but was not satisfied with conditions there and decided to go farther west, so came to Page county, Iowa, in 1872. He rented a farm of three hundred and twenty acres, was very successful in its operation and remained there for sixteen years. He next came to Nebraska and took up a tract of government land situated in section 10, township 25, range 47, in 1887, when Hay Springs was the nearest railroad town to his claim, sixty or seventy miles distant. Here he put up good sod buildings and started farming, but in 1890 the hard times struck him and he had two complete crop failures, and besides these, a number of partial failures, so that he became very much discouraged although he would not give up and gradually was able to build up his place and improve it with good buildings, etc. He now has eight hundred acres of good land, all fenced and cross fenced, and farms one hundred acres, and engages principally in the raising of horses and cattle, also hogs. He has two good wells with windmills and supply tanks, and everything is kept up in first-class shape. During the early years of Mr. Hays' residence in this region he was obliged to haul wood for fuel from Pine Ridge, a distance of fifty miles, and during these trips camped out at night, each trip taking four days.

January 6, 1853, Mr. J. Hays was married in Mercer county, Pennsylvania, to Miss Rachel Richards, a daughter of Owen and Nancy Richards, a farmer of Mercer county. Mrs. Nancy Richards was of American birth, descended from Irish stock. Mr. and Mrs. Hays are the parents of six children, who are named as follows. James M., Nancy L., Mary, Newton, who assists his father in the running of the home farm, and the only son with him at present; Mina and Louis, the last two living on adjoining land and in sight of their father's ranch. Mr. Hays lost his wife in the month of March, 1889, just before he moved the family from Iowa to Box Butte county.

Mr. Hays is a strong Republican, and has always been active in local affairs.

GEORGE H. VARGASON.

George H. Vargason, one of the more prosperous farmers of Nebraska, is widely known as one of the earliest settlers of Rock county, and many strong friendships center at his modest and unassuming farm home in Kirkwood precinct. Coming at a day when these many broad and productive farms were in the wilderness and only existed in the prophetic imagination of those who knew what the pioneer settler was able to do by thrift and industry, he has remained with the "west" until he saw it blossom and bear rich fruit, and reaps the ample reward of his own perception, courage and persistence.

Mr. Vargason was born in Buchanan county, Iowa, January 12, 1860, and was the third member of a family of four sons that came to bless the marriage of Harry M. and Mary E. (Bessey) Vargason. His parents were devoted to agricultural pursuits, and remained on their farm in Iowa until their removal to Rock county, Nebraska, in 1882. Young George was accustomed to hard work from his earliest youth, and received his education in the public schools of his native community. In 1883 the Vargasons came west, sojourned fifteen days in Running Water, South Dakota, crossed the river to Creighton, Nebraska, where they remained a few weeks, then all located on government land near what was known as Mariaville postoffice in Rock county. Here they built a frame shanty of poles and boards, which they covered with tar paper roofing, and presently George and his father were able to prove up their claims, which was their home until 1903. That year they sold out to good advantage and established themselves where they are found at the writing of this article.

Mr. Vargason was married in Delaware county, Iowa, January 1, 1884, to Miss Ida S. Lee, a native of that county, and a daughter of Arnold R. and Lydia (Adams) Lee, who came of old American stock, and were successful at farming. The father prides himself on his unwavering support of the Republican party. Mrs. Vargason was a most charming and attractive lady, and became the mother of five children, Harry, Allie, Archie, Fern and Orval. All these children were born in the same house, but the house was moved to another farm prior to the birth of the youngest. She was called to the better land October 31, 1903, leaving behind sweet and tender memories of a dear and faithful wife and mother.

Mr. Vargason knows by personal experience what the hardships of frontier life in the old pioneer days of Nebraska mean. He has seen the fairest crops and the most delightful promise wither and perish under a rainless sky and the cattle perish for want of pasturage. But the rain belt has moved to the west and farm life is now as full and rich and complete as anywhere in the world. Here he owns four hundred and eighty acres of fine land in sections 33 and 34, township 33, range 17, upon which he has a neat cottage residence, a good barn, granary and other structures that the successful management of the place may need. On this farm he has about a thousand fruit trees, a few of which are already bearing, and all in good condition. It fronts on the Niobrara river for more than a mile, and presents special facilities for stock raising.

Mr. Vargason has taken a somewhat active part in local politics and he is regarded as one of the leading citizens of the county, but he has never been willing to accept a public position. His own affairs have always seemed to him a sufficient field for all his activities. He is a believer in Republican principles and a member of the Odd Fellows, and Workmen's fraternities, the former at Newport and the latter at Mariaville.

JOHN SASS.

John Sass, whose settlement in Box Butte county, Nebraska, took place when this region had barely been opened up to the emigrants who were looking for a fertile part of the country to locate and build up good homes, is now well-known as a prosperous farmer and worthy citizen. He has a highly cultivated and well-improved estate, and enjoys all the comforts of rural life. His portrait will be found on another page.

Mr. Sass was born in Germany in the village of Holsein, in 1840. His father, Luther Sass, was a miller at that place, and lived in that vicinity during his entire life. Our subject grew up in Germany, and as a boy learned the miller's trade after his father, following that work until he was about forty years of age, then came to the United States with his family of five in number, settling in Iowa in 1882, and there followed railroad work for four years. In 1886 he came to Nebraska and settled in Box Butte county, filing on a homestead, his present home, in section 11, township 25, range 49. There he went through the usual pioneer experiences, freighting through the country, camping out nights, etc. His first team was a pair of horses, but he had the misfortune to lose them through some sickness, so bought a team of oxen, which did considerable work for a long time. He got along very well in breaking up his place but was unable to raise anything but small crops, and had a hard time to make a living and do much in the way of improving his farm. Many seasons his crops failed and he was obliged to work out to provide for his family, but never gave up hope and stuck to his place. As the times grew better he gradually put up good buildings, increased his acreage, and now owns a ranch consisting of four quarter sections, all of which is fenced and in first-class shape.

Mr. Sass was married in Germany, in 1866, to Anna Eckmann, who emigrated to this country with her husband and who has been a faithful helpmeet during the many years of hard labor here, fighting for a home and competence for their declining years. Mr. Sass had the sad misfortune to lose his wife July 1, 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Sass were the parents of three children, namely: Hannah, John and Mary.

Our subject has always been an earnest worker and advocate for the best interests of his locality, and has given his best efforts in aiding its development. Politically he is a Republican.

GEORGE FOLKERTS.

In listing the self-made men of Cheyenne county who have become well-to-do farmers and ranchmen and have aided materially in the development of these interests in that region, a prominent place is accorded the name of George Folkerts. For many years this gentleman has followed farming and stock raising in Eagle precinct, has met with pronounced success, and is known as one of the substantial citizens and well merits his high standing.

Mr. Folkerts was born in the village of Sandhorst, near the city of Aurech, Hanover, Germany, March 17, 1852. He was the third of a family of seven children, six of whom are still living. He grew up in his native country, following farming during his youth and remained there until he was sixteen years of age, then came to the United States with his parents. The family sailed from Bremenhaven on the Niagara, and after a voyage of six weeks landed in New York. The family first located in Adams county, Illinois, living about ten years there, then went into Morgan county, that state, and with the exception of two years more in Adams, lived there until the spring of 1887, when they came to Nebraska, settling in Cheyenne county. George took up a homestead on section 28, township 16, range 47, proved up on a one hundred and sixty-acre tract and this was the nucleus of his present valuable estate consisting of eleven hundred and twenty acres, his residence being on section 32. His ranch is now splendidly improved with good buildings. A new one and one-half-story residence of seven rooms was built in the summer of 1908. He has one hundred and twenty-five acres under cultivation and runs fifty head of cattle and quite a number of good horses.

Mr. Folkerts' father and mother came to Cheyenne county, also, about 1887, and they were well-known old-timers of the region, lived here many years, although both have departed this life.

In 1878 our subject was married in Morgan county, Illinois, to Carrie Rehck, and together they came to the western country to build up a home and fortune. Mrs. Folkerts died in 1900, leaving the following children: Anna, wife of John Weyerts, now living in Perkins county, Nebraska; Maggie, married to William Bauer, also living in Perkins county; Sophia, married to John Johnson, residing in Hayes county; Mary, wife of Fred Bauer, living at Weyerts; and Emma and John, unmarried, living at home. Mr. Folkerts was married the second time, on September 12, 1903, in this county, to Mrs. Hilka Gross, who was born in Germany and came to this country in 1866.

Mr. Folkerts is a good citizen and takes an active interest in local affairs, at present serving as moderator of school district 32. In politics he is a Roosevelt Democrat. He is a member of the Lutheran church.

JAMES GROUT.

James Grout, one of the representative farmers of Marion township, Franklin county, owns and operates a good farm consisting of four hundred acres of land, and is extensively engaged in mixed farming and stock raising. He is supervisor for District 5, and occupies a high position as a worthy citizen and good neighbor. When but a boy sixteen years of age he hunted buffalo in this county and adjoining country, having killed a number when he was not much more than a boy. He claims the honor of being the youngest buffalo hunter in this part of the country.

Mr. Grout was born in 1856 in Scott county, Iowa, and was raised in that state. He came to Nebraska in June, 1869, at the age of fifteen years. His parents came to Franklin county and located on a homestead in section 6, Marion township, and he lived at home until he was twenty-one, then started out for himself, taking up a timber claim of one hundred and sixty acres, and to this has added two hundred and forty acres adjoining, on which he resides. Here he engages in stock and grain raising, and keeps a large part of his land for pasture, running about a hundred cattle and from one to two hundred hogs all the time, all high grade animals. The farm is well supplied with water and trees, and there is a complete set of substantial farm buildings, everything in the best possible condition, and altogether, one of the valuable pieces of property in the county. All of Mr. Grout's time is put in on his farm, and he is well repaid for his labors in the good crops and rich returns from his stock, etc. Our subject was married in 1878 to Miss Lizzie Curtis, who is a daughter of T. M. Curtis, who homesteaded in Marion township in the year 1874, coming to Nebraska from Iowa.

To Mr. and Mrs. Grout five children have been born, who are named as follows: Harry, living on a farm of two hundred and forty acres adjoining his father's place; David, who runs the home place with his father; Frank, attending the high school at Franklin, and two daughters, Bessie and Ina. Mr. Grout is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen lodge at Franklin. The family belong to the Congregational church in Franklin, and are among the highly esteemed citizens of their community. Mrs. Grout died in 1893, mourned by many friends. This left Mr. Grout with a family to raise, which he has accomplished.

M. F. WRIGHT.

M. F. Wright, one of the old settlers of Nebraska, helping materially in the developing of the eastern part of the state for many years, and who has watched its progress almost from its earliest pioneer days, now lives on section 13, township 21, range 16. He is considered well-to-do, and enjoys a comfortable home and well improved farm, all of which he has earned by his thrift and industry, supplemented by good management and persistent endeavor.

Mr. Wright is a native of Mercer county,

Missouri, born in 1867. He is a son of A. H. and Jenett (McDougle) Wright. His father and mother were farmers who settled there many years ago, and he grew up there and was taught to do all kinds of hard farm work in his boyhood, receiving but a limited education, or such as could be obtained by attending the old-time district schools. He now lives in Burwell, Nebraska, and has a nice comfortable home. Our subject left home at the age of twenty-one years, and came to Nebraska with his parents, landing in Garfield county in December, 1885, when he was only eighteen years old, and has lived here ever since. His father took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, and at once started his farm and home, often in the early days meeting with many discouragements during the dry years, losing crops at different times, which was a serious setback to him during the pioneer years when he was trying so hard to get together a little property. However, when the better years began he was successful in raising good crops of corn, wheat, oats and rye, also getting together quite a lot of stock, and is now in comfortable circumstances. Before going to Nebraska he helped his father farm in Missouri, but considers this state much better for the poor than Missouri, as a man can farm more land here and it is cheaper.

Mr. Wright was married to Miss Cora Kester, born and raised in Iowa. She is a daughter of W. K. and Ann (Rape) Kester. They have a pleasant home and are the parents of five children, two boys and three girls, namely: Cora, Martha, Annie, Elmer and Clafence.

Politically Mr. Wright is a Republican, but has never devoted any time to public affairs.

CAPT. DAVID A. PIERCY, SR., DECEASED.

Captain David A. Piercy, deceased, was born in 1837, at Ogdensburg, New York state. Here he spent his boyhood days and when he was about twenty years of age came to Minnesota, where he engaged in Indian trading in the northern part of that state. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Fifth Iowa Cavalry, which was made up of troops from Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska, and he was promoted from sergeant to first lieutenant during the three years of hard service that he saw in the south. He then raised a battalion of three companies and was promoted to captain of Company L, which formed a part of the Twenty-sixth New York State Volunteer Cavalry. It was his company that was one of the ones which was sent in search of J. Wilkes Booth. His company was employed part of the time in the west, serving with the troops fighting the Indians on the frontier. He died in 1906 at Macon, Georgia, where he had gone the previous fall for the benefit of his health. Mr. Piercy was one of the early settlers in Omaha, whither he emigrated in 1886 and was engaged in the hardware business for eleven years as manager for the Melton Rogers Iron Company and for the succeeding eleven years was head of the firm of Piercy & Bradley, one of the largest firms of iron-mongers in Omaha. His health failed while he was a member of this firm and he gave up the business and went south for a time, then returning to Nebraska he located in Cherry county in the spring of 1884. He settled on the farm which he occupied at the time of his death. This farm is situated in section 6, township 20, range 30. Here he put up rude farm buildings and began as a pioneer. He was an important factor in the development of this region, being instrumental in the establishment of several different postoffices and mail routes in the southern part of this county. Having a good knowledge of surveying he practiced that science to a great extent. He began ranching soon after settling in Cherry county, and was very successful in all his ventures, controlling at the time of his demise eight hundred acres of the finest hay land and one thousand acres of range, all improved and well stocked.

Mr. Piercy was first married in Ogdensburg, New York, March 1, 1865, to Miss Caroline L. Battelle, three of whose children are living, Caroline L. (Archard), Mary E. and Nellie (Lanning). He was married a second time in June, 1876, in Omaha, to Miss Libbie Stout, a native of Oswego, New York. They had a family of seven children, of whom four survive: Agnes J., David A., Jr., Leonard D. and William W., all residing near Kennedy.

Owing to failure in health Mr. Piercy sought recuperation in the south in the fall of 1905, but failing in what he sought he passed away at Macon, Georgia, in March, 1906. His wife survived him only about two months, her death occurring in May.

Mr. Piercy was prominent in local affairs, and was highly esteemed as one of the leading ranchmen in the southern part of the county. He was well known throughout the community for his integrity and true worth, and his family had the sympathy of the entire community at his death. He was an enthusiastic worker in the Episcopal church, erecting a sod chapel at Kennedy, which now stands as a monument to an earnest, God-fearing man. He was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

David A. Piercy, Jr., was born in Omaha, August 15, 1878, and was but a lad when the family moved to Cherry county in 1884. At the age of fifteen he began life for himself as an employe of Robert Gillaspie and remained with his first employer for five years. For the eight years following he was engaged in the cattle business for William Erickson, when he began business for himself. He now owns six hundred and forty acres of land under the Kincaid homestead act, and holds three thousand acres more under lease, running about one hundred head of cattle and fifty horses. His homestead claim dated from 1905, on which he erected in that same year a neat cottage and suitable out-buildings. His brand is J. I. C. He is a member of the Woodlake Lodge of Odd Fellows.

AARON VAN WINKLE.

Aaron Van Winkle, a prosperous and successful young ranchman of Cherry county, Nebraska, was born on a farm in Henderson county, Illinois, August 29, 1869, a son of James and Sarah (Hedges) Van Winkle, both of American birth and inheriting the best traditions of their New England ancestry. Mr. Van Winkle has not yet reached middle life, but has witnessed many changes in farming methods and the differences in rural life in the Mississippi valley and on the western plains.

Aaron Van Winkle, the eldest in a family of nine children, was reared under the parental roof, and remained on his Illinois home place until he reached the age of twenty years. In 1891 he came into Nebraska, and settled in Lancaster county, where he was engaged in the cultivation of a rented farm for some four years, but later on he bought a place. While there he was married to Miss Annie Ellis, a daughter of Daniel W. and Rachel (Martin) Ellis. Her parents were both farming people, and are still living in Lancaster county. Mr. and Mrs. Van Winkle are the happy parents of a family of six children: Guy, Ernest, Rachel, James, John and Ruth. In 1906 the Lancaster county farm was sold, and the family removed to Cherry county, and here Mr. Van Winkle bought twelve hundred and eighty acres, a part of the Payton ranch with the dwelling on section 32, fronting Gordon's creek, and affording every opportunity for stock raising on a most extensive scale. It is improved with good buildings, and is entirely devoted to hay and pasture. In politics Mr. Van Winkle takes an independent position, and demands good men to receive his ballot. A view of the family residence with portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Van Winkle form one of the interesting illustrations in this work.

W. W. BECK.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history is one of the oldest settlers in the region of township 23, range 46, Deuel county, and was born at Portland, Jay county, Indiana, in 1864. His father, W. J. Beck, was a native of Ohio, of Irish descent, a farmer by occupation, born in Ohio in 1833, and died in Portland, Indiana, January 16, 1893. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Emmaline Brown, came of German stock, born in Ohio, March 29, 1831, and died in Nebraska, May 30, 1908. Grandma Brown lived to the age of ninety-two years. Mrs. Beck's parents lived within seven miles of our subject's people when the family lived in Ohio and were neighbors there, and always were very friendly, visiting back and forth during the time when they were growing up. They naturally saw a great deal of each other and their friendship ripened into love, and they were married in Jay county, Indiana, when still quite young. They had a family of seven children, of whom three are dead, our subject being the third member in order of birth. All four are living within a short distance of each other here in Sheridan county, Nebraska, and have fine ranches.

Mr. Beck remained with his parents on the home farm in Indiana up to the time he was twenty-three years of age, and then decided to strike out west, and hearing that Nebraska was a splendid state for a young man starting out in life, came to Omaha in 1887 and worked there for a short time. In the same year, 1887, he came to this locality and filed on a homestead situated in section 7, township 24, range 46, and also took up a tree claim, but soon after gave the latter up. He did not reside on his homestead during the first winter, but made his home in Omaha and drove back and forth, and did what he could to improve his place. In the spring of 1889 he settled on the claim and worked on neighboring ranches, and also put in a small crop for himself and raised a fairly good crop, but the following year was not so successful, so he quit trying to farm his place and worked out for the following five years, still living on his place. He held this place up to 1902, and then sold it for four hundred dollars. While he was working out he saved his money and got together quite a little sum which he invested in cattle, having in mind the idea that he would engage in the ranching business on his own account as soon as he was in shape to do so. This had been his intention when he first came west, but he wanted to learn something about the business before starting, and he gained experience through his years spent on ranches in this section. When he had some money ahead he purchased a quarter section of land and established a ranch of his own. This was in 1893, and two years later his mother came here and together they took a claim and moved on it, starting in with sixty-five cattle and eight horses. He has since followed this exclusively, and now owns a ranch of six hundred and forty acres, and besides this his mother, brother and sister own three sections in the same locality. They are all associated together in the business and now run about ninety horses and five hundred head of cattle. They have plenty of range and raise enough hay to run their stock through the year.

Mr. Beck has done well since coming here and is perfectly satisfied with what he has accomplished, but would have made still more had he been more familiar with the conditions of the country. He intends to stay here as long as he is obliged to work, as he likes the climate and could not do any better anywhere than he is here. When he first struck this section Whitman was his nearest trading post, and at that time Alliance was just being started. He had many interesting experiences during the first years of his residence here, and states that he will never forget his drive here from Omaha. He intends soon to build a substantial house and farm buildings on his four hundred and eighty-acre homestead, and this will make him the proprietor of as fine an estate as there is in this locality. Mr. Beck is a Republican, and always votes that ticket, but has never taken an active interest in party politics, as he has not had the time to devote to these affairs.

EDWARD PIKE.

Edward Pike, one of the ambitious and successful young ranchmen of Cherry county, Nebraska, shows by his own career what thrift and energy may still accomplish in developing a home out of the new lands of the west.

The parents, Joseph W. and Lacy (North)

Pike, reared a family of seven children, named as follows: William M., John N., Charles C., George W., Lizzie, Edward and Albert.

The subject of this sketch was born in Page county, Iowa, January 1, 1870, whence his parents moved to Plymouth county, Nebraska, in the fall of 1876. In 1883 the father came to Valentine, securing land under the homestead, pre-emption and tree claims, the family following two years later.

In the spring of 1885 Edward Pike came to Valentine, and remained with his father until 1890. That year he was married to Miss Mary Metz, a native of Indiana, a daughter of John Metz, who came from Germany. The Metz family has been long and favorably known in Cherry county as among the very early settlers of this region. After farming for some years Mr. Pike, in partnership with his brother, Albert, bought a store in Sioux City, Iowa, in the fall of 1895, which they disposed of in the spring of 1897 and returned to Cherry county to engage in ranching and farming. He owns three hundred and twenty acres in section 14, township 34, range 29, and here he has developed a very comfortable home. This land he secured by purchase and homestead entry on which he has now proved up. In addition he operates quite a large tract of leased land and is becoming known as a careful and successful ranchman and farmer.

To Mr. and Mrs. Pike three children have been born: Ada, Grace and Jennings.

FRITZ HOFFMAN.

Fritz Hoffman, residing on his Kincaid homestead in section 13, township 29, range 52, Dawes county, is one of the prominent and successful farmers of his locality who settled here many years ago and has built up a good home and farm by dint of his industry and good management, and gained an enviable reputation as a progressive farmer and worthy citizen.

Mr. Hoffman was born in Posen Province, Germany, in 1875. His father, Rudolph Hoffman, followed farming all his life, and came to America in 1892. Our subject grew up in Germany, assisting his father in carrying on the home farm and also working for himself on farms in the old country up to the time of his sixteenth birthday, and then started for the United States, landing in New York city in January, 1891, and immediately struck out for the west, locating in Crawford, Nebraska, spending the first six months in this country engaged in general work on a farm, working for his board with his brother. He worked out for seven years in the vicinity of Crawford, and also was through South Dakota and in the Sand Hills in Nebraska. His father had also come to America, and settled on his present farm in section 23, township 29, range 52, which he took as a homestead, and on which he put up good buildings and has a comfortable home. Our subject purchased six hundred and forty acres of land, and also has the same number of acres of homestead land. Both father and son's land is well improved with good buildings, fences, graves, and plenty of nice water with necessary windmills, etc. Both engage to quite an extent in stock raising, handling principally cattle. Mr. Hoffman has over a hundred head of cattle and sixteen head of horses, and has built up a good business in stock, finding it very profitable. He started with very small capital, and during the early days in this section of the country after purchasing a mare for fifty dollars lost one of his other horses, and was left with only a team to work his farm with, and was in no better shape than at first, and in those days even a small loss was a very serious matter to him. He was overtaken with many misfortunes, sickness, etc., one brother dying of sickness and another accidentally shot. Our subject now farms two hundred and fifty acres of land, had one hundred and seventy-five acres in wheat in 1908. He and his father together own three sections joining. Our subject built a fine new home.

Mr. Hoffman is active in local affairs, and has held office at different times, serving as road overseer for some time. Politically he is a Republican.

WILLIAM ROTH.

William Roth, one of the oldest settlers of the western part of Nebraska, resides on one of the most extensive farms in the section where he is located, and is classed among the well-to-do and substantial citizens of Box Butte county, Nebraska. He takes a leading part in local affairs, and is a gentleman of unusual perseverance and thrift, who has taken an important part in the development of this region. He enjoys a nice home and has a host of warm friends and good neighbors, all of whom admire him for his many sterling qualities.

Mr. Roth was born in New York state in 1863. His birthplace was near New York city. His parents were of German parentage, born and reared in that country and settled in the eastern part of the United States when young people. They afterward came west and settled in Kansas, where they were among the pioneers of that state. Our subject was about fifteen years of age when the family moved to Kansas, and there he grew to manhood, working on the home farm and helping his father do all the hard work in breaking up their land, handling ox teams, freighting, etc. The father was engaged in sheep raising on a large scale, and he also got a good knowledge of how to raise and care for a ranch.

In 1885 he left home and came to Nebraska, driving from Kansas to Box Butte county with a team and covered wagon, camping out at night along the way. On reaching this vicinity he settled on a homestead in section 8, township 26, range 51, then returned to Kansas and remained there for one year. He then came back and took possession of his claim and started to improve it, putting up buildings and planting crops. During the first years he had a hard time to get along and only was able to make a scant living, but his brother, who was with him, owned ox teams and they worked at freighting and managed to get on in a small way. There were times when nearly every crop he put in was a failure and he was often tempted to give up the struggle, but still stuck to his claim and instead of trying to farm, started in the cattle business and dairying. He met with decided success in these lines, and now owns a large herd of cattle and has a farm of eleven hundred and fifty acres, all fenced and improved in first-class condition.

Mr. Roth was married in 1891 to Mary Bartos, a daughter of Mauritz Bartos, a well-known farmer of this county, of Bohemian birth. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Roth: Albert, Lillie, George, Emma, Frank and Charles.

Mr. Roth is a Democrat in political views, and stands firmly for his convictions. He takes an active part in local affairs, has helped to build up the schools in his locality, and has held the office of school moderator for several years.

JAMES WRIGHT.

The subject of this personal history came to Grant county, Nebraska, in 1886, with practically nothing as a foundation for his present prosperity save a brave spirit and willing heart, and has succeeded in building up one of the finest ranches in the section. His entire attention has been devoted to his home interests, and he has gained a high station as a successful farmer and ranchman, also as a substantial citizen of his community. Mr. Wright resides in section 26, township 22, range 37, and there the family occupy a pleasant and comfortable home surrounded by all the comforts of rural life.

James Wright is a native of Grant county, Wisconsin, born in 1851, and is of Dutch stock on his mother's side, she having been Miss Sarah Bollenbaugher, of Wisconsin. Her father's name was Ajolon Bollenbaugher, a leading citizen of that community.

Our subject was reared on a farm in Wisconsin, where he found plenty of work to do as a boy, receiving a common school education. He left home about 1876, at that time coming west and settling in Hamilton county, Nebraska, on a farm which he made his home for about ten years, and was married there to Lydia Sorrells, daughter of Thomas Sorrells, a prominent pioneer and farmer in that county. Mrs. Wright died in that vicinity, leaving a family of four children. Mr. Wright was married the second time the 16th of April, 1908, to Miss Annie Dannenbrock, of Washington county, Kansas, of a prominent German family.

In 1886 Mr. Wright came to Grant county, teaming from North Platte, and located in the valley where he now has his home. His first buildings were a sod house, barns and corrals, and he went to work and rapidly built up a good ranch, which now extends for several miles along the valley, known as Wright's valley.

One brother, Owen W. Wright, who resides in Hamilton county, is interested with our subject in this ranch, in which they have made good improvements, all of which has been accomplished by hard work and good management. Mr. Wright has gone through hard times since locating here, suffering at different times from drouths, severe storms, etc., and many times has fought prairie fires night and day when homesteads and range were threatened with destruction.

Mr. Wright is the father of four children, who are named as follows: Ben, Charles W., Ajolon and Arion, all living and fine workers on the ranch.

Our subject has always taken a commendable interest in local affairs, although he has never aspired to office. An interesting picture is presented on another page of Mr. Wright, together with his residence and family group.

H. J. BUSHNELL.

H. J. Bushnell, residing on one of the well improved estates of Loss creek, is one of the prosperous and enterprising agriculturists of Deuel county, and has a host of friends who hold him in the highest esteem.

Mr. Bushnell was born in Windham county,

JAMES WRIGHT AND SONS.

MR. AND MRS. JAMES WRIGHT AND THEIR RESIDENCE,

Connecticut, on November 15, 1865, and was the second member in his father's family of five children. At the age of eighteen years he came to Nebraska in company with a brother, E. N. Bushnell, who is now located at LaGrande, Oregon. He first located at Fairmount, and later in old Cheyenne county, now Deuel county, arriving here on April 1, 1884, joining his brother who came the previous year. Mr. Bushnell took a homestead the following year and proved up on the place, afterward selling it, and then located on section 10, township 16, range 44, where he has a home ranch of six hundred and forty acres, and also considerable hay land and grazing in the vicinity. He runs a herd of two hundred and thirty head of cattle and forty horses, and is making a splendid success of his business. His ranch is situated on the Platte river, and is one of the best stock ranches in the county. Mr. Bushnell is an oldtime cattle and horse man and is known throughout the region as one of the best judges of stock in the state.

Mr. Bushnell has passed through all the old Nebraska times, and taken an active and leading part in the history of the upbuilding of the western part of the state. In the early days he was associated with a number of the old-time cattlemen in the operation of some of the large ranches, who like himself, are now among the wealthy and most successful ranchmen in the west.

Mr. Bushnell was never married. Politically he stands for Republicanism, and is an earnest worker for party principles.

HARRY A. WHEELER.

Harry A. Wheeler, although not one of the oldest settlers in this locality, comes of one of the oldest families, and has identified himself so closely with the interests of Brown county, Nebraska, that he has become highly respected and is known throughout the community in which he resides as a citizen of genuine worth.

Mr. Wheeler was born on an Iowa farm May 28, 1878. His father, John Thomas Wheeler, was one of the pioneer settlers in Brown county, Nebraska, and well known all over this region. When Harry was seven years old he came here with his parents and grew to manhood in the vicinity in which he now makes his home, attending the pioneer schools. He bought a farm in section 1, township 30, range 21, in 1902, and began the work of improvement and building up a home. This was in an entirely unimproved condition when he purchased it. He now has a comfortable dwelling, good barns and outbuildings, with a good growth of young trees, making a valuable piece of property comprising two hundred and forty acres, of which one hundred and fifteen acres are under cultivation. He is constantly adding to the value of his estate and is numbered among the prosperous and successful young farmers in the vicinity of Long Pine.

Mr. Wheeler was married in Logan, Iowa, to Miss Myrtle Burger, who is a native of the state of Nebraska, but who had been living some five years in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler have a family of three children, who are named as follows: Rose, Jennie and Alfred, all born on Buffalo Flats.

As one of the younger members of the farming community in Brown county, Mr. Wheeler has done his full part in the upbuilding of the agricultural interests in his locality, and he is regarded as an enterprising citizen and a man of strict integrity, who enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen. He votes the Democratic ticket and affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America camp at Long Pine.

FRED W. SPENCER.

To Fred W. Spencer is willingly accorded a leading position among the prosperous ranchmen of western Nebraska. And he merits the high reputation in which he is held by the community, for he has been eminently successful in his chosen walk of life. He has advanced ideas relative to stock raising, believing that the best is none too good and he carries that belief into his daily practice.

Mr. Spencer was born on a farm in Scott county, Iowa, in 1858. His father, Webster M. Spencer, sprang from ancestors that came from England to America over two hundred years ago. Our subject's mother was Emma McMinn before marriage and was of Scotch ancestry.

Our subject was reared on the farm of his parents in Iowa and became inured to the hard work of the farm. He attended the country schools and aided his father with the farm operations until about 1880, when he spent some time in western Iowa. He came to Blaine county in 1886.

Mr. Spencer was united in marriage to Miss Alvira Clay in March, 1882. She was the daughter of Ben Clay, an old settler who lived on a homestead on the North Loup river, in Blaine county, until he died in 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer have five children: Harry, Maud, Walter, Roy and Alfred.

Our subject, his wife, with her father and brothers, came to Blaine county by team and covered wagons in 1886, and all located on land near each other. Mr. Spencer took a homestead, built a sod house and made other improvements. He had the misfortune to lose one of his horses that died, and he had to use an ox team for a long time. Our subject spent two years in Colorado driving oxen, "bull whacking" they call it, and he learned by experience what "roughing it" meant. In early days all supplies and materials were hauled from Ord, sixty-five miles away, which required many long trips on the road. Crops were fairly good up to 1890 and the family got along very well, adding nice improvements to the farm. Then came the seasons of drouth and for a number of years the crops were almost total failures. Our subject lived on the homestead until 1896, when he proved up and bought the place where he now lives. This farm was slightly improved when he bought it and it made the beginning of his splendid ranch home. He has eleven hundred and twenty acres of his own and leases three hundred and twenty acres more, that he needs for his stock raising enterprises. On his farm one finds splendid improvements, good house, large and commodious barns and outbuildings, fences, a fine orchard, groves and small fruits. Since the early days Mr. Spencer has engaged in the cattle business, buying and selling stock. Now he raises all that he can conveniently handle on his own farm. He keeps Hereford stock and also has fine registered bulls of that stock. He runs all together about three hundred and forty head of cattle and has three registered bulls. Mr. Spencer has also raised and shipped many hogs and meets with good success. His practice is to finish his own cattle when the crops warrant it and he does his own shipping to eastern markets.

Mr. Spencer has had many ups and downs during his business career. Once his property was almost entirely wiped out by fire, but he has recouped his losses and made steady advance to wealth and prosperity and prominence. He is one of the county's most public-spirited citizens and is active in the affairs of his community. He has held various offices of trust and was county commissioner a number of years ago.

W. H. BEEKMAN.

W. H. Beekman, who for a score of years past has been identified with the agricultural interests of Sheridan county, Nebraska, is the owner of a fine farm and home in township 33, range 42. He is an experienced farmer and a citizen of whom his township may be justly proud.

Mr. Beekman was born in New Jersey in 1844 and moved to Jersey county, Illinois, when a lad, and was there raised and educated. His father and mother were both natives of New Jersey. His mother died at Jerseyville, Illinois, in 1885. His father, a butcher by trade, died shortly after coming to Nebraska in 1889. At twenty years of age our subject started in life for himself, going first to Montana, where he remained for about eight years, following both mining and the butcher business; then went to Madison, Wisconsin, with the Gosshart Reaper Works as foreman; also traveled for same concern as salesman on the road. He then moved to Moline, Illinois, where he worked in the Moline Plow Company's shops as foreman for seven years. In 1885 he came to Sheridan county and located on his present farm, which is situated in section 19, township 33, range 42. At that time the railroad only came as far as Valentine, and travelers were obliged to make the rest of the journey on a construction train. Before permanently settling in this locality Mr. Beekman traveled all over the western country, and since coming here has been perfectly content to remain on his homestead. He was among the first settlers in this valley, but even at that time the land was nearly all taken. He only pre-empted eighty acres, and never used his homestead right, but bought all the land he now owns. During the first years he lived here he saw some hard times, the dry seasons causing him severe losses, and several times he lost his entire crop through hailstorms. At one time he went back to the butcher business and worked at that for three years, and has since worked out on farms to get a new start after the drouth had stripped them of all their crops. He often became discouraged, but stuck to it through all hardships, and now is very glad he did so, for he could never have done as well anywhere else. His farm comprises six hundred and forty acres, and of this he has about three hundred acres under cultivation, running about one hundred head of stock, and when he came to this place he was several hundred dollars in debt. He has put all his buildings on the east side of the section, and has all the modern improvements in the way of machinery, wind-mills, etc., necessary to run a model farm. He has also installed a system of water works on his place, which forces the water all through his barns and house where he wishes it to go. He has a good orchard of apple and small fruit trees.

Mr. Beekman was married in Madison, Wisconsin, in 1870, to Mrs. Harriet Fowler, a native of New York state, born in 1838. Mr. and Mrs. Beekman have three children, who are named as follows: Minnie E., W. H. and Richard E. Mrs. Harriet Fowler had one child by her first marriage, George W. Fowler. Mr. Beekman has given each of his sons a one-third interest in the land and proceeds as an inducement to stay on the farm and assist him in working it, which proves a very good way of solving the problem of "how to keep our boys on the farm." In years past he voted the Populist ticket, but has changed his views and now leans toward the Socialists. He is prominent in all school matters and has served on the school board for nine years.

B. F. MOORE.

B. F. Moore for many years has been one of the leading citizens and prosperous agriculturists of Sioux county. He came here during the early days of its settlement and has developed a fine ranch in section 12, township 28, range 54, and become closely identified with the best interests of the community where he has passed so many years of his career. His residence is on section 12, township 28, range 54, and he has a host of friends throughout that vicinity, all of whom honor him for his integrity of word and deed. Mr. Moore's ranch is situated at the mouth of Whistle creek and is known as the old Lower 33 ranch, containing four deeded sections besides the leased land.

Mr. Moore was born in Pennsylvania in 1839, of American parents. He grew up in his native state, where both father and mother were born and reared.

When our subject was twenty-two years of age, at the breaking out of the war, he enlisted in the United States volunteer army, served through the entire war and did not return home until 1868. He left the east and came to Colorado in 1870, traveling through different parts of the west for several years, engaging in buying cattle or whatever he found to do that he thought there was a dollar in, landing in Sioux county about 1889. His first location was on Soldiers creek, and he lived in that vicinity for several years, then removed to Running Water river, starting at once in the ranching business, and from that time has been constantly engaged in the stock business. He had hard times during the early years, but has always managed to get along in some way, and for the past few years has met with splendid success, building up a good ranch and accumulating a nice property. He is owner of sixteen quarter sections, all good ranching and farm land, and is one of the well-to-do and prominent ranchmen of his locality. When he first came to this region he was obliged to haul all his supplies from Sidney and has experienced every phase of life on the frontier. He has done his share in the developing of this region, and is a typical representative of the west, broad-minded and liberal in his views on every subject.

In 1871 Mr. Moore was married to Mary Dickerson, who died in 1896. This union was blessed with a family of eight children, namely: Jennie M., Joe A., Rebecca, Frank, Gertrude, Harry, Charles W. and Mary. Mr. Moore was married the second time in 1899 to Miss Mary Mills, of Chicago, Illinois.

Our subject takes a deep interest in county and national politics, voting the Republican ticket.

R. N. JOHNSON.

R. N. Johnson, a representative farmer and leading stockman of Harlan county, resides on his fine estate in Eldorado township, and is recognized as one of the enterprising and progressive citizens of his county. He is a man of superior ability and education, and in personal appearance bears a striking resemblance to our late president, William McKinley, being also of the same Scotch-Irish extraction, while his mother's people, the Mowers, were among the early German settlers of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Johnson is a native of Clinton county, Pennsylvania, and was born in 1859, eight miles west of Lockhaven. His father and mother, William Everett and Elizabeth Mower Johnson, both of Clinton county, removed to Carroll county, Illinois, in 1865. For many years Mr. Johnson resided in Carroll county, where he held a first-class teacher's certificate and taught school, and later followed farming and teaching in Guthrie and Anderson counties, Iowa. Since coming to Nebraska he has devoted his attention exclusively to farming and stock raising, operating a ranch consisting of four hundred acres, and raises corn, alfalfa and feed of all kinds. He also deals extensively in stock and has a herd of twenty-five thoroughbred white-faced cattle, from the celebrated Rogers herd of McCook, Nebraska. He intends to develop this herd to as many as he can handle comfortably on his ranch, and as he is a man of good business judgment and ability he adopts the methods to suit the needs and conditions of this part of Nebraska in his farming and stock raising operations, thus securing the best possible results. Each year he raises and feeds about one hundred and twenty-five grade cattle, and from two to three hundred hogs, from which he derives a considerable income.

Mr. Johnson was married while living in Guthrie county, Iowa, to Miss Caroline Kretzinger, daughter of John and Mary (Boone) Kretzinger, that family having come from Licking county, Ohio, and the Boones from West Virginia, the Boones being of the same family as Daniel Boone, of national fame. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have been born the following children: Ollie and Bessie, both teachers in the Harlan county schools; four sons, namely, Everet, Nathan, Daniel McKinley and Robert, who according to their ages assist in the farming and stock operations, and Caroline, born September 24, 1908. For two years, from 1893 to 1895, Mr. Johnson and his family resided in Holdrege, where he was engaged in the livery business.

CAPTAIN ED. B. MURPHY, DECEASED.

Captain Ed. B. Murphy, one of the best known residents in western Nebraska, late of Arapahoe, Furnas county, was the first settler in this place. He laid out the town of Arapahoe, and for many years was one of the leading citizens here, lending his influence and aid in building up the place and furthering its commercial and educational welfare.

Mr. Murphy was born in Limerick, Ireland, and came to America at the age of fourteen and came with his parents, who settled in Wayne, Michigan. At the breaking out of the Civil war he raised a company at Ottumwa, Iowa, and was appointed captain of Company A, Seventh Iowa Cavalry. He and Colonel Summers served in the west against the Indians, and had command, and at one time had charge of twenty companies at Fort Kearney. They fought the Indians at the Blue and had a big battle at Julesburg, and went through many exciting and dangerous times. After the war he ran a ranch called "Alkali Lake Range," located on the California trail near Fort McPherson. Here the Indians got so bold and dangerous that he was obliged to abandon it.

In 1871 Mr. Murphy came to Arapahoe, he being the first white settler in this region. He took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, on which he laid out the town, giving it the name it now bears, after the famous Indian chief. He began selling off lots, then bought more land, and also was engaged in the stock business, buying and selling cattle. He had a farm of two hundred and forty acres, and this was stocked with a big herd, and he was very successful in these ventures. Mr. Murphy was well versed in law, and for eight years was justice of the peace, acting in this capacity for a great number of people in the early days. During his later years he engaged in the hardware business, handling hardware, furniture, paints, farming implements, machinery, harness and tinware, and enjoyed a good trade all through his section of the country.

Mr. Murphy was married in 1854 to Miss Margaret Murphy, of Wayne, Michigan. Four children were born of this union, named as follows: Laure, wife of William Miles, of Stockville, Nebraska, now deceased; Ellen, who married her brother-in-law two years after the death of her sister; Ed. B., Jr., in the lumber business at Curtis, Nebraska, and Frank D., a real estate dealer of Long Beach, California. In 1867 Mrs. Murphy died at a ripe old age.

Mr. Murphy was married the second time to Miss Lizzie Billings, daughter of Samuel Spencer Billings and Lucinda Johnstone Billings, the former moving from Hartford, Connecticut, to Iowa in the early days of that state. He was a merchant, and at one time owned eight stores in Keokuk, Iowa, also the Billings House and the opera house at that place, being counted one of the wealthiest men of Iowa. He later located at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, where he died in 1890. Our subject's maternal grandfather, John Johnstone, lived near Pittsburg, and owned the salt works on the Ohio river, settling in Bonaparte, Iowa, where he engaged in the mercantile business. Mr. Murphy's children by his second marriage were as follows: Lee Spencer Murphy, born October 23, 1879, educated at Kearney Military College. In 1898 he enlisted in the Thirty-second Volunteer Infantry, Company B, going to the Philippines, where he served for two years, taking part in the battles there, being killed at Batan by an ambush while guarding the provision train. He was a fine young man in every respect, admired by all who knew him for his excellent qualities, and his death at the age of twenty years was a sad blow to his family and friends. He was corporal of his company, and was brought home for burial. A daughter of our subject, Edna I., has been a teacher in the Arapahoe schools for five years. She was educated here and at the Peru Normal School. Another daughter, Grace Billings, was educated in this city, and is now a teacher in Billings, Montana. One son, Stuart Robert, resides in Arapahoe.

Mr. Murphy was a man of wonderful perseverance and great endurance. He was of splendid physique, six feet two inches in height, handsome and of fine appearance. He was a prominent member of the Masonic Lodge and also of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he had always voted the Republican ticket, and was a strong advocate of the principles of that party up to the time of his death, which occurred on January 25, 1899. He was admired by all who knew him for his sterling character and excellent qualities, and in him the state of Nebraska lost one of its foremost citizens and representative men.

PRES. WILSON.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history was for many years a prominent agriculturist of Dawes county, Nebraska, and is one of the leading old settlers in this section of the country. He was successful in building up a good farm and home in section 12, township 33, range 50, and accumulated a comfortable property and lived in the town of Whitney for years, where he is engaged in the livery and stock business.

Mr. Wilson was born in Jackson county, Ohio, July 11, 1845. His father, William Wilson, was a farmer and stock raiser, of American blood, born in Jackson county, Ohio, who settled in eastern Nebraska in the early days, his death occurring there in 1883. He married Miss Margaret Stevenson, also of American birth, born in Kentucky. When our subject was two years of age the family settled in Mercer county, Ohio, where he grew up, enjoying a frontier life in a timbered country and assisting his father in building up a farm and home in the wild country. They next moved to Illinois, locating in Hancock county, where he started out for himself, following farm work. In 1870 he went to Missouri and also farmed, remaining eight years; then left that state and settled in Lancaster county, Nebraska, where he was among the early pioneers. In 1882 he came to the town of Cortland, Gage county, Nebraska, and there started a livery stable, which he ran for about a year. In 1885 he came to Dawes county, being among the party of emigrants that came to Chadron. He located on government land located half a mile east of Whitney, and he at once built a small shack and started a farm, going through all the pioneer experiences and often having a hard time to get along. He built up a good place and remained there up to 1901. His farm contained two hundred and forty acres, with good buildings and improvements, and he made a success of his farming operations. He came to Whitney in 1901 and engaged in the livery and stock business, having a good livery barn and a good patronage. He also owns a comfortable residence and is well-to-do, and one of the worthy citizens of the place and county.

Mr. Wilson was married in the fall of 1879—November 23—to Miss Mary E. Marshall, daughter of Ralph and Amelia (Stuart) Marshall, the former a native of Ireland, where he was a cabinet maker in his younger days. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the parents of one son, Clyde, born July 20, 1880.

Our subject has served as assessor for one term, and takes an active interest in local public affairs. Politically he is a Democrat. On the 22d of October, 1907, our subject bought a fine farm of two hundred acres in section 21, township 33, range 50, and moved to it in March, 1908. The farm was partly improved with good buildings, running water the year round, plenty of timber and the best spring in the county. He is building up a fine ranch, and has fine crops this year.

Mr. Wolf received his early education in the schools of Nebraska and attended the Fremont Normal School at North Platte, Nebraska. In 1879 the family moved to Deuel county, Nebraska, where his father engaged in railroad work and later homesteaded a claim, following ranching for several years. He also took a tree claim and a pre-emption claim, and is one of the most widely known and highly respected old settlers in western Nebraska. A sketch of Mr. Wolf appears elsewhere in this work.

Our subject was principal of the Chappell schools for three years in 1899, 1900 and 1901, and was instructor at the Deuel county teachers institute in 1900, 1901 and 1902. In 1906 he came to Big Springs, Nebraska, and in February of the same year organized the Farmers' State Bank of Big Springs, opening for business on the 14th day of that month. Mr. B. F. Clayton is the president of the bank, H. I. Babcock, vice-president, and Mr. Wolf cashier. They have an authorized capital of twelve thousand dollars. Our subject assumes the active management of the bank, and by his strict attention to business and unquestionable honesty he has gained the confidence and respect of the community in which he lives.

Mr. Wolf was united in marriage to Miss Ada Sine in Lodge Pole, Cheyenne county, Nebraska, August 15, 1900. She is a daughter of Eugene and Mary (Myers) Sine, natives of Iowa and old settlers of Cheyenne county. To this union two children have been born, namely: Blanche, aged six years, and Helen, aged three.

JOSEPH BARKHURST.

Joseph Barkhurst is the genial proprietor of a fine ranch of four hundred and eighty acres in Box Butte county, where he has spent the past twenty years of his career. This ranch is well improved with all kinds of good farm buildings, handsome residence, surrounded by a beautiful lawn and many trees, and embraces one of the most valuable estates in that locality. He has made a grand success since coming to this section and is now numbered among the prominent old settlers and substantial farmers of the county.

Mr. Barkhurst was born in Harrison county, Ohio, in 1835. His father was of German descent and his mother of Welsh stock. During the boyhood of our subject the family lived in two different counties in Ohio, the father following farming all his life. Joseph was reared and educated in his native state, assisting in carrying on the home farm, and as a boy was well accustomed to doing all kinds of hard farm work, which served him in good stead during his later struggles as a pioneer in the western states. When he was about twenty-two years of age he moved to Missouri and lived there for about two years, and from there moved to Nebraska, landing in Nebraska City on April 12, 1860, and there went through pioneer experiences. When he arrived in that locality he had just twenty-two dollars and fifty cents in cash in his pocket, and rented a farm for two years, meeting with admirable success, and then bought a farm of forty acres. He made good and his hard work and intelligent management brought him great success in all his undertakings, after once getting a start. In the fall of 1888 he came to Box Butte county and filed on a tract of land as a homesteader, locating on what is now his ranch, situated in section 8, township 25, range 48, six miles from Alliance. He erected a good residence and added every improvement in the way of machinery, farm buildings, fences, wells, etc., and although going through all sorts of hardships, failures of crops and other disappointments, always managed to raise a small crop, even when the neighbors around him had lost their all, and he has steadily forged ahead and accumulated a nice property, attending strictly to the business of building up his farm and home, and from the time of his settling on that place up to the time he had proved up on it, had never spent a night away from home. When he did prove up he had sixteen thousand growing trees, and no other man in the county could say that at that time.

Mr. Barkhurst was married to Miss Evaline Mossman, daughter of James Mossman, a farmer of Coshocton, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Barkhurst are the parents of a family of nine children, who are named as follows: Sarah E., James M., Annie, Josephine, Frank T., Lillie M., Charles N., Hattie and Eugene. All of the children are married and nicely settled in homes of their own, and our subject is the proud grandfather of several interesting young folks, and he has three great-grandchildren living, and all live in Box Butte county, Nebraska.

Mr. Barkhurst is a Republican in political sentiment, takes a commendable interest in local and county affairs, and stands firmly for his convictions.

FRANK DIXON.

Frank Dixon, a well known and successful farmer residing in Holt precinct, on section 3, township 34, range 22, is one of the worthy citizens of Keya Paha county.

Mr. Dixon was born in Passaic county, New Jersey, March 27, 1856, and is a son of John and Jane (King) Dixon, the former born in Ireland, coming to America with his parents when an infant. In 1857 he removed with his family to Boone county, Illinois, and five years later to Howard county, Nebraska, where he died in 1894. Our subject is the third member of his parents' family of six children, all reared in Nebraska, where they were among the first whites to settle. As a boy he assisted his father in the farm work, and in this way received practical instruction and knowledge of this business, and afterward chose agriculture as his life work. In 1881 he came to Keya Paha county, and for the first two years lived on the north banks of the Niobrara river; they drove to the county with two yoke of oxen, camping out on the way at night under the wagon. He at once went to work establishing a farm, built a log house and broke up some land for crops, and remained on the place for two years. At this time wild game of all kinds was plentiful in the region, and during 1881 and 1882 Mr. Dixon killed thirty-four deer on his premises, which furnished a large part of the family provisions. He moved to his present farm in 1885, his first dwelling being a sod house, which was later replaced with a more substantial building. He cultivated part of the land, engaging from the start quite extensively in stock raising, and on this account was not so much affected by the dry years as many others in the vicinity. He now runs about three hundred head of cattle on his ranch, consisting of one thousand three hundred and twenty acres, the greater part of which is devoted to hay and pasture. He has a fine grove of forest trees, and a thrifty young orchard, making his ranch one of the most valuable properties in the county.

Mr. Dixon was married in 1886 to Miss Sarah Eason, a native of Minnesota, daughter of William and Rosa Eason, old settlers in Brown county. To Mr. and Mrs. Dixon have been born three children, namely: Elmer, Arthur and Alma, all of whom were born and reared on their present homestead. The family occupy a pleasant home and are popular members of the community.

Politically Mr. Dixon is a Republican, prominent in party affairs, having attended numerous conventions as a delegate, and many times offered an office, which he would never consent to accept, preferring a quiet private life to taking a part in public affairs.

FRANK ZALESKY.

Frank Zalesky, Jr., who occupies a prominent place among the younger members of the farming community of Colton precinct, is one of the early settlers of Cheyenne county, and is engaged extensively in agricultural pursuits. He has built up a fine farm, and has gained an enviable reputation as a citizen and has a host of friends. The subject of this sketch was born in Bohemia, July 29, 1876, and came to America with his parents when but one year of age; they sailed from Bremen and landed at Baltimore, whence they joined relatives in Washington county, Kansas, where they remained engaged in farming up to 1887. At that time they moved to Cheyenne county, where they have since followed farming and ranching. The father, Frank Zalesky, Sr., was born in Bohemia about 1846, and he settled in Cheyenne county in 1887, taking up a homestead in section 18, township 13, range 47, and has developed this into a fine ranch, the place consisting of nine hundred and sixty acres, which he devotes mostly to ranching purposes, running about seventy-five head of stock. He has a family of five children, of whom our subject is the eldest member. Frank, Jr., is proprietor of three hundred and twenty acres of fine land in section 2, township 13, range 48, where he farms about fifty acres, and runs fifty head of stock. He is a progressive, up-to-date agriculturist, has improved a good ranch, and is counted among the successful and prosperous men of his locality.

Our subject has gone through some hard times since settling in this county, and has met with different serious accidents, among the most remarkable the following: In 1887, while attempting to draw water from a new well, the heavy bucket used in drawing up the water, got beyond his control, the rope caught him and he plunged headlong and with frightful velocity down the ninety-foot well. His father, who fortunately was near, descended as quickly as possible, and when he reached the surface of the water, only the feet of the boy were visible. He was brought to the top unconscious and remained so for four days, hovering between life and death, and for three weeks he was unable to do any work.

Mr. Zalesky was married to Sophia Jenik, on August 21, 1900, in Lodgepole precinct. Mrs. Zalesky was born in Bohemia, on November 20, 1847, coming to the United States with her parents when a small girl. Three children were born to our subject, namely: Sophia, Mary and Rosa.

The family have a pleasant home and is highly esteemed as worthy citizens and good neighbors in their community. Mr. Zalesky is a man of strong convictions, and politically is affiliated with the Republican party; he was reared in the Catholic church, in which all his children have been baptized.

CHARLES H. FAULHABER.

A striking example of what may be accomplished by persistent effort and good management is found in the life of the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article. For many years Mr. Faulhaber has resided in section 10, township 27, range 29, and has gained a valuable estate by his own labors. He is widely known and universally respected, having been an early settler in Cherry county.

Charles H. Faulhaber was born in Manitowoc county, Wisconsin, in 1861. His father, Lewis, was born in Germany and was a child of two or three years when his parents came to America. He married Helen Souder, also a native of Germany, who came to this country at the age of two years. Our subject was reared in Wisconsin until he was thirteen, then the whole family came to Nebraska, settling in Lancaster county, and began farming, they being among the earliest settlers in that section, and the country was full of Indians and wild game. They went through the usual pioneer experiences, roughing it, many times camping out, etc., and had a hard time to get along, but succeeded in building up a comfortable home in time. In 1886 Charles and a brother came to Cherry county, driving in by way of Johnstown, at which place they spent one year, and in the spring of 1887 located on the present ranch as a homestead. They put up a rough shanty, worked hard to improve the place, and also worked on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railway, which was then being put through the section, helping build that line into Whitman. Charles "batched" it for the first four years, and in 1890 was married Miss Jennie Martin, daughter of Adam Martin, who was an old settler in Cherry county, coming here in the fall of 1886. Mr. Martin was one of the most prominent among the pioneers, taking a leading part in building up the county, and a man of superior intelligence and attainments, giving his best aid in all affairs which tended to the good of the locality.

After his marriage, Mr. Faulhaber and his wife started to make a good home and accumulate a competence for themselves, and worked hard and faithfully with this end in view, now being handsomely rewarded for their efforts in now owning a fine ranch of one thousand five hundred acres, which is situated three miles northwest of Brownlee. The place is all fenced and improved with good buildings, including a comfortable house, all necessary barns, sheds, etc. He has about forty acres cultivated, and uses the balance as a stock ranch, making a specialty of the breeding and raising of high grade Hereford cattle. He has a large herd of registered animals, and the reputation of having the finest beef cattle in his county.

Mr. Faulhaber's family consists of his wife and five children, as follows: Roy, born in 1892; Carl, born in 1894; Ruby, born in 1896; Forrest, born in 1903, and Irvie, born in January, 1907. They are a most happy and congenial family, and have a pleasant home, surrounded by every comfort and convenience of rural life, and enjoy a host of friends and acquaintances.

JAMES J. KINNEY.

James J. Kinney, known throughout Kimball county as a man of good citizenship and untiring energy, is a resident of Kimball, where he is held in the highest esteem. Mr. Kinney is a genuine "old-timer," and in the years he has resided in this region he has had much to do with the development of the county, both in a financial and social way. He is one of the foremost public men, having held numerous county and local offices, at present serving in the capacity of county attorney.

Mr. Kinney was born in Roscommon county, Ireland, July 15, 1845, grew up there and came to the United States with one brother, in 1865, settling at first in Cedar county, Iowa, coming to Nebraska in 1867, stopping at Paxton for a few months, then went back to Iowa. He again came to Nebraska, locating in Kimball county, which was then a part of Cheyenne county, landing here March 4, 1870. For ten years he was connected with the Union Pacific Railway Company, and in 1878 engaged in the ranching and stock raising industry, continuing the work up to the present time. He has been running annually from one thousand five hundred to two thousand cattle on his extensive ranches, and is one of the most successful men in the county. He has passed through all the "old" Nebraska times, and has seen the region grow from a barren prairie to its present prosperous condition, and in this development he has played an important part. He has been an extensive shipper for a number of years, and besides his cattle operations, handles a large bunch of horses, which he raises for the markets.

Mr. Kinney was united in marriage at Cheyenne, Wyoming, in 1879, to Margaret Fitzpatrick, who was born and reared in Illinois. They were the parents of two children, Mary E. and James J., Jr. The wife and mother died in Kimball April 23, 1882, her death being deeply regretted by her many friends who had loved her for her many sterling qualities of heart and mind. Mr. Kinney married again in 1886 Annie E. Shea, of Mechanicsville, Iowa, the second Mrs. Kinney being a native of Rock Island, Illinois, and to them have been born the following children: Theresa, Catherine, Winifred and Lucile, all at home, forming a charming family group.

Mr. Kinney is a staunch Democrat. He has been a member of the board of county commissioners, first elected in 1876. In 1890 he was elected county attorney, and with the exception of three terms, has served continuously in this capacity up to the present time. He was president of the Kimball Bank and principal owner of that institution during the years 1906 to 1908, in the latter year disposing of considerable of his holdings, although he is still a member of the board of directors. Our subject was the organizer of school district No. 3 in old Cheyenne county, and was connected with the schools in different capacities for twenty-five years.

ASHLEY B. COOLEY.

Ashley B. Cooley was born in Vermont in July, 1829, and was reared in New York, coming to Iowa in the early days, where he was married. He was a carpenter by trade, but was possessed of ability in other lines, being employed as a clerk and also as a school teacher. He came to Nebraska in 1883, and located his home on section 33, township 21, range 19. He came to the county in company with W. I. Cram, driving overland from O'Neil, and was one of the first settlers in this part of Loup county. Mr. Cooley became one of the leading spirits in the political affairs of the county and is favorably known and highly esteemed all over this part of the state. He held the office of county judge for two terms and established a high reputation as a man of honor and integrity. Mr. Cooley has a fine farm of three hundred and twenty acres, thoroughly improved with good buildings, fences and trees. The Cooliton postoffice was established in 1885 on Mr. Cooley's farm and remained there for eighteen years. The office is now discontinued and the mail comes via rural free delivery No. 1, from Walworth, this route being close to the Cooley farm.

On another page we present some interesting pictures of the Cooley ranch property.

ALBEY L. CARTER.

Albey L. Carter looks with pride to Illinois as his native state, his birth occurring in 1858 in La Salle county. His parents lived on a farm, his father's name being Lewis W. and his mother's name Rachel (Wheeler) Carter. Mr. Albey Carter was reared on a farm, and there, under good parental training, acquired habits of industry and thrift that have followed him through all the years. When he was fourteen years of age, the family moved to Iowa, and settled in Buena Vista county, and later located on a farm in Sac county. Albey L. learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for three years in Iowa, and in 1884 went to Ord, Nebraska, and worked at his trade there for a year and a half. In 1885 he went to West Union and opened a shop of his own, which he conducted for two years, after which he took up a pre-emption claim in Loup county. He took charge of the fine farm of Ashley B. Cooley, his father-in-law, an old pioneer settler, in 1905, and has given it a great deal of attention ever since. A photo of this place appears elsewhere in this work. Mr. Carter has been prominent in public affairs and has taken great interest in politics. He has been school director and for one term held the office of county commissioner of Loup county.

In Iowa, on the fifth day of August, 1883, Mr. Carter was married to Miss Ida Cooley, daughter of Ashley B. Cooley and Jemima (Sheldon) Cooley. Mr. and Mrs. Carter are the parents of four children—Zora, Lorin, Lella and Dell, and they make a most interesting group.

CHARLES HERRING.

Charles Herring, a prosperous farmer and stockman of Franklin county, Nebraska, postoffice at Reamsville, Kansas, settled in this state in 1889, purchasing a section of land in Franklin township, township 1, range 40, and still resides on this land, to which he has since added, the place consisting of one thousand one hundred and twenty acres. Here he has built up a fine farm and comfortable home, and has aided materially in the development of this region, becoming well known as a citizen of sterling character, richly deserving the success which has come to him as a reward for many years of perseverance and hard work.

Mr. Herring was born in Baden, near Constanz, on a farm. In 1879 he settled in Ohio, remaining there for some years. Our subject worked as a chemist during his young manhood, being employed in different cities throughout the east and west up to the time he came to Nebraska. He is well satisfied with this state as a farming and stock raising country, and he feeds from forty to fifty cattle and about one hundred hogs each year, keeping high grade animals only. He owns six hundred acres of land, and raises from three to four thousand bushels of corn each year, averaging twenty-five to forty bushels per acre, besides two hundred acres of wheat, which runs from fifteen to twenty-five bushels per acre.

Mr. Herring was married in 1886 at Fort Wayne, Indiana, to Miss Augusta Langhon, and to them have come the following children: Alvin, Herbert, George, Hilda, Clarence, Harold, Ada, Floyd and Charles, Jr.

In 1906 Mr. Herring visited Europe, traveling through Germany, France, Italy and Switzerland, in the hope of benefiting his health, and he spent some time at his old home. He states that conditions there are very bad, and hard for the poor and even the rich men, as a farmer aged twenty-six will have to work all his life and then be in debt or behind. The taxes are arranged so that the poor man really pays for the luxuries of the army and navy officials and rulers of the country. The legislators and officers in the armies and on the railways are well paid, receiving from five to six thousand dollars per year for their services, and are a well-kept and prosperous lot of people. After these men have served for twenty or twenty-five years they get a pension of from three to four thousand dollars, out of which they are not required to pay a cent of taxes, and this shows that the poor laboring men and the farmers have to carry the whole burden of keeping up the government, and there is widespread dissatisfaction under the surface, although the people dare not say a word, but have to pay the price. The Emperor of Germany gets a sum of twelve million marks, equal to three million dollars per year, while the Emperor of Austria receives fourteen million kronen, or three million five hundred thousand dollars. The president of France gets a salary of one million dollars (five million francs), and all these people travel both by land and water with a retinue of two or three hundred servants to attend them, and all the money spent so lavishly is ground out of the poor laborers. A little state covering one-half the area of the state of Nebraska, with a population of one million five hundred thousand people supports a standing army of thirty thousand soldiers, costing in times of peace forty thousand dollars each day, and in Germany, as all over Europe, this system exists, Russia being the worst of all countries.

The soldiers are ill-treated in many cases, and Mr. Herring states that we would not treat dogs as many officers treat the soldiers in their armies. He has seen an officer try to show a soldier how to take a cartridge out of a gun, and would push the gun on his shoulder with such force that it would knock the man over, and the conditions there are so bad that it would be impossible for an American to have a correct idea of the state of affairs which exist in that country. Mr. Herring's father, Ulrich Herring, served for seven years in the army, so he knows whereof he speaks when he tells of the hardships of the middle class in the old country. In big cities in Europe reform movements are gaining many recruits, and the people hope for better things before many years, although it may be a long time, as the army and capital have the people so thoroughly in subjection that they have to exercise the utmost caution and secrecy in any movement which is meant for the uplift of the masses.

Mr. Herring received a good education in Germany, finishing in the public schools, and afterwards took a full course in chemistry at the Worms Chemical School, and also attended the academy at Valparaiso, Indiana, for two years.

He is a man who has made the most of his opportunities, and is a thoroughly posted, up-to-date gentleman, and possesses a striking personality, universally esteemed by his fellowmen. He is a regular correspondent for the English and German papers in his locality, touching on subjects along the reform lines and especially labor problems, and handles his subjects in a masterly manner. He is an Independent voter, always standing for the best man. He is a member of the Lutheran church, and one of its earnest supporters.

JOHN S. HUGHES, DECEASED.

John S. Hughes, deceased, who was one of the early settlers of Dawes county, and a man who will always be remembered for his kindly hospitality, was born on a farm in North Wales in 1846. His parents were natives of England.

Mr. Hughes spent the early years of his life in England, where he received his education, working in the mines as he grew into manhood. At the age of twenty-one years he came to America, landed in New York, came west to Wisconsin and located with a Welsh colony, working in the lead mines. After a time he went west into Colorado, where he worked in the gold mines at Colorado Springs. In the year 1880 he came to Dawes county, driving from Sidney, and located on the Niobrara river, about three miles west of Marsland. Here he opened a road ranch, conducting a general store, saloon and hotel, and serving as postmaster. His building, which was twenty by one hundred feet, was amply fitted for the needs of the people. This was a stage station. Here he built up an extensive business, was prosperous, and achieved the success justly due his upright and honorable business methods. His place was the scene of many of the exciting times so well known to the pioneers of this western country.

Our subject lived in Crawford for a short time, but in 1901 moved to Marsland. He erected additional buildings on his ranch, which contained an area of two thousand acres, and dealt extensively in live stock.

In 1903 Mr. Hughes was united in marriage to Mary Lemon, daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth (Galvith) Lemon. Mrs. Hughes was reared in Dawes county, her father having settled here in 1887.

In the month of May, 1904, Mr. Hughes passed away, leaving to the care of his beloved wife three children, viz: John, Helen and Thomas. Surely a work of this kind would be sadly deficient if a sketch of his life did not appear in its pages. During the period of his life which was spent in Dawes county, he proved himself a man, in every way worthy of the high esteem in which he was held. He was a public-spirited citizen, one who took an active interest in the development and improvement of the county, and when he died he left behind him a host of warm friends who will ever honor his memory.

JOHN C. McNARE.

The history of the upbuilding of America has been one of startling successes. From the early days, when the Pilgrims first landed upon its shores, up to the present day, the greatest success has attended the efforts of ambitious men, and the early settlers in the western states have furnished some splendid examples, among whom is the gentleman whose name heads this review. Mr. McNare is a native of West Virginia, born January 17, 1861, near Bruceton Mills, Preston county. He is a son of Andrew McNare and Jennina (Walls) of Scotch-Irish descent. The father, by occupation a farmer, visited his son in Nebraska in 1905, and was much impressed by the wonderful opportunities to be found in this section of the country. Our subject was reared and educated within three miles of his birthplace, and struck out for himself on reaching the age of twenty-four years, following farm work in his native state.

Mr. McNare first came to Nebraska in April, 1885, locating five and a half miles west of Valentine, which was then the terminus of the railroad at that time. He went to work improving his farm at once, and put up a sod house and other farm buildings. His start consisted of a yoke of oxen and a few chickens, a small beginning from which his latter success has grown. The dry years soon came on. He lost successive crops and was unable to make any apparent headway, so sold out and purchased his present home in section 26, township 32, range 26, and began over again. Here he has added to his original holdings until he has a place consisting of two thousand three hundred and sixty acres, mostly hay and pasture land and engages principally in stock raising, keeping at times as high as one thousand one hundred head of cattle and a hundred horses. He has a complete set of ranch buildings, house, barn, mill, tanks, etc., on section 14. The home place consists of a fine ten-room house with baths and running water, supplied by an elevated cistern reservoir, the first of its kind in this region. There are six never failing wells on the ranch, varying from thirty-six to a hundred feet deep.

January 21, 1883, Mr. McNare was married to Miss Virginia Yeast at Brandonville, West Virginia, a native of Maryland, but a few rods from where three state boundaries meet. They were reared within a mile of each other. She is a daughter of William and Martha E. (Deak) Yeast. Eleven children have been born of this marriage, namely: Arthur E., Herbert C., Robert G., Estella B., Charles G., William C., Violet Mabel, Edith M., Vern L., Hazel B. and Jennie May, the two elder born in West Virginia and all reared in Cherry county.

The family was one of the earliest settlers in this region, there being few neighbors and far between at the time of Mr. McNare's advent to Cherry county. Mr. McNare, a Democrat politically, has always taken a deep interest in local affairs tending toward the development of his locality, and has held different school offices in his district. He is a member of Camp No. 2947, Modern Woodmen of America, at Wood Lake.

A view of the family residence, with portraits of Mr. and Mrs. McNare, is to be found on another page of this work.

THOMAS C. LEWIS.

Thomas C. Lewis, a highly respected farmer of township 33, range 57, in Sioux county, Nebraska, has a pleasant home and good farm there, which he has gained through thrift and industrious effort. He is an energetic agriculturist, progressive, and an able representative of the farming community of his county.

Mr. Lewis was born in Audubon county, Iowa, in 1869, on his father's farm. The latter, Thomas also, was of American birth, a well-known farmer and attorney of that locality, and was county judge, elected to that office when Audubon county was organized. He married Josephine Kaylor, and they lived for many years in Iowa, our subject growing up there, attending the country schools and following farm work during his young manhood. When he was seventeen years of age he came to Sioux county, Chadron at that time being the nearest railroad point. He was employed on ranches in that locality, also in Wyoming, and led a regular frontier life, roughing it for a number of years and following the career of a cowboy up to 1892, riding all over the western part of Nebraska and into adjoining states. In the latter year he settled on a homestead which he now occupies, located in section 4, township 33, range 57, which was an entirely unimproved tract, and he has built up a good farm and home. The place is situated on Antelope creek, and he has it all fenced, supplied with good buildings, etc. He is engaged almost exclusively in stock raising, and making a great success of the business. Of late years he has also gone into the grain raising business quite extensively, his oat crop this year, which is very fine, will go sixty to seventy-five bushels to the acre.

Mr. Lewis was married in 1892 to Theresa Thomas, daughter of Samuel Thomas, whose sketch appears in this volume, and he is one of the oldest settlers in Sioux county, Mrs. Lewis having been raised here. Two children have been born to them, namely: Thomas Lee, born in 1895, and Albert Wilton, born in 1897.

Mr. Lewis is Independent in politics, and lends his influence for good government. He takes an active part in local affairs, and has served his precinct in different capacities. The year that he located in this county was that of the organization of the region as Sioux county, and he has assisted materially in its development ever since.

C. A. PETERSON.

Among the old settlers of Anderson township, Phelps county, Nebraska, recognized as an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, a foremost place is accorded C. A. Peterson, the subject of this review.

Mr. Peterson is a native of Sweden, and came to Phelps county in 1879 with his father, Anthony Peterson, the latter taking a homestead in Lake township, our subject locating in Anderson township, where he now resides. He began farming this at once, and soon afterwards bought one hundred and sixty acres of land adjoining, also three hundred and twenty acres in the next section north of his farm. To all this he added another eighty acres, so he is now the possessor of a farm of seven hundred and twenty acres, and with his brother, N. Peterson, has an equal interest in three hundred and twenty acres located in Centre township. He purchased all of this land during the years from 1879 to 1904, and all he is now worth was made since coming to this state. Before coming to Nebraska he farmed for a time in Mercer county, Illinois, but was not satisfied with conditions there, and thinks that Nebraska is the only state for a poor man. While running his farm he engaged in stock raising to some extent in addition to cultivating a good portion of his land, and was successful in both ventures. He raised pure bred Polled Angus cattle, and prefers them to any other breed for western Nebraska. He also raised a large number of hogs, and found this a very profitable line of work, as they can be raised for comparatively little, and mature quickly, always bringing fair prices on the market.

Mr. Peterson's father died in 1901, aged seventy years, leaving an estate including seven hundred and twenty acres of land, all of which was good fertile soil. He is not at present actively engaged in running his farms, but rents the land out and derives a comfortable income in this manner.

He was married in 1878 to Miss Louisa Anderson, who was also born in Sweden, and they have three children—Amanda, Sadie and Clarence.

Mr. Peterson has held the office of supervisor of district No. 1, Anderson township, and was a member of the county board of Phelps county, for Anderson, Divide and Cottonwood townships. He has been clerk and treasurer for Anderson township, holding each office for several terms. He also takes an active part in educational matters in his district, and has been a member of the school board for a long time past. Politically he is a Republican.

HENRY C. BRANDEL.

Henry C. Brandel, a prominent resident of Brown county, Nebraska, is a man of successful endeavor and one of the substantial farmers and favorably known citizens of this locality.

Mr. Brandel was born in the city of Sandusky, Ohio, August 9, 1869. His father, Jacob Brandel, was a mason by trade, a native of Germany, who came to the United States at the age of twenty-two. After living at Sandusky for a number of years, he removed to Independence, Iowa, in the spring of 1871, where he lived until coming to Nebraska in 1884. He died in 1891, leaving a wife and two children, of whom our subject is the elder. The family settled in Brown county when he was a lad of sixteen, purchasing the homestead on which they now live, located in section 12, township 31, range 23. This homestead proof was cancelled by the government and they were finally compelled to file homestead papers and prove up on it, after having paid one man for the land. Their start was on a very small scale when they landed here, beginning with one horse, two heifers and a few chickens, which constituted the support of the family. During the first two years they lived in a small log house, which was rather close quarters, but they soon built a comfortable dwelling out of native lumber, adding a granary and other buildings gradually. The farm was steadily improved, but the family met with hardships and suffered much privation through the drouth periods and grasshopper raids, which put them back considerably in their work of building up their home. However, this was the usual experience of the settlers in this region and no more than could have been looked for, and they did not give up hope. A great deal of time was spent in hauling posts, timber and smaller wood from the land which was sold to help keep up expenses. In 1894, shortly after the death of his father, our subject went to Brownlee, a distance of sixty to seventy miles, where he worked in the hay fields, in this way being able to add quite a nice little sum to the store they saved to keep them through the hard times, still living on his father's farm and improving it. This farm now contains four hundred acres of land, all fenced, one hundred and eighty acres being under cultivation.

In 1894 Mr. Brandel was married to Miss Katie Haas, a native of Ross county, Ohio, whose father, George B. Haas, is a farmer of German descent, and one of the old-timers of Brown county, coming in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Brandel have a family of four children, namely: Sylvia M., George H., Howard W. and Selma F. Politically Mr. Brandel is a Democrat, always awake to the better interests of the locality in which he chose his home.

AUGUSTINE H. McLAUGHLIN.

Augustine H. McLaughlin, residing in section 10, township 28, range 52, Box Butte county, is one of the substantial farmers and worthy citizens of that county. He is one of the pioneers of the region, having located here before Box Butte was organized as a county, and is familiar with every incident connected with its development and growth, and has himself materially assisted in its advancement and progress.

Mr. McLaughlin was born in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, March 11, 1846. His father, Thomas McLaughlin, was a blacksmith by trade, and was a pioneer in Iowa county, Iowa. Both parents of our subject were natives of Pennsylvania, and came to Iowa in 1856, where Augustine was reared and educated. He enlisted in the Eighteenth Iowa Infantry, Company I, in 1862, and saw service in the southwest, going through Arkansas, Missouri and Texas with his company, and although in a number of engagements was only slightly wounded.

He returned to Iowa after being discharged from the army, and in 1867 went to Denver where he followed freighting from Cheyenne through the mountains, also from Denver to Mexico, and from Sidney, Nebraska, into the Black Hills and Ft. Pierre to Deadwood.

In the summer of 1875 Mr. McLaughlin and a party of ten others went into the Black Hills on a prospecting trip, and remained there until they were ordered out by the government troops. The expenses of that trip was two hundred dollars for each man, and when they came to settle up and divide their spoils, found that he had only one dollar and twenty cents coming to him as his share from the gold they found. During those years he was all over this part of the west, and many times had encounters with the Indians.

In the fall of 1882 our subject came to Box Butte county, settling on a homestead in section 10, township 28, range 52, and there started a ranch. He first put up a rude shanty and went to work breaking up his land, and improving the place. His intention was to found a good ranch and home, and to that end he kept steadily at the work, and has since remained there constantly except during three years which were spent at Grand Island, Nebraska. He was one of the early assessors in the section, when this was all Cheyenne county, and at the time Dawes county was organized he was elected one of the county commissioners and helped organize the county. He also helped to organize Box Butte county, and was the first man to receive a patent for land issued in the county. He now has a ranch of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres, all deeded land, and is engaged in cattle raising, and deals extensively in hay, buying and shipping it into the Black Hills. He has a fine irrigation ditch from the Niobrara river, and irrigates five hundred acres of hay land. Everything is kept in the best possible order on his ranch, and he has one of the valuable estates in his locality, and richly deserves the success which has come to him through his perseverance and endeavors. The name of his ranch where he resides is River Side ranch, Marsland postoffice and station.

Mr. McLaughlin was married in 1877 to Miss Mary Noel, born in Iowa, of American stock, and daughter of John and Rachel (Goldsmith) Noel. They have two children, Lucy M. and Hobart L.

In political sentiment our subject leans toward the Republicans. On another page will be found a picture of Mr. McLaughlin and family.

HENRY FLINIAUX.

Henry Fliniaux, now a resident of Cherry county, Nebraska, where his home is found in section 24, township 33, and range 28, is, as his name indicates, a native of France, where he was born in the village of Ephy, Department of Sonne, May 6, 1858. His father, Henry, Sr., was cashier and bookkeeper in a bank in his native land, and came to this country for the first time in 1847, remaining six years, when he returned to France. In the fall of 1862 he brought his family to the United States, sailing from Havre on the steamship Bavaria, landing in New York after a voyage of nineteen days. He settled at Highland, Madison county, Illinois, in a settlement of French and Switzers, where he remained five years. His wife, the mother of the subject of this sketch, was Eliza Longatte. She was also of pure French blood and the entire family is a notable embodiment of the best traits and characteristics of their race and blood.

Henry Fliniaux spent the first five years in Madison county, and was then taken by his parents into Cass county, Iowa, where they resided for two years, after which they found a home in Gentry county, Missouri, where our subject remained until he had reached early manhood.

Mr. Fliniaux started for himself in 1885, and the year following made a homestead entry of a fine place on Gordon's creek in Cherry county. His sister also made a homestead entry at the same time on Gordon's creek, and the two lived many years in a sod shanty. Mr. Fliniaux had a team of horses with which he traveled thirty miles to and fro, between the ranch and Valentine, then his market town. He early began in the stock business, and increased his real estate as rapidly as possible until he now owns a ranch consisting of sixteen hundred and eighty acres of very desirable land. The farm on which he now makes his home was bought by him in the spring of 1903, and here he established his home the following year. The father took a homestead on sections 13 and 24, township 33, range 28, where he died May 9, 1905. The mother and sister make their home with Henry Fliniaux and the three are very closely associated in all business matters.

Mr. Fliniaux is making a reputation as a horticulturist of much success. On his land he has over twelve hundred fruit bearing trees, and his experiences in this line are of great value to the county, where his orchard is known as one of the very finest in the entire region.

Mr. Fliniaux is a philosophical Socialist, but has never taken a very active part in politics. He has shared in the dangers and excitements of frontier life, and has many times been called on to fight desperately against the prairie fires. In 1887 he was entirely burned out by one that came down on him with the wings of the wind. The family are communicants of the Catholic church.

FRANK E. FOSTER.

The gentleman whose name appears at the head of this review is essentially a self-made man, starting for himself at the age of twenty-three years. He has become intimately identified with the early life of the community and is counted as one of the reliable old settlers. He located his homestead and started on the lowest round of the ladder in 1885, breaking land for fifty cents an acre and husking corn for two and a half cents a bushel in order to earn money to complete his filings. He built a sod house and lived in it for one year, "batching it" during that time.

Like all pioneers Mr. Foster had to pass through the years of drouth, and the year 1894 witnessed such total failure that many had to find work elsewhere. Mr. Foster went to Rock county, where he put up hay and hauled cream and engaged in various enterprises in order to make money for his farm improvements. Better years came and success at farming became assured. Now the subject of our sketch has an excellently improved farm of eight hundred acres, with about one hundred and fifteen acres under cultivation. On the place are good buildings, well and windmill, fences and general and useful improvements of all kinds.

Mr. Foster claims Iowa as the state of his nativity, his birth occurring in Casey in the year 1874. His father, Thomas Foster, was a painter by trade, and traveled widely in America, having driven stage in California in as early a day as 1848. Frank E. Foster's mother was Lois Chamberlain before marriage. The father died in Iowa and the mother and brother came to Nebraska in about 1885. The mother died in Nebraska July 14, 1900.

The marriage of Frank E. Foster and Miss Myrtle Brown, of Milbourne, Nebraska, was celebrated February 26, 1900. She was the daughter of Charles Brown, an old settler of Nebraska—his death occurred in Custer county. Mr. and Mrs. Foster have been blessed with three children, namely: Willie, Ora and Mabel.

Frank E. Foster has at all times been deeply interested in the social and business interests of the community. He has participated in all matters tending for the general betterment of affairs and especially in educational matters. He is progressive and resourceful and is respected for these qualities. He taught the second term of school in the Vanderveen district, and this was the first regular paid term of the public school. He received eighteen dollars per month for the four months' term and had to discount the warrants ten per cent. in order to get the money.

JOHN LAWRENCE.

John Lawrence, a prominent pioneer of Box Butte county, resides in section 21, township 26, range 47, where he enjoys a comfortable home and has gained the esteem and confidence of his fellowmen. He has endured many hardships to secure this fine property and can recount many thrilling experiences connected with his early settlement in this region.

Mr. Lawrence was born in Wales, England, in 1845, the son of John Lawrence, who was a day laborer all his life in that country. He was reared in his native county until he reached the age of twenty years, following the occupation of a farm laborer there. In 1865 he left England and came to the United States and after landing in New York went to Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he obtained employment in the coal mines and worked as a miner for two years. He then went to Indiana and entered the coal mines, where he spent seven or eight years, and from there came west to Iowa, and again worked as a miner in Monroe county, remaining there up to the spring of 1887, then came to Nebraska and settled in Box Butte county. He filed on a homestead in section 21, township 26, range 47, and after spending a year on the place and getting it started, he sent for his family to join him. He had erected a sod house and started to improve his farm, doing all his work of breaking, etc., with a team of mules, starting with practically no capital, and obliged to work out in the vicinity to make a living. During the first year or so he went to work in the coal mines of Wyoming, and one winter, during the month of February, 1891, while he was away from his home, a severe snow storm swept the vicinity of his farm, and the snow was so deep that his house was entirely snowed under, and his wife and children were compelled to break through the window to get outside and make a hole through the snow to the barn. They had a hard time to get enough fuel to keep warm and had to chop up the partition boards and even the chairs to make a fire and keep from freezing to death. When they finally succeeded in digging a road to the barn the snow was piled against the building so high that they had to dig a hole through the bank to get to the door.

During the first few years Mr. Lawrence was located in this county he succeeded in raising fair crops, but when the dry years struck the locality he had a hard time to get along and make a living at farming, so started in the stock business, raising cattle and at first operated on a small scale but gradually branched out and finally was able to do pretty well. He was constantly improving his place and added to his original homestead, until he is now proprietor of eight hundred acres, using it mostly as a ranch, cultivating only about one hundred acres, but raises good crops of small grains, potatoes, etc.

Mr. Lawrence was married in 1867 while living in Pennsylvania, taking as his wife Mary Ann Davis, also a native of Wales, England. Mrs. Lawrence was a daughter of Thomas and Jane (Price) Davis, the father a miner in England, and the whole family came to America in 1863, settling in Stark county, Ohio, where Mrs. Lawrence was raised. Our subject has a family of four children, namely: John R., born April 11, 1873; Thomas J., born September 18, 1877; William E., born April 17, 1883, and Daniel, born May 30, 1888.

Mr. Lawrence is active in local political affairs, and is one of the leading men and worthy citizens of his community. He has served on the school board in his district for many years.

CARL HAHN.

Carl Hahn, one of the early settlers in western Nebraska, who foresaw the prosperity and opportunities of that region in its early days, and remained to enjoy the results of many years of labor here, is one of the most highly esteemed residents of Sheridan county. He is the owner of a valuable estate in township 28, range 45, and farms on an extensive scale.

Mr. Hahn is a native of Loraine county, Ohio, born in 1855. When he was six months old his parents moved to Iowa, locating on a farm there, where our subject, together with eleven brothers and sisters, were raised and educated. His father, Peter Hahn, was born in Germany and came to America at the age of eight years, his parents locating in Ohio, and in 1856 he moved to Iowa with his family, his wife's death occurring there in 1880. Our subject commenced to make his own way in the world at the age of twenty-two years, obtaining employment on farms, working by the month or day for nine years. In 1886 he moved to this locality with his parents, and took up a homestead for himself in section 20, township 28, range 45, which he still occupies. Here he built a comfortable dwelling place, consisting of a dugout and sod house in which he lived for two years, then erected a better sod house. He "batched it" for five years, and began building up his farm. When he landed here he brought a team and an old wagon with him, and the following spring broke land and put in some sod corn, the patch containing about ten acres.

During the first years he got fair crops, and had just got nicely started when the dry years hit him, and as he was depending wholly on his crops for a living he had a hard time to get along. He had two cows, and some years his crops failed so that he was unable to get enough from them to pay for having it threshed, and not enough to feed his stock. He never bought any seed, but only sowed what he had, and got along as best he could. He did everything he could to keep going, and one whole winter made baskets and sold them to support his family. He often felt very discouraged and determined to leave, but stuck to it, as he did not want to leave the place after being on it for so long, so stayed on and when the better years came along and his crops were good, he was glad he had persevered in his undertaking. He knows he could not have done as well anywhere else, as he started out with practically no capital at all, and was even obliged to borrow money when he filed on his land. He now owns a tract of eight hundred acres of good land, and farms about one hundred acres of this, using most of the produce on his place to feed his stock, of which he has about forty-five or fifty head. His ranch is all fenced and well improved with good buildings, etc., and he is proud of the fact that he owes no man a dollar.

Mr. Hahn was married in 1882 to Miss Minnie Bridenstein, born and raised in Iowa. They had one child which died in infancy, and in 1885 Mr. Hahn suffered a sad loss in the death of his wife. He was married again in 1892, to Miss Elizabeth Blickenstaff, daughter of Jacob Blickenstaff, of Pennsylvania Dutch stock, born and raised in Indiana, who came to Nebraska in 1888 and settled on a farm there, being among the early settlers in this section. Mr. and Mrs. Hahn have a family of six children, named as follows: Christian N., Levi A., Clara V., Carl E., Anna E., and a baby as yet not named.

Mr. Hahn's postoffice address is Schill, and his nearest school is within two miles of his farm. He is always interested in local affairs that tend to the betterment of conditions in his locality, and has held local office at different times. Politically he is not a party man, but votes for the best man running.

An interesting picture of Mr. Hahn's family as well as the ranch residence will be found on another page of this work.

ARTHUR CUTLER.

Arthur Cutler, an old settler of Sheridan county, Nebraska, is recognized as one of the prosperous and substantial agriculturists of the locality in which he resides. His home is in section 11, township 33, range 43, and he is widely and favorably known as a good business man and worthy citizen.

Mr. Cutler was born in Richardson county, Nebraska, January 10, 1866. His father, H. C. Cutler, was born in New York state, and during the war was a member of the Forty-fourth Illinois Regiment, and saw hard service as a soldier.

At the age of sixteen years our subject began farming and followed this work, and as his father's health failed he was obliged to work out by the month to help support the family. He spent four years in Kansas on ranches and doing all kinds of labor, and in the fall of 1887 came to Sheridan county, Nebraska, and filed on a tract of land. He settled on this the following spring, remaining there for twelve years and since that time has never left the locality, this farm being situated only nine miles north of where he now lives. He built a sod house on the land and in this he "batched it" for a number of years, building up his farm and getting a start. After leaving this place he worked out on different farms for some years, and in 1904 bought his present home of one hundred and sixty acres, this place being quite well improved when he purchased it. It was during the time he was in Sheridan county that the dry years came on and ruined all his crops, and here he saw his hardest times. He lived only three-quarters of a mile from the state line while the Indian war was in progress, but never left his farm, although there was great danger in remaining. This and other pioneer hardships were all he cared for and he is glad these times are past. In the beginning of his residence here he had a hard time to prove up on his homestead. He had nothing to start with, and was obliged to buy all of his machinery with money which he earned by working out on farms by the month, and also hauling timber to Pine Ridge Agency.

In 1897 Mr. Cutler was married to Miss Laura C. Thacker, born in Missouri in 1872. Her father, Charles W. Thacker, was a native of Kentucky, and now resides in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Cutler have two children, namely: Cecil, an adopted child born in 1894, and Roy, born in 1905. In political sentiment he is a Republican, but always votes for the best man on the ticket, regardless of party.

A. J. DEETS.

A. J. Deets, a well-known resident of Center township, Phelps county, Nebraska, enjoys a comfortable home and the esteem and respect of his fellowmen.

Mr. Deets was born in 1860. In 1882 he left Pennsylvania and came to Nebraska, locating in Buffalo county, north of Kearney, and there engaged in the grain and hog business. In 1896 he first landed in Phelps county, and for nine years managed the Norris ranch, comprising eight hundred acres, located in Anderson township, and in addition to this he was postmaster and store-keeper at Haydon. Four hundred acres of this ranch was cultivated, and the balance in pasture. He generally planted two hundred acres to wheat and oats, and two hundred acres in corn, and from this his crop of wheat averaged thirty bushels, and corn and oats up to fifty bushels per acre. On the pasture land he had from one hundred to two hundred Hereford cattle, and about three hundred Poland China hogs, and also twenty horses. He was very successful in both farming and stock raising, and when he left this ranch the horses which he sold brought him one thousand six hundred dollars. He now owns a good farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Centre township, section 12, on the Anderson township line, and has built a nice, substantial farm house, fine barns and other buildings. He has a large building used for sheltering hogs, and makes a specialty of raising these animals. He has a drove of over forty pure bred Poland Chinas and two hundred graded hogs, and finds this line very profitable. He also has one hundred high grade Hereford cattle, and some fine Percheron horses and colts. He shows a marked preference for Poland China hogs and Hereford cattle, as they mature and are fit for market earlier than other grades. He thinks that Nebraska is one of the best states in the Union for mixed farming and stock raising, as the climate and conditions here are well adapted to their perfect development.

He has three brothers also living in this state, L. S. Deets, of Kearney, J. H. Deets, and H. A. Deets, also of Kearney.

Mr. Deets was married in 1886 to Miss Carrie Day, daughter of M. Day, a pioneer settler of Buffalo county, Nebraska. One child has blessed their union, a daughter, named Ozella.

MICHAEL WINDSHEIMER.

Michael Windsheimer, who enjoys the distinction of being one of the leading old timers of Cheyenne county, Nebraska, is a gentleman of exceptional business ability and integrity, and although since coming to this section has suffered many losses financially, has prospered to a remarkable extent and is now proprietor of a fine estate in Lodgepole precinct. He is prominent in his community, taking an active part in its advancement in every way, and well deserves his success and high standing.

Mr. Windsheimer was born in the village of Bromholzheim, Wertemberg, Germany, December 2, 1856. He is the eldest of three children in his father's family, and grew to manhood on a farm there. His father, Leonard, is still living in that country, but the mother is dead. Our subject came to America in 1882, sailing from Bremen Haven on the "Main" on the last day of May, landing on June 9. He went direct to Boone county, Iowa. After spending about four years in that county he came to Cheyenne county, arriving here in the spring of 1886, and at once filed on a homestead on section 6, taking one hundred and sixty acres, which is his present farm. He now has three hundred and twenty acres, while a quarter section additional is owned by his wife; it is a very nice property, with one hundred and twenty acres devoted to farming and the balance in hay land and pasture for one hundred and twenty head of cattle and a small bunch of horses. He has a complete set of substantial farm buildings and every improvement in the way of machinery, etc., also a good supply of water the year around for his stock and all domestic purposes. The place is also well supplied with natural timber.

Mr. Windsheimer was married at Boone, Iowa, November 7, 1883, to Miss Maggie Lang, who was born in Germany and came to this country in the early part of that year (1883). They have a family of eight children, namely: Mary, wife of Rolla Porter, of Lusk, Wyoming; Minnie, William, Frederick, Leonhard, Emma, John L. and Annie, all of whom are living at home. Mrs. Windsheimer's parents are both dead. The family have a substantial stone dwelling, and are among the well liked residents of their community; their home is one of the most hospitable to be found in many days' travel. All are members of and regular attendants of the German Lutheran church at Weyerts.

Politically Mr. Windsheimer is a Republican.

LEE GARNER.

Lee Garner, a prominent old-timer of Dawes county, now living in Whitney, where he is engaged in the general merchandise business, is one of the leading pioneers of this locality.

Mr. Garner is a native of Wayne county, Illinois, born in 1839 on a farm. His parents were both of American blood, the father an early settler in eastern Nebraska, coming here with his family in 1854 and locating in Dakota county, where he died in 1891. Our subject grew up in Dakota county, where he found plenty of hard work to do in building up the home farm with his parents, and attended the country schools, going through the usual pioneer experiences in his boyhood days. In 1859 he started out for himself, and was appointed superintendent of the first freighting outfit from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Denver, running that up to 1861, crossing the plains several times with teams, camping out on the ground at night and meeting with many exciting adventures. In 1861 he enlisted in Company I,

First Nebraska Volunteers, and the regiment was ordered south but only remained a short time, most of their service consisting in watching the Indians on the plains. He was in the service for two years.

After leaving the army he returned to Dakota county and followed farming, purchasing a farm of his own, and this place is now worth at least one hundred and twenty-five dollars per acre. He came to Cedar county about 1870, and was among the early settlers in that section, and engaged in the stock and mixed farming business, later going into the mercantile business at Coleridge, when that town was first started. He only ran the store a short time, then moved to Dawes county, teaming from Valentine, making several trips from that place, also from Sidney, bringing in a stock of merchandise and opened a store in old Dawes City. In 1886, when the railroad came to Whitney, Mr. Garner located here, building the first hotel in the town, which he ran for almost twenty years, and was well known far and near by the residents of this section and travelers who came through the country. In 1900 Mr. Garner opened a store, dealing in general merchandise and still operates this business. For some time he was engaged in running a store and boarding house in the old town of Chadron, where he put up a building for the purpose.

In 1867 our subject was united in marriage to Miss Mary Wright, daughter of John and Elizabeth Barker Wright, early settlers in Dakota county, Nebraska, and who were both born and raised in England.

Mr. Garner has done his full share in the building up and developing of the section in which he located, and is a representative pioneer of the country. He is a Democrat in politics.

HENRY C. STONE.

Henry C. Stone, an experienced farmer, resides in Brown county, on Plum creek, north of Johnstown, where he has a fine tract of land and enjoys an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen.

Mr. Stone is a native of Wright county, Iowa, born December 4, 1857. His father, Norman Stone, was a farmer and old settler in Pawnee county, Nebraska, coming to that locality in 1867, and in 1883 moved to Brown county, where he died in 1890. Our subject is the eldest in a family of eleven children, and was reared in Pawnee county, where he grew up accustomed to all kinds of hard work, as he was obliged to assist his father and brothers in the work of carrying on their farm. He grew to manhood on the frontier, where the early settlers experienced many hardships and privations. At that time there were no railroads through this region, and journeys for family supplies had to be made at a great risk, traveling many miles to the nearest trading-post, through a rough and wild country, and many were the exciting times these pioneers saw through encounters with Indians who roamed the country, and also the wild beasts which at that time abounded in this section.

In 1882 Mr. Stone left his father's home in Pawnee county and came to Brown county, driving the entire distance with a team and covered wagon. The trip took eight days, and was a tedious time to the travelers. He located on a pre-emption in section 1, township 31, range 23, and began to improve his property, building a log house and breaking up sod for crops. He had a team of horses and five dollars in money when he began here, his only capital besides his brawn and brain.

During the first years he met with many disappointments, losing two crops in succession through the drouths and two by hailstorms. He remained on this farm for three years, then went to Almira on the North Loup, pursuing his trade of blacksmith for three years. Returning, he lived on his father's place, where he farmed for a few years, working rented land in addition. In 1896 he took his present homestead in section 1, township 31, range 23, adjoining his pre-emption land, and erected a dwelling, blacksmith shop, barns and other buildings. This place, containing six hundred and forty acres, is located on Plum creek, and is well supplied with natural timber and plenty of water. He has cleared a large part of the land and raises good crops on his farm every year. He has a fine orchard of one hundred and fifty trees on Plum creek, which is one of the best in the neighborhood, and of this he is very proud.

Mr. Stone was married January 29, 1883, to Miss Mary White, a native of Polk county, Iowa. Mrs. Stone is a daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Luther) White, who settled in Pawnee county in 1880. Twelve children have resulted from this union: Dora E., wife of Frank Jenkins; Cora (deceased); Clara, wife of Theodore Petty; Chas. E.; Mary E., who married James Gallagher; Norman H.; Amos Walter.; Alice L.; Ida C.; Laura A.; Carrie E. (deceased); and one that died in infancy, all of whom were born in Brown county.

The family is highly esteemed in this locality, and among the worthy citizens who have aided in the advancement of conditions of this section. Politically Mr. Stone is a Socialist.

NELS NELSON.

Nels Nelson, one of the pioneer agriculturists of Deuel county, Nebraska, holds a prominent place as a man of intelligence and sterling citizenship. He came to the region during its earliest settlement, and has prospered to a marked degree, his enterprising nature and good business judgment placing him among the foremost farmers of his community. His home is in section 12, township 14, range 44, where he has a large circle of warm friends and is held in high esteem by all with whom he comes in contact.

Mr. Nelson was born in Sweden, November 26, 1847, and was reared there, receiving a limited schooling, spending his boyhood on his parents' farm and also working out in the vicinity of his home. His parents lived and died in their native land, and when Nels was twenty-nine years of age he decided to strike out for America, landing in this country in 1878. He was the only member of his father's family who ever left Sweden, and it took considerable courage to break away from his home and all the dear ones; coming alone, practically without funds, to a strange land. However, he kept up a brave spirit, and his first location was in Montgomery county, Iowa, where he remained for about seven years, then came to Polk county, Nebraska. After two years in that vicinity he moved to Deuel county, homesteading on section 6, township 14, range 43, where he proved up, and afterwards settled on section 12, township 14, range 44.

During the first years he experienced all the hardships that fell to the lot of the pioneers in the region, but with the persistence and energy which characterizes the people of his native land, stuck to his work faithfully and gradually built up a good home and farm, adding more land to his original homestead until he is now proprietor and owner of an elegant ranch of one thousand five hundred acres, devoted to mixed farming and stock raising. He has about one hundred and forty-five acres cultivated, raising good crops of corn, oats, wheat, etc., and has a large part of the ranch in pasture and hay meadow. He has about forty head of cattle and a splendid bunch of eighty-six horses, owning some fine animals which he prizes very highly, worth from one thousand dollars a piece down. For several years our subject ran cattle in Cheyenne county, and lived on several different ranches. In July, 1906, he settled on his present ranch which he has improved in nice shape.

Mr. Nelson was married in Polk county, Nebraska, April 6, 1886, to Jane A. Magee.

Mrs. Nelson is a native of Indiana, raised and educated in Illinois, and was a widow at the time of her marriage to Mr. Nelson. Her maiden name was Van Brunt; both her parents are now deceased. A great deal of credit is due Mrs. Nelson for the part she has taken. She is a model helpmate, and has aided materially in the building up of their present home. She has successfully withstood all the trials and hardships of the early days, and fully realizes the price their home has cost in the privations of the earlier days. She has rode the mower, worked in the hay field, and has done considerable nursing among the sick in the county, having received calls from families for miles around. Mr. Nelson is a man of active public spirit, and in political faith is a Republican.

VICTOR L. MARTIN.

Prominent among the younger ranchmen of Cherry county, who has built up a nice property for himself by dint of honest industry and good management, we mention the name of Victor L. Martin, residing on section 29, township 27, range 29. He is highly respected for his many sterling qualities, and enjoys a good standing in the community as a good neighbor and public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Martin was born in Knox county, Illinois, on a farm, in 1877. He is a son of Adam Martin, of German stock, born in Pennsylvania, who was a pioneer in Cherry county, where our subject grew to manhood, the family settling here in 1886. His mother's maiden name was Lucy A. Everett, of American parentage, born and reared in Ohio. There were seven children in the family, and our subject was the fourth in order of birth. On coming to western Nebraska they drove through from Illinois by team, with a covered wagon containing their entire possessions, and spending six weeks on the road. Their first location was on a ranch ten miles north of Brownlee, and there they farmed for a number of years, Victor helping carry on the ranch, remaining with his father until he was twenty-two years old, and during that time they built up a good and comfortable home and ranch. In 1889 he took a homestead for himself, located on the Loup river, "batched it" until he had proven up on the land, and started in the stock business, spending about seven years on the place. He then took a Kincaid homestead three miles northwest of Brownlee, and moved on it in 1904. He had a pretty good start here, and spent his entire time in building up the place, erecting good buildings, fencing the land, etc., and as the ranch was fitted with some improvements when he took it, has a fine place, consisting of six hundred and forty acres, and besides this he leases one thousand two hundred and eighty acres, using it all as a ranch, engaging principally in cattle raising, although he has a small bunch of horses and other stock.

Mr. Martin has accumulated a nice property for so young a man, and is on the high road to wealth. He is ambitious and industrious, and has excellent business ability, his property showing the best management in its operation.

WILLIAM J. WILSON.

William J. Wilson, who resides in Paxton precinct, on section 2, township 13, range 36, is numbered among the old settlers of Keith county, Nebraska. He has been engaged successfully in farming and stock raising for many years past, and while developing a comfortable home for himself, has done much to build up his locality, and now enjoys the esteem of a host of people.

Mr. Wilson was born in Henry county, Indiana, in 1864. His father, Joseph, was a farmer, a native of Ohio, who settled in Nebraska about 1880. Our subject was reared on a farm in his native state, receiving his education in the country schools, and lived at home until he was twenty-one years of age, began life for himself, following farm work, at first, and later operated rented land. He came to Keith county in 1887, arriving here in February with his family. For a time he lived at Ogallala, working on the section and followed railroad-ing to make a living, as he had no money and no start. Soon after coming here he filed on a homestead, putting up a sod shanty in which the family lived, the building being unplastered and with no floors the first year. They had a hard time to get along, but Mr. Wilson worked out by the day and gradually improved his farm, doing all his work with a team of oxen which he bought in eastern Nebraska and drove through to his new location.

When he came here he also brought with him seed potatoes, wheat, and corn, putting in a sod crop the first summer, but raised very little. After the hard times came on they moved to Polk county and remained for a year, but returned to the homestead and managed to get along fairly well. He began to raise better crops and added to his original farm so that he now owns three hundred and twenty acres, lying in the valley of South Platte river, extending back into the hills, a valuable piece of property. He engages in mixed farming and stock raising, and has been successful in both. He has put up good buildings, has wells and windmills, and the entire place fenced. He has also planted all kinds of fruit trees, including apple, pear, plum and cherry, besides smaller fruits. There are fine groves on the farm, making it one of the pleasant homes to be found in the vicinity.

RESIDENCE OF E. F. PETTIT,

On January 5, 1885, Mr. Wilson married Miss Martha Gilbert, a native of Kentucky. They have two sons, Everett and Raymond. Mr. Wilson is a Republican in politics and a member of the Modern Woodmen and other lodges.

EDMUND F. PETTIT.

The subject of this review is one of the most popular citizens of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, where he resides in section 10, township 32, range 20. He is one of those men whose hospitality and winning frankness favorably impress the casual acquaintance, and one need not wait to have neighbors or friends tell in order to find out that he is held in high esteem by his associates and fellowmen.

Mr. Pettit is a native of Randolph county, Illinois, born November 18, 1839, on a farm. He is a son of Thomas Pettit, born at Kaskaskia, Illinois, at a time when there were but two houses in St. Louis, and whose parents were pioneers in Illinois, coming originally from Pennsylvania on flatboats by way of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, bringing sheep, cattle and horses, besides spinning-wheels, millstones and other necessities with which to begin life in a new country. Our subject's mother was Miss Eliza Franklin, a native of Tennessee. He is the sixth member in a family of nine children, and while an infant, his parents moved to Jo, Daviess county and later to Wisconsin where, in his boyhood, he received a very meager education, attending only the country schools, and those but little. He labored on his father's farm until the second year of the war, when he entered the United States service, enlisting in Company K, Fourteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. With his regiment he was ordered to the south, and subsequently took part in many hard battles, seeing service at Shiloh, Corinth, Iuka, siege of Vicksburg, Big Shanty, Baker Ridge, Atlanta, on July 22, 1864, the siege of Spanish Fort, at Nashville, Lovejoy Station, Jonesboro and Ezra Church, in all over thirteen battles and many skirmishes. He received severe wounds at the charge of Vicksburg, losing a finger on the left hand, besides receiving a ball through his left arm. In 1865 he was mustered out at Mobile, and in October, discharged at Madison, Wisconsin. He had undermined his health in the war, and spent the following three years at home recuperating.

In 1868 he was married to Miss Hattie Scott, who lived near his home. They were the parents of two children: Belle, married William Osborn, and is living in Keya Paha county, and Charles, engaged in the hardware business at Springview, Nebraska. In June, 1876, Mrs. Pettit died, and was sincerely mourned by her husband and children. Shortly after his marriage they moved to Montgomery county, Iowa, remaining there for a time, then went to Atchison county, Missouri, where he operated a mill. He afterwards went to Kansas and spent some time traveling there, seeing much of the slaughter of the original herds of buffalo which at that early day covered the plains. He first came to Keya Paha county in 1883, locating on his present homestead, which was then a wild tract of table land and canyons. They lived in a tent for a time, then put up a log shack, which was for a time their home. Hard times came on, and about 1885 the dry years took all his crops and hail destroyed everything, so that he became almost discouraged, but he stuck to it and gradually things turned for the better. He improved his farm, put up good buildings, and fenced his place, and has made a decided success of the undertaking. His farm comprises three hundred and twenty acres, one hundred of which is good farming land, well supplied with running water and a good growth of natural timber. He has helped materially in the building up of this section and from the beginning of his residence here has been one of the leading citizens in the advancement of its interests.

Mr. Pettit was married the second time in Audubon, Audubon county, Iowa, to Miss Alvina Ham, born in Missouri, a daughter of Mordecai and Elizabeth Ham. Seven children were born of this marriage. They are as follows: Hattie, wife of Frank Estes, residing on a ranch in this county; Maud, wife of Carl White, living in Springview; Cora, who married William Kertzenberger; Carrie, wife of Fred Wilkins; George, May and Millie, still living at home.

In political sentiment Mr. Pettit is a staunch Republican, but could never be induced to accept any office.

On another page we present a picture of Mr. Pettit's residence.

ANDREW J. LAYTON.

Andrew J. Layton, residing on section 7, Liberty township, is the owner of a fine farm of four hundred and eighty acres and well-known throughout that locality as a successful and prosperous agriculturist and worthy citizen.

Mr. Layton was born in Crawford county, Illinois, where he was raised. His father, William Layton, was a pioneer in that state, and came from near Newark, Licking county, Ohio. He married Miss Mary McConn, who was a daughter of Joseph McConn, an early settler in Virginia, living near Wheeling, and who was a pioneer in Crawford county, Illinois, later, where his family was reared. Mr. Layton came to Nebraska in 1884, and rented and later purchased land in this county, beginning at once to build up a home and farm. He has been successful in both his farming and stock raising operations, running at the present time about one hundred high grade cattle and from one hundred to one hundred and fifty head of hogs. He is progressive in his methods, and is an intelligent and active man, possessed of many sterling qualities, for which he is greatly admired by all with whom he comes in contact. He likes Nebraska as a farming state and considers it far ahead of Illinois.

Mr. Layton was married in 1882, at Marshall, Illinois, to Miss Fidelia Canaday, sister of Honorable J. F. Canaday, of Minden, Nebraska, whose sketch appears in this volume on another page. To Mr. and Mrs. Layton have been born nine children, who are named as follows: Laura, Etta, Arthur C., Maime, Perry, Orville, Edward, Edyth and Hazel. The sons are all at home, several assisting their father in the farm work. Laura, now Mrs. David Jones, was for several years a teacher in Kearney county. Mrs. Layton's father, John Canaday, was born and reared in Vigo county, Indiana, and was an early settler in Illinois. He was a farmer all through his life, and died in Kearney, Nebraska, in 1898. Mrs. Layton's mother's maiden name was Jane Hauger.

Our subject was an active member of the Farmers' Alliance in former years. For two years he held the office of justice of the peace, and has held other local offices. In political sentiment he is a Populist-Democrat.

WILLIAM S. NICHOLSON.

William S. Nicholson, known throughout Sioux county as a prosperous ranchman and leading citizen, resides in section 3, township 27, range 54, where he has a pleasant and well-ordered home, surrounded by a valuable estate, all of which is due to his perseverance, industry and integrity. He has lived here for many years past, and enjoys the esteem and liking of a host of people.

Mr. Nicholson was born in Muscatine county, Iowa, in 1861, on a farm. His father, Valentine F., was a native of Indiana, a farmer by occupation, and one of the pioneers in Iowa. He married Mary Ann Daniels, born and raised in North Carolina, of old American blood. Our subject grew up in the state of his birth and through his boyhood assisted his parents in the work of carrying on the home farm, remaining there up to 1890, at which time he, together with his two brothers, M. J. and A. W., came to Nebraska, locating in the vicinity of Whistle creek, Sioux county. William filed on a homestead, proved up on the land and had just gotten nicely started when the hard times, due to the drouths, struck the region. He worked faithfully, putting in crops, but was unable to raise anything, and went through hard times there, and as he was unable to farm his land successfully, started in the stock business and was able to get along very well. He took two quarter sections, homestead and timber claim, and proved up on both, then bought his brother's place, and he is now sole owner of thirteen quarter sections. One brother also owns six hundred and forty acres in the neighborhood, and a sister has a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity. Mr. Nicholson is engaged exclusively in the cattle business, running about one thousand head each year of the best Hereford breeds, and has done exceedingly well in the stock raising business. He has his ranch all fenced and improved. The place is beautifully situated, Whistle creek running through the tract, and he has it well irrigated, or can irrigate it if necessary, operating six wells and windmills, which furnish a splendid supply of water for all purposes. A large portion of the ranch is fine hay land, from which he cuts five hundred tons annually. At the present time (1908) he is feeding eight hundred head of cattle for the market this fall. He is classed among the successful self-made men of the region, and when he came here first, he had a very small start. Harrison and Crawford had just been started, and during those days he did a great deal of wolf hunting through the country. W. is as fine a cook as you would find anywhere and still owns a fine pack of hounds. Our subject and his brother, A. W., live together, but each own their stock and land separately, having different brands for their stock. It is a pleasure to visit the Nicholson brothers, as they are whole-souled, congenial and intelligent gentlemen to converse with. Mr. A. W. Nicholson has put up one of the finest sod houses, costing over $1,500, that has ever been seen in the west, on his Kincaid homestead. The house is very large, and is one and a half stories high, with dormer windows, the inside being all finished with wainscoating and steel ceiling, and the young people from far and near gather there often where they enjoy themselves with dancing and fine music. He keeps a fine piano, phonograph, etc., to add to their pleasure. Mr. A. in a long day's ride.

William S. Nicholson has served as assessor for two terms, and occupies a foremost place among the leading old-timers of this region. In political views he is a Republican, and stands firmly for his convictions.

JAMES E. BAKER.

James E. Baker has for many years been a resident of North Platte, Nebraska, and is well known all over the surrounding country as an honest, industrious and energetic man and a citizen of true worth—one appreciated by all who have the honor of his acquaintance.

Mr. Baker was born in Wayne county, New York, and came to Wisconsin in 1850 with his father, locating in Jefferson county on a farm, and the family remained there for many years. In 1877 our subject first came to this locality, settling in North Platte, and followed the work of a builder, putting up houses and other buildings all over this part of the country, and also erected windmills for the farmers in Lincoln and the adjoining counties. He was very successful and made a good income from his labors. In 1884 he began working for the Union Pacific Railway, being employed in the woodwork department of that company for the period of twenty years. He owns a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres, situated east of North Platte, and one hundred and sixty acres in Redwillow county. He was one of the pioneer builders in the western part of the town, and through hard labor and thrift has accumulated a nice property and built up a pleasant home.

Mr. Baker was married in 1867 to Miss Robena Thomson, who is a sister of R. D. Thomson, postmaster at North Platte, a pioneer builder and contractor in this locality. A son of Mr. Baker's, John N. Baker, a carpenter and builder, was, for a time, foreman of the ice plant for the Union Pacific Railway, which is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the United States. A daughter, Jessie Baker, is the wife of Thomas Hughes, who is a conductor on the Union Pacific Short Line.

Mr. Baker is a member of the Presbyterian church of North Platte, and has been an elder in this church for many years, and is an earnest worker among the congregation. He is a member of the Woodmen, and enjoys an enviable reputation as a good citizen and neighbor.

JOHN MORAVEK.

John Moravek, a prominent ranch owner of Box Butte county, whose residence is located in section 9, township 26, range 52, and whose success as a stockman is worthy of especial note, was born in Bohemia, June 15, 1849, during the reign of Emperor Francis Joseph. His parents were farmers, and passed their lives in Bohemia.

The boyhood days of Mr. Moravek were spent in his native land, where he received his education and assisted his father in tilling the soil. Realizing the opportunities of the new world he decided to seek his fortunes in America, and in 1869 landed in New York city and came west to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where he employed his time at railroad construction work. He spent seventeen years of his life following the railroad business in Iowa, and for many years worked as a section foreman.

Mr. Moravek and Miss Katherine Socol were united in marriage August 29, 1870. Her parents were natives of Bohemia, in which country she was born. Eight children blessed this happy union: James, Annie Marie, Mayme, Charles, Mary, Agnes, Willie and Ella. All the children were born in this country.

In 1886, Mr. Moravek came to Box Butte county, Nebraska, driving with three teams and a covered wagon and a herd of cattle. They spent seven weeks on the road. He spent two months at Hay Springs while looking for a suitable location, finally locating in township 26, range 52, hauling all his supplies from Hay Springs. While most of his time was spent in making for himself a comfortable home in this new country he devoted some time to freighting from Hay Springs to Alliance. The first years here were good ones, but during the period of drouth he experienced the loss of many crops, and made his living mostly from his cattle. Leaving his family on their farm in Nebraska, he went into South Dakota, where he became associated with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. He spent six years at Ardmore. He then returned to Nebraska, devoting his time very closely to his farm, where he raised many good crops. He engaged extensively in stock raising, and with the assistance of his sons, raises three hundred head of cattle. He has secured possession of other tracts of land besides his original entry, and now has a ranch of seven quarter sections of good land, one hundred acres of which are under cultivation. He has erected a substantial house, and has good wells, windmills and a fine orchard. Nearby are good schools, a church, postoffice and general store. His children own several tracts of land in this county.

Mr. Moravek is a Republican. The interest he has taken in all matters pertaining to local affairs is worthy of note, and he is especially interested in educational matters. He was instrumental in the organization of the school district in which he lived eighteen years ago, and for eight years held the office of director. He has taken a prominent part in the development and improvement of Box Butte county, and as an old settler has done his share toward this end. He has made many warm friends in the surrounding community who wish him well, and who look on his career as a marked success.

DAVID ANDERSON.

David Anderson has impressed himself upon the history of early days in western Nebraska as one of the first settlers of Sioux county, a man ready to endure any privation or race any peril, that he might build for himself and his family a home out of the wilderness. Into all his life work he has put all honesty and integrity, and his sterling worth and kindly spirit has gained for him a host of friends who will be glad to bear tribute to his many manly and excellent traits. Mr. Anderson is at present residing in Sioux county, Nebraska, near Ardmore, South Dakota, where he is engaged in the mercantile business, besides personally operating his extensive ranching interests in Sioux county, and living on his Kincaid homestead.

Mr. Anderson was born in Bellefontaine, Ohio, May 19, 1860. He is of Scotch-Irish stock, his father, Matt Anderson, having been born in Ireland, and his mother of old Yankee stock, born in Pennsylvania. When David was a small boy the family moved to Dane county, Wisconsin, where he was reared, attending the common schools, and later was a student at the Lodi high school, from which institution he graduated. In 1886 he came to Nebraska, taking up a pre-emption and tree claim in Sioux county, teaming into the region from Chadron, locating on Hat creek on what is known as the Circle Bar ranch. He started in on a small scale, "batching it" during the first four years, working on the range, part of the time sleeping out in the open prairie while herding cattle, and in those times rode all over the western part of Nebraska, also Wyoming and South Dakota. He went through all the hard times usual to the pioneers of the west, witnessed the Indian scars, and met with many thrilling adventures in following ranch work. He gradually increased his herd of stock and succeeded in building up his ranch and adding to it until he is now proprietor of two thousand acres lying along Hat creek, also partly on Indian creek, improved with good buildings, etc. At present he has about two hundred cattle on the range. Mr. Anderson runs his cattle under a brand called and registered the Circle Bar.

Our subject has also been engaged in the real estate business more or less for some years, and has been the means of encouraging many settlers to come to Nebraska, always doing his best for the good of his adopted state, and aiding in every way possible to promote its growth and development. During the early years he did considerable work in building, putting up houses and other buildings, and erected one of the finest churches in Ardmore, South Dakota, and also has built several school houses.

In 1895 Mr. Anderson opened a general store at Ardmore, beginning in a modest way, and this has grown to large proportions under his careful management. He has built up a wide patronage, and now occupies a building twenty-five by fifty feet, having two floors and carrying a fine line of goods. He has three warehouses, and owns considerable city property, consisting of eight lots and dwelling houses in the town of Ardmore, South Dakota.

Mr. Anderson married, December 2, 1890, Miss Dora Moore, daughter of Charles B. Moore, an old settler of Harlan county, Nebraska. Mrs. Anderson is a lady of charming personality, and a highly educated and accomplished woman. Prior to her marriage she followed the profession of a teacher, and had taught in Harlan, Franklin, Furnas, Phelps and Sioux counties, also in Fall River county, South Dakota. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are the parents of three children, as follows: Viola, now attending college at Bellevue, Nebraska; Matt and David, at home. Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will be found on another page.

Mr. Anderson has always taken a leading part in public affairs, wherever he has been located, serving his community in different capacities. For several years he was postmaster at Ardmore, South Dakota. In political sentiment he is a Democrat.

ABNER M. SPRAGG.

Among the leading agriculturists of Kirkwood precinct, Rock county, Nebraska, is to be numbered the name of Abner M. Spragg, who has been in this part of the state for many years, and has played an active part in its development. He was born in Norton, Kings county, New Brunswick, March 17, 1847. The father, William Spragg, whose birthday was also March 17th, moved to Iowa at an early day and was actively associated with the experiences of pioneer life on what was then the "far-flung" western frontier. Jane (Burnett) Spragg, the mother of Abner M., was of German descent, and to her and William Spragg was born a numerous family, consisting of twelve children, of whom the subject of this writing was the ninth. Abner M. Spragg had a hard and laborious youth, and as his father died when he was only eight years old, he had to help care of his widowed mother and the other children from the moment he was able to earn money; and, as his brothers enlisted in the army when Abner was fifteen, the responsibilities of a livelihood for the widowed mother fell upon him.

DAVID ANDERSON.

MRS. DAVID ANDERSON.

Mr. Spragg was married near Middleton, Buchanan county, Iowa, April 8, 1870, to Miss Florence Bassett, whose parents had been old settlers in Iowa. She was a young lady of more than the usual gifts, and in her earlier womanhood had taught school very successfully. To this union were born the following children: Willard; Ivis, now a widow; Jessie, wife of Cassius Brubaker, of Fort Collins, Colorado; Agnes, who married J. C. Herron, of Spokane, Washington; Bertha, wife of Clarence Dillon, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Minnie, now Mrs. Columbus Baker, of Douglas county, Washington, and Flora, wife of Daniel Shunn, of Gregory, South Dakota.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Spragg came to what is now Rock county, arriving at Stuart before its organization, and making their first stop at Stuart. Presently they effected a homestead location on section 4, township 31, range 17, where they built a shanty and buckled down to the improvement of the wild prairie. The Spraggs had their full share of the trials and tribulations that belong to frontier life, but never wholly lost a crop in the worst drouth that marked those early days. Today the Spragg homestead comprises a quarter of a section, and about eighty acres are under the plow. He has given much time and labor to its improvement, and may take a commendable pride in its neat appearance, an especial attraction being a fine grove of forest and fruit trees, which he set out with his own hands. His timothy and alfalfa fields attest his patient industry, and make a brave showing on those wide prairies.

Mr. Spragg generally has voted and worked with the Republican party, and from time to time has filled various local offices of honor and responsibility. He is highly respected by all who know him, and as the shadows begin to lengthen adown life's pathway, memories of useful years cheer and encourage. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen lodge of Newport.

JAMES I. BALES.

James I. Bales, residing in township 22, range 16, Garfield county, deserves prominent mention as one of the earliest pioneers of western Nebraska. He came to this state during its earliest stages of development, and has watched its growth from a barren country to its present state of productiveness and prosperity. He has always taken part in every movement which has been organized for the advancement of conditions here, and has done his full share in this progress.

Mr. Bales was born in the state of Wisconsin in 1851. He is the son of Alexander and Mary (Hartman) Bales. Our subject left Iowa, where he had spent a number of years, and came to Nebraska in 1883, locating in Boone county, where he lived for two years. There he purchased railroad land and began farming, but did not like the locality well enough to make it his permanent home, so sold out and moved to Holt county, homesteading one hundred and sixty acres, also bought the same amount of land adjoining his claim. He worked hard and succeeded in getting together considerable property. In 1895 Mr. Bales disposed of his Holt county property and removed to Valley county, purchasing there one hundred and sixty acres of land, but soon afterwards sold that at a profit, and then came into Garfield county. Here he bought one hundred and eighty-eight acres and established a dairy farm. He has this improved in good shape, keeping a fine herd of cattle for dairy purposes, also raising quite a large number of cattle each year for the market. He has made money through his farming and stock raising operations and is considered one of the well-to-do men of his locality, accumulating all his property through his energetic labors and good management. He is well satisfied with the success he has attained since coming here, preferring this state to any country he has ever seen, as a land rich in opportunities for the man who is willing to devote his efforts to building up a competence.

In 1876 Mr. Bales was united in marriage to Miss Emma Bailey, born and raised in Minnesota. She is a daughter of Edward and Sarah (Davis) Bailey, a leading hardware merchant in Oakland, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Bales reared a family of six children, named as follows: Henry A., Josephine S., James R., Mary A., Anna H. and Sadie S. Josephine and Sadie are both married, the former the wife of James Lowry, a well known farmer of Garfield county, and the latter now Mrs. George Hise, her husband also a farmer of this county. The family are highly esteemed in their community.

Mr. Bales has served as township assessor for several terms, also has held the office of road overseer. He is a member of the school board, acting as director and treasurer of that body for several years.

ISAAC M. RICE.

Isaac M. Rice, the editor and proprietor of the Valentine Democrat, is also a real estate dealer and an insurance agent in that stirring Nebraska city. He is a live, energetic business man, a typical western hustler, and on all occasions is able to maintain his place in the procession. The local press has done much to advertise the opportunities of northwestern Nebraska, and Mr. Rice has long been known as one of the most capable newspaper men of the state. He takes a strong interest in political affairs, and his paper is a force to be counted on when the factors that make up party action in Cherry county are considered, but he is enthusiastically first and last and all the time for Cherry county and Nebraska against all the world.

Isaac M. Rice was born in Marshall county, Kansas, January 28, 1866, and was reared on a farm, which his father, Henry H. Rice, operated in connection with school teaching. The Rice family is of Welsh origin, but it has been long established in this country, and has made important contributions to the civil and industrial life of America. Henry H. Rice, a native of east Tennessee, married Sarah A. Dealy, born in Jackson county, Missouri. Her ancestors came from Ireland. Out of a family of eight children born to them, Isaac M., the subject of this sketch, was the fifth in order of birth. He was reared on the parental homestead in Riley county, and secured his education very largely from country schools. His business career began with his taking a position as clerk in a country store when quite young. However, he displayed business qualities of marked excellence, and, when twenty-one, was appointed assistant postmaster. Presently he secured a good position in a dry goods house in Kansas City, where he remained for two and a half years. At the expiration of this time he engaged as foreman of a gang of lumbermen in Utah valley, who were engaged in getting out ties for an extension of the Union Pacific Railroad to California. When this work was done he returned from Utah to Kansas City, and took a course at the National Business College, after which he taught school for six terms in Riley county, Kansas. He came to Valentine January 5, 1898, and served as deputy treasurer for a considerable period, with satisfaction to the people in general.

It was not until April 20, 1900, however, that Mr. Rice may be said to have reached a field worthy of his powers, for at that time he became editor and proprietor of the Valentine Democrat, a paper first established by Robert O. Fink as the Democratic Blade, its opening issue bearing date of September 18, 1885. In 1890 it became the Cherry County Independent, and was published as a Populist organ. April 9, 1896, it appeared as the Valentine Democrat, and, as already noted, it has been for some years under the management of Mr. Rice. This paper has had the editorial labors of some very good men, who have preceded Mr. Rice. They are, in the order of their connection with this typical western journal: R. O. Fink, J. P. Wood, J. P. Walters, J. R. Farris and Robert Good. They were all men of marked ability, but Mr. Rice has held control longer than any who has occupied the chair before him. His real estate and insurance business was established before he took charge of the paper, and he still maintains it at a high state of efficiency.

Mr. Rice was first married to Miss Tillie Swanson, to whom was born a son, named Lawrence. On May 12, 1904, Mr. Rice was married to Miss Dora M. Davis, whose father, William H. Davis, was for twenty-two years an agent of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad in eastern Nebraska, and since the autumn of 1900 has held the position of special agent of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company for southern Nebraska.

raids, etc., going through all the experiences of pioneer existence. He spent some time in Missouri and Pennsylvania while a boy, and his parents finally settled in Perkins county, Nebraska, in the fall of 1888, locating ten miles south of the town of Elsie. Here he started out for himself, buying land, also took a homestead and proved up on his claim, following farming there for ten years, going through sod shanty times, etc., and succeeded in developing a very good farm.

In 1892 Mr. Sager moved to Elsie, engaging in the restaurant business and continued at it for four years, building up a good patronage, then added other lines, putting in a stock of drugs, groceries, etc., and conducts a prosperous business.

Our subject was married in 1900, at Blanch, to Miss Cora Dorman, of Elsie, Nebraska. Mr. Sager is active in local affairs and lends his influence for good government, both national and local. He has served as justice of the peace for three terms, and is highly esteemed as a public-spirited citizen.

WILLIAM H. KIESTER.

William H. Kiester, residing on section 10, township 27, range 48, in Box Butte county, Nebraska, has made his way in the world by virtue of hard knocks and constant labor, and richly deserves the reward of that substantial success that has come through his industry and perseverance.

Mr. Kiester was born in Henry county, Iowa, on a farm, April 9, 1857. His father, Adam, was a carpenter by trade, also a veterinary surgeon in that vicinity for a number of years. Our subject was reared and educated there, and at the age of seventeen years made a trip to Missouri and Nebraska. His time was spent during his young manhood working at farming in Sumner county in his native state, and also for eleven winters he worked as a coal miner.

In 1888 Mr. Kiester first came to this region, traveling south from Hay Springs by team, landing in Box Butte county on March 17th and made settlement on a homestead, and also worked out by the month. He started to build up his claim in the following year, and put in lots of hard work on the place but was unable to accomplish very much during the first ten years on account of the hard times caused by the drouths, etc. However, he worked faithfully and managed to lay by a little money and steadily got ahead, and in 1900 was able to purchase his present farm, now owning a nice property consisting of four hundred and eighty acres of land. He farms about seventy-five acres of this, and keeps seventy head of cattle and eighteen horses. He has been through many hard experiences since locating here, and recites one instance which occurred during the second year he located in this county, when he rented land for fifty cents an acre, put in some crops, and after working hard to make a little money out of his venture a severe hail storm came along and utterly destroyed everything he had. This was only one of many such discouragements, and he doubly appreciates the position he is in now, after the hardships and privations endured during so many years.

Mr. Kiester was united in marriage in the fall of 1888, to Annie E. Graham, born and raised in Ireland. To them have been born the following children: Mary E., William R., Stella P. and Margaret.

Mr. Kiester is counted among the early settlers of this locality, and has been closely identified with its growth and development. Politically he is a strong Democrat.

On another page is presented an interesting picture of Mr. Kiester's ranch and also of the family.

WILLIAM M. SANSTEAD.

William M. Sanstead, residing on section 11, Scandinavian township, is one of the most successful agriculturists and stockmen of Harlan county. He has lived on his present farm since 1902, and was in partnership with his father, Morris Sanstead, up to the time of his death, which occurred in September, 1906. The father was a dealer in and breeder of pure-bred Duroc hogs for some years, and our subject assisted him in this work, being the only son at home. One brother, Charles E., resides at Holbrook, Nebraska, where he was principal of the schools.

Mr. Sanstead is a native of Nebraska, born on his father's homestead in Scandinavian township in 1882. He has been interested in the stock business nearly all his life, and although a young man has shown great nerve, pluck and intelligence in the work, which will soon place him at the head of stockmen in his section, for a young man who would plank down one thousand five hundred and fifteen dollars for a quarter interest in "Can't Be Beat," the highest priced, because the best, Duroc Jersey hog in the world, has the qualities to make a leader in any line of business. Besides this he owns Red Prince, also a third interest in Sears Belle, a ten hundred and twenty-five dollar sow. He and others who are developing the highest and best points in the red hog are on the sure road to success, and he is a worthy successor to his father who was a great believer in that breed of animal. He also has a fine herd of Shorthorn cattle, and has a full-blooded Scotch bull, "Royal Victor." This animal is a good one and comes from the best strains in the country. He keeps seventy-five old hogs and the same number of young ones. "Mungers Ideal," which Mr. Sanstead has sold, is also as fine an animal as one could find, and has won four first and one second prize at the state and interstate shows. Mr. Sanstead kept his hog on his own farm, and stock dealers came from far and near to see these pure-bred hogs and purchase everything which he has for sale. Another splendid animal which he owns is Red Prince, out of Red Chief Iam, who has attracted much attention from well-known dealers in this breed of hogs. Mr. Sanstead started his herd in 1902, and has had wonderful success since the beginning of his enterprise. He has held two boar sales and one brood sow sale, receiving an average of $51 for the former. He has sold his hogs all over this state, and many outside, and his ambition is to build up the best herd of Duroc Jerseys to be found anywhere. Besides the above prize-winners he owns a third interest in Sears Belle, a red sow, for which he gave one thousand and twenty-five dollars, and she has nine pigs now two months old which give promise of being as good as the old ones. Sears Belle is kept at Clay Centre. He also owns an interest in Sears 4th, mother of Sears Belle, who is a high-priced and valuable animal. Mr. Sanstead thinks that red hogs are more thrifty than the black ones, and better for all purposes, and in his career has had the best of success in their breeding.

Mr. Sanstead also deals in mules, and is half-owner of Spider's Jack, a thoroughbred, and one of the best in the state. He considers that the breeders and stockmen who are developing the Durocs, Shorthorn cattle and thoroughbred jacks are adding materially to the wealth of Nebraska, and that those who go at it right, are as well off as though they had a gold mine.

Our subject engages in mixed farming, raising alfalfa, corn and wheat, and has good crops each year. His farm consists of three hundred and twenty acres, and he has as good a home and farm as can be found in Harlan county. He is of an industrious and energetic disposition, always aiming for the best in everything, and not content with anything less, and he richly deserves the success which he has attained. He is highly esteemed and respected, and is one of the prominent younger members of the agricultural region in western Nebraska.

JAMES C. BENNETT.

James C. Bennett, who is profitably engaged in farming in Dawes county, is one of the public-spirited men of his locality, and he is well known as a worthy citizen. His home is in section 36, township 29, range 51, and he has accumulated valuable property there through industry and good business judgment.

Mr. Bennett is a native of Green county, Pennsylvania, born in 1849, on his parents' farm. His father, Wiley Bennett, was born in Tennessee, and his mother, who was Matilda Lantz, was born in Pennsylvania. The family came to Missouri in 1855, settling in Sullivan county, taking a farm in the northern part of that county, and there our subject grew up, and they went through the experiences so familiar to the pioneers of that section. He was able to obtain but a limited schooling, attending the country schools when he could be spared from the farm work, and his early life was one of hardship and struggles, assisting his parents in building up a home in the new country. He left home in 1876, but remained in Missouri for about six years, engaged in school teaching. Finally he settled in Butler county, Nebraska, about 1882, following farming there for five years, and next moved to Schuyler, Colfax county, and there was in the railway business up to 1889, being employed as telegraph operator on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy road. In August, 1889, he came to Marsland and opened Marsland Station for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railway, starting his office August 28th, and continued there as agent and operator for nine years. He purchased his present farm in 1897, and although he still remained working as an agent and telegraph operator, stuck to his farm all the time. He worked as an operator at Hemingford for one year, and also at Pringle, South Dakota, for two years, and in 1902 quit railroad work for good and moved on to his farm. The farm is located in section 36, township 29, range 51, and lying along the Niobrara river. He has put on good improvements, fencing the whole place, and devotes most of his time and attention to the raising of cattle and high grade horses. He carries on a dairy business, and has made a success of this line of the work. His place consists of four hundred and eighty acres, and he has a good home and well improved farm.

Mr. Bennett was married in 1874 to Miss Sarah Enyeart, of German and Welsh stock, a native of Indiana, born and raised on a farm, and living most of the time in Missouri, for she left her native state when about ten years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett have a family of five children, named as follows: John O., married and living in a home of his own at Keystone, South Dakota; and Arthur E., Goldie, Floyd and Paul, at home.

Mrs. Bennett's mother is still living near Lincoln, Nebraska, aged eighty-six. Her father died in 1899, aged seventy-eight. She has an uncle living in Indiana who celebrated his diamond wedding August 4, 1908, at the age of eighty-two years.

SAMUEL E. ANDERSON.

Samuel E. Anderson, a representative agriculturist of Centre township, owns and operates a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres located in section 9, Phelps county. He is one of the leading citizens of this locality, and is highly respected and esteemed by his fellowmen.

Mr. Anderson was born in 1875 at Princeton, Illinois, and came to Westmark township, Phelps county, Nebraska, in 1880, with his father, who took up a homestead there, which he still holds. Our subject is now the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of good farming land, and has erected a fine house, built since 1903. He has been engaged in farming since 1898, and has been very successful in all his undertakings. When only sixteen years of age he went with a threshing outfit, and for the past six years has owned a good machine and follows this work. Just to show what a wide-awake young man can accomplish here in Nebraska, it may be stated that in just one year he made four thousand dollars at threshing and farming combined. He has had excellent crops, raising wheat which ran forty-nine bushels to the acre, and has threshed where it yielded fifty-two bushels per acre. His corn crop has reached sixty-five bushels per acre. Mr. Anderson's father owns two hundred and forty acres of land, which is operated by his son Oscar, the former being largely engaged in the cattle and hog raising business, and the subject of this sketch has also started in to raise pure-bred Poland-China hogs, and has a fine drove now. He also has a good bunch of cattle and a number of horses used in working his farm of three hundred and twenty acres, one hundred and sixty of which is rented land. His success is due entirely to his enterprise and industry, and he bids fair to become one of the most prominent and prosperous citizens of his locality.

In 1904 he was married to Miss Hannah Anderson, a native of Sweden, and they have a family of two children, Alice and Marian.

Mr. Anderson is an Independent voter, and takes a commendable interest in all public affairs of his community.

WILLIAM M. BURKITT.

William M. Burkitt, one of the pioneer business men of Whitney, Dawes county, Nebraska, has been one of the leading citizens of that locality in helping to build up the commercial and social interests of his community. Mr. Burkitt was born in Lincolnshire, England, in 1841. His father, also named William, was a miller by trade in the old country, and came to America with his family when our subject was a lad about seven years of age. They located in Wisconsin, where William, Jr., grew up, and about the year 1863 the family moved to Whiteside county, Illinois. There he followed farming for five years, at the end of that time starting in the grocery business at Lyndon, Illinois, and remained in the trade for about five years. He next went to Mapleton, Iowa, and opened a farm which he operated for two years, then started a hardware store and run that for two years. His next move was to Pierce county, Nebraska, in about 1882, and there he engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, carrying that on for two years. About 1886 he came to Dawes county, taking up a tract of government land located near Whitney, and here he put up good buildings and improvements and engaged in farming.

Mr. Burkitt came to Whitney and engaged in business in 1887, building a store in which he put a stock of general merchandise, and during the first years had a hard time, and went through many severe experiences, selling lots of goods for which he was never able to collect anything. He stuck to the business, however, and finally bot along better and has made a success of the business, although he still owns his farm.

Mr. Burkitt was married in Lyndon, Illinois, in January, 1866, to Miss Delia Deming. To Mr. and Mrs. Burkitt have been born the following children: Eleanor, Delia, Deming, John and Joseph. Mrs. Burkitt died in September, 1881, and in December, 1882, our subject was married again, to Miss Hannah Deming, a sister of his first wife.

In November, 1897, Mr. Burkitt was appointed postmaster at Whitney, and has held office ever since, being the present incumbent.

SOLOMON BORKY.

Solomon Borky, to whom is accorded a foremost place among the leading old timers of western Nebraska, has acquired a valuable estate in section 22, township 35, range 54. He has successfully followed farming and ranching here for many years, and now enjoys the comforts of rural life and the respect and esteem of all who know him.

Mr. Borky is a native of Berks county, Pennsylvania, born November 6, 1845, on a farm, and comes of good old American stock, his grandparents being born and raised in this country. His father, Joseph Borky, was a well known farmer and stockman in the east, and he married Lena Hoffman, of Berks county, Pennsylvania. During his boyhood our subject had plenty of hard farm work to do, helping his father carry on the farm work, and he also worked considerable in the timber business, beginning lumbering when he was a boy of but nine years. At the age of twenty-two he started farming on his own account, at which time he was married to Miss Cecelia Willebrand, who was born in the east, in Cambria county, Pennsylvania, November 22, 1845, her father being a native of Westphalia, Germany. Her mother, who was Magdalene Meyer, was born in France, both parents coming to America when quite young, and met and were married in Pennsylvania.

After his marriage Mr. Borky farmed in the Allegheny mountains for about ten years, then came west to Illinois, settling in Livingston county, where he remained for one year, then came farther west, going all over Nebraska, and visiting Loup City when it only had one house. At that time he also saw Grand Island, it being simply a small village. He picked out a location in Cedar county, near St. Helena, which was then quite a settled country and farmed on rented land for ten years. In June, 1886, he came to Sioux county, locating on a homestead in the northern part of the county, which was entirely unimproved land, hauling all supplies from Crawford. He started to improve his property, putting up a good house and other buildings. His dwelling was twenty by thirty feet, of two stories, and he has since added an addition twelve by twenty feet, making of it a fine large residence, and he also has erected a substantial barn twenty by forty feet. His ranch is all fenced, and the land lies along Long Branch creek, the stream running through a portion of it and furnishing a splendid water supply for all purposes. Altogether he is owner of four hundred and eighty acres, and his children also have additional land in the vicinity, his son John owning a three hundred and twenty-acre tract adjoining his father's place.

Mr. Borky's family consists of ten children, as follows: Mary, Andrew, Rose, Martha, Clotilda, Agnes, John, Peter, Joseph and Cecelia.

John Borky, son of Solomon Borky, is a young man of exceptionally good business ability and push. He is prominent in public affairs in the county, being elected superintendent of schools of Sioux county in 1903 and re-elected in 1905. He has received a superior education and followed teaching in Sioux county for about six years, becoming well-known and highly esteemed for his manly worth and energy, the people showing their appreciation of his ability by nominating him in 1903 without any solicitation from himself, and he has proven a most efficient man for the office.

Mr. Solomon Borky has gone through all the experiences of the earliest settlers in the great west, but he has remained to reap the reward of those brave spirits who literally took their lives in their hands in coming to a wild country and endeavoring to carve out for themselves a name and fortune; many failing and returning to the more modern east, others succeeding beyond their wildest hopes in accumulating a comfortable competence for their declining years, and of the latter class our subject takes high rank.

On another page will be found portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Borky.

THEODORE CHARLES EDWARDS.

A large share of the wealth of Brown county, Nebraska, comes from the thriving agricultural district lying adjacent to the town of Ainsworth. Among those who own well improved estates there, a prominent place is accorded the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article. For the past twenty-four years he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits in this locality, is well versed in this line of work and has met with pronounced success.

Mr. Edwards was born near Red Oak, Montgomery county, Iowa, November 17, 1875. He is a son of Evan H. Edwards, a farmer by occupation, and an old settler in Gage county, coming there in 1880, and four years later settling in Brown county; his residence at the present time is Wayne county, Nebraska. Both father and mother, who was Miss Ellen Thomas, were natives of Wales, the former coming to America in 1845, the latter in 1852; her death occurred November 30, 1890. There was a family of five children, of whom our subject is the second member; he was reared in Nebraska, inured to all kinds of hard farm work during his boyhood years. The family settled on the Calamus river, Brown county, in 1884, and at first lived in a tent, and later a board shanty, the lumber of which it was built having been hauled a distance of forty miles with only one horse, whose mate had died soon after reaching the country.

Here they remained for four years, then moved near Ainsworth, where they resided until 1892, when the father moved to Wayne county. Mr. Edwards worked out on farms around the town of Ainsworth for several years, then, in 1898, obtained employment in L. F. Corbett's hardware store and spent three years with the concern before filing on his present homestead in section 31, township 32, range 22, where he began ranching and farming. He has put up good buildings on the banks of Plum creek, and engages in stock raising, and devotes all his time to the work of improving his farm. He has one thousand and forty acres, of which much is good farming land, and is making a success of the enterprise; he is near a good shipping point, and his farm is well suited for the purpose it is used. Mr. Edwards was married at Fairfax, South Dakota, September 24, 1906, to Mabel Herriman, a daughter of Charles Busic, of Brownlee, Nebraska; they have two children, Everett and Ruth.

In the early days of the family's residence in Nebraska, their nearest neighbor was seven miles distant, and our subject well remembers the fine times he had hunting, when the country abounded in all kinds of wild game. In politics Mr. Edwards is Republican; he, with his wife, is a member of the Methodist church, and affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the American Order of Protection of Ainsworth.

HARM POPPEN.

Harm Poppen, one of the most extensive ranchmen and agriculturists of Cheyenne county, Nebraska, is one of the old settlers in that region. He is a man of wide experience, and by judicious management and industry, supplemented by honest dealings, has acquired a valuable property and has become recognized as one of the substantial and worthy citizens of his county. His home is in Union Valley precinct, where he has a comfortable residence and pleasant surroundings, and enjoys the friendship and esteem of a large circle of acquaintances.

Mr. Poppen was born in the village of Sandhorst, adjoining the city of Aurich, Hanover, Germany, June 25, 1857. He was reared in that country, receiving the usual common-sense training of the children of the sturdy German race, and early taught to do all kinds of hard work. His parents spent their entire lives in their native land, but at the age of twenty-nine Harm left home and started out to make his own way in the world, taking passage for America at Antwerp in March, on an emigrant ship. After a voyage of nine days, he landed in New York city, and came, with a colony of friends, who had emigrated in a body, to Franklin county, Nebraska, where he remained for about three years, still having one sister living in that county. He settled in Cheyenne county in the spring of 1889, filing on a homestead on section 28, township 16, range 48, and has made that his home ever since. He had the usual experiences of the pioneers of that region, passing through the good, bad and indifferent times that struck the locality, often meeting with losses from crop failures, but escaped losses by prairie fires that have devastated so many homesteads; but he stuck to his farm and home through every discouragement and finally was able to get ahead and make needed improvements on his property. He lived for many years in a log cabin, or rough shanty so familiar to all the old timers here, but later constructed a substantial stone dwelling, barn and other outbuildings, constantly adding land to his original tract, as his circumstances permitted, and is now proprietor of a fine ranch containing nine hundred and sixty acres, with plenty of good pasture and hay land for his stock, of which he has sixty head of cattle and fifteen horses. The place is well supplied with good water, and most of it is fenced.

Mr. Poppen was married, while still living in Germany, to Johanna Van Ollen, also a native of that country, and together they came to the United States to establish a home and accumulate a competence for their declining years. Two children resulted from their union, John, now residing in Missouri, and Frances, living at home.

Mr. Poppen was reared in the Lutheran church; in politics he is not bound to either party but votes independently for whom he considers the best man.

CHARLES RODGERS.

The above gentleman is a leading old settler of western Nebraska who has aided in a large measure the growth and development of that region. Although he is a comparatively young man, he has seen much of life on the frontier and taken an active part in the history of the early years here, incidentally building up for himself a good home and valuable estate in section 6, township 23, range 31, Hooker county, where he is well and favorably known.

Mr. Rodgers was born in Henderson county, Illinois, in 1871. He is a son of Albert Rodgers, also a native of that state and a well-known farmer there for many years. His mother was Jemima Stevenson, of Henderson county, Illinois. Our subject was reared in Nebraska, the family coming here in 1873, locating in Gosper county, where they went through pioneer experiences in establishing a home and farm. When he was eighteen they moved to Lincoln county, and he was married there in 1890 to Ida May Roberts, whose father, William Roberts, was a pioneer in Iowa. She was born in Indiana but reared in Iowa. Mr. Rodgers came with his family to Hooker county in 1895, settling thirteen miles south of Mullen, and there took up a homestead, put up a house, barns and other buildings and opened a ranch. The place was all valley land, and he broke up ground for crops, and remained on it for two years, then moved to Mullen and opened a blacksmith shop. In 1900, he purchased a well drilling outfit, and built wells for people all over the surrounding country, operating the machine up to 1905, and made quite a little money in the work. In 1901 Mr. Rodgers settled on his present ranch, which, at that time, was entirely unimproved land, and he at once began to develop a ranch, adding improvements right along, and now has it in the finest kind of shape. The ranch contains six hundred and forty acres, and he farms about two hundred acres, using the balance as a cattle ranch.

Mr. Rodgers' family consists of himself, wife and five children, who are named as follows: Eutoka Jane, Mark Melvin, Albert Nathan, Minnie May and William Charles. They are a most interesting group and have a pleasant and happy home.

Mrs. Rodgers deserves special mention with her husband, as much of their success is due to her faithful labors, and she has been a helpmeet to him in the true sense of the word. She has helped build up their home, starting with very little, and when they put up their first house, she helped erect it with her own hands, also assisted him in putting down wells, and bore without complaining all the hardships and privations of the settler in the early years here.

WILLIAM C. SCOTT.

William C. Scott, one of the pioneer settlers of Sheridan county, Nebraska, and a gentleman whose experiences during the early part of his residence here were many times hard to endure, is now a prosperous farmer of this locality. He is a man of strict integrity and occupies a high standing as a citizen.

Mr. Scott was born in Knox county, Indiana, in 1845, and was raised and educated there. His father, Thomas Scott, is also a native of Indiana, of American stock, and died in Illinois in 1883. Our subject is the elder of two children, and at the age of seventeen years struck out for himself, enlisting in Company G, One Hundred and Twentieth Indiana Regiment, serving until the close of the war. He took part in many skirmishes, and saw a great deal of hard service, receiving an honorable discharge, after which he again located in Indiana and began farming, at which he continued until 1884, when he came west with a colony of settlers to the new country. He settled on section 26, township 33, range 43, building a log house in which he lived for thirteen years. In the spring of 1885 he sent for his family to join him, and then started in to improve his farm. He succeeded in his work until the dry years came, and he lost all his crops for several years, and, to make things still worse, he was burned out, losing all his household goods. He did not have money enough to rebuild, so was obliged to sell out and move where he could get material cheaper, and during this time after losing his home was compelled to live in his neighbor's house until he settled on his present homestead in section 35, township 34, range 43, in Sheridan county. He was offered ten dollars per quarter section for his land but refused this offer, and later was fortunate enough to secure five hundred and ninety dollars for his half section. His hardest times were during the years 1892 to 1900, and since then he has been very successful. He is engaged principally in the stock business, keeping about one hundred and seventy-five head of cattle and twenty-five horses all of the time. His ranch comprises six hundred and forty acres of good land, and besides operating this he leases other lands. He has improved his farm, has it all fenced and now has a beautiful place, having lately remodelled his house at a cost of about one thousand two hundred dollars. He is a thrifty, painstaking farmer, and has met with deserved success in his venture.

Mr. Scott was married in 1868 to Miss Anna McClure, born and raised in Indiana, of American stock. Mr. and Mrs. Scott had three children, named as follows: Louis E., Nellie and Maude. On March 9, 1874, Mrs. Scott died, leaving two children, the third and youngest, Maude, having died at the age of three months. In the latter part of 1874, Mr. Scott was married to Miss Burnette Burge, born in Indiana in 1854. Her father, Robertson Burge, served in the Ninety-seventh Indiana Regiment during part of the Civil war from the second day of August, 1862, to 1865. Of this second marriage three children resulted, namely: Claude, Carrie and Grace, now attending school in Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Scott is a Republican, takes an active interest in all party affairs, but does not seek any office.

HENRY LICHTE.

Henry Lichte, an enterprising and prosperous farmer of Dawes county, owns one of the fine and valuable estates in the county. He is one of the pioneers of this region, classed among the leading old settlers of his locality who has watched the growth and progress of this part of the state of Nebraska from its early settlement. Mr. Lichte resides on section 26, township 29, range 48, and has a comfortable home and pleasant surroundings. A picture of the family residence will be found on another page.

Mr. Lichte was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1841. His father, Christ Lichte, was a farmer by occupation and owned a good farm in Hanover province, and both he and his good wife spent their whole life in that country. Our subject was reared on the farm and assisted in carrying it on, attending the country schools as a boy, and later an agricultural college at Hanover, Germany, where he learned the art and science of farming. He served in the German army for two years, as all loyal subjects are required by law to do, and in 1869 left home and came to this country and settled in Illinois, where he remained for several years and in 1878, met and married Miss Lizzie Rothermund, a native of Switzerland, who came to America with her parents in 1868. After his marriage our subject and his wife went to Iowa and located near LeMars, where he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land, on which they lived for two years. In 1884 he left Iowa and came to Dawes county, Nebraska, and this region was then practically a wilderness and he had the choice of location, selecting a tract of land near Rushville on which he filed, and the following year was joined by his family. He only lived on this place for about a year, then settled on the Niobrara river, putting up a dugout, in which they lived for two years. Here he raised good crops, the first year putting in a crop of sod potatoes and corn. During the dry years he met with many discouragements due to loss of crops, etc., and for seven years was unable to raise an average crop of any kind, and was obliged to work on the railroad to make a living for his family. He took a contract for carrying the mail between Hemingford and Dunlap in 1894 and has continued this work for the past fourteen years. Part of the time during the hard years he worked in the saw mills at Pine Ridge, where he followed a frontiersman's existence, camping out at night and suffering many hardships from exposure, etc. He now owns a ranch of seven quarter sections, sixty acres of this being under cultivation, and one hundred of it is irrigated. The place is well improved with good farm buildings, all fenced and supplied with every kind of machinery necessary for conducting a model farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Lichte's family consists of six children, namely: William, Frederick, Joubert, Rose, Dora and Martha. The entire family are well liked by their neighbors and occupy a high position in the community as worthy citizens.

Mr. Lichte is an Independent voter. He was one of the founders of the first schools organized in his locality and has served on the school board for a number of years past.

W. R. HELDMAN.

W. R. Heldman, a representative farmer of Grant township, Franklin county, is a thorough agriculturist and stockman, owner of "The Cyclone Ranch," consisting of one thousand acres of river bottom and uplands, and one of the fine estates of this section of the state. Mr. Heldman purchased this property in 1900, and has built up his place in good shape in that short space of time, employing the most up-to-date and progressive methods in his operations, and has been most successful in his different enterprises. The Cyclone Ranch is located in section 31, township 2, range 13, midway between Franklin and Riverton.

Mr. Heldman was born in 1863 in Indiana. Mr. Heldman came to Nebraska from Harrison county, Missouri, where he had been a breeder of Shorthorn cattle for twenty years. He immediately went to work to build up his farm and engaged in the stock business on a large scale. He started a herd, with the thoroughbred bull "Bates." He bought later from Shellenberger, of Alma, "Saladin," sired by "Bar None II", of pure Scotch strain, and is one among the few in Nebraska as yet. When he first located here there were no herds started in this county, and he introduced the first pure-bred animals in the locality. Mr. Heldman is a director of the county fair society, and his was the first pure-bred herd to be exhibited, and since then they have captured all the prizes right along. He sells his stock in this and the adjoining counties, and every animal is eligible to record. He brought his "Bates" bull with him from Missouri. He is justly proud of his fine herd of Bates thoroughbreds, especially of the fine Scotch Shorthorn bull recently added to his herd, also of the fact that he was the first man to introduce these into Franklin county. At that time the county fair was an event which had become a very tame affair and the people took almost no interest in the annual exhibition, but the interest of Mr. Heldman in stock, and his enthusiastic support soon gave them an incentive and it has gradually become one of the chief attractions in this region, with a large number of exhibitors, all of whom take a lively interest in making it a success. Mr. Heldman himself, as a director, works hard for the success of the Franklin county fair, and exhibits some of the finest cattle, hogs, horses and mules to be found anywhere. Our subject also has a drove of one hundred pure bred Poland China hogs, and the pigs he raises each year are eagerly sought after by all the people of Franklin and the adjoining counties. Mr. Heldman also deals extensively in horses and Missouri jacks and jennets. He has bred Percherons and coach horses for the market. He owns an imported Percheron stallion "Engeur." Mr. Heldman considers this a better feeding and stock country than Missouri, where he had a long experience. He raises a large crop of corn and small grain, all of which he feeds out on his farm, besides being obliged to purchase more to keep his stock.

HUMPHREY P. KENDRICK.

Humphrey P. Kendrick, one of the most energetic and successful farmers of Dawes county, Nebraska, resides on his fine estate in section 30, township 29, range 30, and is well known as one of the leading ranchmen and farmers of his locality. He is a man of good judgment and integrity, and has won an enviable reputation in his community as a progressive agriculturist and worthy citizen.

Mr. Kendrick is a native of Fayette county, Illinois, born in 1871. His father, John Wm. Kendrick, was a native of Maine, and settled in Illinois during the pioneer days of that region, his death occurring there in 1878. He married Miss Fidelia Palmer, born in Michigan. Our subject was but eight years of age when he was left fatherless, and the mother and her family moved to Belle Plains, Iowa, where they lived for seven years, Humphrey attending the city schools, and receiving a fair education, besides assisting his mother in caring for the family and keeping up their home. They had some relatives living in Dawes county, and, in 1887, he came here and worked out in the country on ranches and farms for several years, taking a homestead for himself in 1893, and improving the land. He remained on the place steadily until he had proven up, and made many improvements. This land was located in section 29, township 29, range 50, and he still has the place, but has added to it, buying in the adjoining section until he now owns a ranch of twenty quarter sections in Dawes and Box Butte counties, lying along the Niobrara river. He has put up two sets of good substantial farm buildings on his ranch, and has a fine irrigation ditch in operation, being able to irrigate a five hundred-acre tract of his land. He has plenty of hay land, and engages to quite an extent in stock raising, dealing principally in horses. Mr. Kendrick has associated with him a brother, E. C. Kendrick, who shares equally in the business.

Mr. Kendrick was married in 1900 to Miss Eva Cheny, daughter of Arthur Cheny, who was one of the early settlers in Crawford City, Dawes county. Mr. and Mrs. Kendrick are the parents of one child, a daughter named Ellen, who was born in Crawford, and is now a child of five years.

Mr. Kendrick is an active man in local affairs, and has done much toward improving conditions in his locality along agricultural and commercial lines.

WILLIAM T. JUDY & SONS.

Among the foremost agriculturists and stockmen of this section of the country may be mentioned Wm. T. Judy and sons. Father and his five sons have built up a valuable estate in Cottonwood township, Phelps county, Nebraska, and are highly respected and esteemed by all who know them.

Mr. Judy came to this county in 1899, and purchased three hundred and seven acres of land all located on the Platte river bottom, in sections 17 and 20, eleven miles from Kearney, eleven from Elm Creek and about twenty miles from Holdrege. Mr. Judy is known as one of the best breeders of Percheron and Clyde horses, owning at this time some of the best thoroughbred stallions and brood mares in the state of Nebraska. He has about two hundred pure-bred Duroc Jersey and Poland-China hogs, and holds public sales at both Holdrege and Kearney two or three times a year. In 1901 he started a herd of pure bred Polled Durham cattle, and to this herd he has added some thoroughbred Shorthorns, and has on hand almost all the time from fifty to one hundred head which he sells at private and public sales. In all lines he only handles high grade animals, and his reputation for raising only the very best horses, cattle and hogs has extended all over Nebraska and neighboring states. His Judy Clydesdale Champion stallion is pronounced as nearly perfect a horse as can be found anywhere in the world. Before this horse was four years old he weighed one thousand seven hundred and fifty pounds, and now will weigh two thousand pounds, and is a beautiful animal.

RESIDENCE OF JACK DONASON,

For some years previous to settling in Nebraska, Mr. Judy was engaged in farming and stock raising in Lee county, Iowa, and considers his present location greatly superior to the state of Iowa. For one thing, farmers in Nebraska are willing to pay the price in order to secure the best stock, and this liberality and enterprise has in the past few years caused this state to produce more and better grade horses, cattle and hogs than any other state in the Union for its size. He has been successful in mixed farming also, and in 1906 raised over six thousand bushels of oats and two hundred acres of corn, also one hundred acres of alfalfa, all of which is fed out on his farm. His crop of oats and corn show a yield of about fifty bushels each to the acre. Our subject's sons are Clarence C., Willis W., Benjamin, George and Earl.

SOLOMON R. STORY.

Among those who have accomplished much in the way of helping to build up the locality where he chose his home during the pioneer years in western Nebraska, is the gentleman whose name is mentioned above. He is called one of the substantial citizens of his community, and his name stands near the first of the settlers in that region, he having been an important factor in producing the present prosperity enjoyed in his locality. He resides in section 8, township 34, range 56, in Sioux county.

Solomon R. Story was born in Norfolk, St. Lawrence county, New York, May 25, 1837. His father, also Solomon Story, was a stock-grower and went through pioneer experiences with his family in Wisconsin, where he died in 1855. He married Mary Gipson, who was born in New Hampshire, and they raised their family in Wisconsin, living on a farm where our subject received his schooling. Some years were spent in the lumber woods in that state, and in 1862, he enlisted in Company E, Thirty-second Wisconsin Volunteers, and was with that regiment in the western army. He was with Sherman through Georgia, then went back to Washington and participated in the grand review. In all, he saw about three years' service, being mustered out the 12th of May, 1865.

After the war closed Mr. Story returned home and remained there until 1877. He was married there June 26, 1862, to Marion M. Field, who died in Sioux county, Nebraska, December 13, 1906. She was a daughter of Philip A. Field, who was a lumberman in that state. Her mother's maiden name was Charlotte A. Hoyt. Mr. Story and his bride came to Nebraska, settling in Butler county in 1877, where they farmed for about nine years, then moved to Sioux county, arriving here in the spring of 1886, locating on section 9, township 34, range 56, being the first white family to settle on Antelope Creek. During the first few years he engaged exclusively in farming, but finally got into the stock raising business, and gradually built up a good ranch, now owning two thousand two hundred and forty acres which is devoted to ranching purposes, and he also leases one section, all of which is fenced and in first-class condition. He has made a success of his work, starting with a small capital, having four horses, and those he lost the first year he came here. The first postoffice was located on his place and he acted as the first postmaster, retaining the office for sixteen years. He was precinct assessor for thirteen years and county assessor for four years, always taking an active part in local and county affairs.

Mr. Story has one child, Oscar W., aged forty-one years, born in 1866. The family have a pleasant home and are among the first residents of their community. Oscar W., the only son, still lives with his father and they have lived together ever since coming to this county. Oscar married Annie Reed, daughter of J. W. Reed, an old settler of Sioux county. Four children have been born to this union: George, Loyd, Thirsa and Blanche.

JACK DONASON.

Jack Donason, who for the past score of years has been one of the foremost residents of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, owns a valuable estate in section 31, township 35, range 18. He is one of the leading old settlers in this locality, and has always given his best aid in looking to the interests of the county, and still does his full share in developing its resources and making it a success.

Mr. Donason was born in Knox county, Illinois, in 1857, and when he was but nine years of age began heavy farm work at the handles of a plow, and still well remembers the team he drove. His father, Alex. Donason, was of Scotch-Irish descent, while the mother, Ann Barbow, was of German-American blood, both being reared in this country; our subject, the second child in a family of seven, started for himself at the age of twenty-two years, following farm work on the home place. In 1882 he came to Hamilton county, Nebraska, where he spent a winter, then to Keya Paha county, taking a pre-emption south of the river April 2d. He proved up on it, then during the hard times of the dry years, mortgaged the place and lost it. After a time he again purchased the place, paying six hundred and fifty dollars, having first bought it for nine hundred and fifty dollars, three hundred dollars more than the sale price thirteen years later, to such an extent had land values depreciated during the drouth period. He endured hard times here during the dry years, but managed to get along without assistance from any one, and gradually improved his place. When a strip of the reservation north of the Keya Paha river was opened for settlement Mr. Donason took a homestead on section 31, township 35, range 18, and this is the site of his present home. He was thrifty, bought more land, now owning over one thousand four hundred acres, all lying along the Keya Paha river, with four hundred acres under cultivation; about one hundred and twenty-five acres are seeded to alfalfa which is growing thriftily. He runs two hundred and sixty cattle, and keeps about seventy-five horses and mules; he also deals in hogs, raising about two hundred annually. He has a fine orchard of fruit trees in bearing, and everything about his farm presents the best possible appearance, showing taste and good management in its operation. He has good buildings of all kinds, and the place is all fenced. A view of the fine large dwelling and surrounding buildings, with their rugged background of lofty hills, is to be seen elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Donason was married July 15, 1885, to Miss Minnie Sylvester, whose people were early settlers in Hamilton and Keya Paha counties. To Mr. and Mrs. Donason have been born the following children: Kate, now Mrs. Roy Buckles, of Washington; Alex, Roy, Glen, Frank and Clare, all living at home except the first mentioned.

Mr. Donason has been a Democrat most of his life, having only occasionally wavered in his allegiance to the old party.

CLAUS NIEHUS.

Claus Niehus early in life left his native land and emigrated to the new world, where he became identified with American progress and civilization, and has been a loyal citizen to the land of his adoption. Mr. Niehus resides on section 21, township 35, range 22, in Keya Paha county, Nebraska, where he has built up a good home and farm through his honesty and thrift, and is esteemed and respected by all who know him.

Mr. Niehus was born on his parents' farm in Holstein, Germany, August 13, 1861, where he was reared and as a boy worked hard in assisting his father in the farm work, early learned to look out for himself in the land where all are taught in their childhood to fit themselves for a useful life. In 1884 he sailed from Hamburg for America on the Moravia and after spending a short time in New York city after landing, came west to California, where he remained for five years engaged in farm work near Livermore, Alameda county, California. He then came to Nebraska, settling on a homestead in Keya Paha county, at the head of Cottonwood creek; this he relinquished and bought a tree claim, which now forms part of his estate, and here he put up good buildings—house, barns and granary, and substantially improved his place. He now owns eight hundred acres on Cottonwood creek, engaging in mixed farming and stock raising; the ranch is admirably adapted to the latter purpose, having plenty of good water for his stock. He runs one hundred and fifty head of cattle, twenty-five horses and fifty to sixty hogs, and finds this a most profitable source of income. Mrs. Niehus owns in her own right one thousand two hundred and eighty acres additional.

Mr. Niehus was married October 19, 1894, to Mrs. Mary Rademacher, a native of Hanover, Germany, who came to this country in 1882.

Mr. Niehus is a Republican, and lends his influence for good government, both local and national.

WELLINGTON WHITE.

Mr. White was born in Holton, Maine, May 2, 1840. He lived in Maine until the age of fourteen, going then to Wisconsin with his parents, in which state he lived until 1861.

On September 2, 1861, Mr. White enlisted in the Third Wisconsin Battery Light Artillery, and was mustered out October 10, 1864. He was wounded in the battle of Stone River and was laid up in the hospital for two months. He also took part in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Resaca, Peach Tree Creek, siege of Atlanta, and others.

At the close of the war Mr. White returned to Wisconsin and at once moved to Minnesota, where he lived until 1886. He came to old Cheyenne county (now Deuel county), April 7, 1886. He has been engaged in stock raising and followed the life of a ranchman for some years, and now resides in Lewellen, Deuel county, where he is notary public, but has retired from active business.

He had four brothers in the United States service during the war of the Rebellion.

Mr. White's grandfather served through the entire war of the Revolution, and died at the advanced age of one hundred and ten years.

Mr. White was married to Mary A. Langton, June 8, 1868, at Faribault, Minnesota. To this union were born six children, of which four are living: Arthur H., who is married; Grace M., wife of John Mevich; Emory C., also married; and Maud B., wife of Wm. P. Clarke, all of whom live in Deuel county. Arthur H. lives five miles west of Lewellen, and Emory C. lives seven miles northeast of Lewellen.

Mr. White homesteaded in 1889, taking a claim in township 18, range 41. On this claim he built a sod house and passed through the hardships incident to pioneer life on the frontier. His rights as a soldier were used to advantage in proving up on his claim and in 1890 he moved to the vicinity of Lewellen.

The father of Mrs. White, William Langton, was born in England. He was married in his native land and Mrs. White was born there. Mr. Langton was one of the prominent old settlers of southeast Minnesota.

RALPH N. SWIGGART.

Ralph N. Swiggart, who is in the front ranks of the younger members of the farming and ranching community of Grant county, is a prosperous and up-to-date agriculturist of section 21, township 26, range 36, where he owns a comfortable home surrounded by well-tilled fields, and is considered one of the worthy, public spirited citizens of his locality.

Mr. Swiggart is a native Nebraskan, born in Lancaster county in 1873. He is a son of George W. Swiggart, of whom a sketch appears in this book, who was one of the pioneers in the western part of the state. He settled in Red Willow county after his marriage to Miss Susie Doyle, of Lancaster county, Nebraska. The family moved to Redwillow county in 1873, then to Frontier county in 1875, where a part of Ralph's boyhood was spent, and in 1887 they located in Grant county, where he grew to manhood, and they have made that region their home ever since. He has been engaged in the ranching business since a boy, has learned thoroughly every detail connected with the work, and seen his share of western frontier life during his comparatively short career. In 1895 he started out for himself, filing on his present ranch as a homestead, and for the first year "batched it," and had a hard time to get his farm started, doing all the work of breaking up land for crops, caring for his stock, etc. In 1900 he was burned out, losing his barn, tools, grain, etc., and almost everything except his house, the loss amounting to many hundreds of dollars. He saw years of hard labor thrown away in the destruction of his buildings, crops, fuel and some live stock, and the disaster was a serious setback to him. He immediately went to work anew, building up the place even better than before the fire, and it is now in the finest shape, supplied with every improvement for the proper operation of a model ranch. Mr. Swiggart owns in all six hundred and forty acres, and his location is the very best for ranching and farming purposes.

Our subject was united in marriage in 1896 to Miss Jeanette Crossley, whose family was among the early settlers in western Nebraska. They have one child, Helen, aged eleven years. Mrs. Swiggart's parents are both dead.

Since living in this region Mr. Swiggart has taken an active interest in local affairs, helping to build up his locality and working for its best interests at all times, and holds a high station as a leading citizen. For so young a man he has done exceedingly well in accumulating the nice property he possesses, and the family occupy a pleasant home and are well liked by their neighbors and associates.

M. H. HIGGINS.

M. H. Higgins, familiarly known as "Doc" Higgins, deserves a foremost place among the very old timers of western Nebraska. He has a fine ranch in Cherry county, his life has been one of many experiences, and he is honored as a public-spirited citizen and prosperous ranchman of the locality, and a representative Nebraskan, as his entire career has been spent in the state.

Mr. Higgins was born in Jefferson county, Nebraska, in 1869. His father, Michael Higgins, was a railroad contractor and a prominent old-timer in the west. Our subject was reared in eastern Nebraska, on a farm, and was taught to do all sorts of hard work as a boy. One brother, George, was a pioneer in western Nebraska, locating in Cherry county during its early history as a county, and both he and "Doc" helped in the construction of the Burlington railroad when it was being built from Grand Island west, their father having the contract for the job at different points along the line. George Higgins made his home in Cherry county up to 1899, during that time building up and developing the Box T Ranch, which he established in 1886, his brother, M. H., being associated with him. He made a success of the ranching business, and Doc worked for him for a number of years, finally starting for himself in 1896, settling on a ranch on section 2, township 26, range 27. He took a homestead, proved up on it, and while he has gone through some hardships in getting his home started, has been in the main successful and is now owner of one thousand six hundred acres, part of which is fenced, running quite a herd of cattle and other stock. He farms about forty acres, and has all good buildings and improvements, deriving a nice income from his different enterprises.

Mr. Higgins was married in 1900 to Miss Linda Milvin, whose father was a well known pioneer in Thomas county, owner of a good ranch there. To them have been born three children, George, Harry and James, all bright and interesting children, and they are a most happy family. Mr. Higgins is active in local affairs, and enjoys the esteem and respect of all who know him.

R. CLAYTON WORLEY.

R. Clayton Worley, who lives with his mother on section 14, township 27, range 48, in Box Butte county, is a representative Nebraskan, having been born and reared in this state, and through thrift and industry, supplemented by uprightness of character, has directed the attention of all to him as a worthy citizen and foremost resident of this section. He has lived with his mother, Mrs. C. S. Worley, all the time, except when away at school; his father dying when our subject was only about six years old.

Mr. Worley was born in Richardson county, Nebraska, in 1870. His parents at that time occupied the southwest quarter of section 3, township 5, range 15. The father farmed all his life and came to this state from Indiana, where he met and married Celestia Cornell, also a native of that state. Our subject was reared on the home farm until the age of six years, at which time the father's death occurred, then the family came to Box Butte county. In 1884, when he was about fifteen years old, the mother filed on a tree claim, and on a pre-emption in 1885 in this county, and they decided to improve this farm and make a home of it. Their first dwelling was a tent, in which they lived for some time, then put up a sod house in which they settled about the first of December, 1885, as they were having severe winter weather, the snow having completely covered the ground to a depth of two feet, as early as November 6th of that year, and the tent was not the warmest place imaginable in such a temperature. All the land, or claims, were taken in Mrs. C. S. Worley's name, the tree claim, pre-emption and homestead, and while living there they went through the usual pioneer experiences. Their first team was a pair of horses and a pair of oxen, and with them they broke up land for crops, did freighting and any kind of work in order to make a living. They remained here for two years, also took a homestead in section 23, and in time proved up on the claim. In 1894 our subject went to Lincoln and spent four years, attending school at that place, then returned to the farm and has since spent his entire time in improving and building up their property. He has been engaged in the cattle and horse business during most of the time since locating here, so that the drouth years did not affect him so much. He constantly added to their original acreage, until at one time the family owned about three thousand acres. They have sold some four hundred and eighty acres, leaving them now owners of about two thousand five hundred acres. They now have one hundred acres under cultivation, raising small grain, potatoes, etc. They keep about two hundred and fifty head of cattle, and have plenty of water from good wells, furnished with windmills and supply tanks.

Our subject's mother, Mrs. C. S. Worley, first settled in eastern Nebraska in 1856, where her parents were among the earliest settlers in that part of the state, their home being in Richardson county.

In political views Mr. Worley is a Democrat.

Mrs. C. S. Worley relates many thrilling experiences since she first settled in her home in Box Butte county, one in particular occurring in April, 1904. Jean Thompson and wife had settled near here, and not having range enough of their own, began using Mrs. Worley's land on which to run their cattle. Mr. Worley became tired of the encroachments of these new people and went out in her buggy to drive the Thompson cattle off her land. She was abused and severely treated by Thompson and his wife. They threw a lasso and lassoed the rear wheels of the buggy, throwing it completely over and catching Mrs. Worley underneath and dragging her for a long distance. They thought she would die for a long time and, in fact, she has never fully recovered from the effects of this dastardly treatment. It is fortunate this kind of treatment is no more possible in these later days. The Thompsons finally drifted away into the Sand Hill country.

Mrs. Worley has three children: R. C. Worley, who lives with his mother on the home ranch; Lottie C., attending school at Madison, Wisconsin, and will graduate this year with the degree of Ph. D., and A. L. Worley, now the widow of Mr. W. H. Fanning.

"LONE TREE RANCH"—MRS. C. S. WORLEY AND FAMILY, Box Butte County, Nebraska.

CHRISTOPHER C. THOMPSON.

Christopher C. Thompson, whose neat and attractive home is located in section 31, township 33, range 28, has found Nebraska ranching and farming very satisfactory and profitable since he first established himself in Cherry county, and applied all his resources to the problems of agriculture as presented by a wilderness, thought to be lacking in water and not far from the Great American Desert. It is noteworthy in this connection that the limits of that mythical region have steadily diminished as the tide of hardy and adventurous settlers like Mr. Thompson poured to the westward, until now it has disappeared from the maps, and no longer exists even in the fertile fancy of the space writer or the English traveler.

Christopher C. Thompson was born on a farm in Grant county, Wisconsin, August 12, 1849, which his father, Uriah Thompson, had very successfully developed. The father was American born and bred, a man of vast energy and mighty force of character, who when he was advanced in years became interested in Nebraska land, and coming to Cherry county, located a homestead, on which he died at the great age of eighty-one years. His wife, Elizabeth Harrison, also belonged to an old American family, and was a worthy associate of her energetic and capable husband. She was a cousin of the late President Benjamin Harrison, and a descendant of his illustrious grandfather. They had seven children born to them, of whom Christopher C. was next to the oldest.

The subject of this article was reared to manhood on the Wisconsin homestead, and as a lad was familiar with all kinds of hard work that naturally attended the development of a farm in that wooded country, helping his father clear the land. When a young man he found employment in the lumber camps and among the mills of the great pine country, and for fourteen years was mainly engaged in lumbering and rafting two hundred miles above Minneapolis. When he had reached the age of twenty-seven years, Mr. Thompson left Wisconsin, and traveled very extensively through the west and southwest, in Texas, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, the Dakotas, Montana and Idaho, working on the range and starting in cattle raising, but finally elected Nebraska as the country that offered him the greatest opportunity for the investment of such capital of character and money as he could make.

Mr. Thompson was married in Saunders county, April 6, 1877, to Miss Eliza Hannaman, whose parents, Thomas and Sarah (Brazel) Hannaman, were American born and bred, and devoted to rural life. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson became the parents of a numerous family of eleven children, of whom the three older girls, Cora, Florence and Rita, are married; John is at home; Edward is in South Dakota; the other children, Daniel, Nettie, Walter, Nemie, Etta and William, are still under the parental roof tree. All the children, with the exception of Florence, were born in Nebraska.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Thompson settled in Smith county and later in Decatur, Kansas, and tried farming, but an exceeding drouth could not be resisted, and they simply had to move out or die. They located in Saunders county, Nebraska, for the winter of 1884, and for two or three years following lived in Loup county, Nebraska, their place being some forty miles from the railroad. On more than one occasion in hauling supplies or grain Mr. Thompson has camped out over night and slept under the wagon, not an uncommon experience by any means on the frontier in those days.

In 1889 Mr. Thompson settled on a ranch near Hackberry Lake, some thirty miles southwest of Valentine, and began a cattle business for himself. Much success has attended his careful management, and he now has about one hundred and fifty head of cattle and nearly a hundred horses. He raises thoroughbred race horses, and in the fall of 1906 took first prize in every race in which he entered his famous horse Blue Hawk. He stocked the lake and it has now become one of the best fishing points in the west. After spending some eleven years on the ranch he accepted a very favorable offer for its sale, and disposing of his interests here he spent some time in traveling through the northwest with his family, in Montana. After spending some five months, principally in the Flathead country, he returned to Cherry county, and bought the farm where he is to be found at the present time, well satisfied that taking all things into consideration it is difficult to find a better region than Nebraska for a man who is alive and anxious to get on in the world. He owns six hundred acres fronting on the Niobrara river, and affording every opportunity for stock raising, gardening and general farming. In this tract are included the mouth of Gordon creek, and two other streams that rise from copious springs. One hundred acres of the land are under irrigation, and abundant crops are insured without much regard to the local rainfall. The ranch affords abundant timber both for fuel and building purposes, with wild and tame fruits, among which are some three hundred thrifty apple trees.

There is also rock for building and other requisites in ample supply. Altogether it is one of the most desirable agricultural establishments in northwestern Nebraska, and has been brought up to a high pitch of fertility by its energetic and capable owner.

In political matters Mr. Thompson takes an entirely independent position, and votes for the best men regardless of partisan considerations. He is a typical Nebraskan, and is highly respected by all who know him.

E. H. KYSER.

E. H. Kyser, whose well-kept farm lies in Albany township, Harlem county, located on section 1 in 1877, and the following year homesteaded the one hundred and sixty acres where he now lives. His father, George, and brother, A. Kyser, came here the same year, homesteading the adjoining farm, which he built up in good shape and operated up to 1902, when the father sold it and returned to Genesee county, Michigan, where he originally came from, his death occurring there in 1906, aged seventy-six. He was a strong Republican up to the time of his demise, and an active public-spirited man all his life. He was a member of the school board for many years, and clerk of the township where he lived for some time. He built the first school house in his locality, and hauled the wood for the school all through the first term, refusing to accept any remuneration for the work or fuel. When he first came here they were obliged to haul all produce for forty-five miles northeast of their homestead to Kearney, and kept this up for eight years, as it was the nearest market on the railroad. The Kysers all came from Oakland county, Michigan, and all succeeded in building up good homes here, and were worthy and highly esteemed citizens of the county. A. Kyser sold his farm in 1905 and now lives at Kearney.

E. H. Kyser was born in Shiawassee county, Michigan. His father and mother, both natives of New York state, settled in Oakland county when they were children, about the year 1836, and grew up there, going through all the pioneer hardships while that state was still a territory, and when moving from Michigan to Nebraska drove the entire distance in a wagon. Our subject's grandfather, Louis Kyser, was a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in Oakland county, where his wife also died. His grandfather on his mother's side, Louis Ames, was also a pioneer in Oakland county and died there, as did his wife, who was Ellen Joslyn prior to her marriage. After the death of her husband she married Croston Lockwood, and our subject's youngest brother took the name of Martin Lockwood. He is now a merchant at Portsmouth, Ohio, and owns some land in Phelps county, this state, which he homesteaded many years ago.

Mr. Kyser was married to Miss Minnie Pierce, daughter of John P. Pierce, homesteaders near our subject's farm, who located in Phelps county in 1878. Mr. and Mrs. Kyser have two sons, George and John.

When Mr. Kyser first came to Albany township he was the only Republican voter in the locality, and since that time it has been steadily growing Republican until nearly every voter is of that party. He has been on the county committee different times, and has been one of the active workers in the county for the cause.

AMBROSE HADLEY.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal review has been a resident of western Nebraska for the past twenty-one years; and is well known as a leading pioneer and one of the influential men of his locality. He has been largely instrumental in the upbuilding of this region and has done his full share in establishing the schools here in Box Butte and Sheridan counties.

Mr. Hadley was born in Sterling, Massachusetts, in 1841. His father, Ebenezer Hadley, was a farmer by occupation, of English descent, born in Massachusetts. He married Mary Ann Holmes, and the family for many years lived in Massachusetts and later in New Hampshire, where our subject was reared and educated. At the age of fourteen years he left home, following a sailor's fortunes on fishing boats along the Atlantic coast, continuing at this up to June, 1861, when he enlisted in Company H, Second Rhode Island Infantry. He was in the Army of the Potomac during the whole term of service, and saw much hard fighting, participating in many famous actions. He first enlisted May 5, 1861, and was mustered out in 1863. He then re-enlisted at once to serve during the balance of the war at Brandy Station, Virginia. He was badly wounded at the battle of the Wilderness. Mr. Hadley was mustered out in 1865, and then went to Boston where he worked on the street railway and remained there for twenty years, part of the time driving hack. During this time he had his body tattooed and afterwards traveled with circuses and was on exhibition at different museums all over the United States, almost every part of his body being covered with tattooing except his face. He is an authority on this work, having made a careful study of its principles, and has written various articles relating to the subject.

In April, 1887, Mr. Hadley came to Nebraska and located in Sheridan county, arriving in Hay Springs on April 21st of that year. He filed on a tract of land in section 19, township 26, range 46, Sheridan county, on landing here, putting up a sod shanty, where he "batched it" for quite a while. In 1889 he was joined by his wife and they together started to make a home. About this time the drouths began to effect this region and the hard times they experienced caused them to give up struggling to make a living there. There were many times when for six months all they had to subsist on was corn meal and bread and milk, while for meat they had to depend on the wild game our subject could kill with his gun, and often were they obliged to, suffer the pangs of hunger. He finally gave up and abandoned his homestead, moving to his brother's farm in Box Butte county. There he did well, paid up all of his old debts and made money. In 1898 he sold off his personal property and emigrated to Arkansas, driving overland all of the way, camping out along the road, but after locating did not like the country, so only remained a short time, and then returned to Nebraska, purchasing his present farm situated in section 22, township 26, range 47. Here he has fixed everything up in good shape, has nice buildings, fences, planted orchards, etc. Forty acres are under cultivation and he raises small grain, potatoes and corn. He has done exceedingly well, and is considered well-to-do, owning besides this farm some property at Alliance.

In 1880 Mr. Hadley was married to Miss Elizabeth Metz, and to them have been born four children, namely: Valentine, who is married, now living in Box Butte county; Fred A., John B. and Violet M., who still live with their parents, making a congenial family and a happy home.

Mr. Hadley is a broad-minded, well informed man, and is a typical representative of his part of the country,—has seen nearly all parts of this country, having traveled extensively during his younger years, and is an interesting character.

He votes the Democratic ticket, and his wife is a stronger Democrat than he is. The Hadley home is a fine place for the traveler, and the visitor is royally entertained.

RICHARD WILLIAMS.

The subject of this review, Richard Williams, of North Platte, Nebraska, is familiar to all the people of this locality, as well as to the traveling public, is a genial and accommodating railroad man, and a good citizen of the above town.

Mr. Williams is a native of Mercer county,

Illinois, and was brought up in Cook county, that state. His father, Thomas Williams, was born in Wales, who came to this country when a young man, settling in the middle states during the pioneer days. In 1888 our subject came west, locating at Denver, and began to work for the Union Pacific railroad, and since that time has been with the company continuously, acting in the capacity of brakeman and conductor, traveling between North Platte and Cheyenne, North Platte and Denver. In 1894 he moved to North Platte, and has since resided here. He owns a nice home and the family is highly respected and esteemed by all who know them. Since Mr. Williams commenced with the Union Pacific railroad people he has been very successful in his work, and gained the confidence and trust of his employers, and has never had the misfortune to have an accident on his line.

Mr. Williams was married in 1890 to Miss Sarah Wagstaff, born in Dundas, Ontario, Canada, daughter of Walter and Sarah Wagstaff, the latter born in Dublin, Ireland, of Scotch blood. Walter Dundas was born in Niagara, Canada, also of Scotch blood. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have no family. The former's mother resides with him, her maiden name having been Isabelle Holsworth.

Mr. Williams is a member of the Order of Railway Conductors, Lodge No. 35, of North Platte, and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias.

JOHN F. HOWARD.

John F. Howard, residing in Whitney, Dawes county, is one of the oldest settlers in western Nebraska, and by his efforts he has aided materially in the development of the agricultural and commercial resources of his county. Mr. Howard is a gentleman of most estimable character, highly respected in the community and one of the leading old-timers of the section.

Mr. Howard was born in Clark county, Missouri, in December, 1839. His father, Isaac Howard, was of old American stock, born and raised in Virginia, who married Miss Elizabeth Morris, of Kentucky, the latter dying April 7, 1907, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years and five months. At this writing the father is still living in Iowa and is ninety years old. Our subject's grandfather and great-grandfather were also American born, the latter serving in the Revolutionary War.

When our subject was twelve years of age the family moved to Iowa, where he grew to manhood on a farm, helping his parents in all the hard work of building up a farm and home in a new country, and attending the country schools where he received his early education, later attending college at Birmingham, Iowa. Our subject enlisted in Company H, Third Iowa Cavalry, August 15, 1861, served during the war, being first mustered out January 1, 1864, and then re-entering the service was finally mustered out August 9, 1865. Mr. Howard was truly a war veteran, seeing service through Georgia and Alabama and all through the south and west. He started farming in Iowa in 1866 and remained there up to 1885, then came to Dawes county, filing on a homestead in section 1, township 32, range 51. At that time the railroad was only laid as far as Chadron. He spent three years here, starting his farm, and "batching it," part of the time working at the carpenter's trade, his first house being a plank shanty 12 x 14 in size and lived in this shack for two years, then his family joined him here and they built up a good home and farm. In Iowa Mr. Howard was a pioneer and handled ox teams, leading a regular frontiersman's life, then came to Nebraska and went through the same experiences, so that nearly his entire lifetime has been spent in building up a new country. In Iowa he lived in different counties,—Van Buren, Madison and Warren county. After coming to Nebraska he met with failures of crops, caused by drouths, and had many discouragements, but has succeeded in accumulating a nice property, and owns one thousand two hundred acres of land, which includes a son's homestead. He cultivates sixty acres, and has a seventy-acre field of alfalfa, engaging quite extensively in stock raising, running seventy head of cattle and fourteen horses. His place is well improved with good buildings, fences, etc., and he has plenty of timber, water and fruit.

Mr. Howard is now serving as assessor for his district. He has been justice of the peace for several years, also on the school board for sixteen years, and was one of the organizers of different schools in his section. He is a strong Republican.

Mr. Howard was united in marriage in Iowa in 1867, to Miss Elizabeth Moore, daughter of Littleton L. Moore, a retired farmer and old settler in Van Buren county. Mrs. Howard was born in Ohio in 1845, and she died in Dawes county May 28, 1905, leaving a family of seven children, named as follows: Walter C., Minnie M., Lula M., Arthur E., Earl V., William N., and Mabel (deceased).

J. C. BERRY.

J. C. Berry, who resides on section 8, township 24, range 45, Sheridan county, is well known throughout this region as a successful ranchman and Antioch Postoffice is located at his residence, and Mr. and Mrs. Berry have been connected with the mail service since 1891. Mrs. Berry has been serving as postmistress for the past two years. Mr. Berry is also a retail dealer in lumber and coal at Reno, Nebraska. He also has a wholesale lumber plant at Orville, South Dakota.

Mr. Berry was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, at New Salem, in 1852, and was raised there until twelve years of age. His father, who died in 1856, was a native of Ohio, farmer by occupation, and his mother, who was Lydia Moyer prior to her marriage, was of German descent, and two years after his father's death she was married to Samuel Stuart. The family came to Sheridan, Iowa, in 1865, where his stepfather engaged in the general merchandise business, freighting his goods from Eddyville, thirty-seven miles. They lived there for a year, then moved on a farm, still continuing the merchandise business at Sheridan. At the age of twenty-one he left his mother's home and went to Mills county, where he worked on the Strahn farm, in that county, and at twenty-three began working on the railroad, which he followed up to 1875. He had a brother-in-law in Nebraska at that time who wrote our subject to come on, so he came through to see the country and liked the place so well that he took a tree claim in section 1, township 24, range 45, and later a pre-emption in section 3, also homestead in section 8, holding all three, besides an additional four hundred and eighty acres. He came here with the stock raising idea, so started in and increased his stock as fast as possible, buying his first cattle with money which he earned from picking up bones on his farm. He has kept on in the cattle business ever since, and has had good success from the start, and added to his land until he owns three thousand five hundred acres, farming a little each year, but devoting most of his time to his stock. When he first located here he intended to stay for a year and a half, but has made this his home for the past twenty years, and is contented to stay for the balance of his life. When he arrived his sole capital was seventy-five dollars in money and his household goods, and he began by milking cows to support his family, and still ships some cream during the summers. He runs three hundred and fifty cattle and one hundred and twenty-five horses all the time. He has started some alfalfa and brome grass on his farm, and expects to make a success of it, as the soil is well adapted for its culture.

In 1875 Mr. Berry was married to Miss Louisa B. Wilson, of Lucas county, Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Berry have been born the following children: Minnie L., Fannie L., Todd P., Nellie F., Myrtle E., Manchie R. and Omar, the last mentioned having died when a young child. All of their children are married and living near the old homestead except one. Mr. Berry has erected a very fine frame dwelling on his farm, all fitted in up-to-date style with modern conveniences, good barns, out buildings, etc. Mr. Berry came to this locality in November of the year 1888, and in February of the following year he organized a school district, and they have always had a good school for their children ever since, located about a mile from the homestead. He is always interested in whatever is for the benefit of the people of his community, and is one of the public-spirited citizens of his locality, voting for the best man regardless of party. At one time Mr. Berry was engaged in the confectionery business in Iowa, but only carried that on for a short time. He is an exceptionally good business man, possessing good judgment and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen to a marked degree.

An interesting picture is presented on another page, showing the typical sod house of Mr. Berry and family, erected in 1891.

HENRY HERMSMEYER, DECEASED.

The name of Henry Hermsmeyer is a familiar one among the residents of Brown county, Nebraska. Prior to his demise he was recognized as one of the representative farmers and an old settler of this section, where he had resided for the past twenty-two years.

Mr. Hermsmeyer was born April 19, 1840, in the village of Valldorf, Province of Westfal, in the kingdom of Prussia. He was reared on his father's farm, and served in the German army through two wars, that with Denmark in 1864, and with Austria in 1866 and 1867. After his time of service in the army expired he worked on a farm there for a season. In 1867 he was married to Miss Louisa Steinmeyer, daughter of Ernest Steinmeyer, a merchant in Valldorf. With his young wife he came to America that year, sailing from Bremen in the ship America in the latter part of September and landing about the first of October in New York. Immediately on landing they went to Philadelphia, where Mr. Hermsmeyer worked for Ernst Steinmeyer, a brother-in-law, in his store for one year and seven months. Coming west he located in Missouri, twenty miles from Washington, where he farmed for four years. In 1873 he moved his family to Iowa and remained eleven years, acquiring a farm of eighty acres in Cherokee county. He at first came to Brown county, Nebraska, in 1884, settling on a homestead near Ainsworth, also filing on a tree claim, which now constitutes a part of his estate. He put up a frame house and went to work building up his farm, and was just starting when the drouth came on and his crops were ruined for several years in succession; hailstorms, then prevalent throughout this region, destroyed another crop entirely. He also suffered heavy losses by the death of horses in these early days, and altogether these years were times of hardships and privations, the family becoming well-nigh discouraged. After many years of earnest effort and perseverance times changed, he began to lay up a little money, and continued to improve his farm, putting up good buildings, gradually added to his acreage until before his death, which occurred April 27, 1906, he was owner of six and a half quarter sections of good land, well improved. He had planted a large number of trees, forming a fine grove surrounding his farm buildings, with a good house and excellent equipment for the operating of a model farm.

When Mr. Hermsmeyer first came to this locality there were only two stores in Ainsworth, and the country surrounding was very sparsely populated. He and his family were about the first to settle in this neighborhood, where he has done his full share in the building up of the community and aiding in the development of the agricultural interests.

At his death Mr. Hermsmeyer left a family of five children, namely: Fred, who married Doretta Schelm, of Iowa; Henry, Alvina, wife of Albert Miles, Carl and Ida, three of whom are living with their mother on the homestead. In politics Mr. Hermsmeyer was a Democrat; the family are communicants of the Lutheran church.

HANS GUNDERSON.

Hans Gunderson, one of the prominent residents of Kimball county, Nebraska, was born in Norway, August 12, 1866. He came to America with his parents and three brothers, arriving here in 1873, settling at first in Omaha, Nebraska, where they lived for fifteen years, and there two more sons were born. The father and mother are now living nine miles west of Blair, the boys being scattered in different parts of the country. One brother, George, resides in Kimball, and a sketch of him appears elsewhere in this volume. Hans was the second son in the family, and at the age of twenty-two years came to Kimball county, landing in the region in the spring of the year 1888. Here he took a homestead, proved up on the same and then sold out. He later took a Kincaid claim of four hundred and eighty acres, situated on section 22, township 14, range 54, and also owns another quarter section, besides controlling some leased school land and an interest in a half section in the township in which he lives.

Mr. Gunderson has built up a fine ranch, which is devoted almost exclusively to stock raising, running about two thousand five hundred head of sheep each year. He has made a success of the sheep business and is one of the most prominent ranchmen in the county. He has put many improvements on his place, and has plenty of hay and pasture for his stock, also has about seventy acres under cultivation.

Mr. Gunderson was married to Belle Snyder, in Harrisburg, Banner county, Nebraska, on November 16, 1891. She is a native of Iowa, where she was raised. Mrs. Gunderson's father is dead, and her mother now resides in Tennessee. Three children have come to bless their union, named as follows: Aye I., Effie and Mervin, all at home.

Since locating in this region Mr. Gunderson has been unceasing in his efforts to assist in booming every laudable enterprise in the community, and as a citizen he has shown himself broad-minded and public-spirited to the last degree. He takes a deep interest in school affairs, and is now serving as director of district No. 26. Politically he is a Republican.

EMIL GEBHART.

Among the leading old settlers of Perkins county, Nebraska, none is more widely known or more highly esteemed than the gentleman whose name appears at the head of this article. For many years Mr. Gebhart has been identified with the agricultural interests of Perkins county, and has done his full share toward bringing about the present prosperity enjoyed by the residents of that locality. He has a pleasant home and a well cultivated and improved estate.

Mr. Gebhart was born in Cass county, Illinois, in 1863, of German parentage, the father being a native of Alsace, Germany, while the mother was born in Hesse, they coming to America as young people. Our subject was reared in Illinois, receiving a common school education, and at the age of twenty-three struck out for himself, coming to Nebraska, locating in Perkins county, and filed on a homestead on section 30, township 10, range 38. In the spring of 1887 he came with his family and built a shanty eight by twelve feet, and spent the first year in it. He was here when the county was organized and the location of the county seat was decided upon. During the dry years Mr. Gebhart lost several crops, and went through hard times in getting his farm started. He gradually improved his place in good shape and has accumulated a nice property, having a ranch of eight hundred acres of deeded land, with about the same amount leased. This he has fitted up with good buildings of all kinds, and cultivates about one hundred and fifty acres, devoting the balance to pasture and hayland. His residence is situated on section 31, where he moved in 1906. He runs quite a large bunch of stock, and is one of the progressive agriculturists and stockmen of the vicinity.

Mr. Gebhart was married in 1887 to Miss Mary Blome, who was born near Petersburg, Illinois, of German parents. They have three children, named as follows: Ella, Bertha and Ralph. Our subject is a strong Republican, and is active in politics in his locality.

L. H. HEWETT.

Among the representative farmers of Sheridan county the above gentleman holds a prominent place. He was one of the first settlers in this locality and is well known in the community, enjoying the respect and esteem of his associates and neighbors. He is one of the very old timers, having attended the convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln for president the first time.

Mr. Hewett was born in Ohio in 1831. His father, Harvey Hewett, was a native of Maine, a farmer by occupation, and his mother, Miriam (Hunt) Hewett, was also born and raised in Maine. When our subject was six years of age his parents came west, locating in Illinois with their family of three boys and three girls, of whom he is the third member. At the age of twenty-one he got the gold fever and started for the gold mines of Oregon, and remained in the west until 1857, when he returned to Illinois and lived there until 1885, but never liked the country as a money-making proposition. He was for a time engaged in the farming and stock raising business in Illinois, and then in 1885 came to Sheridan county, Nebraska, settling on section 11, township 33, range 43, where he still lives. This ranch comprises three hundred and twenty acres of deeded land, and part of it is devoted to farming and the balance to hay and pasture land.

RESIDENCE OF O. B. HOLLENBECK,

During the dry years, from 1891 to 1899, he stuck to farming until he lost about everything he had through failure of his crops, then gave it up and went into the stock business, and since the beginning of the better years he has been very successful in both farming and stock raising. In 1906 his wheat crop yielded twenty-six bushels to the acre, and his rye crop turned out equally as well. He has done exceedingly well since coming here, and although he has seen his share of hardships and discouragements he is satisfied that he has done much better than he could have done anywhere else, where he would have been obliged to rent land instead of coming where he could get it free. He has worked hard, and now would like to take it a little easy, and should he receive a fair offer for his farm, would sell and move to town. His place is well improved with a complete set of substantial farm buildings, and everything is run in a businesslike manner and shows evidence of good management and thrift.

In 1859 Mr. Hewett was married to Miss Hannah W. Morey, born in Fulton county, Illinois, in 1839. Her father, Amos Morey, was born and raised in Maine while that state was still a province, and her mother was a native of New York state. The parents of both Mr. and Mrs. Hewett were among the early settlers of Illinois, locating there in 1837. Four children have been born to our subject and his wife, who are named as follows: Alice Coralinn, Bruce H., Frank M. and Clarence M.

In political faith Mr. Hewett is a Republican.

OLIVER B. HOLLENBECK.

One of the most successful agriculturists of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, may be found in the person of Oliver B. Hollenbeck, who has followed farming in the above county for many years past. He is numbered among the early settlers in this part of the state, and has contributed his full share towards the building up of the community in which he chose his home.

Mr. Hollenbeck is a native of Wayne county, West Virginia, born May 7, 1852. His father, Henry Hollenbeck, was born in Virginia in 1812, and his grandfather was a soldier in the war of that date, as was also his great-grandfather, in the Revolutionary war. The mother, Margaret Ricketts, was born in Maryland. The Hollenbeck family were among the early settlers in the eastern states during the colonial days. Of a family of eight children our subject is the sixth member, and was reared in West Virginia until 1865, when the family moved to Iroquois county, Illinois. At the age of eleven or twelve years he started in life for himself in West Virginia, and has made his own way ever since. His older brothers served in the Civil war. The family moved to Illinois in 1865, and there he followed farm labor for several years, herding cattle at times and tilled rented land for a few years. In 1883 he came west and settled in what is now Keya Paha county, Nebraska, taking a homestead in section 33, township 33, range 19. The following year he started to improve his place, putting up a board shanty, and other rude buildings. He had not much to start with, but owned a team of mules, and began cultivating his land, but the dry years soon came on and two crops in succession were ruined, which was a heavy loss to him in those times. He had to cope with the disadvantages of those early days, being obliged to haul supplies many miles through unbroken country, and with none of the improvements to make things easy to work with.

His ranch now comprises one thousand forty acres divided in two pieces, and excepting the homestead which he took when he first settled here has been purchased outright. Three hundred acres of this is cultivated, and the balance is in pasture and grass land. The farm is improved with substantial buildings, all fenced, and is one of the most valuable in the locality. A view of the place will be found on another page.

Mr. Hollenbeck was married in Vermillion county, Illinois, December 8, 1876, to Miss Emma Gilmore, whose parents, Robert H. and Elizabeth (Farrow) Gilmore, resided on a farm in Vermillion county. Mr. and Mrs. Hollenbeck have a family of seven children, named as follows: Robert, Martin (deceased), Dolly, wife of Ira Cline; Ella, widow of Joseph H. Fisher; Hugh, a twin of Laura, who married Edward E. Fisher, and Minnie.

During Mr. Hollenbeck's life he has been engaged in many enterprises and has been very successful in all his undertakings, owing to his strict integrity and honest dealings, and has won the respect and esteem of his fellow-men by his sterling character.

He held the office of justice of the peace since 1885 excepting three or four years, and proved a most efficient official. He has also held different school offices and is always actively interested in all matters which tend to the advancement of conditions in his locality. In political faith he is a Republican. The family worship in the Congregational church.

F. F. VERSAW.

F. F. Versaw, who, as a land-owner of Franklin county, has done his share toward the development of the agricultural resources of that region, and leading old settler of Nebraska, is a widely known and universally respected citizen. He is a man of wide experience and good business judgment, whose integrity and honesty have placed him among the prosperous men of his community. Mr. Versaw resides in Bloomington township, where he has a fine farm and home.

Mr. Versaw is a native of Berrien county, Michigan, and his father was also born in that county, the latter's father having been the first settler in that section. Our subject came to Johnson county, Nebraska, in 1881, with his parents, and his father, F. E. Versaw, now resides in Adams county, where he owns a good farm. He grew up in that section, and began for himself when twenty-one years of age, farming and stock raising, feeding cattle and hogs, and was very successful. In 1900 he came to Franklin county, but before that had bought some land in Macon township, and he now owns over eight hundred acres there. In the past he has paid from thirteen up to fifty dollars per acre for his land, showing the rapid rise in values. In 1906 he bought one hundred and sixty acres of good land in Bloomington township, with a fine residence on the property, and here is engaged in mixed farming. He is about the only man in the county who has met with pronounced success in handling sheep. He engaged in that business for several years.

Mr. Versaw was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Cook, daughter of Ed. Cook, who came to Otoe county, Nebraska, as a pioneer about 1860, when he was a boy, with his parents, and spent all his life here, his death occurring in the village of Cook, Johnson county, 1905, aged fifty-seven years. His father, Andrew Cook, was one of the first settlers in Otoe county, and he afterwards moved to Johnson county with his family, taking up a homestead there. The Cooks came from Racine, Wisconsin, originally from England, landing in America about 1850. Ed. Cook freighted over the plains of Nebraska and Colorado in the early days. He married Mary, daughter of John Brooks, who settled in Johnson county about 1865, coming from near Erie, Pennsylvania. There were several Brooks brothers, all locating in that vicinity.

Honorable Andrew Cook was a territorial officer of Nebraska. (See History of Nebraska of 1882.) He was county commissioner, and one of the organizers of Johnson county, and a very influential man in his community. The town of Cook was laid out by his son, William Cook, taking its name from the father.

Mr. and Mrs. Versaw have a family of four children, named as follows: Paul Edward, Herbert Earl, Willie King and Mary Christine. Our subject's mother was Sarah King, daughter of Rev. Job King, a native of Vermont, who settled in New York state, and then in Ohio, later a pioneer of Berrien county, Michigan, and widely known as an effective preacher of Methodism in those primitive days. The father, F. E. Versaw, was a soldier in the Civil war for four and a half years, a member of the Third Michigan Cavalry, in the western army most of the time, seeing hard service in Arkansas and Texas.

Mr. and Mrs. Versaw are fine representatives of the second generation of Nebraskans, and both take an active and intelligent interest in the growth of their state. They are appreciative of the pioneer founders of Nebraska in their early hardships and struggles, and believe firmly in a great future for the state.

Mr. Versaw has three brothers in Nebraska—Herbert, of Johnson county, and John and Charles, of Macon township.

JOHN TAYLOR WATSON.

John Taylor Watson, familiarly known to his friends and intimates as "Pete Watson," one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Sioux county, has been a resident of that region since its early settlement by white men. He has aided materially in its development, has opened up fine farms throughout the western part of the state of Nebraska, and now resides on his highly cultivated estate in section 15, township 26, range 55. For many years he has taken an active part in every affair of public moment, has been one of the foremost citizens in every celebration in this region, acting as special marshal on numerous occasions when a representative settler and prominent official was needed, and well has he upheld the honor of his community. He is equally well known throughout Box Butte, Dawes and Sheridan counties, having been all over this part of the state, and no occasion is complete unless "Pete Watson" is numbered among the participants.

Mr. Watson was born in Henry county, Iowa, in 1848, and was a Christmas present to his parents, first seeing the light of day on December 25th of that year. His father, Madison James Watson, lived on a farm in Cass county, Iowa, about two years, and was widely known through that part of the state as an influential citizen, a great hunter in the early days, meeting his death in 1856 in running wolves with hounds.

Our subject grew up in the vicinity of his birthplace, receiving a limited education, and at the age of eighteen started out for himself. In 1885 he came to Nebraska and filed on a homestead in Sheridan county, which was then barren prairie land, the nearest town being Hay Springs. His first building was a rude shanty, and he started to develop a farm, breaking up land for crops, working in every way to prove up on his land. Soon after locating here he took up a tree claim in Box Butte county, and proved up on that also, farming from two to three hundred acres, bending every effort to gain a good home and improve his property. In those days there was plenty of wild game roaming the state, and as he was a fearless hunter, he can relate some very interesting and exciting tales of hunting trips which he with others took through the country, and it was on one of these expeditions that he first saw Sioux county, coming through that locality in 1896 with a pack of fourteen dogs looking for wolves, which were to be found in plenty in the unsettled portions of the county. He made wolf hunting his business for several years, and on these journeys traveled all through western Nebraska south of the Platte river, at many times having thrilling encounters with the savage beasts. His tactics in killing a big wolf was by putting a club in the animal's mouth and in that manner had the advantage of the wolf. He killed many a gray wolf in the above manner, his dogs catching and holding the beast until he came up to them, when he would let the wolf grab the club and he would dispatch him as quickly as possible. During late years Mr. Watson has done little hunting, as wild game is practically driven out of the country by the settlers, and he has given his whole attention to his ranching and farm duties. He controls in all over five sections of land, part of which is owned by his nephews, and other of his relatives.

In 1870 our subject was married to Josephine Johnson. Mrs. Watson died in July, 1899; and he was married the second time to Mrs. Matilda Albright, November, 1901, and in December, 1907, she, too, passed away.

In personal appearance Mr. Watson is a splendid specimen of manhood, standing six feet two and a half inches, and weighing over two hundred pounds. He is a gentleman of pleasing personality, whole-souled and jovial in disposition, and one whom it is a pleasure to know. He always rides good horses and no one rides ahead of him. In 1890 and 1891 Mr. Watson was at the head of the Indian campaign at Pine Ridge, South Dakota.

HON. P. C. FUNK.

Probably no citizen in Phelps county is better known for his active public spirit and sound business judgment than the subject of this review, proprietor of four hundred acres in section 9, Divide township, devoted to farming and stock raising, and fitted with every improvement necessary for the operation of a model farm. He also owns three hundred and twenty acres of farm land in Anderson township.

Mr. Funk located on the same lands in 1879, and as a farmer and stock raiser has been progressive and successful. He deals extensively in hogs, having about one hundred Poland Chinas on hand all the time. He is the man who introduced Polled Angus cattle in this locality in 1887, and has one hundred of these pure-bred animals, which he sells on the market.

In 1864 Mr. Funk enlisted in the Third Ohio Cavalry, near Toledo, Ohio, and served until the close of the war in the Army of the Tennessee, under Thomas and Sherman in all the Atlanta battles and campaigns, then back toward Nashville, by reason of being remounted at Louisville.

Mr. Funk has been active in getting improvements of all kinds in his community. He was the first in this county to take up the establishment of farmers' telephone lines, and built the line from Funk to Heydon. Also was instrumental in getting free rural delivery routes established. In 1887 he took up the matter of getting a railway station in Divide township, visiting the Burlington officials and pressing the matter upon their attention with such good results that they established the station seven miles east of Holdrege, naming it Funk, after our subject. The population of Funk is three hundred, and more business is done at this station than at any station of its size on this line of railway. They have three elevators here with a capacity of fifty-five to sixty thousand bushels, and the freight laid down at Funk last year amounted to over sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. Funk farmed in Iowa prior to coming to Nebraska, but says this state is far ahead of Iowa, and has great faith in its possibilities as a farming and stock raising country. In 1906 he built a fine modern residence in Funk and located there, his farm being operated by his daughter and her husband. His only son, Harry, is proprietor of a drug store in Funk.

In political sentiment Mr. Funk was a strong Republican up to 1890, when he joined the Populist party, and has been very active in working for its principles in this locality and throughout the state in the county central committee and at all state conventions. He is now (1906) candidate for his party for representative in the state legislature, and was elected and served one term, and is now a candidate for re-election. He was a member of the county board in 1884-85-86, and 1903 and 1904, and in 1892 and 1893 served his county as treasurer.

WILLIAM A. RANDALL.

William A. Randall, one of the pioneer settlers of Box Butte county, and classed as one of its substantial farmers and worthy citizens, is the owner of a fine ranch consisting of twelve hundred and eighty acres, in township 26, range 52. He is one of the leading old-timers of western Nebraska, has always taken an active part in the upbuilding of his locality, and deserves special mention for his loyalty to his adopted state.

Mr. Randall was born in Iresburg, Vermont, in 1863. His father, Clark Randall, was a jeweler, druggist, marine engineer, a man of much ability and could turn his hand to many things. He also was a native of Vermont, and married Fidelia V. Hanks, of the same state. They lived in Baltimore during the Civil war, then moved to Alexander, Virginia, and spent a number of years there, then located on a farm four miles south of Mt. Vernon, Maryland. When our subject was sixteen years of age the family came to Peoria, Polk county, Iowa, and lived on a farm for several years, and on that farm his father died in 1883.

William A. Randall came to Ainsworth, Brown county, Nebraska, and settled on a farm about one mile north of Ainsworth, remaining there for about a year, then he left the farm and went to Nonpareil, Box Butte county, Nebraska, in 1885, where he opened a drug store and studied constantly, so that in a short time he became a registered pharmacist. When the town of Alliance was first started Mr. Randall opened a branch store there, and was the first man to engage in that business in Alliance. During the first few years he was very successful, but as the hard times came his business paid very small returns on the investment, so that he was compelled to sell out, and soon after went into the Black Hills. There he worked as a stationary engineer for a mining company for ten years. This was at Lead City, South Dakota, and he remained there up to 1901, then came back to Box Butte county and settled on his present ranch property. He first bought a small tract of land and went to farming, and has steadily added to his farm, so that he now owns two sections and devotes the greater part of it to ranching, cultivating two hundred and forty acres. He handles a large number of cattle and horses. His place is well improved, all fenced and in good shape, and he has made money since his start here.

Mr. Randall was married in 1889 to Mazetta Bass, daughter of Moses Bass, who is one of the oldest settlers in this region. He died here in 1892. His wife was Elvira Mobilie, a native of Mobilie, Missouri, of good old southern blood, and Mrs. Randall's father came to this part of the country in 1886, taking up a homestead in section 2, township 26, range 52, where he built up a good home and was one of the leading men of the locality during his entire life. Mr. and Mrs. Randall have had two children: Edna Pearl and Myrtle, the latter deceased. Politically our subject is a Republican.

AUGUST MEIER.

August Meier, one of the influential ranchmen and leading citizens of Sioux county, has followed ranching in that region for the past twenty years and more, and is proprietor of a finely improved property. He is a gentleman of intelligence and active public spirit, and since locating in western Nebraska has done his full share as a pioneer in helping to build up the community where he chose his home.

Mr. Meier was born in Germany in 1864. His father, John Meier, was a farmer in the old country, and August was raised on the home farm, and at the age of eighteen years the whole family came to America, landing in New York city in 1882. The father died in Nebraska in May, 1907. They settled at first at West Point, Nebraska, remaining for four years, following farming, and then came to Sioux county, arriving here in 1886. Our subject took up a homestead for himself during the same year situated on Hat creek, built a log house, and started to break up his land, using ox teams for all his work. For three years he "batched it," and saw hard times, often having all he could do to make a living and trying to lay by money enough to make improvements on his farm. However, he lived on that place up to 1891, then came to his present location, which he purchased outright. This ranch is situated on Indian creek, seven miles west of Ardmore, South Dakota. He has added to this, now owning about twelve hundred acres, all of good range land, and runs a large bunch of cattle, farming a small portion of the land and raises small grains. When he first came here he lived in a dugout and log house, but he has erected a good house, barns and other buildings, and has the ranch well fenced. The place is well supplied with good water, and there is quite a large amount of natural timber on the ranch.

A picture of Mr. Meier's residence and farm buildings will be found on another page of this work.

Mr. Meier married Miss Minnie Peterson in 1895. Mrs. Meier was born in Nebraska, and is a daughter of John Peterson, a well known butcher and farmer, who is one of the pioneers of Sioux county. To Mr. and Mrs. Meier the following children have been born: Louisa, Clara, Bertha, John (deceased), August and Mary.

Our subject has been one of the foremost citizens of his locality, and has done much to aid the general prosperity of the region. He is one of those who helped build the Burlington & Missouri Railway through the section, and has taken an active part in every movement for the good of the community. He is a Democrat in political views.

JAMES A. FERGUSON.

Among the older settlers of Harrison, Rock county, and especially among the number of those who have contributed to the wealth and prosperity of this section of the state of Nebraska by sterling worth and long and faithful service as a citizen and a man, must surely be reckoned the gentleman whose name introduces this biographical review. Coming as he does of sturdy Scotch ancestry, he has shown the possession of some of the most desirable virtues of the blood, and none of his forebears have reason to blush for his long and useful life, or the spirit with which he has met the responsibilities and duties of his career upon the frontier.

Mr. Ferguson was born on a farm in the town of Addison, Oakland county, Michigan, April 22, 1842, where his father, Boyce Ferguson, had followed the tillage of his soil for many years. His grandfather was a native of Scotland. The mother of James A. Ferguson, Delilah Craiger, was born in Pennsylvania, and came of German extraction. She became the mother of fourteen children, lived a long and quiet life, passing away in Shiawassee county, Michigan, in October, 1895, at the age of eighty-four years. Boyce Ferguson was the father of two older children by an earlier marriage.

The subject of this sketch, the seventh born to his mother, was reared and educated in his Michigan home, and on the breaking out of the Civil war was quick to respond to the nation's call for help, enlisting at Altamont, Lapeer county, November 15, 1861, in Company F, Tenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and proved himself to be a brave and valiant soldier in the noble cause for which the wearers of the blue fought so long. During his almost four years of active service at the front he saw much hard and dangerous duty. He participated in the great battles around Pittsburg Landing, Corinth and Nashville, as well as in Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and the campaign around Atlanta. He was severely wounded at Rocky Face Ridge, where he received injuries from which he has never entirely recovered. Anxious to bear his part, he could not abide the hospital, from which he ran away as early as he could get about, and was on the firing line long before he was well. After receiving his mustering out papers at Louisville, Mr. Ferguson returned to his Michigan home, where he was finally discharged in 1865. Here he worked for two years, and in 1867 bought a farm in Oakland county. There for some years he made his home and was known as quite a successful farmer.

Mr. Ferguson was married for the first time in the spring of 1864, when Miss Sarah Taylor became his bride. She died in 1872, leaving a family of three children—Maggie, Mabel and Myron, who died in infancy. Mr. Ferguson contracted a second marriage January 1, 1873, with Miss Christina McLain, and to this union have come eight children: Clyde and Cora, who are twins; Frank, Flora, Boyce, Fred, Jesse and Dale.

The year of his second marriage Mr. Ferguson sold out his Oakland county property and removed to Macomb county and made his home on a rented farm near Romeo for twelve years. He found, however, that he was not making headway in the old community, and after much thought determined to seek his fortunes in the newer west, selecting Rock county, Nebraska, as the theater for the struggle for a home and competence. In 1885 he made homestead entry on section 26, township 30, range 20, where with a team and wagon, two cows, a modest supply of household goods and some thirty dollars in money he began what has proved a very successful career on the frontier. For two years after his coming he rented land, while he was building on his homestead and making ready for the family. During these years it seemed as if many kinds of calamity waited on him, but could not crush him. In 1885 he lost his best horse, which was not the only hard luck that came to him. For three successive seasons he watched the burning sun and the cloudless skies for weeks and weeks, as his crops withered and died in the dry and burning heat. He was not discouraged, and after several seasons of dry weather bought a half section of land where he is found at the present time. Here he has put up the needed buildings, and at once put sixty acres under the plow. He also has under his care four hundred acres of school land, two hundred of which are under active tillage. He is largely engaged in stock raising, and is making the dairy one of his most important interests. Politically he is known as a Bryan Democrat, and from the earlier days has taken much interest in party affairs. The family are members of the Methodist church, while Mr. Ferguson holds fellowship with the American Order of Protection and the Grand Army of the Republic.

MONS JOHNSON.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history is owner of one of the valuable estates in Cheyenne county, and with his family occupies a handsome residence in Colton precinct. He is one of the leading citizens of his community, and since coming to the region his services, which have been invaluable in assisting in the development of its resources, have become universally appreciated by his fellow-men.

Mons Johnson was born December 24, 1858, in the town of Skrurup, Sweden, and there grew to manhood, following farming as an occupation until he reached his twenty-second year, when he left his native land and came to America. On April 29, 1881, he embarked at Malma for Hull, and after crossing England sailed from Liverpool. A voyage of eleven days, during which they weathered two severe storms, landed the traveler in New York city. He came directly west to LaSalle county, Illinois, and spent three years at work near the city of LaSalle, then moved to Seward county, Nebraska, and remained in that vicinity for an equal period. His next location was in Cheyenne county. Coming here in the spring of 1886, he immediately filed on a homestead on section 2, township 14, range 48, then returned to Seward county, sojourning but a short time. In the fall he became a permanent resident of Cheyenne county and built a dwelling on his claim and has since spent his entire career in the section, going through all the pioneer's experiences in developing a good farm and ranch. He has succeeded admirably in his undertakings, now owning about eleven hundred and twenty acres, all of which is well improved with good buildings, windmills and fences. He has about two hundred acres under cultivation, and runs one hundred head of cattle and a small bunch of horses.

Mr. Johnson takes an active and leading part in local and county affairs of importance, and is one of the prosperous and successful men of his community. He has helped build and establish the schools in his neighborhood, having acted as director of district No. 39 for a number of years, and at present is serving as treasurer. Politically he is a Democrat.

Mr. Johnson was married in Cheyenne county, September 29, 1887, to Emma Wilson, who was born and reared in Woodford county, Illinois, but came to Cheyenne county with her parents in 1886. Her mother is a resident of Sidney. Mr. Johnson's parents, who are both dead, were the parents of five children, of whom he was the eldest. The marriage of our subject and his wife was the first to take place on the North Divide.

Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, namely: Marna E., Clyde A., Essie Florence, Lee W., Leslie M. and Earl N., all living at home. Though reared in the Lutheran church, Mr. Johnson is now a member of the Church of Christ.

W. H. McDONALD.

Mr. W. H. McDonald occupies a foremost place as one of the oldest settlers in Nebraska, having landed here in 1883, and he has the distinction of being one of the few men who have been in this region for so long a time. When he first came here he was almost the only white man in his locality, and Indians were thick all around his place, the forests were overrun with all kinds of wild game, and he relates many interesting anecdotes of those times, when the pioneers lived in dugouts and were obliged to use every sort of a makeshift in order to get along and establish a home.

Mr. McDonald was born in Henry county, Illinois, in 1861. His mother was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and his father of Dublin, Ireland. They emigrated to the new world when young people, settling in the state of New York for a time, and then came to Illinois.

Our subject was reared on a farm, attending the country schools during his boyhood years when he was not engaged in assisting in the farm work. When he was thirteen years of age he spent some years in the mining town of Lovejoy, Illinois. He was just twenty-two years old when he first struck Nebraska, accompanied by his father, who filed on a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres in section 15, township 24, range 14. Three years later the son also took up a claim of one hundred and sixty acres, located in section 15, township 24, range 14, and the McDonald ranch now contains nine hundred acres and is considered one of the finest ranches in Garfield county. This is owned at the present time by our subject and a brother. They raise a great deal of stock, dealing principally in high-grade Shorthorn cattle, and raise plenty of corn, oats and other grain for feed on the place. Besides cattle they raise quite a number of horses and some hogs each year, making a nice income from their stock raising operations.

Neither our subject or his brother are married, a sister living with them as their housekeeper, and the three have a pleasant and comfortable home, happy and peaceful. They are all members of the Roman Catholic church, and highly esteemed in their community as industrious and worthy citizens. W. H. McDonald has served his township as road overseer for five terms.

RICHARD OSBURN.

In that large and promising section of Nebraska known as Cherry county, Richard Osburn, whose name introduces this article, has run a noteworthy career, and while still in the prime of life, and at the maturity of his manly powers, has attained an enviable standing among those strong and leading men who are making the wilderness a blooming garden. His handsome and well appointed farm property is located in section 22, township 34, range 25, and there he has shown what may be developed by a high degree of the peculiar characteristics of honesty, integrity and industry that so strongly mark the typical American farmer, especially so when he is breathing the strong, free winds of the great west.

Mr. Osburn was born on a farm in Decatur county, Iowa, January 11, 1854, but grew to manhood in Monroe county, in the same state, where he received such educational advantages as the times afforded. His father, Jonathan Osborn, came of an old American family, and while he was by trade a carpenter, devoted his life mostly to farming, in which he was notably successful. His wife, Julia A. Stocker, the mother of Richard Osburn, was of German blood, her parents having come into this country from Germany in the early years of the past century. Jonathan Osburn and wife were the parents of a family of six children, of whom the one whose career forms the subject of this sketch was the first born.

Mr. Osburn began life for himself when about twenty years of age, and for a few months was engaged in farm work in Kansas, but soon removed to Nodaway county, Missouri, where he bought a forty-acre farm, on which he made his home for some ten years. He was married to Miss Nancy Halsey, March 31, 1884. Her people were of New England descent, though her father, Zebidee Halsey, was born and reared in Virginia. Her mother, Cecilia Chatham, was a lady that well fulfilled the best ideals of American womanhood. To Mr. and Mrs. Richard Osburn have come nine children, all of whom were born on the farm where we find them today, and all of whom are now living: Della May, Joseph Mills, John Wesley, Frank Edgar, Albert Marion, Richard Evart, Floyd Emmet, Earl and Sylvia Anne.

In the spring of 1884 Mr. and Mrs. Osburn came to Nebraska and pitched their tent, where their home is found at the present time in Cherry county. They are still living in the log house which was erected to shelter them at their first coming, though it has been greatly improved and enlarged, so that it bears little resemblance to what was the first structure on the place. The land itself has been greatly improved by thorough and systematic cultivation. Mr. Osburn found life an uphill road during the first years of his residence in Cherry county. He was glad at times to get anything to do in which he could find scanty support for his family. During the long drouth between 1893 and 1896 he raised no crops whatever, fully realizing what it means to have a famine in the land. The next year was more prosperous and he began to forge ahead, so that now he is very comfortably situated, with no fear for the future. He is the owner of four hundred acres of good farm land, and has at least one hundred and fifty acres under active cultivation. Mr. Osburn devotes much attention to cattle, hogs and horses, and is keeping about fifty head each of cattle and hogs, with half as many horses. The very satisfactory results of his experience in stock encourage him to still further efforts in this line. During the unrest when an Indian uprising was threatened in 1891 Mr. Osburn moved his family twelve miles nearer the fort for safety, but shortly returned to the farm, fearing no danger since.

Mr. Osburn is a Democrat in his general political affiliations, and takes a commendable interest in local and school affairs. For some fifteen years he has been a member of the school board, and may be counted on for a quick response to every appeal for a better community, and the advance of educational and moral institutions. He is a member of the American Order of Protection at Valentine.

GEORGE S. PETERS.

For many years past the gentleman herein named has been known to the citizens of Sheridan county as a public-spirited man and a worthy citizen. He lives on section 15, township 29, range 45, where he has a fine farm and home. A picture of the stock farm is presented on another page.

Mr. Peters was born in Calumet county, Wisconsin, in 1872, and raised on a farm there. His father, Peter Peters, was born and raised in Holland, and came to this country when a young man, and in 1861 married Mary Vanderloop, a native of Holland, who came to America with her parents at the age of ten years. They had a family of eleven children, and our subject is the seventh member. At the age of twenty-one years he started in for himself, teaching school and working at the printer's trade, having learned the latter when a schoolboy. He came to Sheridan county in 1893, locating on his present place, which he bought. There were no improvements on it whatever, and he at once built a good house and began farming on a limited scale, as he had little capital to start with. He just started at the beginning of the dry years and had a hard time to raise enough to get ahead any, although they were not subjected to any very serious hardships, always having plenty to eat, which they raised on their farm. He had gone in debt for his land and was obliged to pay interest, which kept him back considerably, as he had borrowed fourteen hundred dollars. When his crops failed him he taught school to help make a living, and kept putting all the money he could spare into cattle.

In 1899 he went to Wisconsin and engaged in the mercantile business, but had just got started when fire destroyed everything he had, so he returned to Nebraska with what little he had left, having spent just eleven months in Wisconsin. He has since then been on his farm constantly, engaged in the cattle business and farming, and now has four hundred and eighty acres of good farming land and runs sixty head of cattle and twelve horses. For the first six years he was on his farm he had to buy all the seed he planted, and considers he has done well since locating here. He is nicely situated now, having the postoffice on his place and telephone connections in his home, and intends to remain here for the future.

In 1894 our subject was married to Miss Annie M. Van Doren, born in Brown county, Wisconsin, in 1874. She is a daughter of Stephen Van Doren, a native of Holland, who came to this country and settled in Wisconsin in the early days, then was a pioneer in Platte county, Nebraska, where he remained for twelve years. He came to Sheridan county in 1887 and has been here for nineteen years. To Mr. and Mrs. Peters have been born the following children: Stephen, Mary, Nellie, Delia, Arthur, Ella, Charles and Richard, the baby, all born and reared in this county. Mr. Peters votes independent of party, always going in for the best man. He has held local office at different times, and at present is serving as justice of the peace and notary public. He was nominated by the dominant party of the county for county judge in 1897, being only twenty-five years of age at that time, and the youngest man ever nominated in Sheridan county for any office.

J. A. CARLILE.

J. A. Carlile, whose fine farm consists of one hundred and sixty acres in Albany township, Harlan county, has been a resident of this locality for many years past. He was born in 1840 in Chester county, Pennsylvania, and was raised in Morgan county, Illinois. His father, E. H. Carlile, and his mother, Anna M. (Cooper) Carlile, were both natives of Chester county, Pennsylvania. His grandfather on his father's side married Phoebe Curtis Hoops, of Pennsylvania, who distinctly remembers the wintering of Washington's army at Valley Forge.

"RIVER VIEW STOCK FARM" GEO. S. PETERS, PROPRIETOR.
Sheridan County, 1902.

Mr. Carlile came to Reuben township, Harlan county, Nebraska, in 1881, and lived there up to 1906, then settled on his present place. He took up a homestead near Mascot, in Spring Grove township. He remembers many interesting events of the early days, and saw the famous Kit Carson and heard the Lincoln and Douglas debates. In 1861 he enlisted in the First Missouri Volunteer Cavalry and served in the western department under General Curtis. He was at the battle of Red Ridge and Sugar Creek, through Missouri, Arkansas, Kansas and Tennessee, and served for four years and two months in all, being mustered out in the spring of 1865. He is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Orleans post.

Mr. Carlile is engaged in farming, assisted by his son Edwin, who is of invaluable help to his father in his declining years. Our subject was married January 25, 1882, to Miss Mary Ann Cooper. Mrs. Carlile is a daughter of Enos R. Cooper, and she came from Athens county, Ohio, in 1878, and took a homestead in Phelps county, near Atlanta. Her mother was Mary A. Miller, and both parents were pioneers in Ohio. Mrs. Carlile is a lady of excellent business ability, and to her foresight and good judgment her husband attributes their present prosperity. She was educated at Albany, Ohio, and was a teacher there for nineteen terms, and after coming to Nebraska taught for four terms, coming here alone, and at once secured a title to a homestead and pre-emption containing in all three hundred and twenty acres. She was never discouraged by the failures of crops, which worked such a hardship to so many, but kept on developing her place, and also dealt in considerable land, handling altogether twelve hundred and forty acres in five different pieces, and has made handsome profits from her investments. During the years that Mr. and Mrs. Carlile have been married they have lived in five different sod houses and two frame houses, their present home being a comfortable two-story twenty-eight by thirty-two building, fitted up with all the modern improvements, and a very handsome dwelling.

There is hot and cold water connections, fine bath room, furnace and every convenience for comfort and utility. The exterior is adorned by a portico which surrounds three sides of the house, one side completely screened in to secure greater comfort for the occupants. From their home can be seen miles of beautiful rolling country, and they enjoy the refreshing breeze from these valleys, which makes it one of the most desirable locations in that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Carlile are very grateful for the events which brought them together in fertile Nebraska, and for the prosperity which has attended them. They have the blessing of thoughtful children, and the son and daughter of the house relieve their parents of many burdens, the former carrying on the farm and the latter taking much of the household work from the shoulders of her mother. The blessings of an honest, industrious and consistent life are untold, and those who have spent many years in toiling earnestly for a competence for their old age are indeed fortunate in being able to find so much peace and enjoyment as the subject of this sketch and his good wife. During the years 1881 to 1886 Mr. Carlile kept Pleasant Ridge postoffice at his house, and it was there also that the elections were held for the first ten years.

MORRIS H. REED.

Morris H. Reed, a prominent farmer and old settler of Dawes county, resides on his fine farm in section 21, township 30, range 50. He is the owner of eight hundred and eighty acres of land, which he has accumulated by dint of his honest industry and persistent labor, supplemented by good management and strict integrity. Mr. Reed is a man of successful endeavor, and is one of the substantial citizens and favorably known residents of his locality.

Mr. Reed was born in Portage county, Ohio, in 1860. His father, Harlow Reed, was a miller by trade, and later a farmer. He came of old Yankee stock, and was a native of Connecticut and married Fidelia Griffin, also of American blood. Our subject was raised in Ohio until he was four years old, when his parents moved to Ottawa county, Michigan, settling on a farm in the timbered section, and lived there for eight years. In October, 1872, they came to Nebraska and settled in Merrick county, where they went through pioneer experiences, starting a farm on the wild land, which they filed on as a homestead, and there

Morris grew to manhood, attending the country schools and assisting his parents in carrying on their farm. He lived there up to 1885, then came to Dawes county and took up a tract of land on section 21, township 30, range 50, as a pre-emption. When he landed here he had no money, driving by team from the eastern part of the state. His first dwelling place was a sod shanty while living in the eastern part of the state, and on coming farther west he put up a log cabin on his claim and lived in that for some years. Here he witnessed the drouths, losing crops for several years, also was visited by the grasshopper raids in Merrick county, and it was hard for him to get a start. However, he kept at work and finally things grew better and he was able to get together considerable stock and build up his farm in good shape. He has erected a good set of farm buildings, three wells and windmills, and the ranch is all fenced and well supplied with natural timber.

Mr. Reed was united in marriage while living in Merrick county to Almyra J. Boyce. Mrs. Reed is a daughter of S. J. Boyce, a mechanic, of Vermont, he having come west in 1885, and her mother's maiden name was Mary Caswell, also of Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have two children, namely: Ralph, aged twenty years, and Earl, aged eleven years; also one stepson, D. Miller.

The family enjoy a comfortable and happy home and are regarded as among the old-timers of the locality. Mr. Reed has always done his full share in local affairs, acting as school treasurer for five years, and is an active public-spirited citizen. He is a good neighbor and his influence is felt in all movements for the bettering of conditions in his community. Politically he is an Independent.

Mr. McMichael is a native of Crawford county, Pennsylvania, born in 1838, and is a son of Elihu and Sarah Fitzgerald McMichael. He was raised in the locality of his birthplace, and at the breaking out of the Civil war enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Infantry, serving in the Army of the Potomac at Chancellorsville and the Wil-

He was one of the bravest soldiers in his company, and was commissioned sergeant, always being at the head of the line, and in the thickest of the fight and coming out of every skirmish without receiving a scratch. After the war had closed he returned to Pennsylvania and settled in Clarion county, remaining there for several years, and in 1878 he came to Nebraska and located in North Platte. He followed the trade of a builder and contractor, and has carried on this business from the time of settling here up to the present. He has built a number of the large buildings here, and many of the finest residences in North Platte and on the ranches in this portion of Nebraska. He is conscientious and faithful in his work and has gained the confidence of all by his honest dealings and strict integrity. For many years he owned and operated a ranch in this section, but recently sold this, and devotes his entire time and attention to his profession.

HOLDING BROS.

The above firm consisting of Thomas and Robert Holding, are extensive ranchmen in Dawes county, Nebraska, where for many years past they have aided in the development of the agricultural and commercial resources of their section, and have incidentally built up a valuable ranch in section 25, township 32, range 51, and gained an enviable reputation as energetic workers and good business men.

W. H. PULLEN AND FAMILY.

Thomas Holding was born in Lancashire county, England, March 19, 1866, and Robert was born at the same place October 21, 1867, there being but eighteen months difference in their ages. The father, also Thomas Holding, was a stone mason by trade, and lived in England all his life, his death occurring in 1887. He married Dorothy Lawrence, of Lancashire county, and three of her brothers were early settlers in Illinois, coming to this country in the '50s. Our subjects were reared in their native land and came to America in 1884, settling in Illinois, Robert remaining for some years, while in 1888 Thomas returned to England, where he was married to Miss Mary Jane Wearing, whose father, Richard Wearing, was a large cotton mill manager, both Thomas and Robert having worked in the cotton mills before coming to this country. The former remained in England for three years after his marriage, then came back to America, locating in Dawes county, Nebraska, where Robert had settled in 1889. He had a very small start, and had borrowed money to put in his first crop, and "batched it" until his brother came to join him, and the brothers have worked together ever since then. They have built up a good ranch consisting of one thousand acres, situated along West Ash creek, and have good buildings, fences, and all improvements, and are engaged in the raising of hay and alfalfa, and cultivate about eighty acres, on which they raise small grains. They run quite a large number of cattle, hogs and horses, and are considered among the foremost farmers and ranchmen of Dawes county, highly esteemed by everyone with whom they have to do. They have a considerable part of their land under irrigation, and it is a valuable property.

From the time of coming to this locality they have done their full share in every movement for the advancement of their county's interest, and are among the leading old settlers of Dawes county.

Thomas Holding has one son, Tom L., Jr., aged fifteen years.

WILLIS H. PULLEN.

One of the leading old settlers of Dawes county, Nebraska, is the gentleman whose name heads this review. His labors in this section have aided materially the development of the region, and his name will occupy a prominent place in history as one of those intimately identified with its growth and progress.

Mr. Pullen was born in Michigan, May 11, 1858. His father, J. H. Pullen, was a farmer and old settler in Dawes county, born in Michigan, and he married Miss Aurilla Rowley, whose parents were pioneers in Michigan, where she was reared and educated. When our subject was two years old his parents came to Nebraska, settling near Omaha, the father securing employment as a mule driver for the United States government, the country all around here being then a perfect wilderness. They lived in the eastern part of the state for many years, Willis receiving his education there, also assisting his parents in carrying on the farm work, and when he was twenty-one years of age he married and started farming for himself in Burt county, remaining on the farm for a year, then moved into the town of Decatur, Burt county, Nebraska, where he worked as a mail carrier, traveling between that place and Onawa, Iowa, and followed this up to the fall of 1884. The following year he came to Dawes county, arriving here April 3d, driving through by team, camping out along the road during the trip. He located four miles north of Crawford, where he built a log house in which he lived for seven years, proving up on their homestead, and often working under difficulties, being obliged to do all the work of the farm with a team of mules. In the fall of 1885 he shipped in a car load of cattle, and this was his start in the stock business, at once engaging in dairying, cheese making and poultry raising. He had nothing to begin with, and depended entirely on his own unaided efforts, and from such a start has accumulated a nice property, and has a comfortable and pleasant home. About 1891 or 1892 he moved into the town of Crawford and for two or three years was in the dairy business there. He next moved to the Fort Robinson reservation and was in the same line of work for about thirteen years. He purchased his present farm, located in section 22, township 31, range 52, in 1899, consisting of four hundred and eighty acres, with eighty acres cultivated, and has twelve acres under irrigation. He also owns a ranch of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres sixteen miles west on Head Soldier creek, Sioux county, with one of the finest never failing springs in the county, and there he runs a large herd of cattle. He keeps a hundred horses, and has his place in the finest shape possible, with good buildings and improvements. He has a fine orchard of apples, cherries and plums, also gooseberry and strawberry patches, which furnish the family with plenty of fruit.

Mr. Pullen was united in marriage while living in Burt county, to Miss Estella Heath, who was a school teacher in the county schools. Her father was Marvin H. Heath, of American stock, a farmer by occupation, and her mother's maiden name was Lucy Smith, of Vermont. To Mr. and Mrs. Pullen four children have been born, namely: Effie, Clarence and Leslie, born in Burt county, and Mildred, born in Crawford, Dawes county, Nebraska. Portraits of the family will be found on another page of this volume.

Mr. Pullen is interested in all local affairs of importance, and has been school treasurer for a term of years. He is a strong Republican. During the first years in this locality our subject worked as a freighter, and was the man who hauled the first load of hardware into Crawford.

WILLIAM P. S. THOMPSON.

The gentleman here named, one of the old-timers in western Nebraska, who has spent many years in the work of building up a farm and home in the agricultural district surrounding the town of Johnstown, Brown county, is a prominent citizen and good neighbor, highly esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Thompson was born in Morgan county, Ohio, April 21, 1855. He is a son of Ellis Thompson, a farmer of Irish descent, and his mother was Miss Martha Roundsen, of German lineage; they raised a family of six children, our subject being the third member. The family moved to Wisconsin about 1858, where he was reared and educated, attending the country schools and assisting his father in the farm work until he was twenty years of age. At this time he left home and started out for himself, continuing in farm work for six years.

He moved to Brown county in November, 1883, having filed on his land the fall of 1882, and settled on the farm he now occupies, located in section 3, township 30, range 23; it consists of three hundred and twenty acres in the home place and one hundred and sixty acres in section 34. This place was utterly without improvements, and the family was obliged to live the first winter in a house belonging to Byron Chase, a brother of Mrs. Thompson. In the spring of 1884, he put up a frame house and began breaking up land for a crop: the first being only nine acres of wheat which gave a fairly good yield. He was just getting nicely started when the dry years came on, losing the whole of one crop and saving but little of two others. These were hard times for him, and he became almost discouraged, often ready to give up his farm, but went bravely on, gradually getting better crops and building up his place; he has been richly rewarded for his perseverance and industry, for he is now proprietor of a farm of four hundred and eighty acres, one hundred and eighty acres of which is highly cultivated, raising splendid crops, and the balance is used for pasture and hay land. He has erected a complete set of substantial farm buildings, consisting of a neat, substantial house, fitted with every convenience and comfort of a rural home, also in 1906 built a large barn, size thirty-two by forty-two feet; there are a number of smaller buildings, sheds, etc., and all machinery necessary for the successful operation of a model farm. Not the least noteworthy features are a large orchard and many forest trees well distributed on the farm. October 14, 1876, Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Nettie Chase, a native of Wisconsin. Her father, Murray Chase, was a carpenter by trade, and later a farmer, being one of the pioneer settlers in the Badger state. He came to Brown county in the early days, his death occurring here July 14, 1897. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, named as follows: Carrie A. (deceased), Stella L., Cora A., Emma G., and Luthera A. and William A. (deceased), the three eldest born in Wisconsin, and the younger ones in Brown county. Cora is the wife of John Castleman and the mother of two children, Mildred M. and William C.

Mr. Thompson came to this locality with but small capital, and has gathered together a comfortable competence through his untiring energy and good business judgment: he is now prepared to enjoy the fruits of his labors and take it easy for the balance of his years, surrounded by his family and many warm friends. He takes a personal interest in all local affairs and lends his influence for the bettering of conditions in his community. Mr. Thompson is Independent in politics, is a member of the Methodist church and affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America of Johnstown.

ALBERT S. ROSS.

Albert S. Ross, residing on section 17 of township 16, range 42, Deuel county, was born in Lee county, Iowa, on the 30th of March, 1860, being the seventh in a family of eleven children, of whom another, Mrs. Brunt, is a resident of Deuel county.

In the early spring of 1884, the emigration fever took possession of him, and he went westward, settling for a short time in Otoe county, Nebraska, and then in Buffalo county, of the same state. In the fall of the same year he moved to Perkins county, which at that time was called Keith county, where he took up a homestead and having proved up on same, went to Deuel county in the year 1890. He settled at Bigspring, going back and forth from there to the place of his present residence. In 1900 he moved into the vicinity of Lewellen for permanent residence, while the home ranch is located on section 17, township 16, range 42, and contains one hundred and twenty acres, of which one hundred acres are under cultivation.

Like every other early settler of western Nebraska, Mr. Ross was not spared from the trials, hardships and troubles of frontier life, but his zealousness and untiring efforts were crowned with success and to-day Mr. Ross can look back on these times of troubles and trials with the clear conscience that he has done the right thing by everybody.

Mr. Ross is married to Sara Clarke, a native of Pennsylvania, whose mother is still living in that state. The wedding ceremony took place in North Platte on February 15, 1903. They have three children, namely: Mary E., Ida and Richard, who are all at home.

Mr. Ross, a Republican, is well known and well liked and having the interest and welfare of his county and state at heart, he was elected county commissioner in the fall of 1904, and re-elected in 1907 for a term of three years, now serving on his second term.

Mr. Ross was a bachelor at the time he took up his claim and passed through the "ups and downs" incident to bachelor life on the frontier. He has been engaged in farming practically all the time since coming to Nebraska.

Mrs. Ross came to western Nebraska in 1887 and she too has experienced the vicissitudes of pioneer life on the frontier.

FRED SCHIPPOREIT.

Fred Schipporeit, one of the leading and most influential stock raisers of Blaine county, was born in East Prussia, Germany, in 1865. His father, Christian, was born in Germany and served in the German army in the war with France in 1870 and 1871. The mother's maiden name was Henriette Schnidereit. Our subject's father was a boatman and farmer in his native land.

In 1876 the whole family came to America, landing in New York city, from whence they came west and lived in the city of Omaha for eight years, the father finding employment in the packing houses of that great city. In 1884 the family came to Blaine county, Nebraska, being the first family that settled in German valley. North Loup, eighty-five miles away, was their nearest railroad point, and our subject has made many trips over this distance for supplies, sleeping under the wagon in all kinds of weather in both winter and summer. For timber and poles they had to go to Snake creek, in Cherry county, and these trips required nine days. The first three months the family slept under the wagon tent and wagon box and then moved into a new sod house. They located on land north of Brewster, where our subject and his father were together for several years, and then the son came to his present beautiful farm. He now owns one thousand four hundred and forty acres and the father, who now lives with the son, has nearly a thousand acres.

Fred Schipporeit was married in the year 1889 to Miss Anna Wendt, daughter of Ferdinand and Emily (Schmeling) Wendt, old settlers of Blaine county. Mr. and Mrs. Schipporeit have eight children: Clara, Edward, Fred, Annie, Lottie, Rudolph, Otto and Walter.

Mr. Schipporeit had to experience his full share of hardships that usually fell to the lot of the pioneer of his section. He had to live in a sod house for years—he witnessed several years of drouth and crop failures and had other losses; but he always made a living and kept steadily adding to the improvements of his farm. He has a good house, thirty by thirty-two feet, two stories high, and very fine barn, wells, windmills, fences, and many other improvements that go to make up an up-to-date ranch. He is engaged largely in stock raising and is making a great success. He has always been public-spirited and has taken great interest in matters of local affairs, having held various offices in his community. He was assessor one term. Mr. Schipporeit is regarded as one of Blaine county's most successful citizens and is highly regarded by his friends and associates. Scheduling postoffice was established on our subject's farm in 1907, and kept in his house.

SAMUEL J. HETH.

Samuel J. Heth, who may be found in fair weather or foul, busy in the work of his farm in section 13, township 33, range 29, is widely known as one of the active and progressive young farmers of Cherry county, Nebraska, and is rapidly taking a fine position in the business and commercial circles of the day. Quick and positive in his conclusions, he is as prompt in action, and has acquired an enviable reputation as a prosperous and successful farmer and a thoroughly reliable and public-spirited citizen.

Mr. Heth was born on a farm in Benton county, Iowa, March 4, 1874, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. From the first he was familiar with hard work, and when his father, Horace L. Heth, came into Cherry county in 1884, and opened a homestead farm on the Niobrara river, he found his ten-year-old son a very considerable assistance in his pressing and multifarious activities.

Mr. Heth struck out for himself at the very early age of fourteen years, and from that time has carried the burden of his own support. As a lad he sought employment wherever he could obtain it, working in Wyoming in 1893 and in Kansas three years later, and he has worked, as he declares, all over Cherry county. In 1898 he secured a homestead entry on one hundred and sixty acres of choice government land, only nine miles from Valentine, on the Niobrara river, where in company with his brother, Ernest, he built a log house of good size, keeping "batch" for lack of a house-keeper. Their outfit was small, only three horses and a few farming tools; but their courage was large, and they have built up a very desirable property. In 1905 the brothers "proved up" on their homestead, and very promptly sold it, the subject of this sketch taking a Kincaid homestead of four hundred and eighty acres in section 13, while Ernest located on the hay lands further south. Here he owns four hundred and eighty acres, on which he has a good concrete house and barn, and other farm buildings well suited to his needs, with a fine well and a windmill. All the land is fenced with forty acres under cultivation, which by his careful management is becoming very valuable property.

Mr. Heth was married June 7, 1902, to Miss Hannah Petersen, whose parents, Jens and Kirsten (Jensen) Petersen, were natives of Denmark. She was born in Worth, Iowa, coming with her parents to Cherry county, Nebraska, in 1893. Jens Petersen, her father, was one of the successful pioneers in the county. To the marriage of Samuel Heth and wife have come two children, Pearl and Merton. Mr. Heth was reared in the Methodist church, while Mrs. Heth is an adherent of the Lutheran faith.

Ernest Heth, who is mentioned above as associated with his brother in their various farming operations, was born in Tama county, Iowa, October 25, 1870, where when he was but ten months old he met with accidental injuries which made him a cripple for life. He is ambitious and capable, and is not disposed to favor himself on account of his crippled condition save where he is compelled to do so. He has many friends and is a worthy companion of his brother. He sold his interest in the homestead in October, 1907.

PETER BAHR.

Peter Bahr, a prominent farmer of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, is one of the men in this section of the country who carries on a diversified system of agriculture in a most successful manner, with a result that richly rewards his thrift and industry. Mr. Bahr was born in Pomerania, Germany, September 24, 1852. His father, mother and brothers are still living in Germany, he being the only one of his family to leave the fatherland and emigrate to the new world. He remained at home attending the common schools until he was fourteen years old, then began as a sailor and followed that work for seven years. During the time he was sailing he visited North and South America, China, Japan, Australia, and was all over the globe, and this was a liberal education in itself. He gave up the work at the age of twenty-one years, and struck out for the United States; he left Brazil with the intention of making a visit with an old schoolmate in Richardson county, Nebraska, they having kept up a correspondence during his years on the sea. After a visit with his old boyhood friend he decided to settle in Richardson county, in 1873, and in the spring of 1875 rented a farm, on which he remained until 1883, when he first came to Keya Paha county, locating on a farm at the mouth of Wyman creek, driving from Stuart. His first building was a log house, which he erected himself on a homestead, and he lived there up to about 1894, proving up on his claim, then moved to section 33, township 33, range 19, remaining on the latter place for two years. At the end of this time he purchased his present home in section 31, township 33, range 19, known as the Hamilton Sidner place, situated at the head of Wyman creek. He has added to this until at the present time he owns five hundred and sixty acres of deeded land, and has leased three hundred and twenty acres adjoining this piece. He has put up good buildings and many improvements, the farm being the largest within a radius of many miles. There is a good growth of natural timber on the place, and it is admirably adapted to stock and grain raising. When he started here his sole possessions were a team of horses and wagon; from this he has accumulated this valuable property through his energetic labor and good management, supplemented by thrift and industry. He has under cultivation two hundred and twenty acres, his farm being all fenced and cross-fenced. A view of the buildings from the bluff to the west is to be seen on another page.

In 1878 Mr. Bahr was married in Richardson county to Miss Ernestine Kussmann, a native of Germany, who came to America with her parents when a little girl. Fourteen children were the result of this union, named as follows: Albert, Edith, Lillie, Peter, Ernest (deceased), Anna, Willie, Emma, Nellie, Jennie, LeRoy, who died in infancy, Dora, Ory and Elta, all of whom excepting the first three having been born in Keya Paha county. The family is highly respected in the community, and all are filling honorable places, the younger members being still in school.

Mr. Bahr is one of the oldest settlers in the county, and was one of those who helped organize Keya Paha county in 1885, and voted at the first election ever held here. He has aided materially in its development and progress and his name will figure in the history of the locality as one of the leading residents of this section.

He is a Populist in politics, and always takes an active part in party affairs, attending the state and county conventions, and lending his influence for good government. He was elected county commissioner in 1907. He is a member of the Masonic order and the Royal Highlanders of Springview. The family are all members of the Evangelical Lutheran church.

HENRY B. HOLMES.

Henry B. Holmes, editor and proprietor of the Franklin County Tribune, published at Bloomington, established this newspaper in 1906, and from the start has made a pronounced success of the enterprise. The paper is independent in politics, and handles all the current topics of the hour in a bright and newsy manner, highly interesting and instructive to its readers.

Mr. Holmes is a native of this county, born in 1880, and is a representative Nebraskan.

His father, also named Henry B., came to Franklin county in 1873, locating in Bloomington township, where he was engaged in farming up to 1884, when he died, aged forty years. He was a veteran of the Civil war, enlisting in 1863 in the First Vermont Cavalry, Company K, serving in the Army of the Potomac under General Custer, up to the close of the war. He was a native of Johnson, Vermont, and married Mary E. Hebb, of the same place, daughter of Ed. Hebb, now of Bloomington. Our subject also has a brother, Edwin J., who is a hardware merchant of Bloomington, and another, Leonard E., of Bloomington township, a farmer and stock raiser there.

Mr. Holmes is a man of superior education and attainments. He attended the State University literary course for three years, and prior to that the Bloomington high school, of which he is a graduate of the class of 1896.

In 1906 our subject was united in marriage to Miss Bessie Dunn. Mrs. Holmes is a daughter of William Dunn, a prominent merchant of Bloomington. Politically Mr. Holmes is a Democrat, always standing for the best man. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias lodges, of which he is an active member.

ALBERT HADLEY.

Albert Hadley, of Box Butte county, is numbered among the oldest settlers and leading old timers of western Nebraska, landing here September 20, 1886, with only sixty-five cents in his pocket after buying enough lumber to build his house with. From that small beginning he has accumulated a comfortable property and is now prepared to take life easy and enjoy the fruits of his labors, surrounded by a large circle of warm friends and good neighbors.

Mr. Hadley was born in Worcester county, Massachusetts, December 4, 1836, on a farm. His father was of English descent, who married Mary Knowlton, a widow with seven children, who afterwards was the mother of seven more children, making fourteen children by the two marriages.

Our subject grew up in New England, following farm work through his boyhood years, and remained in that vicinity up to 1866, with the exception of several years, which were spent in the army. He enlisted in Company B, Sixteenth Massachusetts Infantry, April 19, 1861, being mustered into the service July 2, 1862. He saw service with the Army of the Potomac for three years and twenty-seven days. He took part in the battle of Gettysburg, and on the second day of that action was severely wounded.

After the war Mr. Hadley returned to his native state and remained for a year, then went to New York state and spent a year in the lumber woods. After that he went to Ohio, locating at Akron, and spent a year there, and from there to Gibson county, Indiana, where he lived for fifteen years, working in different saw mills running stationary and portable steam engines. For some time while living in that vicinity he was employed as a traveling agent for the Walter A. Wood Harvester Company. In 1886 Mr. Hadley first saw Box Butte county, landing here on September 30th. Hay Springs was his nearest railroad point and he was obliged to make many trips there and back for supplies, a distance of seventy or eighty miles. Mr. Hadley says he has seen as many as two hundred antelope in a drove, when he first came here in 1886, and has shot many a one to have meat for himself and family to live on. He filed on his present homestead in section 22, township 26, range 47, in 1886, and proved up on the claim. He built up and improved the place, and is now owner of one hundred and sixty acres, with forty of this under cultivation. Since locating in this region he has gone through many hardships and discouragements, suffering failure of crops, etc., but never gave up hope, and is well repaid for his efforts in the nice property he has gotten together. Mr. Hadley states that he went to school after he was forty years old at a college in South Dakota; says he did not think himself quite smart enough, so concluded he would attend college for a while.

JOACHIM CHRISTIAN DAVID MARKWARDT.

J. C. David Markwardt, proprietor of a fine estate in Anderson township, is a prominent citizen of this locality, respected and esteemed by his fellowmen.

Mr. Markwardt came to America from Germany in 1855, where he was born near Mecklenburg, locating in Niagara county, New York, and through hard day labor in six years he had laid by three hundred and eighty dollars, and was swindled out of his hard earned money. His first vote was cast for Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he came west to Oshkosh, Wisconsin, where he worked out by the month and soon had enough money saved to buy forty acres of wooded land, and went to work clearing this, working incessantly, often chopping down trees and grubbing by moonlight. In three years time he bought twenty acres more, and remained on this sixty for eighteen years, when his industry was rewarded, for he sold this property for four thousand dollars, and taking this money he came to Phelps county, Nebraska, in 1879. Through the Kearney bank failure he lost quite a sum, but he worked so hard and managed so well that he has accumulated a nice property comprising seven hundred and twenty acres of land to be divided among his three children.

Mr. Markwardt has been a great observer of men and events, and read a great deal so that he can in his old age clearly recall all public men who figured in the development and onward progress, politically and materially, of this county since he came to it in 1855, and can tell you what each man stood for. He, too, has his own opinions on all public questions, and to him the farmer is the foundation of all material welfare, and "as the horse that does the work should have the oats," so the farmer should have the most consideration in public affairs, and the laws should aid and prefer him along all lines. In his old age he says to all: "Keep on the level. If you should stumble you are not much hurt, and are up and on again. If you soar in ambition for riches and fame to the lofty heights, and stumble, you are lost. Be honest, sober and careful of debt." And this policy he has always followed. He also says that if he owes or ever cheated any man out of ten cents' worth he will give all he has on proof. He also can say that he was never the worse for liquor, and such men as he have in America added greatly to the reputation of the German people for thrift, honesty and contentment in their labors and lot.

Mr. Markwardt was married while still in Germany, to Miss Maria Dorothy Weckart. They have three living children, as follows: I. D., Maria Dorothy, now Mrs. Swartwood, and Emma Elizabeth, now Mrs. Snyder, all of Anderson township. Since coming to Phelps county three children have died.

Mr. Markwardt and his family are members of the Lutheran church, and earnest workers in that faith. They are esteemed highly as a family, and enjoy the friendship of all who know them.

AUGUST L. RING.

August L. Ring, one of the leading old settlers of western Nebraska, was born in Skona, Sweden, in 1866. He was raised on his father's farm, and assisted in the work of carrying on their place during his boyhood, and at the age of seventeen left his native land and struck out for himself, coming to the United States. His father and mother lived and died in the old country.

RESIDENCE OF S. B. F. DOWNING.
Keya Paha County, Nebraska.

Mr. Ring spent about a year and a half in New York state after landing in America, following farm work, then came to eastern Nebraska, and located in Burt county, where he followed farming for a short time. In the spring of 1886 he came to Sioux county, joining a camp on the White river, where he worked at cutting and hauling ties for railroad construction, and spent a few months. In June of that year he settled on a tract of land on Antelope creek, building a log cabin and started a farm, "batching it" and living all alone. He spent most of the time in working on the railroad, going into Wyoming, at Cheyenne and Douglass, and in this way managed to earn quite a little money, which he used to build up his homestead. Eventually he proved up on the claim and remained on it up to 1890, then moved to his present location on section 12, township 34, range 56. He first tried to farm, but soon found that conditions were unfavorable, as he lost several crops during the dry years and from various causes, so he determined that the stock business was the only one for his locality and got together a small herd of cattle and began raising calves, gradually increasing his herd. He had good success from the start, and constantly improved his place and added to his acreage, so that he is now owner of one thousand four hundred and forty acres, and leases six hundred and forty acres besides, all of which is fenced and supplied with a good set of substantial farm buildings. He farms about fifty acres, raising small grain. Since settling on this place Mr. Ring has built three dams in Antelope creek, and has a large patch of ground under irrigation. He has large fields of hay and alfalfa, cutting about one hundred tons of the latter each year, and fifty tons of wheat grass hay. Mr. Ring has had many losses since settling here, in 1892 suffering severe loss by fire, which consumed his crop of one hundred bushels of corn, machinery, sheds, thirty tons of hay and some hogs.

In 1887 Mr. Ring was united in marriage to Miss Alice Peterson, a native of his own land, who came to America with her parents and were early settlers in Sioux county. Seven children have been born to this union, namely: Lee E., Edna J., Minnie E., Lillie E., Amy M., Edith S. and Helen M.

Mr. Ring is a wide-awake citizen, of active public spirit, and a leading old-timer of his locality. Besides his ranching operations, our subject is the owner of a threshing outfit, which he runs each season, and is well-known to all in the county, as he has worked for many of the farmers and is known to all as an energetic, honest and hardworking citizen.

STEVEN B. F. DOWNING.

A leading old settler and one who has taken an active part in the development and growth of Keya Paha county from its beginning, is to be found in the person above named. Mr. Downing resides on section 29, township 33, range 23, McGuire precinct, where he has one of the valuable estates in this part of the country, and is highly esteemed as a worthy citizen and good neighbor.

Mr. Downing was born in Carroll county, Illinois, December 27, 1844. His father, Herman Downing, was a farmer and carpenter, who came from Massachusetts and settled in northern Illinois soon after the Black Hawk war, working in Chicago when there were only about three hundred inhabitants. The mother was Rachel Holbrook, from New York, and both the parents were of good American blood and they had a family of nine children, of whom our subject was the fifth. He was reared and educated in the state of his birth, Bureau county, Illinois, whither the family moved in 1855, and when a young man went to Topeka, where he spent a short time, then to Boone and Union counties, Iowa, clerking two years in the county treasurer's office and two years in a store, then followed farming up to 1884, having purchased a one hundred and twenty-acre farm. In the latter year he moved to Keya Paha county, locating on section 27, township 33, range 23, and still owns this place. Here he built a log house and went through the usual pioneer experiences, witnessing the dry seasons of 1893, 1894 and 1895, when he was unable to raise any crops. In 1885 a wind storm took the roof off his house, and did considerable damage besides. However, he stuck to the place through hard times and has built up a fine farm and home of six hundred and forty acres, nearly all fenced and with two hundred acres cultivated. He has six hundred fruit trees, all bearing, plenty of running water with a number of fine springs. He has good substantial farm buildings and all the necessary equipment for running his farm by advanced methods of agriculture, and is one of the progressive and up-to-date agriculturists in this vicinity. A view of his large dwelling, new barn and other buildings, with the magnificent landscape, is to be found elsewhere in the work.

Mr. Downing was married in Topeka in 1873 to Miss Esther M. Wright, daughter of Joseph J. and Sarah (Murdock) Wright. Mr. and Mrs. Downing have ten living children, namely: Angela, Emma, Esther, Heman, Lila, Joseph, Halsey, Sarah, Rachel, Belva and Arthur.

In the early days of settlement here bands of twenty-five to thirty Indians frequently passed through his place, crossing the river to hunt in the sand hills.

Our subject is a member of the school board and has always taken a deep interest in educational affairs. He is a Republican.

RASMUS JOHNSON.

Rasmus Johnson, a progressive and highly respected farmer of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, has a well-kept and comfortable estate in section 6, township 34, range 22. He is one of the earliest settlers in this part of the state, and his property here has been gained only by the hardest work, strict economy and excellent management. The hardships which have fallen to Mr. Johnson would have heartily discouraged one of a less persistent nature, but have only tended to make him more determined and spurred him to stronger action. With undaunted courage he has faced misfortunes, sufferings and hardships incident to the life of a pioneer of the western states, but has remained to enjoy a fitting reward for his labors.

Mr. Johnson was born in the village of Emegarde, Denmark, March 3, 1851. His father, a farmer, never left his native land, and died there when our subject was four years old, leaving his widow with a family of eight children to rear, and from the time Rasmus was six years of age he supported himself besides aiding in keeping the rest of the family. When he was fifteen he went to Copenhagen and learned the trade of a brick mason, and for fifteen years worked at this in Denmark. In 1881 he came to America, sailing from Bremenhaven in the vessel Hokenstaufen, and after landing in New York city, immediately started for the west, locating in Warren county, Indiana. He served as a farm laborer two years and was engaged in the same pursuit later in Illinois.

In 1884 Mr. Johnson came to Nebraska, and settled on his present farm in section 6, township 34, range 22, Keya Paha county. He first built a sod house, stable and chicken house. He did not have a cent of money to start with after getting his homestead, and worked at anything he could find to do while proving up on his place, remaining on it steadily from the first. He put in two tree claims for other men for which he received small pay, and for eighteen months "batched it", working at odd times in the improvement of his place. He was getting along fairly well until the dry years came, when he found it hard to make a living; after trying for four years to raise enough to keep himself and family from starving he decided to leave the place and locate elsewhere. Going to Colorado he tried irrigation, but did not like it in that country and returned after a year and a half, again attempting farming. He has prospered since that time, and now has five hundred and sixty acres of good land, of which he cultivates two hundred acres. He has erected a fine set of farm buildings, splendid grove and orchard, two wells and windmills, and altogether has one of the best equipped farms in the county. When he returned from Colorado he found the place dilapidated and found it difficult to get things into good condition again, but by hard work and perseverance managed to put it in first-class order and make a valuable property out of it. At the time when conditions were most distressing he offered to sell the whole place for a hundred dollars, and was unable to find a buyer.

Mr. Johnson was married in 1886 to Miss Anna Larson, a native of Denmark, near the former's birthplace; she came to America with her parents and family in 1884, settling in Nebraska. To Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have been born the following children: Goetchel, Anna, Lawrence, Hans and Henry, all of them born and reared in Keya Paha county.

Mr. Johnson has always been one of the foremost men in advancing the interests of the region where he chose his home. He was one of the organizers of the first school here, and gave land on which the first school house was built. In politics he favors the Labor party.

NOAH MOSS.

Noah Moss, the popular and efficient postmaster of Clinton, is one of the well-known business men of that village and a substantial citizen of Sheridan county, where he has resided for many years.

Mr. Moss was born in Green county, Indiana, in 1850. His father, Jonathan J. Moss, and his mother, Priscilla Doughtry Moss, were both born and raised in Indiana. When he reached the age of eighteen he struck out for himself, working on farms in the neighborhood in which he lived by the month, and followed this occupation until after his marriage in 1869. In 1885 he came west and located in Sheridan county, Nebraska, two miles northeast of Clinton. He built a sod house and lived in this until after proving up on his homestead, then moved nearer the school, but never left the locality. In 1899 he bought his present home of three hundred and twenty acres, well improved, and since then has added to it considerably. This is all good farming land and he has it well stocked and fitted with all kinds of machinery necessary for operating the farm. In addition to this he conducts a general merchandise store and runs the post-office in Clinton, also being a grain buyer for the firm of Nye, Snyder & Fowler Company. When he started in this locality he had little or no capital to begin on, besides having a large family to support, and for some years he worked at teaming, driving oxen. He has seen some hard times since coming here and gone through some tough experiences as a homesteader, but never has seen the time when he felt like giving up and leaving the country, but says he has been just as happy with a single dollar in his pocket as he is now amid peace and plenty. He has worked hard for the success he has attained and well merits the high standing accorded him as one of the leading men of his community.

Mr. Moss was married August 1, 1869, to Miss Sarah E. Moss, born in Indiana in 1851. Her father was a native of Indiana and came to Nebraska in 1884, where he died seven years later. Twelve children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Moss, who are named as follows: Mary A., Priscilla, Laura E., Charles O., William L., John J., Effie I., Emmet O., Bessie, Blanche, Frank and Ina B., all of whom are now grown. They also have seventeen grandchildren.

Mr. Moss has met with pronounced success in his different lines of work and has built up a fine home and gained valuable possessions by dint of his own labors and good management, supplemented by strict integrity of word and deed. He has an extended acquaintance and is universally esteemed as a friend and citizen. Since 1888 he has voted the Populist ticket, and has always taken an active interest in politics, at different times holding local offices.

ISAAC W. REES.

The gentleman above named is one of the earliest settlers of Perkins county, and a prosperous business man of the town of Elsie. He was a homesteader here and improved a large tract of land in Marvin precinct, coming to Elsie several years ago, and is now engaged in the buying and shipping of stock. He occupies a comfortable residence here and is one of the well-known and highly respected citizens of his community.

Mr. Rees was born in Delaware county, Indiana, in 1846, and was reared on a farm. Both his father and mother were natives of West Virginia, settling in Indiana during their youth, where they built up a good home. Our subject received his education at the district schools, remained at home until during the Civil war, when he enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-seventh Indiana Infantry and served six months. After returning from the war he bought a small farm in Indiana and lived on it up to 1882, then emigrated with many other newcomers to the state of Nebraska, settling at first in Saunders county, where he spent three years, coming to Perkins county in April, 1885. He made the journey from Saunders county with a team and covered wagon, following the course of the Platte river, and then across from Paxton. He immediately filed on a claim on section 35, township 9, range 35, built a sod shanty after living for a time in a tent during the summer, and began to break land for sod crops.

All his supplies had to be hauled from North Platte and Ogallala, and he made many trips to those points through all sorts of severe weather, often camping out along the way and experiencing every form of exposure. He had many hardships to contend with during the first few years, going through the drouth seasons when he was unable to raise a crop, and often suffered privations and discomfort, but overcame all obstacles and succeeded in improving his farm in good shape, remaining on it up to 1906, when he owned three hundred and twenty acres of good land, well improved and stocked up in fine shape. He then came to Elsie. He has bought stock all over the country and is familiar with every corner of the county and surrounding region, and enjoys an enviable reputation as a square-dealing business man and shrewd trader.

In 1869 Mr. Rees was married in Indiana to Miss Margaret Carmichael, born and reared in the same county with our subject. They have a nice family of eight children, all now settled in good positions. They are named as follows: William, Roscoe, Minnie, Tasey, John, Harry, Frank and Maud, the last named a teacher in Lincoln, Nebraska. William was for several years an instructor in the Chilli-cothe Business College, and is now at Florence, Colorado, connected with one of the large oil companies at that point.

Mr. Rees is one of the best known old settlers in this part of Nebraska, and has always been found a worthy citizen, laboring at all times for the development and advancement of his locality. He held the office of county assessor for some years, and for twenty years was on the school board.

WILBER E. YOUNG.

For nearly a quarter of a century the gentleman whose name heads this review has been identified with the history of the development of western Nebraska, and his large property interests in Cherry county evidence his early labors during these many years.

He has succeeded in building up a good home and is one of the highly esteemed citizens of his township.

Mr. Young was born in Camden, Maine, in 1856. His father, John W. Young, was an American, a fisherman by occupation, born in Lincolnville, Maine, in 1818; was married to Lyddie Richards, of Lincolnville, and to this union were born eleven children: Clarenda E., Mary J., Lois A., Herbert L., Linley E., Wilber E., Roscoe J., Calvin H., Louis E., Alie and Freddie Young.

Wilber E. Young at the age of fifteen moved to Lowell, Massachusetts, and there began learning the carpenter trade. In 1875 he moved to Butler county, Nebraska, working at his trade. Here he was married to Alice A. Smith in 1888. She was the daughter of Chauncey and Melvina Smith, natives of New York and Ohio. They are the parents of five children: Arvilla (deceased), Alice A., Lucy E., Alva, Goodell B. and Guy A.

In 1879 they moved to Grenola, Kansas, and remained there two years, and during that time he built a town of seven hundred population. Then, on account of his health, they returned to Bellwood, Nebraska. They remained there until 1885, when they moved to Gordon, Sheridan county, Nebraska. There he took a homestead. He located here just before the railroad was built through this section, and when he landed on his homestead his entire capital was three horses and thirty cents in money. He remained there and proved up, then moved to Cherry county, Nebraska, and lived on a pre-emption claim, where he was living at the time of the Wounded Knee battle. A good many of the neighbors fled to Gordon for safety, but they remained on their ranch and looked after their property and cattle. After the Kincaid homestead act was passed he took his additional right, and is still living on this place. He has improved his property with the best buildings in this part of the country.

Mr. and Mrs. Young are the parents of five children: Addie N., Irvie H., Bertha M., Myrtle B. and Dale R., all born in Nebraska.

WILLIAM H. PETERS.

William H. Peters, residing on section 7, township 29, range 45, Sheridan county, was born in Calumet county, Wisconsin, in 1869, and was raised there on his father's farm. He is a son of Peter Peters, of Holland birth, who came to America in early pioneer days, locating in Wisconsin when a young man. The mother was also a native of Holland, coming to America when a child of ten. There was a family of eleven children, of whom our subject was the sixth member, and he started out for himself at the age of twenty-one. He had worked out quite a good deal before that time, but was obliged to give his wages to his father to help in the support of the family. He was employed for three years prior to his coming of age in a cheese box factory in the vicinity of his home, and afterward worked for the same length of time in the factory for himself.

In February, 1893, Mr. Peters came to Nebraska, locating in this county, where he bought his present home of one hundred and sixty acres, paying eleven hundred and seventy-five dollars cash for the land, and enough left with which to start his farm. The first year he put in a crop of one hundred and twenty-five acres and had a good yield, then for several years had poor luck, but during all the time he kept picking up cattle and gradually increasing his herd up to 1901, then traded his cattle for a large herd of sheep. His first venture in this line was with a bunch of sheep on shares, as he had very little money left by this time, and he was moderately successful from the first. He kept on farming a little each year, getting some crop, and always managed to raise enough feed for his stock and plenty of corn. He has eight hundred acres of land now, cultivating one hundred and fifty, but intends farming on a larger scale in the future. Most of his time is devoted to the raising of sheep and horses, running eight hundred of the former and about fifteen horses. He is a great lover of good horses, and were it not for the money in sheep would prefer to handle horses altogether. During the year 1906, which was an unusually good one, he cleared fifteen hundred dollars on his bunch of eight hundred sheep, and will continue in that work as long as he is on his present place. He also deals in hogs, and last year sold three hundred dollars' worth of them. Mr. Peters has seen the ups and downs of pioneer life, and although he has never had to go through the hardships and privations which fell to the lot of his parents in the early days, he has done much better here than he could had he stayed in Wisconsin.

SHEEP RANCH OF W. H. PETERS,

In 1893 Mr. Peters was married to Miss Elizabeth Schmitt, a native of Sheboygan county, Wisconsin. She is a daughter of Joseph Schmitt and Mary (Ramer) Schmitt, both natives of Germany, the father dying when Mrs. Peters was a young girl. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peters, as follows: Joseph, Martin, Anton, Albert, Minnie, Esther and Frank, all born and raised in this locality. The family enjoy the best of health, and since coming here have never had to call a doctor to the place. At one time one of the children dislocated a shoulder in an accident about the farm, and this cost them two dollars, which is all they have ever paid for a doctor's services.

Mr. Peters is a Populist, but has never held any office, devoting his entire time and attention to the building up of his farm and home. He is well posted on current events and keeps abreast of the times in affairs of state and national questions. He is in favor of government ownership of the railroads, and a Bryan man, but not so strong as he was some years ago.

An interesting picture of Mr. Peters' sheep ranch will be found on another page of this work.

JOHN C. SHIPLEY.

The farm operated by this gentleman is located in section 17, township 29, range 53, in Sioux county, and there he enjoys all the comforts of rural life, together with many of its luxuries. He owns a tract of eight hundred and eighty acres of good land, and his place is one of the best appointed in this locality, every corner of it showing good management and painstaking care.

Mr. Shipley was born in Green county, Tennessee, in 1858. His father, W. K. Shipley, was a farmer who came north in 1863, settling in Illinois, and later moved to Iowa, where our subject was raised on a farm and since he was nine years old he has made his own way in the world. In 1886 John came to Nebraska, first settling in Buffalo county on a farm, and lived there for three years. He then came to Sioux county, and was the first white man to settle in section 17, township 29, range 53. His first dwelling was a log cabin with a dirt roof and floor. He had absolutely nothing to start with except his strong hands and brave heart, and during the first few years went through hardships of every nature, losing crops for several seasons and meeting with every discouragement. He gradually worked into the stock business, and was able to get along better and develop his farm, putting up good buildings, etc. His ranch contains eight hundred and eighty acres, and he operates besides this six hundred and forty acres of leased school land, having it all fenced, and is one of the well-to-do men of his locality.

In 1879, while living in Iowa, Mr. Shipley was married to Miss Mary E. Ratcliffe, daughter of Thomas J. Ratcliffe, a farmer and old settler in that state. Her mother's name was Jane Ann (Boswell) Ratcliffe. Her father died January 15, 1896, aged sixty-one years, eleven months and two days. Her mother still lives in Corrydon, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Shipley have had a family of eight children, who are named as follows: Jennie, Laura, Benjamin, Fred and Maud, five living, and three dead. Daisy, who married Mr. Lacrone, died in Boone county, Nebraska, February 10, 1902; Emma, who married Mr. Smith, died in Crawford, Nebraska, June 13, 1908, and Lee, who died at home in Sioux county, Nebraska, February 14, 1906.

Mr. Shipley has always displayed commendable public spirit, taking part in all local affairs, helping to establish the schools of his locality, and has been school director for the past sixteen years. He has also served as assessor in his district for two terms. He is a staunch Democrat.

HON. WASHINGTON MALLORY HINMAN.

In the commercial and public affairs of Lincoln county, Nebraska, probably no man is better known than the gentleman whose life history is here presented. Mr. Hinman was a man of unusual business ability, and has an enviable reputation as a citizen of active public spirit and one of those who helped build up this part of the country and make it the prosperous section it is today.

Mr. Hinman first passed through this region in 1849 on his way overland to California. He was a native of Bradford county, Pennsylvania, born at Wysox, September 14, 1819, and a son of Abner Curtis Hinman and Augusta York Hinman, the former having been grand master of Pennsylvania for the Independent Order of Good Templars for many years. The Hinman family were pioneer settlers of that state, all of the male members taking part in the Revolutionary war, Indian wars, etc. Our subject's brother, Hon. Beach I. Hinman, was the pioneer attorney of North Platte, Nebraska, and represented the district in the Nebraska state legislature. Two brothers served the Union in the Civil war, and lost their lives in battle or in prison.

Mr. Hinman was one of those who were seeking the gold fields in 1849, and this was the first time he saw Nebraska. A St. Louis firm had employed him to go to Vancouver and Oregon to set up and install steam sawmills, paying him for this work sixteen dollars per day. These mills were shipped around the Horn, and this trip took him all along the coast from British Columbia to Panama in those pioneer days, and he saw a great many interesting sights and had many exciting experiences. He afterwards was sent by the United States government to install a steam sawmill plant at Laramie, Wyoming. He returned from California in 1854, and two years later located at Cottonwood Springs, near Fort McPherson. On his ranch four miles east of the Springs he opened a general supply store for the travelers passing over the California trail, and also installed a steam saw and shingle mill and blacksmith shop on his farm, often employing many men in this business. From 1864 to 1867 he held the position of Indian interpreter at Fort McPherson, attending all conferences between the chiefs and the government. He had the contract for supplying beef for the fort, and also for sawing all the shingles used on the buildings at that place. One voucher now in possession of the family is made out for fourteen thousand dollars. He also had a subcontract to supply wood to Fort A. D. Russell in 1867 and 1868.

In 1864 Mr. Hinman was called to Fort McPherson, Nebraska, and while there he lost over one thousand dollars in merchandise through theft by Sioux Indians under Sitting Bull. The government allowed Mr. Hinman the one thousand dollars for these goods, but Democratic influence has deferred this payment and the widow of Mr. Hinman may yet be able to secure the money. He was intimate with all the great Indian chiefs, among whom was Sitting Bull. In 1860 Shorter county (at present Lincoln county) was organized, with Mr. Hinman as county treasurer, but this organization never went into effect, and in 1866 the name was changed to Lincoln and the county properly organized with the county seat at North Platte, and our subject being North Platte, where Mr. Hinman had resided since 1866, having sold out his ranch and taken his mills to South Pass, Wyoming, afterwards bringing them back to the Republican valley, where he had homesteaded and preempted four hundred acres two and a half miles west of Indianola. This band of Indians went through the town, camping where Fruit and Locust streets now intersect. General Sherman and the peace commissioners met them and the redskins promised to remain peaceable and go away without any trouble in the spring of the year if they were provided with rations throughout the winter. On Sunday, April 7, 1868, there was a great commotion in town when the citizens discovered that the Indians had moved their squaws and effects to the north side of the river. The braves returned in a short while, riding through the town and shooting into stores and raising a disturbance generally. Mr. Hinman at once turned all papers relating to civil affairs of Lincoln county over to the military and saloons were closed and squads of soldiers put out to guard lives and property. The Indians then went southeast of the town, and near Fort McPherson, in Snells canyon, on the 8th of April, they came upon seven men who were employed by our subject in getting out wood for his subcontract to supply Fort A. D. Russell, and the redskins murdered them, taking the scalps of every man. One of the horses belonging to the men returned home with the scalp of his owner tied to its saddle. The soldiers immediately went in pursuit of the Indians and found one white boy pinned to the ground with an arrow through his heart, still alive, and he survived for two days.

In 1876 Mr. Hinman and his family moved back to North Platte to live. He had bought land near this town until he owned in all eleven hundred acres, a portion of it being in town, and the greater portion of it directly adjacent. He held the office of senior county commissioner of Lincoln county, and in 1873 he locked up the Union Pacific Railway roundhouse at North Platte and took possession on account of the railway having as yet paid no taxes, which amounted to a good round sum, and these were shortly paid. In 1879 he moved out to his farm, just west of the town.

Mr. Hinman was married March 11, 1867, to Miss Rebecca Franklin Vaughan, daughter of William Vaughan, of the United States navy at Watertown, on Lake Erie, who was an officer in the War of 1812, was an uncle of Mrs. Hinman. Mrs. Hinman is a very bright and active lady, of great intelligence, and is now seventy-three years of age. They raised a family of three children, namely: Vaughan Elias Hinman, of North Platte. He was born in this town and was the first white child born here, and the second in Lincoln county. He married Miss Minnie Distel, daughter of Frederick Distel, a native of Germany, who came to Omaha in 1873, and later to North Platte, where he built and operated a brewery, and became well known all over western Nebraska. One child was born of this union, Charles Vaughan Hinman. The second son of our subject is York Abner Hinman, also of North Platte, who was married to Miss Daisy C. Crusen, daughter of W. J. Crusen, of North Platte, a sketch of whom appears in this volume. They have three children, namely: York A. Hinman, Jr., Elizabeth Franklin Hinman and Dorothy C. The third child of our subject is Suezilla Hinman Eves, wife of George Eves, of Stockton, California. They have a family of five children living, as follows: William Vaughan (dead) and Washington York, twins; Girard Wesley, Margarette Reba, Arthur Glenn and Harold Hinman.

Mr. Hinman died at his farm home January 27, 1904, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. The year prior to his death a prairie fire swept the vicinity of his home and burned to the ground a good residence containing valuable records, papers and all personal property. With the business methods and energy which still characterize Mrs. Hinman, she had a short time previously effected a partial insurance upon the home, so it was not a total loss.

Mr. Hinman was a thirty-second degree Mason, having been admitted into the order when he was twenty-one years of age. He was high priest of the chapter here, and a devoted member of the lodge. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, and an earnest worker in that religion.

NAT BROADHURST.

Nat Broadhurst, one of the representative farmers and old settlers of western Nebraska, resides in section 36, township 32, range 51, where he has a fine home and valuable estate.

Mr. Broadhurst was born in Lancashire county, England, in 1858. His father, Samuel Broadhurst, was a nut and bolt manufacturer, and spent his whole life in his native country, having died there in 1886. Our subject grew up in England, learning the blacksmith's trade, and followed that work up to 1884. He came to America in 1883, landing in New York city in June of that year, and came to Kane county, Illinois, where he located on a farm, running a dairy business for two years, and renting land for three years, which he farmed, then in 1888 came to Dawes county, arriving here in February. Here he located on a homestead in section 23, township 32, range 51, and the first summer he lived in a cellar, and had a hard time getting started. He stuck to the work, however, and kept adding improvements, building a comfortable farm house and got along fairly well. In 1891 he left Nebraska and went to Cambria, Wyoming, where he worked out at mining, blacksmithing or anything he could get to do to make a living. He remained for about seven years, in the meantime going back to his farm occasionally, part of the time having charge of the blacksmith department for a mining company in Cambria, and during those years he did not have much success with his farming operations, two years having entire failures of crops during the drouth periods. Mr. Broadhurst bought his present place in 1892, moving on the place the following year, and constantly improved the farm, putting up good buildings, barns, sheep sheds, also has a complete blacksmith shop. His farm is all fenced with woven wire fencing, and has room for sheltering two thousand sheep, having been engaged in the sheep business for the past four or five years, feeding each year from fifteen hundred to two thousand sheep for market, and this has been his principal business. He has four hundred acres of irrigated land, and altogether owns one of the finest ranches in the county, and is one of the successful men in his locality, his ranch consisting of nine hundred acres.

Mr. Broadhurst was married in England in 1881, to Miss Agnes Jane Holding, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Herbert, who was married on March 20, 1907, to Miss Edna Hoevet, and two daughters, Jennie and Pearl. Our subject has rented his son four hundred acres of land, on which he has erected fine buildings, and has a comfortable home. Pearl was married the 23d day of October, 1907, to Grant Spearman, born in eastern Nebraska, of American stock.

In 1898 Mr. Broadhurst, together with his wife and three children, took a trip to England, where he visited his birthplace and also that of his wife, and spent nearly four months on the trip, visiting many points of interest and enjoying their vacation hugely. In 1904 the daughter, Pearl, again visited England alone, remaining for nine months.

ALBERT ROW.

Albert Row, residing in Dawes county, on section 34, township 31, range 48, is one of the leading citizens of his community, and is held in high esteem as a man of sterling character and true worth.

Mr. Row is a native of Washington county, Maryland, born in 1856 on a farm, being the sixth of a family of ten children. His father, Abraham Row, was a farmer, and lives in Maryland and is quite active for his advanced age. The mother died about twelve years ago. Albert grew up in Maryland and when seventeen years of age left home and came west to LaSalle county, Illinois, where he followed farming for about twelve years, spending six years on one farm in that vicinity. In 1885 Mr. Row came to Dawes county, Nebraska, driving from Valentine by team and covered wagon containing his personal belongings, and selected his present homestead as a spot to start a home. This is located in section 34, township 31, range 48, and was well situated and all good land. Here he built a board shanty and "batched" for two years, breaking up his first land and doing all his work with a team of oxen, which he used altogether for the first four or five years. He got along very well for a time, then was overtaken by the drouths, and had a hard time to make a living, for three years being unable to raise anything, and also suffering from hailstorms throughout the section which destroyed property and crops. He nearly became discouraged and went through hard times, having to do all sorts of work to keep his family from want and privation, glad to secure even the necessities of life. He then tried the stock business, and from the first was very successful, and has continued in that line of work ever since. He is now owner of a fine ranch of seventeen hundred and fifty acres, one hundred and thirty of which is under cultivation, and the balance in hay and pasture land. The whole place is fenced, and he runs one hundred and fifty head of stock. He has built two good houses on his ranch, with substantial barns and other outbuildings, plenty of fine water and windmills for his stock. Mr. Row has a very fine young orchard, garden, small fruits, etc.

On another page of this work will be found a picture of Mr. Row's residence.

Mr. Row has helped establish the schools in his locality and always served on the school board. He takes an active and leading part in local affairs, and is an important factor in the development and upbuilding of this region. Politically he is a Democrat and strong party man.

Mr. Row was united in marriage in 1887 to Miss Elsie Jane Huss, daughter of Samuel Huss, a farmer and early settler in Illinois, where she was raised and educated. Mr. and Mrs. Row are the parents of the following children: Samuel H., Nora, Abraham and Bertha, all bright and intelligent and dutiful children to worthy parents. The family enjoy a happy and comfortable home and have a host of warm friends and good neighbors.

J. W. CALVER.

The gentleman whose name heads this personal history is accorded a high station among the successful and worthy citizens of Brown county, Nebraska.

Mr. Calver was born in Australia, in 1847, of English descent, his father, Daniel Calver, having emigrated to that country when a young man. His mother was also of English birth. There were five children in his parents' family, of whom he was the third member. When he was ten years of age the whole family returned to England, locating in Stanton, Suffolk county, and here our subject remained for four years, then with his parents came to Canada. They landed at New York in 1861 and lived at Kingston for a short time, and in the latter part of that year he located at Cape Vincent, Jefferson county, New York, where he remained for three years, following farming and teaming. He next moved to Michigan and worked on a farm for about twelve years, and then wandered west, obtaining employment on the Iron Mountain Railroad in southeast Missouri. He went to Illinois in 1877, locating seventy miles west of Chicago.

In 1880 he came to Adams county, Nebraska, which was then a new country and very sparsely settled, and there he bought a farm and remained for four years, then came on to Brown county, where he took up a homestead in section 27, township 31, range 22, and went to work establishing a farm. His first building was a barn sixteen by twenty-four, and the family made this their home, living in the hay mow during the first three months of their residence on this place. He afterwards erected a frame building, and this was the first house of the kind in the whole neighborhood, all the pioneers living in dugouts or sod shanties. They began to build up their home, and at first met with many discouragements and privations. Went through the drouth periods and other hardships, and had a hard time to support the family, being obliged to work at anything that came along in order to pull through. The better times came along and they were able to raise better crops and get a little ahead, and he gradually improved his farm and put up good buildings, adding to his acreage, until he is now proprietor of a farm of eight hundred and eighty acres of good land, all in good shape and part of it cultivated. He has the best corn crib in the neighborhood or county, and a large, comfortable house, size sixteen by twenty-four, fitted up in modern style, with all conveniences for comfort. He engages principally in stock raising, dealing largely in hogs, and raises large crops of corn.

The first school in the locality was held in a log house, and his children attended this school after a sod school house had been erected.

Mr. Calver was married at Ottawa, Illinois, in 1877, the event occurring on Thanksgiving day. His bride was Miss Alice Spicer, a native of LaSalle county, daughter of S. B. and Elmira A. Spicer, of old Yankee stock. She died in 1892 at Ainsworth, Nebraska, leaving a family of six children, namely: Nellie, Jessie, Mabel, John, Cora and Bennie. Mr. Calver was married again in 1892 to Minerva Spicer, and on December 4, 1903, his second wife died. His third wife was Miss Elizabeth Julia Spicer, a sister of his first two wives.

In October, 1905, Mr. Calver moved to Ainsworth, leaving his two sons, John and Bennie, on the farm, and has since made this his residence. Mr. Calver deserves a first place among the old settlers of this section. He has always done his share in the building up of the community in which he chose his home, and the family are well known and highly respected by all, all over the county.

EMORY PLANCK.

Emory Planck, one of the best known pioneers of Cheyenne county, Nebraska, and one of the first settlers in that region, has taken an active part in its development, and is possessed of a wide knowledge of the western country and a character of the highest integrity.

Mr. Planck was born in Tioga county, Pennsylvania, on December 2, 1862, where he grew to manhood. His father died in that state, and his mother still lives there. They were the parents of ten children, Emory being the ninth in order of birth. He left his native state when about fourteen years of age, and came west to Buffalo county, Nebraska, in the spring of the year 1885, where he remained for one year and then came on to Cheyenne county, where he filed on a homestead in section 26, township 15, range 48. He came through the country in a "prairie schooner" drawn by a pair of Texas steers, which was a familiar mode of travel in those days, camping out along the way and encountering many adventures, suffering from exposure, etc.

Mr. Planck proved up on his original homestead and took up additional land later, and is now proprietor of a good estate of three hundred and twenty acres, all well improved with about seventy acres under cultivation.

He has considerable stock of all classes, running at present about fifty cattle and a small bunch of horses.

Mr. Planck was married in Cheyenne county, on December 12, 1897, to Miss Jessie Mann. Mrs. Planck is a native of McLain county, Illinois, where she lived until ten years of age. Her parents, Dr. D. R. and Alice (Merril) Mann, the former a native of Kentucky, the latter of New York, were among the pioneers of Cheyenne county. At present he is serving as a moderator of district No. 17. In political views he is a staunch Republican, and is prominent in state and county politics.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

The gentleman whose name heads this review was born in Wales, England, February 7, 1841. His father, William Williams, was a miner in Wales and later followed that occupation in Pennsylvania. Our subject's mother was Margaret Ellen Evans in her maiden days.

In 1854, the family came to America, settling in Pennsylvania, where the father found work in the mines, and Thomas also worked in the mines until he was twenty-five years of age. Here, in Pennsylvania, our subject was married to Miss Mary Lewis in the year 1862, her father being William Lewis, a native of Wales, where she was born. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Williams have had nine children, six of whom are now living.

In 1861, our subject enlisted in answer to the first call for volunteers to serve in the war of the Rebellion, his first enlistment being in the Sixth Pennsylvania Infantry. Later he enlisted in the Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry, and later in the Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry. He saw much service and after the war was over, in 1865, he went to Missouri, where he lived for nine years. In 1874 he came to Nebraska, spending about two years in York and Hamilton counties, and in 1876 drove in a covered wagon to Loup county, settling on his present farm on section 26, township 21, range 18. He had all the hardships that came to the average pioneer, lived in a dug-out for the first year, then built him a log house of cedar, which now stands in good shape and more highly prized than any fine building on his farm. His first barn was built of logs. He also drove steers, cows and bulls for teams and had many a weary, long trip for supplies to Carney, which was the nearest railroad point, seventy or eighty miles distant.

Our subject remained on his farm actively improving it and engaged in making a good home for his family. The only time he was gone for any length of time was in 1876, during the Indian raids, when Custer was killed. At this time all the settlers were ordered to the Alger ranch by the government troops, who could not protect the people if they were scattered on their farms.

Thomas W. Williams has built up a good home and has a fine farm of two hundred and thirty-seven acres well improved and equipped with machinery. He has been one of the leading pioneers of the county and has always been prominent in public affairs.

far and wide as a skilful surgeon and an able and conscientious practitioner.

Dr. Simon was born in Warren county, Iowa, on September 22, 1869, grew up there, and removed to Wichita, Kansas, with his parents when he was about fourteen years of age. He then left home to attend college, soon afterwards entering the medical department of the University of Michigan, enrolling as a student at that institution in 1891. He took a three-year course, and finished his medical education in Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, graduating from there in 1895. During the same year he located in Lincoln, opened an office and practiced for about six months, then went to Cripple Creek, Colorado, where he followed his profession: also at Kimball, Nebraska, and in July, 1897, made permanent location at Sidney, where he has been ever since. #### JOHN A. ADAMSON.

John A. Adamson, who now resides on section 27, township 33, range 29, is a native-born Irishman, and comes of a mingled Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father, Walter Adamson, was a Scotchman, who came to county Sligo, Ireland, where he married Mary J. Higgins, a native of that county, and there their son, John A., was born near Balling, December 29, 1862. In a family of eight children, he was their second son, and remained with them until he was sixteen years of age, when he took upon himself the management of his own affairs. He went to Scotland to become acquainted with his father's people, and in 1880 sought a home in the United States, knowing full well that here alone was to be found ample opportunity for all his wealth of brain and muscle, strength of character and quickness of mind. Sailing from Glasgow in the steamer Anconia, after a ten days' voyage he landed in New York on the 10th day of June, and for about a year was employed on a farm in Pennsylvania, after which he came to the west to enter the employ of the Northern Pacific railroad in Minnesota. He was engaged in that line for about a year, and then for a time drifted about through the northern states, and made a somewhat hasty visit to his old Irish home.

In 1884 Mr. Adamson first appeared in Cherry county, and his destinies were linked in with the development of a Nebraskan home. He settled that year on his present ranch, being among the first to locate on the Niobrara river. He had a team of horses, and put up a rude frame shanty, living here all by himself for a number of years. His marriage to Miss Maggie Ormesher occurred March 6, 1891, a native of Briars Wood, Lancashire, England. Her father, Henry Ormesher, was an old settler in Cherry county, and she is widely known as a lady of many social and domestic graces and virtues. They have five children, Edyth, Minnie, Lizzie, John W. and Alice.

Mr. Adamson now owns a ranch of fifteen hundred acres, and has about eighty acres under cultivation. This extensive tract of land is partly fenced, and is very extensively used in stock raising. Mr. Adamson put up a fine stone house in 1903 and takes a justifiable pride in his modern and well built country residence.

OLE J. MOE.

Ole J. Moe, an enterprising farmer and capable citizen of Box Butte county, Nebraska, is one of the men of whom the people of the surrounding community are justifiably proud. He was born on a farm in Gudbrandsdalen, Norway, in 1856. His father, Jacob Moe, was a farmer and laborer, and died in Norway. His mother, Christena Moe, came to America and died December 29, 1907.

The early years of Mr. Moe's life were spent in his native land, where he received his education while attending the common schools, and as he grew older worked in a saw mill. At the age of twenty-four years he was married to Miss Mary Peterson, who was born in Norway in 1856. It was about the year 1880 that Mr. Moe decided to seek his fortunes in America, and landing in Philadelphia, came to Corn Prairie, Wisconsin, where he spent four or five years in the lumber woods and saw-mills. He spent two years in Chicago, Illinois, at the Grand Pacific Hotel.

Realizing the opportunities that awaited the ambitious man in western Nebraska, Mr. Moe came to Box Butte county in 1885, and took a homestead in section 30, township 27, range 48, driving from Hay Springs. The following year he brought his family west to this new country. His first house was of sod, and he had no team to assist him in the work of starting his new home. Our subject successfully withstood the periods of drouth and the many hardships familiar to the early settlers in western Nebraska. From time to time he secured other tracts of land, and now has a ranch comprising an area of five quarters of deeded land, and three quarters of leased land, all of which is fenced and cross-fenced. He has erected good buildings, and has a good well and windmill. He has one barn thirty by forty feet, and another thirty by thirty-four feet, and has a good granary, chicken house and other buildings. He cultivates about two hundred acres, and engages extensively in the raising of grain and live stock, having many head of horses and cattle.

Mr. Moe has a family of eight children, all of whom were born in America, namely: Clara, Olga, John, Annie, Olave, Melvin, Ludwig and Emma. In matters of politics Mr. Moe is a Republican. While his broad acres and his stock demand his close attention, he has from his start in this county taken a keen interest in all public affairs. His work toward the organization and building of schools is worthy of special note. He has done a great deal toward establishing the school district, and has been a member of the school board ever since he came to this county. He has assisted materially in the construction of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad through this county, and has long been prominently identified with the work of making the county a comfortable home for a thrifty and industrious people. A picture of the family and also the homestead ranch appears on another page.

F. T. McLAIN.

F. T. McLain, proprietor of a fine ranch in section 28, township 30, range 50, Dawes county, resides in Ames, Iowa, where he also owns large business interests. He invested in farming lands in this county several years ago, and has made of it a fine ranch and valuable property.

Mr. McLain is a native of Bedford county, Pennsylvania, born in 1841. His father, William McLain, was of Scotch descent and his mother of Pennsylvania Dutch blood. When our subject was but a boy the family settled in Illinois, and later in Iowa, where he grew to manhood, helping his parents in carrying on their farm, while attending school in the country, although he did not receive a very thorough education, as he was early obliged to work for his own living and help support the family. At the age of twenty he left home and enlisted in Company C, Fourteenth Iowa Infantry, and saw service in the western army along the Mississippi river. He participated in the battle of Shiloh, where he was captured by the enemy and spent seven months in Libby prison at Richmond, Virginia, and at Macon and Savannah, Georgia. After serving with his regiment for three and a half years he was discharged in 1864, and returned to Iowa.

In 1868 Mr. McLain settled in Story county, Iowa, and was among the pioneer settlers in that section, where he took up a tract of land and developed it into a fine farm, making it one of the most valuable pieces of property in the county. He was also active in building up the country, as an early settler, and in 1892 sold his farm and moved to Ames, Iowa, and now owns considerable farming property in the vicinity of that place. He came to Nebraska in 1902 and bought up land, and now owns three thousand five hundred acres twenty miles southeast of Crawford city, and has this in first-class shape.

He has the ranch stocked with a large number of cattle and horses, and is doing his full share as a settler in this part of the county, and although having his residence in Ames, much of his time is spent on his ranch here. As a farmer Mr. McLain has made a wonderful success, having started in Iowa as a pioneer, with hardly any capital, and from this small beginning has accumulated a vast estate, built up one of the finest farms in Story county, Iowa, and is now able to enjoy himself in the knowledge that he has accomplished results which prove him to be a man of superior ability and good business management.

Mr. McLain was married in Iowa, in the year 1865, to Miss Rose Minkler, of Rochelle, Illinois, whose parents were both of American stock. Three children were born to this union, namely: Alta, deceased; Libby, now Mrs. Lang, and a resident of Dawes county; and Rosa, wife of Frank J. Coil, Jr., of Dawes county. Mr. McLain was married the second time to Mary Fleming, by whom he had two children, namely: Stella and Jennie. Losing his second wife, Mr. McLain married her cousin, Jennie Fleming, of Lisbon, Ohio, and by this marriage there was one child, William.

Our subject takes a prominent part in local affairs, and belongs to a number of fraternal societies. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.

JOHN A. HANSEN.

The subject of this review is a retired merchant and farmer of Phelps county, now a resident of Holdrege, where he has a pleasant and comfortable home.

Mr. Hansen is a native of Sweden, and came to this country in his youth, locating in Chicago, Illinois, where he remained for a short time prior to settling in this state. He landed here in 1878, and in the spring of the following year built a sod house and opened a store which was the first in this locality and runs the postoffice in connection with this, at Phelps Centre, in partnership with his brother, Charles Hansen, now deceased. In the fall of 1879 they built a frame store, and shortly afterwards Charles Hansen put up a second building, in which they ran an implement store. In a short time Phelps Centre became a flourishing town, had two general stores, one drug store, a hardware store, bank, and an implement store. These establishments were located where the Swedish Orphans' Home now stands, which Mr. Hansen helped to establish and of which he has been president since 1892. In the summer of 1881, Mr. Hansen sold out his mercantile interests and purchased a timber claim in section 10 of Westmark township, and, like other pioneers, erected a sod house, and shortly after put up a frame dwelling. He was very successful in his ventures, and now owns eight hundred acres of good land, with good substantial buildings and improvements. This is operated by his son, Walter. He remained on his farm, engaged in mixed farming and gradually added to it, buying land adjoining, until 1899, when he opened a first-class general store in Holdrege, which he and his sons carried on with great success until the summer of 1906, when he sold out this business, retaining the brick store building and land, which occupies one of the best corners in the city of Holdrege. It is right in the business center, on the northeast corner of Fourth avenue and East avenue. He also owns a good residence property in the city. He has dealt considerably in real estate, buying and selling lands in the western counties of Nebraska. While he resided on his farm he was most successful in raising hogs and cattle, showing his preference for the Poland China breed of hogs. He also was interested in the breeding of his horses to the Percheron and Norman breeds, and has owned some fine animals.

In 1881 Mr. Hansen was married to Miss Gustie Carlson, daughter of John A. Carlson, a pioneer settler of Westmark township, Phelps county, Nebraska, and a farmer and landowner there. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen have a family of six children, namely: Walter, operating the farm; Bert, teller in the first National Bank of Holdrege; and Winnie, Carrie, Hilma and Charlie, attending school.

Mr. Hansen, in addition to managing his large business interests, has found time to take an active interest in public affairs, and is an earnest worker in the Swedish Mission church, of which he is a member. He was township assessor for six years. While residing in Westmark township he was one of the organizers of the Holcomb church, and was a trustee of that institution while living on the farm. After taking up his residence in Holdrege he was elected trustee of the church there, and served in that capacity for six years. He was also chairman of the board of trustees in that church for two years.

In 1907 our subject bought stock in the First National Bank at Loomis and resided there for one year, moving back to Holdrege in the fall of 1908, where he had erected a new and modern residence.

JOE MOELLER.

The gentleman above mentioned is classed among the substantial and practical agriculturists of Box Butte county and is proprietor of a valuable estate and a prosperous ranching business. He has been a resident of his locality for many years, and has acquired a host of friends, himself and family enjoying the respect and esteem of all who know them.

Mr. Moeller was born in Hessen, Nassau, Germany, in 1861. His father was a farmer who lived and died in his native land, and our subject grew up in Germany, serving in the army of his country for three years. After serving for that length of time he left the land of his birth and came to America, landing in Baltimore in 1884, and came directly west, locating in Wisner, Nebraska, where he followed farming for five years. After he had been in this country for a time and began to like it here, he wrote back home and urged his mother to join him, so she, together with one brother, came to the United States, and in 1889 the family came to Dawes county, locating thirteen miles from Hemingford, on the north side of the Niobrara river. Here they took up a homestead, built a good sod house, stable, sheds, cellar, etc., and lived on that place up to 1898. The claim was proved up on, and Mr. Moeller was successful in establishing a good home and farm; then along came the dry years and he was hard hit by failure of crops, for four or five years not being able to get any more than the seed he put in the ground.

In the spring of 1896 he gave up his farm and went to Minnesota and remained for two years, working out on farms in that state, and from there moved to Iowa, also following farm work for two years, but did not like it well enough to settle there permanently, so decided to return to his old home in Nebraska. In 1900 he first came to Box Butte county, and located on his present farm as a homestead. This is situated in section 31, township 27, range 51, and the place was utterly without improvements of any kind, so he was obliged to begin at the very bottom and build up the place, but has been very successful in his operations, putting up good buildings, fences, etc. He has four hundred and eighty acres of deeded land, and in addition operates seven quarter sections of leased land, engaging extensively in the cattle business, also farming quite a large portion of his land.

In July, 1898, Mr. Moeller was married to Tillie Nickont, a native of Russia, of German descent, who came to this country in 1884, and together with mother and brothers, settled in Box Butte county. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Moeller followed her trade as a dressmaker for a number of years in this vicinity, and is a most estimable lady.

Mr. Moeller has held different school offices and takes an active part in local affairs.

FRANK E. McLAIN.

Frank E. McLain, who for the past twenty-five years has been a resident of Keya Paha county, has a wide circle of acquaintances and educational and commercial, and has done his is classed among the substantial and prosperous citizens of his locality. He settled on his present farm, located on section 20, township 32, range 20, and here he has built up a fine home and farm. He has always taken an active part in all affairs of the county, both full share as an old settler and worthy citizen.

RESIDENCE OF FRANK E. McLAIN,
Keya Paha County, Nebraska.

Mr. McLain was born in Atchison county, Missouri, January 27, 1848, and raised and educated on a farm there. His father, Thomas McLain, was also a native of Missouri, of Scotch stock, and his mother, who prior to her marriage was Miss Isabella Whitley, was of French descent, grand-daughter of Colonel Whitley, of Revolutionary war fame and a friend of Daniel Boone in Missouri. When our subject was fifteen years of age he left home and began for himself, driving freight wagons for Major Russell & Company, who were government freighters, going from Nebraska City to Salt Lake City. He continued at that work up to 1867, then for two years was employed in the grade work of the Union Pacific railroad in this state and Wyoming, at the end of that time returning to Missouri, where he was engaged in farming up to 1883, in Nodaway county. He came to Keya Paha county in the latter year, locating on his present place, and here he has built up a splendid farm and home. The place is well covered with natural timber of all kinds. There are six hundred and forty acres of good land, one hundred of which is under cultivation, and he keeps fifty head of cattle, a number of horses, and about fifty hogs. During the early years Mr. McLain saw a good many pioneer experiences, and went through many ups and downs, often becoming greatly discouraged during the dry years, when he lost entire crops after so many months of hard labor. He lived in a log house for ten years, and had to haul all his provisions for family use from Long Pine and Ainsworth, at that time being obliged to ford the river and many times having to leave his wagon in the river over night. He often felt like leaving the place, but for several years acted as postmaster at Springview, and that kept him here when he otherwise would have left. A view of the dwelling with its encircling hills and one of the old log school houses is to be found on another page.

Mr. McLain was married in Nodaway county, Missouri, March 15, 1871, to Miss Nancy J. Martin, of Scotch-Irish descent, a daughter of Samuel and Louisa (Owens) Martin. They are the parents of seven children, who are named as follows: Laura B., wife of Harry McQueen; Robert S., Louisa, wife of Charles Carter; Lorena, wife of Thomas Burg; Elsie, who married Rose Williams; Princess, wife of Roscoe McCulley, and Samuel, all living in Nebraska or South Dakota, not far from the old home. Four daughters were educated in the log school house in their district, and all have been teachers in the county schools here for eight or ten years.

Mr. McLain has always been an active worker in the Democratic party, but has never held any office except that of postmaster, and in this capacity he has proven a most capable and efficient official.

CHARLES ARTER.

Charles Arter, one of the foremost men of Rock county, has been identified with the commercial interests of this locality for many years.

Mr. Arter was born in Salineville, Columbiana county, Ohio, July 23, 1856. His father, Jason R. Arter, was a leading physician of his native town. He served in the Thirty-first Ohio Volunteers from Shiloh to Atlanta, ranking as major. Seeing the end of the war near he resigned to give his subordinates an opportunity to rise. His death occurred soon after his return, from the effects of camp fever contracted while in the service. Our subject, the younger of two children, was reared in Oil City, Pennsylvania, and early left home to assume his own support; obtaining a position with the Pittsburg, Bradford and Buffalo road as rodman, rising to the position of instrument man and office engineer, being employed in the construction of branch lines. In 1883 Mrs. Arter came with a colony to what is now Rock county and was here joined by her son in February, 1884, when mother and son located on a homestead in section 34, township 32, range 17, situated on Ash creek, later establishing a mill. Here they put up a frame building and began to operate the mill during the year 1885. The nearest milling point then was fifty miles away, and up until 1894, the mill continued in operation, proving a profitable venture, but when the crops began to fail everywhere, the mill was abandoned, and Mr. Arter started into stock raising, at which he made a success from the beginning. Since then he has been engaged in this business on a large scale, and now owns a large ranch of one thousand and eighty acres divided into three pieces, of which nine hundred and twenty acres are deeded land, and one hundred and sixty acres held under lease. On this farm he has built a fine house, large barns and many improvements in the way of fencing. He also has one of the finest groves of pine trees in the state, and this has attracted the attention of the members of the board of agriculture, who are studying his method of growing pines.

In 1894 Mr. Arter was appointed postmaster of Kirkwood, this office being established about ten years previous, his predecessors being J. N. Hovey, A. G. Felton and John A. Brubaker, in the order named.

In 1882 Mr. Arter was married to Miss Sarah Johnson, of American birth, and German descent, and five children have been born to them as follows: Jason R., Laura V., Cynthia Ann, Winfield S. and Alice A.

Mr. Arter is an easy-going, genial gentleman, clear-headed and original in his ideas and thoughts, and is much above the average man as a philosopher. In political faith Mr. Arter is an Independent.

PETER NISSEN.

Peter Nissen, one of the tried and true ranchers of Keith county, Nebraska, was born in the southern part of Denmark, April 14, 1863. His father, Nis Matsen, according to the peculiar custom of names in that country, was a farmer and bricklayer by trade and lived and died in Denmark, his native country. The mother, Susan Christena (Petersen), still lives in that country on part of the old home farm.

Our subject was reared in Denmark, remaining there until in 1887, when he came to America, sailing from Copenhagen to New York. He then decided to locate in New Jersey. He here acquired the English language, and after about one year, came west to Colorado, locating on a pre-emption claim in Washington county, where he was one of the early pioneers. Here he, with others of his family, experienced the years of drouth and ruin of crops for several years, having hard time to get along. With him was his brother, Hans, and a sister, Mrs. Mary Petersen, who was a widow then. She has three children, Hans A. Petersen, Simon Petersen and John Nelson, the latter being the son of a second husband. Our subject's brother, Hans Nissen, was born in southern Denmark, November 10, 1866, and came to America on the same vessel. They have been together most of the time since. The brothers and sister came to Keith county, Nebraska, in 1893, and located on homesteads in Lonergan precinct. Together they have a splendid ranch of about five thousand five hundred acres along the North Platte river, and running back into the hills, on which they run about four hundred head of cattle and fifty horses. The buildings and main improvements of the ranch are on Otter creek, which furnishes a never failing supply of clear, cold water. They have about four hundred acres of fine hay land and they engage largely in raising cattle and horses, farming just enough to provide such grain feed as is needed for their stock. Our subject and his brother have been very successful in their business and are well fixed financially.

Peter Nissen has been an important factor in the growth of his vicinity and is recognized as one of the leading old-timers. He has taken an active part in political matters and has held several local offices, among them that of assessor, which position he has occupied several times. He is Republican in politics, and was reared in the Lutheran church.

FERMAN S. KEY.

The gentleman above named is a well known and highly respected citizen of section 1, township 21, range 15, Garfield county, and one of the pioneer settlers of western Nebraska. He landed in this section of the country with but little capital and went to work determined to win a home for himself, and how well he succeeded is evidenced by the good farm and valuable property he now owns. He is industrious and energetic and is one of the progressive agriculturists of his county, his place being situated in what is called Bean Creek Valley, all of it being under cultivation.

Mr. Key is a native of Adair county, Iowa, born in 1867. He was reared on a farm, receiving a common school education, attending the country schools for a few months during the winter of each year, the balance of his time being spent in doing hard farm work on his father's farm in Iowa. He came to Nebraska from Iowa, in 1887, settling on a pre-emption consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, located twenty miles northeast of Burwell, and later took a homestead nine miles from Burwell. The farm on which he now lives is situated in section 1, township 21, range 15. Here he engages in the culture of grain, raising corn, oats, wheat, etc., also runs some stock, raising alfalfa for his stock, and this yields a good crop at each cutting, the valley land being particularly adapted to its production. It averages two tons per acre, and Mr. Key considers it the best feed possible for all stock. Mr. Key is of the opinion that only one-half of the amount of money and labor is needed here in order to accomplish good results that is required in the eastern states, and says that five hundred dollars here is equal to two or three times that sum there. He also says that any man who is possessed of five hundred dollars who is willing to work, will become almost independently rich here in a reasonable time. He is himself a practical farmer and employs modern methods in his operations.

Mr. Key was married in 1887 to Miss Jennie M. Scofield, a native of Adair county, Iowa, whose parents were well-to-do farmers there. Mr. and Mrs. Key reared five children, namely: Eldon L., James Walter, Roy Everett, Lloyd and Hazel. Mrs. Key died March 15th, 1906, and her loss was deeply felt by her devoted family and a host of sympathetic friends.

Mr. Key is an Independent politically and owes allegiance to no party, although he takes an active interest in all affairs of moment in his locality and is prominently connected with all movements for the public good and the bettering of conditions in his region.

EUGENE BEAL.

Eugene Beal, sheriff of Keith county, Nebraska, is one of the strong political leaders of the county and has a large and increasing constituency. He is a capable official and makes friends wherever he goes.

Eugene Beal is a native son of Nebraska, born in Crab Orchard, Johnson county, July 23, 1877, and is of German-Irish stock. His father, John Beal, a native of Knox county, Ohio, was a pioneer of the state, coming to Gage county in the early sixties. Our subject's mother, Maria J. Lovitt, was also born in Knox county, Ohio, from which state the family moved to Nebraska; at that time their supplies had to be freighted from Nebraska City, the nearest river town.

Our subject was reared on a farm on the frontier of eastern Nebraska, becoming inured to hard work, receiving a good common school education and graduating from the Business College at Beatrice.

Eugene Beal enlisted in Company C, First Nebraska Regiment, for service during the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection in the Philippines. He mustered in at Lincoln, May 1, 1898, and his record as a soldier is as follows:

Enrolled April 27, 1898, for the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection in 1899, participating in the following engagements: Santa Mesa, February 4th and 5th; captured water works, February 6th; Marquina Road, February 17th, Dam Farm Del Monte, March 25th; Meycouyan, March 26th; Marilou, March 27th-29th; Guiguinte, March 29th and 30th; Cupin Malolos, March 31st; Quinga and Bag Bag Riger, April 24th; Calumpit, March 25th; Santa Thomas, May 4th. Mustered out August 25, 1899, at San Francisco and returned to his home in Nebraska. He was next employed by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company for six months and an equal time as deputy clerk in the district court and for one year deputy sheriff of Gage county.

In June, 1902, he came to Keith county, where he purchased six hundred acres of land and went into the ranching business, cultivating two hundred and seventy-five acres of the land.

Mr. Beal was married in June, 1902, to Miss Zelma L. Hodges and the union has been blessed with three children: Barney L., Hellen and Theodore.

Our subject was elected sheriff of Keith county in 1907, and is the present incumbent. He has held other offices of trust and responsibility in the community and is regarded as an efficient and conscientious public man.

E. BAUDER.

E. Bauder, a prosperous and energetic farmer of Sheridan county, Nebraska, resides on his well improved estate in section 3, township 32, range 43. He is a gentleman of much energy and determination, and is also one of the early settlers of this region.

Mr. Bauder was born in Montgomery county, New York, in 1850, and raised and educated there. His father, Simion Bauder, is a native of New York, and came west, locating in Kansas, where he died, and after his death his wife took her little family and went back to their old home in New York. Our subject was one of three children, and at the age of eleven he began working out by the month on farms to support himself, and for twenty-two years followed this occupation. In the fall of 1884 he left New York and came to Nebraska, locating on the place he now occupies, driving the distance from Valentine to where he lives with teams and covered wagon containing his household goods. When he arrived here the ground was covered with snow and the first night after reaching Gordon, a blizzard struck the place and ripped the cover off the stage in which they were riding. This was a disagreeable and unpleasant experience, but no serious damage resulted from the storm. He at once went to work on his homestead, the following year building a sod house, and did well at farming until the dry period came on and he lost all he had made, and became so discouraged that had he been offered two hundred dollars for his land, he would have sold it and quit. However, he was obliged to stick to it and managed to live and support his family during the hard times, which lasted from 1890 to 1900. Since then he has gathered together eleven quarter sections of good land, and his place is well improved and all fenced. He has a drove of some two hundred head of stock, and is one of the most progressive agriculturists of the community in which he lives. He now has the blocks all made with which he intends to erect a fine cement house in the spring. He enjoys a comfortable home and pleasant surroundings, and has seen plenty of pioneer life and does not care for any more.

In 1887 Mr. Bauder was married to Miss Etta Addick, a native of New York state. Her father and mother were both natives of New York state, the former having died when she was a mere child. Mr. and Mrs. Bauder have one child, George E., born and raised in this locality.

Mr. Bauder is one of the men who have devoted both time and money to assist in the development of the locality in which he chose his home. He takes an active part in all local affairs, and has served his county as commissioner for one term. He is an Independent voter.

ROBERT C. SNODGRASS.

Robert C. Snodgrass, a capable and progressive farmer of township 30, range 46, Sheridan county, is recognized as a citizen of worth and one of the leading agriculturists of his community.

Mr. Snodgrass was born in West Virginia in 1857, and is a son of Isaac Snodgrass, of German-American stock, born and raised in West Virginia, a farmer by occupation. He died there in 1859, when our subject was two years of age, leaving a family of five children, his wife remaining on the home farm until they were grown up. Our subject was the third child in order of birth, and as soon as he was old enough he began assisting in the farm work, hoeing corn when he was a small lad, and helped his mother until he was twenty-one years of age. He determined to start out for himself and borrowed twenty dollars to start west on, as he thought that the best field for a young man of small capital. He got as far as Indiana, and was obliged to stop there while he earned more money, and in 1881 landed in Iowa. Here he worked out for a time, and then took a farm and ran it for four years, when he left there and came to Nebraska in 1888, locating in Sheridan county. Here he took a homestead and lived on it for two years, then purchased the relinquishment on the farm which he now occupies. He set to work improving this place and proved up on it. He first erected a sod house and lived in this for several years. He put on all the improvements himself, saving the cost of any hired help, and at the same time was raising crops up to 1891, when the dry years struck his locality and for several years was only able to raise sufficient to keep the family in provisions and save enough for the next year's seed. For the past eight years he has raised excellent crops, getting better each year, and he has gradually added to his place until he is now owner of six hundred and forty acres of good land, and also leases some near his own farm. On his farm there is a deep gulch which serves as a shed for his stock, of which he has about one hundred head of cattle and thirty horses. He finds stock raising to be most profitable and intends to engage in it on a larger scale from now on. He farms about one hundred and seventy-five acres and uses a large portion of the produce on his farm, marketing very little of it. He is delighted with the farming possibilities in this section of the country, and after having experience in Iowa and other states, would not trade his farm here for any he ever saw.

Mr. Snodgrass was married in 1883 to Miss Lottie Worley, born in Delaware county, Iowa, in 1862. They have a family of five children, namely: Vernon L., John Earle, Richard Leroy, Dora Agnes and Dale Carleton, all born and raised in Nebraska.

Mr. Snodgrass lived on his present farm during the Indian scare of 1891, and remained there through the dangerous times, although he never experienced any serious trouble from the redskins. At this time his wife was visiting relatives in Iowa, and on two occasions Mr. Snodgrass, together with several neighbors, went to Hay Springs to spend the night for fear of being surprised and injured by the savages, but the balance of the time he stayed at home. The people were in a high state of excitement, and every church in the section was a meeting place and refuge for them.

Mr. Snodgrass is a Republican, and although he takes a keen interest in local and county affairs has never held office. An interesting picture of a ranch scene on Mr. Snodgrass' property will be found elsewhere.

I. E. MONTGOMERY.

I. E. Montgomery, of Bloomington, Franklin county, Nebraska, is president of the Valley Investment Company, organized in 1903, incorporated and started in 1881. It came into the above gentleman's hands in 1892, and since that time he has been manager of the concern, whose operations extend over this and the adjoining counties in Nebraska and Kansas. It is the largest company of its kind in this section of the country, and makes a specialty of loans on good farm and business property, with ample capital for all demands on A1 security. In the sale of lands it has done a large and constantly increasing business, and the promoters of the concern have advertised extensively this section throughout Iowa, northern Missouri and Illinois, and brought a large number of settlers here in the past twenty years, who have proved to be of the industrious and progressive farming class, and who have been successful here beyond all expectations, the land increasing in value from five to forty, then to sixty, and exceptionally located lands close to the town, at from eighty to one hundred dollars per acre, in that time, which is the measure of success which has come to the buyers who have held on to their property.

The Valley Investment Company has a paid up capital of ten thousand dollars, surplus two thousand dollars, with officers as follows: President, I. E. Montgomery; cashier, J. W. Knikbride, and O. H. Montgomery, vice-president. They also write insurance in the leading companies, and have a large business in this line. In the fall of 1902 our subject organized the Bloomington Telephone Company, incorporating it with a capital of five thousand dollars, and since its start the business has developed rapidly. In 1904 the capitalization was found to be too small for the operations of the company, and in the spring of the following year Mr. Montgomery secured control of the Franklin Telephone Company and he then incorporated the Republican Valley Telephone Company with an authorized capital of one hundred thousand dollars, this company being a consolidation of the Bloomington and the Franklin Telephone Companies. The new company has a paid up capital of seventeen thousand dollars. The company owns the exchanges in the towns of Bloomington, using two hundred 'phones, and Franklin, with the same number, operating in all over four hundred telephones of their own, besides switching for about twelve farm lines of six hundred 'phones, and new telephones are being constantly installed. This company owns the toll lines east from Republic City, Nebraska, to midway between Franklin and Riverton, also the toll line from Franklin to Macon, and operate, under arrangement, over the Bell telephone toll lines in every direction to this and the adjoining states.

The Republican Valley Telephone Company rebuilt the Franklin system in the summer of 1905, installing a new two hundred capacity visual signal switchboard, as well as about twenty-five hundred feet of cable, and in the fall of 1906 they erected a fine brick central office building in Bloomington, with every up-to-date fixture and improvement to be had, installing an additional one hundred capacity switchboard and three thousand feet of cable, and the whole system is now in the best possible shape. Besides Mr. Montgomery's interest in the telephone company he is proprietor of about one thousand acres of farm lands, and buys, sells and rents from time to time. Much of his time is taken up in public affairs, and for sixteen years he was in the court house at Bloomington. From May, 1884, to January, 1888, he served as deputy county treasurer, and from the latter date to August, 1891, was deputy county clerk, resigning at that time to look after the campaign as candidate for clerk of the district court. At that time the fusion party had a majority of two hundred to three hundred in the county, but our subject had been so successful as deputy treasurer and clerk that he was elected on the Republican ticket by a majority of one hundred and twenty-five, he and L. A. Siegel, county clerk, being the only Republicans to be elected. Mr. Montgomery served as clerk of the district court for four years, from January 1, 1892, up to January 1, 1896, and was re-elected in the fall of 1895, serving for four more years. He was the first clerk of the district court in this county, where the office is separate from that of county clerk. While acting as deputy county clerk he did the work of a district court clerk, from January, 1888, up to July, 1891. During the years 1901-'02 he took a course in law at the Nebraska State University, graduating in June, and was admitted to the supreme court bar and all state courts in that month, also to the United States circuit court and the district courts in November, 1902. In his practice he made a specialty of real estate and probate cases.

Mr. I. E. Montgomery is a native of Mar-kato, Minnesota, born in 1866. His father, R. W. Montgomery, is a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1862 in the Second Minnesota Cavalry, and served up to 1865. He is secretary of the Masonic lodge at Bloomington, and prominent in Grand Army of the Republic circles.

He married Miss Eliza Burns, born in Ireland, near Dublin, who came to this country about 1856, locating in Pekin, Illinois. Our subject was educated in the Nebraska schools, and after finishing his education taught for one year in Smith county, Kansas. He has one brother, C. D. Montgomery, associated with the Mergenthaler Linotype Machine Company, of Chicago and New York. Our subject has lived in Bloomington continuously since 1881, and prior to that resided in Furnas county, near Precept, and also in Beaver City. In 1890 Mr. Montgomery was married to Miss Oma Hildreth, daughter of Wilson Hildreth, deceased, formerly of Franklin county, and of this marriage one child was born, named Elizabeth.

The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church at Bloomington, Mr. Montgomery acting as trustee. He is also a member of the school board, serving on that body since 1901, first as chairman and secretary, and is now treasurer.

ALтна S. GERDES.

Altna S. Gerdes, who resides in township 27, range 47, Box Butte county, was born in Hanover province, Germany, in 1858. His father was a farmer and day laborer, and our subject was reared in his native town, where he followed farm work until he was twenty-six years of age. After reaching manhood he served for three years in the German army, and in 1884 left the old country and came to America, landing at New York. After landing here he remained for some time in New York city, then came to Illinois, where he was employed for three years on a stock farm. In 1887 he came west, locating in Box Butte county, Nebraska, landing in Hay Springs on June 1, 1887. Here he filed on a pre-emption in section 2, township 27, range 47, putting up sod buildings and digging a well, as there was trouble from lack of water in this vicinity. He remained on that place but one year, then settled on a homestead in section 13, on which he lived for ten years. His first poor year was in 1890. The following two years he was able to raise good crops, but again in 1894, 1895 and 1896 the drouths caused failures of crops and he had a hard time to get along and improve his place. During those times his nearest trading point was Alliance, and he was obliged to make many trips to Pine Ridge for wood, camping out along the road on the journey. About this time Mr. Gerdes started in the stock business. His beginning was one cow and a calf, which he bought in 1887, and he kept increasing his herd and has dealt in stock principally since that time, and all the cattle he ever bought was six head, from this number developing a fine herd, at times running as high as three hundred and twenty-five head of cattle. He has marketed many carloads, all of them being from the increase of his original six head. Mr. Gerdes now owns a ranch of two thousand acres, all in Box Butte and Sheridan counties. He has good buildings, fences, etc., with three wells and wind-mills. He only cultivates forty acres, keeping all the rest for pasture, grass and hay land for his stock.

In 1898 Mr. Gerdes was married to Line Taylor, a widow, daughter of C. C. Ruggles, who was one of the first settlers in this county. Mr. and Mrs. Gerdes are the parents of two sons, George, aged nine years, and John, aged seven years.

Our subject is one of the leading men and old-timers of this part of the state, who has always taken an active part in its history from the beginning. He is a Republican.

FREDERICK ELLIOTT.

The subject of this review, residing at North Platte, Nebraska, is one of the oldest railroad men in this section of the state. He has been in this line of work since 1870, and is familiar with every branch of the business and an authority on all matters pertaining to railway affairs.

Mr. Elliott is a native of England, born in Kent in 1848, and a son of Frederick Elliott, Sr. His grandfather, Stephen Elliott, served for forty-four years in the British navy. There were ten sons in the family, and of this number nine left the mother country and came to the United States to build up homes and make a fortune for themselves. The Elliott family first came from Scotland to Ireland, and later settled in Kent, England, and it was there that our subject was raised until the age of twenty, beginning to work in the machine shop of the ship yards there, where he learned the trade which he has followed ever since. At twenty years of age he started out for the new world and landed in America in 1869. He came west and settled in Nebraska, beginning work in the railway shops at Omaha in 1870, and from that time up to 1881 he had been employed on most of the leading roads in this section of the country. During the latter year he first started to work for the Union Pacific, and has been with that company ever since that time, with headquarters at North Platte. He is now employed as foreman of the blacksmith shop in that city, and has held this position for the past five years.

While Mr. Elliott still lived in England he married Miss Bessie Peets, at Ramsgate, and together the young couple came to the United States, where they have worked hard to establish a home, and have a fine family of three children, all filling honorable positions in the world. The eldest, Professor Ed. C. Elliott, graduated from the North Platte high school in 1891 and entered the Nebraska State University, where he received the degree of Bachelor of Science and Master of Arts, afterwards entering the Columbia College, New York, where he earned the title of Doctor of Philosophy. He also studied in Germany for some time, and is now filling the chair of pedagogy at the University of Wisconsin. The second son, Fred Elliott, Jr., is also a graduate of the North Platte high school, and has a good position with the Union Pacific Railway Company shops in Omaha as a coach carpenter. Benjamin G. Elliott, the youngest son, was graduated from his home high school, and is now attending the School of Technology at Terre Haute, Indiana.

The family are prominent members of the Episcopal church at North Platte, and enjoy the esteem and friendship of a large circle of people in their community.

WILLIAM D. CONNELL.

William D. Connell, residing on section 6, township 32, range 50, Dawes county, is well known as a successful and prosperous agriculturist of his locality. He is among the earliest settlers in western Nebraska, and has aided materially in the development of the region by his active interest in promoting the commercial and agricultural resources of the county, and is highly respected and esteemed by all who know him.

Mr. Connell was born in Polk county, Iowa, near Des Moines, in 1855. His father, John Connell, was a butcher by trade, born in Ohio, of Irish stock, and he married Charity Scribner, who was of German parentage. As a boy our subject lived in Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, learning the butcher's business early in life, which he followed for fifteen years. When he was twelve years of age he started out for himself and traveled over the western states quite extensively. In 1885 he came to Dawes county, and at that time the railroad only came as far as Valentine. He made his first settlement two and a half miles east of Whitney, then a small town, and his first dwelling was a log shanty sixteen by thirty-two. The following year his family joined him, and they remained on this place up to 1897, then located in section 6, township 32, range 50, where he now lives. Here he has put up good buildings and all necessary improvements and machinery for operating his farm. He has his place all fenced, and plenty of good water, the White river running through the farm. He owns one hundred and sixty acres, and has plenty of hay land and alfalfa, and engages in stock raising, doing but little farming. He buys and sells considerable stock, running principally horses and cattle. When he first came here he drove from Valentine, and in making another trip to the Missouri river was compelled to drive all the way from Hay Springs, as there was no railway through then.

In 1874 Mr. Connell was married to Miss Eva A. Ballard, daughter of Martin Ballard, an attorney at Blair, Nebraska, where for a time after his marriage Mr. Connell was engaged in the butcher business. Mr. and Mrs. Connell have three children, who are named as follows: Lillie M., C. F. Connell and Gertie S.

SAMUEL W. CAREY.

Samuel W. Carey, who occupies a foremost position among the prominent old settlers of western Nebraska, resides at Crawford, in Dawes county, and is the owner of a fine farm and comfortable home in section 7, township 32, range 53. He has spent many years in accumulating this property, and his entire career has been marked by industrious effort and honest dealings. On another page we present a picture of Mr. Carey with his family and grandson.

Mr. Carey is a native of Hillsborough county, New Hampshire, born in 1832. He is a worthy descendant of an old American family and a son of Samuel, also a farmer all his life. His mother's maiden name was Harriet Prouty.

Our subject was raised in his native state and remained there during his young manhood, following farm work for many years. In 1862 Mr. Carey came west, first locating in Chicago, where he remained for a short time. He came to Nebraska, locating in Sioux county, in 1887, and at the time he struck this region the country was practically in its primitive state, there being no roads or bridges, and only a few scattering settlers in the county. He picked out a location thirteen miles northwest of Crawford, the tract being situated on School and Cottonwood creeks, and lived there for about five years, proving up on the place as a homestead. He had a hard time getting started, meeting with many discouragements on account of crop failures, etc., and finally purchased and moved to the farm on section 7 in 1892, and at once began to put up improvements in the way of buildings, fences and cultivating the land for crops. The ranch contains four hundred and eighty acres, and is well supplied with timber, water, etc., and he engages in mixed farming and stock raising. He has put in all his time on the place since coming here, and his labors have been well rewarded, as is evidenced by the well tilled fields and well kept appearance of every corner of his property. Mr. Carey still owns his ranch in Sioux county, but of late has bought out the Charles Bowers foundry plant at Crawford, Dawes county, Nebraska, and is putting it in fine shape for general business, and he lives on the site, occupying several acres. Mr. Carey is a born mechanic and served his apprenticeship in New York when a young man.

Mr. Carey was married in 1863 to Martha Procnier, a daughter of Isaac Procnier, of German descent. Her mother's maiden name was Annie McClish, of Scotch descent. Our subject and his estimable wife have had a family of five children, who are named as follows: Leona, Elmina, Adelaide, Hattie and Martha. Leona died in May, 1903.

Mr. Carey is one of the well-to-do men of his locality and enjoys a happy and peaceful home and many friends. He is held in high esteem as a worthy citizen and a good neighbor. He is a stanch Bryan Democrat. Mr. Carey was one of the first men to build a fence in his township, and also one of the first to have any surveying done. He also brought the first sawmill into the district, and owned it.

ALBERT G. HOLT.

Albert G. Holt, widely known as one of the leading business men of Johnstown, Brown county, is a gentleman of integrity and sterling character, who has gained the confidence and esteem of the people among whom he has resided for the past twenty-two years. He is the banker of the above town, and a worthy citizen of his community.

Mr. Holt is a native of Missouri City, Clay county, Missouri, born January 15, 1861. His father, John D. Holt, was a merchant and produce shipper, of old American stock, and the mother in maidenhood was Martha M. Peery. The family consisted of six children, of whom our subject is the fourth member. He was reared in Missouri City, some twenty-one miles east of Kansas City. For two years the family lived at Holt, Missouri, and subsequently spent two years in Gainsville, Texas, returning to Missouri City. Mr. Holt had learned the telegrapher's art and worked at Liberty, on the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railway, for some time. At the age of twenty-two he came to Long Pine, filing on a homestead. He then went to Blair, Nebraska, and worked as a telegraph operator for several years, and while there was married. In 1887 he came to Johnstown as station agent for the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley Railroad, first known as the Sioux City & Pacific, which position he held for six years. He was afterwards postmaster during Cleveland's second administration, serving one term. He has always taken an active part in politics, attending many national conventions, particularly since 1896, and is known as one of the public-spirited men of this section.

During the dry years throughout this region Mr. Holt was extensively engaged in the poultry and game business in Johnstown, his trade amounting to forty thousand or fifty thousand dollars each year, and through this venture he accumulated a large part of his property. He now owns a fine ranch of twelve hundred acres, on which he runs as high as two hundred head of cattle.

Mr. Holt was married near Ellendale, South Dakota, to Miss Mary Towne, daughter of DeWitt C. Towne, who married Julia B. Goodman. To Mr. and Mrs. Holt seven children have been born: Nellie C., who is cashier in the bank; Hazel M., John Albert, Louis C., Cleora Ruth, Grace and Clifford Towne.

In 1901 Mr. Holt established the Citizens' Bank in Johnstown, which he is now operating, it being considered one of the most reliable banking houses in western Nebraska. #### JAMES A. FARMER.

James A. Farmer, one of the extensive agriculturists of Marvin precinct, is also one of the very early settlers in Perkins county. He is a man of active public spirit and broad mind, and has an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen.

Mr. Farmer was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, in 1845, and was reared on a farm there. Both his parents were natives of that state and spent many years as farmers.

When James was about twelve years of age he started to support himself, and since that time has drifted from one place to another and has seen much of the country in his wanderings. In 1863 he enlisted in Company H, Eleventh Ohio Cavalry, and was sent west with his regiment, going into the Dakotas, Montana, Colorado and Wyoming. All of his service in the west was in fighting the Indians. He also saw service after the raider Morgan and after the guerrilla Quantrell. After his discharge from the army, in 1866, he returned to Ohio and remained there up to the spring of 1884, following farming all of the time. He was married there in 1869 to Miss Elizabeth Chamber, born in Virginia, and to them were born three children, Denver, Edgar and Flora, all bright and intelligent young people. The family came to Kearney county, Nebraska, and lived in that vicinity for one year, then came to Perkins county, where they were among the pioneers—but few were here at that time. The country was entirely unimproved, and they went through many hardships and privations in getting a home started, all their supplies being hauled from North Platte, a distance of sixty miles from their claim. Mr. Farmer made many trips to that point, the journey taking several days through rough and unbroken roads, and the nights were spent in camping out under his wagon. He improved his farm as he was able, putting up substantial buildings, planting groves, etc., and now has a very valuable property. His home is on section 6, township 9, range 35, and he has eight hundred acres, about one hundred and twenty acres of which is cultivated and the rest used for pasture and hay land for stock, of which he has quite a bunch, including cattle, horses, hogs and sheep.

When Mr. Farmer landed in this section of the country he had but little capital to start with. He went to work with a will to carve out a fortune and establish a good home for himself and family, and the result must be highly satisfactory to him, as every dollar of his property has been gained through his own efforts, and he can enjoy his declining years with the knowledge of "duty well done." Mr. Farmer is a Republican and takes an active part in Republican politics.

LEANDER KARR BIVENS.

Leander Karr Bivens, one of the early settlers and prosperous ranchmen of Thomas county, Nebraska, resides on his pleasant estate and enjoys the comforts of rural life and the respect and esteem of a large circle of acquaintances.

Mr. Bivens was born in Pennsylvania in 1834. His father, Leonard Bivens, was of Yankee stock, a blacksmith by trade, and he married Nancy Sarver, who came of Pennsylvania Dutch stock. Leander was raised in his native state until he was nine years of age, when his parents came to Illinois, where he spent his boyhood, remaining there up to 1854. He then drifted to Utah and during the time he was in Utah he was for a time engaged in carrying the United States mail, and was through all sorts of exciting times, making his trips at times through the severest storms, and at one time barely escaped with his life when caught in a blizzard, and had fourteen mules freeze to death on one trip.

Thirty-five years of Mr. Bivens' career were spent in roving the western states, and he has passed through some of the most thrilling adventures during his life on the frontier, experiencing every form of pioneer hardship and privation. During the "gold fever," which struck the whole country at different times, he was one of the foremost in the different expeditions formed in the west, and in pursuit of the shining metal which tempted so many from home to the gold regions, he figures that he has spent not less than fifty thousand dollars prospecting in the western gold fields of California, Greenwood Valley and British Columbia.

In 1886 Mr. Bivens first came to Thomas county, Nebraska, two years before it was organized, took a pre-emption and homestead and proved up on both claims. He had a hard time to make a living during the first few years on the place, but stuck to it, determined to succeed, going through the usual pioneer times, and finally became able to add improvements to his farm, erect good buildings, etc., gradually adding to his original homestead, until he is now owner of one whole section, which he uses for stock raising, the greater portion used for grass and hay land. He has built five miles of fence, and every improvement necessary in the way of buildings, machinery, etc. He has a beautiful lake on the ranch, well stocked with fish, and has any number of fine shade and fruit trees, which he planted many years ago. Altogether his place is one of the best equipped and most pleasantly situated in this part of the country. Our subject is of quite a practical turn and is known as an expert in the making of home-made wine.

During boyhood our subject learned the blacksmith's trade, following in the footsteps of his father, and has worked at this off and on during much of his career in the west, and for seventeen years after coming to Nebraska he devoted all of his time to it. One brother, Samuel W. Bivens, is another old settler in Thomas county, having located here in 1884. He also is proprietor of a valuable estate consisting of a fine ranch and pleasant home which is situated near the Loup river, and adjoins a part of our subject's homestead.

FRED M. KURTH.

Industry and integrity coupled with hard and faithful labor, are the stepping stones by which this gentleman has reached success. Mr. Kurth is the owner of one of the finest ranches in Cheyenne county, Nebraska, which he has acquired by persistent and untiring labor and good management. He has at times met with reverses, but losses did not discourage him, and he is now one of the substantial men of his locality. He resides on his valuable estate in Colton precinct, where he has gathered about him all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

Mr. Kurth was born in Saxony, Germany, December 26, 1853, and grew to the age of thirteen years in his native city. He then came to the United States with an uncle, sailing from Bremen Haven in the Deutschland and landing in New York after a voyage of thirteen days. They settled in Will county, Illinois, and remained there following farming until 1886, when our subject came to western Nebraska, locating in Cheyenne county. He filed on a homestead in the southwest quarter of section 10, township 13, range 48, later moving to section 18, the latter acquired by purchase, and at the present time he owns and controls one thousand six hundred acres of good ranch and farm land in the vicinity. He has succeeded in a remarkable degree, building a fine home, with a complete set of outbuildings, and cultivates about one hundred and sixty acres, using the balance as a stock ranch, on which he runs at times three hundred and fifty head of cattle and about one hundred horses.

He has one of the finest, and, indeed, the only fruit bearing orchard in his portion of the county, all planted and tended by himself, and every corner of his ranch shows the very best care in its operation.

Mr. Kurth was united in marriage May 17, 1876, to Augusta Hollis, who was born in Germany in 1854, coming to this country with her parents at the age of three years. They have a family of eight children, named as follows: Maggie, now Mrs. William Krueger, who is mentioned elsewhere in this work; Annie, Louis, Fritz, Henry, Frank, George and Willie, four still living at home. One son, Fritz, owns a homestead in section 8, township 13, range 48, which he carries on with success.

Our subject takes an active part in local affairs, and is treasurer of school district No. 97, discharging his duties faithfully and well, and enjoys the confidence of his fellowmen.

He is a Democrat politically.

JAMES M. HUDSON.

James M. Hudson, whose pleasant and attractive ranch home is to be found in section 21, township 35, range 25, Cherry county, has built for himself a good name in Cherry county, Nebraska, where he is known as a thoroughly honorable and reliable man, an industrious worker, and a successful citizen, on whose reputation rests no stain of trickery or sharp practice. What he holds he has won by industry and hard work, and his good name comes from a lifetime of integrity and industry.

Mr. Hudson was born on a farm in Nodaway county, Missouri, January 16, 1855, and from his earliest days he was inured to a farmer's life. Being the first born in a family of eight children, two of whom died in infancy, many cares and much responsibility were early thrown upon him, and he was made self reliant and quick in thought and decision from the first. He remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-four years of age, when he began life for himself as a farmer, operating rented land. In 1882 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Nelson, who was born in Utah, but was reared in Iowa, to which state her parents, Joseph R. and Lydia (Chadwick) Nelson, moved while she was a young child. The father was an Englishman by birth while the mother was a native of New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Hudson have an adopted son, Joseph M., who was born in June, 1904, of whom they are very fond. Mr. Hudson farmed in Missouri from 1877 to 1878, and then for three years was engaged in mercantile pursuits in a store at Elmo, Missouri, until 1884. He then moved to Cherry county, Nebraska, in 1884, and settled on a homestead in section 10, township 34, range 25. Mr. Hudson came by train to the county, built a home for his family, which he brought through by wagon, camping by the roadside most of the way. His first claim not appearing to be a promising one, Mr. Hudson abandoned it and made another entry in section 21, township 35, range 25, which is fully improved, and by persistent hard work has made it one of the choice ranches of this region. At the present time he is the proprietor of an extensive tract of three quarter sections of fine land on Sand creek, of which about eighty acres are under active cultivation, and the remainder being devoted to hay and pasture. Mr. Hudson is very actively interested in stock raising, and at all times has about a hundred head of cattle on his place. He is an extensive hog raiser, and is able to show some of the most attractive horses bred in this part of the state.

In matters of politics the subject of this writing has in the main affiliated with the Democratic party, but holds party consideration secondary to questions of principle and character. He has never held any other than strictly local offices, but has always been willing to meet the full measure of his responsibility as a citizen and a man. Here he has taken a pronounced stand for whatever looks to advancement in local and educational matters, and at the present time is a member of the school board.

Cherry county and its annals by no means belong to ancient history, but Mr. Hudson is very properly named among its pioneers, and he knows by hard experience what life upon the frontier means, as he passed through many a hard and dreary day in those trying times, when Nebraska was being won from the wilderness. Here he struggled through the dry years of 1893 to 1896, and though he was able to raise nothing, survived the drouth, and still thinks Cherry county an agreeable place of residence.

He has running water on his place, an advantage which few Nebraska ranchers enjoy. He also has a small orchard which promises much in the near future. When Mr. Hudson first came to this county there was but one house on "The Table" between Berry Ridge and a point east of Spring View, and only a few cabins along the river. He has ridden the range after cattle, enjoyed wolf hunting with his dogs, killing as high as one hundred and twenty-four in a season. Mrs. Hudson has accompanied him deer hunting and during the grouse and duck season their table is bountifully supplied with game. This ranch is a favorite resort for wealthy hunters from eastern Nebraska and Iowa.

John Hudson, the father of the subject of this writing, was born in Clay county, Kentucky, July 7, 1830, and made his home in Nodaway county, Missouri, in 1839, with his father, Joseph Hudson, one of the first settlers of that region. He died in Missouri in 1897 in his ninety-second year. John Hudson learned the trade of carpenter and joiner and at the same time devoting his spare time to farming, which was mainly operated by his sons. He was always busy and became known as a very industrious man.

In 1884 he came with his entire family to Cherry county, Nebraska, and at once identified himself with the most active men of the day, and was a reliable worker for anything that looked to the welfare of the community. In 1901 he suffered from a slight attack of smallpox, which was serious enough, however, to rob him of his eyesight, since which time he has been unable to follow any work. On December 31, 1853, he was married to Miss Rutelia Lamar, who was born in Anderson county, Tennessee, in 1832, of French ancestry. Mr. Hudson has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1860, though of late years he has not been a frequent attendant at the lodge meetings.

LEWIS OBERWETTER.

Lewis Oberwetter, one of the most prosperous farmers and ranchmen of Sheridan county, was born in Wisconsin in 1863. His father, Henry Oberwetter, a farmer, was born in Germany, came to America when a young man, and served for one year in Company A, Thirty-sixth Wisconsin Infantry, during the war, losing an arm while in service. In the spring of 1870 the family moved to Iowa and located at Adel. Then they moved to Nebraska in September, 1897. Henry Oberwetter, the father of our subject, died on April 8, 1904, in Sheridan county, Nebraska. Our subject is the third in a family of five. At the age of twenty he started out, working in Iowa on a farm, and then came to Sheridan county.

Mr. Oberwetter was married in 1884 to Miss Belle Hill, born in Iowa in 1860, her parents both being of American stock, still living in Gordon. Mr. and Mrs. Oberwetter have no family.

In 1886 our subject came to Sheridan county, locating on his present farm, where he has resided ever since. He immediately engaged in the cattle business as extensively as his capital would permit, which was not on a very large scale. He had a great deal of difficulty in getting started, and the first few years their living was derived from poultry and milch cows. Mr. Oberwetter now runs about six hundred head of stock on his ranch, farming four hundred acres, feeding his crops right at home, as he aims not to sell any of his feed. His ranch comprises about five thousand acres of deeded land, which extends for a distance of twelve miles, divided in three places, but all under the personal supervision of Mr. Oberwetter.

Mr. Oberwetter is also something of an inventor, having invented a hay stacker, which proved a decided success, and is used to a considerable extent among the farmers in this county. He is also president of the Union Bank of Rushville, Nebraska, which has a capital of forty thousand dollars, and is doing a fine business. He is satisfied that Sheridan county is one of the best to be found anywhere, and contented to remain here. Mr. Oberwetter has never had the time to devote to active politics; has never held office nor wanted to, but votes the Republican ticket.

HENRY OLBRICHT.

Henry Olbricht, an old-time resident of Sioux county, and one of the foremost citizens of his township, has extensive land interests in that region. He is a gentleman of broad mind and good business judgment and has prospered in a marked degree, now enjoying a home of great comfort and the highest esteem of his fellow-citizens. He lives on section 33, township 30, range 53.

Mr. Olbricht was born in Glattz, Prussia, in 1856. His father, Franz, was a farmer and lived and died in Germany. Our subject was raised and educated there, and during his boyhood learned the tanner's trade, and for a number of years traveled through Germany and Switzerland following his work in that line.

In 1878 he came to the United States, and after landing in New York city, went immediately to New Jersey, locating at Elizabeth City, and remained there for fifteen years, working in a tannery. Mr. Olbricht came west in 1892 and settled in Sioux county upon landing in Nebraska, taking a homestead in section 33, township 30, range 53. His first dwelling was built of poles, and during the first few years witnessed all sorts of hardships and had a hard time to get along.

He was obliged to work out at anything he could find to do to make a living, but stuck to his home and gradually was able to improve the place and buy more land, so that he is now owner of a fine ranch of nine hundred and sixty acres, fitted with all good buildings, fenced and having a number of wells, windmills, etc., and is considered one of the well-to-do men of his locality.

Mr. Olbricht was married while living in New Jersey, in 1880, to Katie Eick, and to them have been born the following children: Henrietta, Frank, Benjamin and Frederick. Mrs. Olbricht died in New Jersey, at Elizabeth City, in 1889, and was deeply mourned by her family and many warm friends. She was a most estimable lady, and a good wife and mother.

In 1901 Mr. Olbricht was married to Mrs. Bertha (Lange) Sauser, a native of Russia, who came to this country when a young girl. From this second marriage a son has been born, Theodore, aged seven. Mrs. Olbricht came to America in 1890, in company with her brother and his family, and settled in New Jersey, where she lived about three years, and then went to Denver, Colorado. Her father and mother both died in the old country. By her first marriage Mrs. Olbricht had one son, Jacob Sauser, now twelve years of age.

M. J. COMBS.

M. J. Combs, retired, residing in Huntley, Nebraska, is one of the leading old settlers of western Nebraska. He is a prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and a good neighbor and worthy citizen of his community in every way.

Mr. Combs is a native of Illinois and was raised in Nebraska. His father, J. L. Combs, was a native of Tennessee, born in Nashville, in 1844, as also was his mother, whose maiden name was Jane Swan. The father came here in 1855, from near Peru, Illinois, and settled at Peru, Nemaha county, on a pre-emption consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, and together with Friel Nuckolls, R. W. Frame, William Hogg and J. W. Hall, laid out the town of Peru, he locating a mile and a half from the town site, where he died in 1864, aged fifty years. He was one of the leading citizens of his county, a strong Republican, and his death was a severe loss to the people of that locality. Our subject grew up in Nemaha county, Nebraska. During the second year of the Civil war he enlisted in Company C, Second Nebraska Cavalry, at Brownsville. He was but eighteen years of age at that time, and with his regiment served at Fort Kearney, Cottonwood Springs. He also went on expeditions up the Platte river, at Fort McPherson, where Company C was the first to be stationed. They had many skirmishes with the Indians and saw a great deal of rough fighting while in the service. In 1865 and 1866 he freighted along the Platte river, and also sold chickens to the settlers in that vicinity, receiving twelve dollars per dozen, as they were a luxury in these parts at that time.

Many times he had narrow escapes from falling into the hands of bands of Indians who roamed the country, and on one occasion saw a freight train of twenty-four wagons held up and the twenty-six men who were with the outfit were all killed.

In 1867 he settled down and lived on his father's farm for nine years, taking care of his mother and younger brothers and sisters after his father's death. In all he farmed near Peru for forty-three years, building up a good home and valuable estate, owning over four hundred and eighty acres at one time, but has since sold part of this.

Mr. Combs married Miss Julia Roberts, who resides near Stockton, Missouri, a daughter of B. Roberts, who went to Cedar county, Missouri, from Brookville, Indiana, in 1850 in company with a neighbor, and these were the only men in that county who voted for Abraham Lincoln as president, in 1860. To Mr. and Mrs. Combs have been born the following children: Homer L., now of Auburn, Nebraska; C. H., of Kenesaw, this state; Elmer C., of Huntley; Minnie J., now Mrs. Adcock, wife of a farmer living near Huntley; Dora and Amanda, both attending school, and living at home.

Mr. Combs is an active member of the Grand Army of the Republic post at Huntley, and takes a leading part in all local affairs of importance to his community. He is a Republican, and has attended many county and state conventions as a delegate of his party. For five years he has served as assessor here. He is a good neighbor and worthy citizen of his community, of peaceful proclivities, and in all his life has never sued another man, never been sued, and only once was ever called as a witness in a court of law. He is a fine specimen of manhood, standing six feet two inches, and of a most interesting personality, esteemed by everyone with whom he has had to do.

WALTER KNUTZEN.

Walter Knutzen and R. G. Isdell, builders and contractors, have been in business together at Kearney, Nebraska, for the past ten or twelve years. They have put up all of the larger buildings and modern residences erected here in that time. The gentleman above named came here in 1879, and has followed contracting and building through all the ups and downs of this section, holding his own always, and has succeeded in a marked degree. He put up the City National Bank, the high school building, costing forty thousand dollars, which is one of the finest in design, material and execution of workmanship in the state of Nebraska. All visitors to Kearney greatly admire its exterior design and finish, and the citizens are justly proud of the Longfellow school. Mr. Knutzen also erected the Midway Loan & Trust Company building, the beautiful State Normal school dormitory, costing seventy-five thousand dollars, the splendid Carnegie Public Library, costing ten thousand dollars, and all excepting one of the ward school buildings, at a cost of from ten thousand to twelve thousand dollars each. He also erected most of the six large brick buildings at the State Industrial School, and many of the residences and business blocks that adorn the city and proclaim the growth of Kearney.

Mr. Knutzen is a native of Norway, and came to the United States in 1872, settling in Chicago, where he remained for two years, then went to the upper peninsula of Michigan, in the copper mining districts, where he spent five years. He then came to Nebraska, locating in Kearney, where he has built up a fine home and has won the respect and confidence of all with whom he has dealings, both social and commercial. He is one of the sturdy and industrious sons of Norway, who, attracted by the greater opportunities to be found in the new world, left his native land to go to a strange country, there to carve out a name and fortune for himself, but he will always remain loyal to the land of his birth and retain that warm love for the mother country. Mr. Knutzen visited Norway in 1878 and 1879, and found the same loving hearts and familiar scenes the same as he had left them in his early manhood. The country has progressed wonderfully in the past quarter of a century, and our subject was amazed at the changes which had taken place. His wife and daughters have also paid a visit to Norway, and to the latter the trip was one to be long remembered.

Mr. Knutzen was married in 1879 to Miss

Oplan Jensen. The family consists of five children, namely: Annie, a graduate of the State Normal School, and now a teacher in the Kearney public schools; Julia, also a graduate of the former institution, and State University; Agnes, who in 1906 graduated from the Kearney high school and in 1908 from the State Normal School; Henry, attending school at the present time, and Harriet, also at home. The family is well liked in the community in which they reside, and enjoy many warm friends, who frequently partake of their genial hospitality.

Mr. Knutzen takes a commendable interest in all affairs that tend to the commercial advancement of his community, and is deeply interested also in all movements toward the progress of educational matters. He has served for two terms in the city council, and is recognized as a man of much ability, and a worthy citizen.

CLAUS CHRISTENSEN.

Claus Christensen, who holds a foremost place among the pioneer settlers of Sioux county, Nebraska, has built up a fine estate in section 7, township 34, range 54, where he has become one of the substantial citizens and enjoys an enviable reputation as a worthy citizen and good neighbor.

Mr. Christensen was born in Denmark in 1848. His father, Hans, was a farmer, spending his entire career in Germany and Denmark, his death occurring there in 1864. He married Tiida Carlson, daughter of a prominent churchman of that province, and she came to America with her children, dying here at the age of ninety years.

Our subject was raised and educated in his native land, attending the common schools, and following farm work during boyhood, and after he was confirmed, in accordance with the German belief, he was apprenticed in a mercantile house, starting as a clerk, following that occupation until he was a young man of twenty-one. He then came to the United States, and after landing in New York city came west, locating in Illinois, where he spent one year working on a farm, then came to eastern Nebraska, following farm work, also working at railroad construction, helping to build the first railway into South Dakota, from Sioux City, Iowa, to Yankton.

Mr. Christensen remained in the eastern part of the state up to 1888, witnessing grasshopper raids, and going through the terrible winter of 1880 and 1881, and the floods of the latter year, and suffered many hardships in that vicinity. He later owned a farm on the Missouri river, located below Yankton, and lived there for a time. On coming to Sioux county he located on Hat creek, taking up a homestead situated seven miles southwest of Ardmore, South Dakota, and did freighting from Crawford during the first two years, also beginning to improve his place, putting up a log cabin sixteen by twenty-two feet, in which he lived with his family for many years. He went through the dry years and lost several crops and saw hard times, but stuck to his farm and finally succeeded in developing it in good shape and bought more land as he grew able, now being owner of nine hundred and sixty acres, which is all in first-class condition, with a good set of buildings, etc. He has a good water supply the year around, and runs quite a herd of stock, cultivating fifty acres. He has done considerable experimenting along different lines of farming, and has proved that good crops of grain can be raised in this part of the country.

In 1875 Mr. Christensen was married to Miss Mary Meng, a native of Denmark, and daughter of George Meng, who was a carpenter and contractor of that country. Mr. and Mrs. Christensen are the parents of six children, named as follows: Harry, Jep, Tillie, Katie, Mary and Claus.

Mr. Christensen is a prominent citizen of his locality, and has held numerous offices of trust, serving as assessor for five terms in Montrose precinct. He has taken part in the development of the locality, is an Independent in politics, and an earnest worker for the good of his community.

WILLIAM CLARK.

William Clark, one of the leading old settlers of Dawes county, Nebraska, deserves prominent mention for his aid in the success of western Nebraska as an agricultural and commercial center, and in doing so has incidentally built up a good home and farm for himself by dint of his industry and good management.

Mr. Clark was born in Green county, Ohio, in 1846. His father was Samuel Clark, of mixed nationality, a farmer by occupation and for many years followed that work in Ohio, Illinois, Minnesota and Nebraska and has been on the frontier all his life. When our subject was but a baby the family moved to Iowa, then to Nebraska, but most of his boyhood years were spent in Minnesota, where they lived for some years in Freeborn county. He learned to do all kinds of hard farm work up to his eighteenth year, then enlisted in the Second Minnesota Cavalry, Company C, and saw service in the west mostly, fighting against the Indians.

After the war he went back to Minnesota, locating in Martin county, and was there married to Miss Louisa Connic, daughter of Howard Connic, a harness maker, of Pennsylvania, and an old settler, in Minnesota.

In the spring of 1881 he came to Cuming county, Nebraska, and was among the pioneers in that section, but only remained for three years. In 1884 he came to Dawes county, driving here with a team and covered wagon, and as soon as he located here built a shack and lived in that for some time, "batching it" up to the spring of 1885, when he was joined by his family, who drove from Valentine. They were then located on section 26, township 31, range 47, and went through pioneer experiences, often meeting hardships and privations, one winter being spent in Pine Ridge, logging with ox teams to make a living for the family. During the dry years he had many losses from partial crop failures, although he was able to raise some crops during all that time.

For three years he was in the Sand Hills engaged in the stock business, and as he was able, bought more land, until he is proprietor of six and a half sections, in partnership with his son-in-law, Fred J. Stinchfield. Mr. Clark now lives on section 28, township 31, range 47, where he has built up a fine farm and home. The place is supplied with plenty of good living water, and he has a very fine grove of trees near his house, one of the best in the county. He has seven wells and windmills, and is largely engaged in stock raising, running from four to five hundred head all the time. His ranch is all fenced and cross fenced, having in all about fifty miles of fencing. He has a fine young orchard and garden, and everything to make a well ordered home and comfortable rural life.

Mr. Clark's family consists of nine children, named as follows: Charlotte, Melissa and Eva, Rosella, Jennie and Belle, born in Minnesota; and Lorenzo, William and Grace, born in Nebraska. The family are highly esteemed in their community, and enjoy a happy and peaceful life, surrounded by a host of warm friends and good neighbors.

Mr. Clark is active in school affairs in his district, and takes a leading part in local political matters, voting the Republican ticket.

He is a member of the school board, and has held local office, serving as road overseer.

On another page of this volume will be found an interesting picture showing views on the ranch of our subject.

ALFRED LAWRENCE.

Alfred Lawrence, numbered among the pioneers of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, has built up a fine farm and ranch in Norden precinct, and there resides, surrounded by the comforts of life and esteemed by his associates.

Mr. Lawrence was born in Clark county, Iowa, March 25, 1855. His father, William Lawrence, was a farmer and blacksmith by trade, American born, and he married Mary McAlister in 18—, also of American stock. They had a family of six children, of whom Alfred, one of twins, is the fourth, and grew up on his parents' farm in Iowa, where he spent his boyhood days attending the country schools and assisting his father in carrying on the farm work. When he was twenty-five years of age he left home and started in farming for himself. His father had died, and he was obliged to shoulder the responsibility of caring for the family for several years. After marriage he lived in Ringold and Union counties, Minnesota, whence he moved to Nebraska.

In 1888 Mr. Lawrence came to Keya Paha county, settling on a farm on section 10, township 34, range 24, and here he started a farm and home. He put up a sod house, and was getting along very well until the dry years struck him, then for four years in succession he lost his crops and in order to make a living for his family had to work out at whatever he could get to do. In the fall of 1896 he burned out, losing his house and all their goods.

In 1898 he moved to his present farm on section 5, township 34, range 24, where during the first winter on this place he lost his barns by fire and everything in the buildings—harnesses and saddles, etc. This was hard luck to him, and he became discouraged, but went to work to build up his place again, and has been successful, now owning six hundred and forty acres, with a lease on a half section additional, cultivating about fifty acres. He keeps fifty head of cattle and seventeen horses, and besides his own stock runs about one hundred head of cattle for other people in the vicinity. He milks eighteen cows and for the past three years has used separators, shipping the cream, which he finds a very profitable branch of his business. He has farmed quite extensively for the past four years, and harvested good crops.

Mr. Lawrence was married in Osceola, Iowa, March 25, 1880, to Miss Rebecca J. Shields, daughter of Joseph H. Shields, a farmer of American stock, residing in Clark county, Iowa. To Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence have been born the following children: William and Joseph, born in Iowa; Albert, Leona and Myrtle, born in Nebraska.

Mr. Lawrence is one of the pioneers of this region, and has watched the development and growth of the country from its beginning, and has given all the aid in his power in building up the locality. He takes an active interest in local public affairs, and is numbered among the leading citizens of his community. In political views he is a Republican.

WILLIAM McADAM.

For the past twenty-three years the gentleman whose name heads this personal history has occupied a pleasant home in Potter precinct, Cheyenne county, Nebraska. He has passed through all the changes that have come to that region, and while building up a good farm for himself has at the same time taken an active part in the development of the commercial and agricultural resources of the locality where he chose to make his home. His residence is in section 34, township 15, range 52, and he is well known and highly esteemed as a worthy citizen of the community.

William McAdam was born in Argentele county, Province of Quebec, Canada, November 4, 1845. He grew up there, living with his parents, now deceased, and helping on their farm, up to the age of twenty years, then came to the United States, settling at first in Alamakee county, Iowa, remaining there from 1866 to 1876, at which time he came to Clay county, Nebraska. Here he followed the contracting and building business in and around Clay Center, making occasional trips to Iowa, where contracts were secured in that state. After ten years in Clay county, he located in Cheyenne county, in 1886, filing on a timber claim on section 34, township 15, range 52, and on a homestead on the same section in 1887.

He experienced all the early Nebraska times, living as the typical pioneers of those days with his family, meeting many forms of discouragements through losses of crops, from drouth, hail and prairie fires, but finally succeeded in improving his homestead, added more land to his original claim, so that he is now proprietor of four hundred and eighty acres, of which about fifty acres are devoted to farming and the balance used as a stock ranch.

For several years since locating in this region Mr. McAdam followed his former occupation of contracting and building, although all of his time has been put in on the home ranch as a residence; when he was obliged to be away from home his family managed the farm.

In 1886 Mr. McAdam was married, while living in Iowa, to Miss Jennie Cowles; they have two children, Ina M. and Dorothy, both under the parental roof. They have a pleasant home and are among the leading members of the community in school and social affairs, well liked by all. In politics Mr. McAdam is a strong Republican, and is active in county and precinct party councils. Mr. McAdam and his family are members of the Methodist church.

BENJAMIN J. HARVEY.

Benjamin J. Harvey was born on the farm in Hampshire county, West Virginia, in 1836, and was the son of Gazaway Harvey and Ruth (Junkins) Harvey, both of American birth.

Benjamin J. Harvey was reared and educated in West Virginia, and when he was sixteen years of age his parents removed to Iowa and became pioneers of Keokuk county. In 1856 our subject started out for himself, engaging in agricultural pursuits and later went to Webster county, Iowa, in 1863. Here he remained for ten years and then came west by team and covered wagon to St. Paul, Nebraska, where he remained for one winter. He then located near Kent, in Loup county, on a homestead. Our subject had but little means to begin with, the extent of his money being one dollar and thirty-five cents on his arrival here, and nothing but the best of pluck and continued energy won for him the success which he has attained. His first domicile was a dugout, and later a log shanty. He was a long way from his source of supplies and had to haul all his provisions from Grand Island, a hundred miles away. Many times he has slept under the wagon at night when the snow was knee-deep on the prairie. He made one hundred and ten round trips to Grand Island with oxen; his first grist he took with an ox team to Schuyler, one hundred and fifty miles away. Our subject has had many interesting experiences and has seen many hardships, but he has stuck to his farm in spite of poor sod crops and the years of drouth. In 1890 the drouth destroyed six hundred and fifty acres of crops and he harvested only one hundred and fifty-five bushels of wheat from three hundred and ten acres and only three bushels of corn. Hailstorms also ruined crops and wrecked his plans, and his losses all told would amount to many acres of crops and many dollars. He has now a nice little farm of eighty acres with fair improvements.

Our subject was one of the first white settlers above Sioux creek on the North Loup river. He has taken a leading and an important part in all matters of public interest and was the first judge of Loup county. In spite of the many drawbacks and hardships Mr. Harvey has built up a pleasant home and has established himself firmly in the respect of his fellow citizens.

Benjamin J. Harvey was married in 1856 to Mary E. Ham, daughter of John Ham, who was one of the pioneers of Butler county, Nebraska, where he settled in 1872. There are fourteen children in the family, three of whom are Mrs. Harvey's by a former marriage. The names of the children are: Rose Ellan, Martha Ann, Harriet Susan, Mary Adelle, Benjamin Wellington, Eva May, Ida Evaline, Minnie Pearl, Mary K., Frank and Kate—the step children are: Albert L., Ernery C. and Martha May.

PETER NEWBERG.

Peter Newberg, whose successful career demonstrates what may be accomplished by persistent labor and honest dealings, is proprietor of one of the valuable estates of Deuel county, Nebraska, and is known throughout the locality as one of the most worthy citizens of his community.

Mr. Newberg was born in Sweden on June 2, 1851. He spent his boyhood in that country, attending the public schools, and received the training usual to the lads of his station, working on his parents' farm in the place of hired help. He continued there until he reached the age of twenty-two years, then came to America, landing here in 1873. He first went to the Lake Superior mining regions, following mining for about five years. His next move was to Colorado, remaining there for nine years, most of the time engaged in mining, located near Julesburg, and has had considerable experience in pioneer life on the frontier, passing through all the hardships and privations of the early western emigrants.

He came to Deuel county in 1887, arriving here in February of that year, and soon afterwards filed on homestead rights on the southwest quarter of section 8, township 14, range 43. He worked hard to improve his claim, erected a rude dwelling at first, gradually added improvements as he was able, and succeeded in building up a good home, although he was considerably handicapped by the bad years, which he passed through during his early residence in the region. He has prospered in a marked degree, as he is now owner of a ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, and of this he cultivates about one hundred and fifty acres, raising good crops each year. He also runs considerable stock, having at present one hundred head of cattle and a bunch of horses. During the past several years he has erected substantial farm buildings of all kinds, and has one of the well improved and equipped estates in his locality, enjoying the reputation of a progressive and thrifty farmer and thorough stockman.

Mr. Newberg was married at Leadville, Colorado, on July 7, 1880, to Miss Lida Ekwall, born and reared in Sweden, who came to this country in 1877. Eight children were born of this union, five of whom are living, namely: Oscar L., Albert W., Frank L., Edna E. and Henry W., all living at home, assisting their parents in the work on the home ranch. Our subject's parents are still living in Sweden, together with their remaining children, Mr. Newberg being the only one in his family to leave their native land. Mrs. Newberg's father also resides in Sweden, but her mother is dead.

Mr. Newberg is a gentleman of broad mind, keeping abreast of the times, and takes an active part in local affairs. He is especially interested in educational matters in his community, and has held different school offices, at the present time serving as director of school district No. 54. In political faith he is a Republican, and stands firmly for the principles of his party.

LYNN W. PARKER.

Lynn W. Parker, a resident on section 31, township 33, range 29, and prominent among the younger farmers of Cherry county, is a notable member of that contingent of keen-eyed, bright and progressive men that Wisconsin has given to the development of Nebraska. He was born on a farm in Adams county, in that state, November 30, 1868, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. His present enviable business standing and personal reputation have largely come from his industrious habits, honest ways and genial disposition. From a very early day he has had to do with local interests in Cherry county and, though a young man, is familiar at pioneer gatherings as one of the oldest settlers of the county.

William M. Parker, the father of Lynn W., was a pioneer settler of Sheridan county, Nebraska, having located there as early as 1884. The family drove to that point on Valentine across the prairies, and had many interesting experiences as they penetrated the depths of what was largely still a wilderness. Zilpha A. Ladd, the wife of William M. Parker, and the mother of Lynn W., like her husband, came of an old and long established American family, and in their children appear many of the best characteristics of their New England lineage.

When the subject of this writing was a year old he was taken by his parents to Woodbury county, Iowa, where the family was settled on a farm, and where he remained until he was sixteen years of age. At that time elder Parker removed to Rushville, Nebraska, where he went into the hotel business, in which he was engaged until 1887. Lynn W. Parker was then engaged in office work for an attorney during the ensuing two years, and in 1889 took a position as a trainman in the employ of the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley Railroad, a position which he held for some five years. He was a resident of Omaha for two years, and for about the same length of time in Texas. In 1898 Mr. Parker secured government land on a homestead entry, as noted above, which he proved up in due season, and is now the owner of a very desirable Nebraska farm. He was appointed postmaster at Burge, July 1, 1904, and makes a popular and efficient official.

Mr. Parker was married in 1900 to Miss Lucy Redfern, a daughter of John and Lucy (Ball) Redfern, who now live ten miles west of Wood Lake. To this union have come two children, Millard R. and Eldon.

Much success has attended Mr. Parker in his various enterprises. He owns seven hundred acres, and has a lease of a section of land, with the control of a second section, so that he is now operating about two thousand acres of farming and grazing land. His own land fronts the Niobrara river, and is amply supplied with wild timber. He has an extensive orchard under way, and both wild and tame fruits are abundant. Here he has a good home, and is doing a large stock business. He is a Republican, and from the first has been associated with public affairs. He is assessor in German precinct, and is very popular in the community. His niece was the first baby born in the town of Rushville. Fraternally he is a member of the Crookston camp of the Modern Woodmen of America.

PRICE HOBBS.

Price Hobbs, whose fine farm in Sheridan county is a credit to his locality, is a man of untiring energy, and is classed among the successful farmers of township 35, range 42. Mr. Hobbs was born in Springfield, Illinois, October 9, 1856. His father, Littleton Hobbs, was of Scotch descent, a native of Maine, and a farmer by occupation. The family moved to Iowa in 1858 and later to Kansas, where our subject was raised and educated, attending the country schools in his boyhood days. His father died in 1866, leaving a wife, who was Miss Elizabeth Butler, and a family of six children, of whom he was the third member. When he was ten years old he started out to make his own way in the world, and secured employment at herding cattle on neighboring ranches in order to help support the family. The first time he left home he was away for three months and during that time did not see one of his family, and afterwards worked at anything he could get to do as a boy. He railroaded for five years, and began farming for himself in 1885. In 1885 he came to Sheridan county, Nebraska, and located on Wounded Knee creek, as a homesteader, and still lives on this place. He remained there and proved up on it the day of the battle at Wounded Knee creek, December 29, 1890.

When he first came to this section he drove clear across the south part of the state in a covered wagon, and his first sack of corn, containing one hundred and twenty pounds, cost him five dollars. All provisions were high, and it was hard work to make a living then as the country was new, with no land broken up to raise a crop on. He went through many ups and downs during those years, but stuck to it and has gotten together a nice property, all gained through his own individual efforts. His farm comprises two hundred and eighty acres of good land, and his place is well covered with a good growth of natural timber. In 1892 he lost heavily through failure of his crops, and this put him in rather hard circumstances. He was farming during the dry years, and during the good years that have come since then he has raised more grain from thirty-three acres than he did off of two hundred acres in those days. He is contemplating taking up another homestead under the Kincaid law, as he is satisfied to remain here. He has his place well improved, and his first house, which was of logs, has been replaced with a comfortable log residence. He contemplates building a fine frame residence in the near future.

Mr. Hobbs was married in 1888 to Mrs. Estella Loney, born in Wisconsin in 1868, of American stock. They have a family of six children, namely: Ada, Ethel, Alice, Harry, Ernest and Mabel (twins). All were born and raised on their present homestead in Sheridan county, Nebraska.

The entire time and attention of Mr. Hobbs is devoted to the care of his farm and home and he has never sought any office, but takes a keen interest in all affairs of local or state importance. He is an Independent voter. Portraits of Mr. Hobbs and his family will be found on another page of this work.

F. A. HEATH.

Among those who have recently located in Franklin county, and who is welcomed as a progressive agriculturist and successful stockman, we mention the name of F. A. Heath. He purchased the Riverview ranch in the spring of 1906, the place being located on section 15, Turkey Creek township, one mile south and a mile and a half east of Naponee, south of the Republican river.

Mr. Heath is widely known throughout this section of the state of Nebraska as a gentleman of firm character and high standing, and a reliable breeder of thoroughbred stock whose statements can be relied upon at all times.

Mr. Heath was born in Cerro Gordo, Illinois, in 1862. He grew up in Illinois, and in 1884 he came to Nebraska with his father, Frederick Heath, the family coming from Piatt county, Illinois. Our subject took up a homestead in Lincoln county, where his two brothers, John and Clyde, are both well known ranchmen and stock raisers, located near Wallace. In 1893 Mr. Heath began a herd in Harlan county, in partnership with A. B. Heath, a cousin, who for many years was known to every farmer and stockman through his work on the Nebraska Farmer, a leading stock and farm paper that is widely read throughout the state. On his ranch of five hundred and thirty-six acres our subject now has ninety head of thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle, with the pure bred Scotch bull Lancaster Royal, at the head of his herd. The animal is one of the best in the country, and his get are eagerly sought after by all admirers of that breed.

Mr. Heath has never bred for exhibition purposes, but for the farmers' needs in raising the grade of their herds. He also has from fifty to eighty pure bred Poland China hogs on his ranch, mostly of the Perfection strain. Mr. Heath also owns the imported Percheron stallion Malin.

In 1890 Mr. Heath married Miss Bertha Borden, daughter of Alonzo and Adelia Hagedorn Borden, early settlers in Lowell, Kearney county, Nebraska, the family coming from Davis county, Missouri, in 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Heath have two children, namely: Loren and Lloyd.

GEORGE R. BOULDEN.

George R. Boulden would rightfully appear on any list of the honorable and successful farmers of Dawes county, a position he would hold not by favor or by inheritance, but by virtue of hard work, a wise economy, and a noble ambition to do whatever came to his hands in the best possible way. Mr. Boulden was born in the parish of Chart, Kent county, England, in 1850. His father, David Boulden, who spent his life in England, was a grocer and butcher, which occupation he followed until the close of his life. His mother, Elizabeth (Collison) Boulden, was also a native of England.

Our subject learned the grocer and butcher business while working with his father. He also mastered the carpenter trade, which occupation he followed for four years before coming to this country. In 1871 he immigrated to America, landing in New York city, and going to Rochester, New York, following his trade as carpenter for four years. He then came west to Danville, Illinois, farming and doing carpenter work. From this place he went to Davis county, Iowa, returning after two years to Illinois, where he spent two more years. He then went to Monona county, Iowa, living for a time in Onawa and Sloan, continuing at the carpenter business.

It was in the year 1884 that Mr. Boulden first came to the state which he has since made his home. He located at Norfolk, followed his trade at this place until 1886, when he came to Dawes county, driving in with a team and covered wagon. He built a log cabin in Evergreen precinct, continuing his work as a farmer and carpenter. For a period of seven years he witnessed the drouths and the many hardships so well known to the early settlers in western Nebraska, during which time his unremitting efforts were rewarded with but three half crops. He then sold out for seven hundred dollars, traveling west through Idaho and the other western states. However, the possibilities of Dawes county were ever in his mind, so he soon returned, taking a homestead in sections 34 and 35, township 30, range 51, a place now containing many modern improvements, the work of his own hard labor. He has erected substantial buildings, a windmill and well, and has a new barn forty-six by sixty feet. He now has a ranch of nine hundred and sixty acres of good land, one hundred and sixty acres of which are leased. There is an abundance of good timber on his place.

Mr. Boulden was married in 1878 to Miss Nancy A. Collison, daughter of Edward and Mary (Cameron) Collison. Her father was a prominent farmer of Iowa. Her mother was of English and Dutch lineage. Mr. and Mrs. Boulden are the parents of one boy, John David, born in Monona county, Iowa, in 1881.

Mr. Boulden has always taken an active interest in local affairs in Dawes county, where for years he has served as a school officer and as justice of the peace. He has proved himself an enlightened and public-spirited citizen, and has done his full share and even more in the great work of improving the county, and in making it a home for an earnest and progressive people.

J. M. MOONEY.

Among those who have for the past twenty years and more made the city of North Platte their permanent home, J. M. Mooney takes a foremost place as a citizen of active public spirit, who has used his best influence in aiding its educational and commercial development. He came to Nebraska in 1886, and is well and favorably known in railway circles as one of the older employes, and also is somewhat of a ranchman and farmer, being deeply interested in both lines of work.

Mr. Mooney is a native of Charlestown, Massachusetts, where he was raised and educated. His father, Isaac G. Mooney, was a New Englander, and our subject received a good old-fashioned training, and at an early age became interested in railroad work, beginning when but a boy of eighteen years of age and has followed that occupation ever since. He came west and located in North Platte, Nebraska, in 1886, being employed by the Union Pacific railway as a brakeman for one year, and at the end of that time was promoted to the position of freight conductor, and worked in this capacity for several years. He was faithful in the discharge of his duties and won the confidence and trust of his employers, and has been very successful during all his railroad career. In 1898 he began as a passenger conductor, and has held this position since that time, at present running on the Los Angeles Limited, and is well known to all the patrons of the road as a popular and accommodating public official whom it is a pleasure to know. Mr. Mooney has a large ranch comprising nine hundred and sixty-five acres of fine land situated in Lincoln county, near North Platte, and he spends all of his spare time at this place, planning improvements and intends to build up a model farm.

Mr. Mooney's brother Frank is a conductor on the Boston & Maine railroad, with headquarters at Concord, Massachusetts, and another brother, W. R. Mooney, of Nashua, New Hampshire, holds the position of superintendent of the northern division of the Boston & Maine railway. Both are old railroad men and have been very successful since beginning the work.

Mr. Mooney married Miss Laura A. Mapleback, of Boston, Massachusetts. Their union has been blessed with three daughters, whose names are: Bernice, Byrl and May.

They have a pleasant and comfortable home, and the family is highly respected in their community. Mr. Mooney belongs to the Mason's blue lodge chapter.

HENRY H. SPRAGUE.

The gentleman above named has been successful in building up one of the comfortable and valuable estates in a new country through his industry and energetic efforts, and he is now counted among the leading old timers of his locality, who has been closely identified with the development and growth of that region.

Mr. Sprague was born in Scotland county, Missouri, in 1847. His father, Harrison H. Sprague, was a farmer by occupation, of American birth, and was among the pioneer settlers in Missouri, also one of the first white men to settle along the Mississippi river. He married Miss Katherine Kirkpatrick, also of American stock. Our subject was reared and educated in Missouri, helping his parents in the farm work, and lived at home until he was seventeen years of age. In 1862 he enlisted in the Twenty-first Missouri Infantry, later serving in the Fifty-first Missouri, and his first battle was at Shiloh. He was with his regiment along the Mississippi river, at Tupelo, and took part in numerous skirmishes with the enemy.

After leaving the army Mr. Sprague followed farming constantly, living most of the time in Missouri. In 1882 he came to Nebraska, locating south of the town of Lincoln, and there was engaged in the stock and livery business for ten years, buying, selling and shipping stock to the markets, dealing in horses, cattle and hogs, and did an immense amount of business during that time, and making money. In 1892 he came to Dawes county, taking up a tract of government land, starting at the bottom and building up a farm and home. The land was perfectly wild prairie land, with not a single improvement, and he worked hard and faithfully to develop this into a fertile farm, succeeding to a marked degree. He now has a ranch of twelve hundred and eighty acres, all fenced and cross-fenced and everything in good shape. He has good buildings of all descriptions, with a large and comfortable house. The farm is located partly in section 32, township 32, range 50, and all his buildings are on this section. He has one hundred acres planted to alfalfa and raises splendid crops each season. He is extensively engaged in the stock business, dealing in horses on a moderate scale.

For the past ten years Mr. Sprague has been an invalid and hardly able to do any work, but has kept at it bravely and by sheer force of will has done what very few would have thought it possible any one could accomplish in his condition. A short time ago he submitted to an operation and this was completely successful, leaving him a perfectly well man, and he is now as happy and contented as one would naturally be at again recovering his health.

Mr. Sprague was married in Missouri in 1871 to Miss Sarah Dean, born in Virginia but reared in Clinton, Henry and Scotland counties, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are the parents of five children, who are named as follows: Iona, married, wife of Charles Naylor, county clerk of Dawes county, Nebraska; Marietta, Edgar, Arthur and Harry. All are bright and intelligent, and their parents have given them each the advantage of a good education, and the family are well known and highly esteemed in their locality.

Our subject has always been active in local affairs and given his time and influence toward the betterment of conditions socially and educationally. He is a Republican.

HARRISON B. TOMLIN.

Harrison B. Tomlin resides in section 30, township 32, range 50, Dawes county, and is classed as one of the oldest settlers in this section. For the past twenty years this gentleman has successfully followed the ranching business, and has become one of the best known citizens of his locality, and is universally esteemed and respected.

Mr. Tomlin was born in Hanover county, Virginia, in 1854, of English stock. His father, Robert Tomlin, was a civil engineer by profession, and in later years followed farming, while his mother was Miss Hester Braxton, of good old English blood. Our subject was raised and educated in Virginia, and in his younger years was in the sawmill business there. In 1884 he went to Colorado and spent three years on a ranch, leading a regular cowboy's life. Then for six years he was employed as a traveling salesman for the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company, also for the McCormick Harvester Company, traveling all over the west and in northern Nebraska. In 1891 he started in the ranching business for himself, locating in Dawes county, where he bought a tract of land in township 32, range 50, and three years later moved, on the place. He has built up a good ranch and farm, which is situated on Ash creek, in section 30, his place containing a thousand acres of land. He has erected good buildings, barns and corrals, valued at from three thousand to four thousand dollars, also installed irrigation plants costing two thousand dollars. His principal products are horses, cattle and hogs, and he engages in grain raising to quite an extent. He has one hundred and thirty acres of alfalfa and one hundred acres of irrigated and prairie hay land. He makes a specialty of draught horses, starting with two good brood mares in 1892, and now has a herd of forty of the finest draught horses in the state and takes great pride in his horses. He is deeply interested in this branch of ranching, and intends to continue horse raising, finding it very profitable financially. He has a number of range cattle, and usually has more than he can summer. He has built up a fine ranch and farm, and his land here is as valuable acre for acre as it is in eastern Nebraska. His success is the result of his own individual labors, and he has accumulated his property through good management and strict attention to business.

Mr. Tomlin was formerly a student of alfalfa culture, and one of the first to introduce it in his neighborhood. He had seen it growing in Colorado and was an enthusiastic missionary for alfalfa raising here, also raising a great deal for seed. One season he cut his first crop of the grass for hay and the second crop was for seed, going seven bushels per acre, for which he obtained six dollars per bushel. This was off a patch of seven acres.

Referring again to his horse business, our subject's entire herd is the increase of two brood mares which he purchased in the early nineties. He still owns one of these mares, and she is the mother, grandmother and great-grandmother of his whole string, and they are splendid animals and acknowledged to be the best of their class to be found anywhere. On another page will be found an interesting picture of some Shire horses owned by Mr. Tomlin.

Mr. Tomlin is active in local affairs and has aided materially in the development of the commercial and agricultural resources of his section. He is a strong Democrat and active party man. Our subject's postoffice and railroad station is Whitney, Nebraska.

JOHN W. TERRY.

Among the leading old-timers in Brown county, Nebraska, the gentleman above named deserves a prominent place. He is well known all through this section, and has built up a fine estate through his industry and perseverance, gaining the esteem and respect of his fellowmen.

Mr. Terry was born in Cleveland, Ohio, September 24, 1854. His father, James Terry, was a carpenter by trade, of English birth, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Marshall, both born and reared in England, their marriage occurring in that country shortly before coming to America. They had a family of seven children, of whom our subject is the third member. They settled on a farm in Washington county, Wisconsin, and remained there up to 1874, when they moved to Nebraska, locating in York, and later in Seward and Saunders counties. Our subject attended school at Hartford, Wisconsin, remaining under the parental roof tree until the spring of 1882, when he started out for himself, coming to Brown county and taking up a homestead in the northwest quarter of section 9, township 30, range 23. He drove through from Saunders county with his wife, and after being here for a time made another trip there, and brought his parents to this place. His first dwelling was a sod shanty, and later a dugout in which the family lived for some time.

He had only one team and a cow to start with. Like others, he saw hard times during the drouth periods, losing entire crops, and for several years was unable to raise anything. The only loss he ever suffered from hail was twenty acres of grain in 1903. After the dry years had passed he began to get ahead and gradually improved his place, adding to his acreage until he now owns four hundred and eighty acres of good land, with two hundred and twenty-five of this cultivated. He has put up good buildings, has a complete set of modern farming machinery, and everything is fitted up for running a model farm.

Mr. Terry was married December 24, 1880, to Miss Amanda Bowlar, daughter of Archibald Bowlar, an old settler of Lancaster county, Nebraska. Six children have been born of this marriage, who are named as follows: Archie L., Clyde E., Emma E., Jesse, LeRoy A. and Frank R.

In 1897 Mr. Terry was elected county commissioner, and re-elected in 1900, serving in all five years. He has served on the school board for a number of years, and takes an active interest in all matters that tend to the betterment of conditions in his locality. He is an independent voter, with leanings toward the Republican party. The family are all members of the United Brethren church.

WILLIAM KIMBEL.

William Kimbel, a venerable resident of Deuel county, Nebraska, has been one of the leading citizens in the development of the community where he chose his home many years ago. At this writing he is a gentleman of eighty-two years of age, but is hale and hearty and has a host of friends and acquaintances, all of whom hold him in the highest esteem and respect. He has lived almost his entire career on the frontier, and a history of the west would be incomplete without a sketch of his life and labors here.

Mr. Kimbel was born in Kentucky, January 7, 1827, and lived there until he was seven years of age, then went with his parents to Missouri, where they were among the early settlers and homesteaders. Some years were spent in Illinois and about 1852 he went to California, traveling overland, the occasion being his bridal tour, the bride being Miss Sabra Van Leuven, of Council Bluffs, Iowa. They remained in California for seven years, then went to Missouri, locating in Jackson county, and from there to Council Bluffs, taking up their residence at the latter place in 1865.

There the family was reared, and in 1882 all came to Cheyenne county, Nebraska, remaining there for a short time, then moved into Deuel county, where they settled permanently in 1890. Mr. Kimbel has made his home with his son, Israel, since 1882, they having their interests together to a large extent. Mrs. Kimbel died in 1865 while the family lived in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Kimbel had a family of six children, as follows: Ellen, Janie (deceased), Sabra, Mary, Rosetta and Israel, all of whom are married and settled in comfortable homes of their own. An extended sketch of Israel Kimbel will be found on another page of this volume.

HIRAM DOING.

Hiram Doing, well known to every one familiar with the personnel of Wheeler county, is one of the oldest settlers in the western part of the state of Nebraska, having come here in the seventies in the pioneer days of this section, and since his residence here has been one of the leading citizens.

Mr. Doing was born in New York in 1844. He is a son of Joseph F. Doing, a native of New Hampshire, of English descent. He married Melissa Patterson, of Scotch-Irish descent, also a native of New Hampshire, settling in New York state soon after being married. Our subject was raised there, and lived in the east until he was twenty-seven years of age, with the exception of some time spent in Indiana, where he was educated. He enlisted in the Fourth Indiana Artillery in September, 1861, and served in the Civil war for three years and three months. He saw hard service through the state of Tennessee and the south, taking part in the battle of Stone River, Look-out Mountain, Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, besides numerous other engagements throughout the southern campaign.

Mr. Doing came to Nebraska in 1871. He at once took up a government claim in Furnas county, and remained at that place for over five years. For four years he lived at Medicine creek, where he served as postmaster, still holding his old commission papers. He has done considerable hunting in the west, and in the early days was quite a shipper of buffalo to Chicago and other points. In 1893 he came to Wheeler county and purchased a farm near Ericson. He still owns this place and lives on it, having built up a good home and valuable estate. The land is all good farming land, and he raises splendid crops of corn, oats and wheat, and uses a large portion of his land for hay and pasture for his stock, as he keeps quite a number of horses and cattle. He is a prosperous agriculturist and progressive in his methods of farming and ranching. Our subject has also been quite a trader with the Indians. He states that at one time he had a pony that he sold to old Chief Spotted Tail for the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars, and has made numerous other trades with different members of the tribe.

In 1888 Mr. Doing was united in marriage to Miss Ellen Kirby, a daughter of Nicholas and Bridget Jane (Davy) Kirby. She was born and raised in Muscatine county, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Doing have a family of five children, who are named as follows: Hiram C., Effie M., Hazel M., Francis L. and Grace. Mr. Doing is quite a strong Socialist in his views. He is prominent in local affairs and has served on the school board for many years. He has also served as sheriff of Frontier county, Nebraska, and as assessor of his home township in Wheeler county, Nebraska.

E. J. DILLON.

E. J. Dillon, known throughout Kimball county as a gentleman of enterprise and prosperity, is owner of an extensive farm two miles west and eleven miles north of Kimball, Nebraska. He has the distinction of being the oldest settler on the North Divide, and has passed through every phase of the old Nebraska times, developing a fine farm through earnest efforts and good management, supplemented by honest dealings.

Mr. Dillon was born in Mahaska county, Iowa, August 13, 1859. He was the eldest of a family of seven children, and now has three brothers and one sister living. The mother is dead, but the father now resides in Florida. Mr. Dillon grew up in Iowa, following farming during his young manhood, and in 1882 came to eastern Nebraska, making Grand Island his headquarters for about two years. There he devoted his time to any work which could be had. He then returned to Iowa, and after spending about two years there, came back to Nebraska, locating in Cheyenne county in September, 1886, in that part which is now known as Kimball county. His wife came to Nebraska in the spring of 1887. He at once took up a homestead on section 24, township 16, range 56, proved up on the land, and in 1905 filed on a Kincaid homestead in section 2, and now has a ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, consisting of the home ranch, of which he cultivates about one hundred acres. He has all good improvements in the way of buildings, fences, etc., and previously ran quite a bunch of cattle, but now devotes his time exclusively to the horse business and has a drove of about one hundred head. Every appointment of the farm bespeaks good management and care in its operation, and he is one of the well-to-do and prosperous farmers of his locality. Mr. Dillon dug his first well with a pick and shovel in 1890. This well was dug two hundred and fifty-two feet, and is one of the best on the north divide. His first residence was a half dug-out and rock-combined and had a dirt roof. Here they witnessed their first blizzard, which was a two days' storm. They had to bring their poultry and horses in the house to save them, but were forced to leave their cow out in the storm.

In the spring of 1886 Mr. Dillon was married in Mahaska county, Iowa, to Dora B. Minnick, a native of that county, where her parents were among the prominent old settlers. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dillon, of whom two are now living, Ralph W., and Ruth May, Howard H. and Macy Bell both died in 1908.

Mr. Dillon takes an active part in neighborhood affairs, having held the office of county commissioner for one term, also other offices in his township. In political sentiment he is an Independent.

G. W. DONNER.

Among the early settlers who came to western Nebraska while it was still undivided, and who has watched the development and growth of the state, was Robert Donner, the father of the gentleman whose name heads this sketch, and whose name deserves a prominent place. He traveled all over this part of the state while ranching, and became familiar with the country and people from one end of the state to the other.

G. W. Donner was born in Boston, England, in 1874. His father, Robert Donner, came to America in 1875, locating in Antelope county, Nebraska, where he began farming, following this for a year, then worked on ranches in Cherry county for about six years. He filed on section 4, township 33, range 41, as a pre-emption in 1883, making his actual residence on this Sheridan county claim in 1884, when he sent back to England for his wife, who came on and joined him during the latter part of that year. He then turned this pre-emption into a tree claim and filed on a homestead, where he lived until his death, which occurred in 1903. When he started on this farm he was obliged to freight all his building material and supplies from Valentine, and did nearly all the work of putting up his buildings himself. His wife still makes her home in Nebraska, but is now on a visit to England. G. W. Donner has two brothers and three sisters, all of whom excepting one sister lives in America. G. W. Donner came to this country in 1888, making the trip alone from England, his father having come ahead of him in 1875.

G. W. Donner began farming on a small piece of land and kept adding to it until he is now proprietor of one thousand two hundred and eighty acres, which land was partly held by his father until the latter's death, when it was divided among the children, this portion of the estate being the share of our subject. He farms about two hundred and fifty acres, and the balance is hay and pasture land, as he handles considerable stock all the time.

In 1904 Mr. G. W. Donner was married to Miss Iva Davies, who was born in Iowa in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Donner have no children. Mr. Donner is a staunch Republican, as was also his father.

WILLIAM H. PHILLIPS.

William H. Phillips, residing on section 5, township 31, range 54, Sioux county, Nebraska, is a highly respected citizen of his community, one who has assisted materially in the development of this region and for many years has watched the growth of its natural industries and agricultural resources, until he has become closely identified with the history of its advancement. Mr. Phillips owns a fine ranch and he occupies a pleasant and comfortable home there.

Mr. Phillips was born in McDonough county, Illinois, in 1867. His parents were of American blood, farmers by occupation, and the father, Steven R. Phillips, came to Nebraska in the early days and was one of the pioneers in Seward county, settling there in the year 1871. He married Mary E. Strickler, of McDonough county, Illinois. His father resides at the present time in Seward county, Nebraska, where the mother died in November, 1906. When our subject was five years of age the family filed on a homestead in Seward county, Nebraska, where he grew to up, his boyhood days spent in doing farm work, handling ox teams, etc. In 1894 Mr. Phillips came to Sioux county and took up a homestead in section 31, township 32, range 54, which region was then a very thinly settled part of the state, and he settled in Highland precinct. His first dwelling was a frame house, twelve by eighteen feet, in which he spent a number of years, and then put up a log house. He had a very modest start, almost his sole possessions being five head of horses, and during the first few years he had very poor luck in his farming operations. In 1898 he had the misfortune to be burned out, losing his granary, containing five hundred dollars' worth of grain, chicken house and other property. After the passing of the Kincaid law our subject located on his present farm, and here he has been successful in building up a fine property. His ranch contains two thousand acres. This place is located eleven miles east of Harrison. He is engaged in both stock raising and farming, and is making plenty of money. His ranch is well supplied with good buildings, and he has timber groves, also a bountiful supply of good water for all purposes. A picture of Mr. Phillips' residence will be found on another page.

In 1893 Mr. Phillips was married to Mary Kube, born in Germany, and daughter of Lewis Kube and Marie (Wiegardt) Kube, both born in Germany, who came to this country in 1883, settling in San Antonio, Texas, for eighteen months, thence coming to Seward county, Nebraska, there following his trade as mason for many years, and where they still reside. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have one daughter, Lela Ruth, born in Harrison City in 1897. Mr. Phillips is a Republican in political belief.

MELVINE HALE.

Melvine Hale, whose home is to be found in section 24, township 35, range 27, of Cherry county, Nebraska, bears an old and honored name in the annals of American history, and it is simple truth to say that it has suffered no tarnish at his hands. He is well and favorably known throughout this new and thriving portion of the state, where his many sterling and reliable qualities commanded quick recognition and warm appreciation.

Mr. Hale is a native of Crawford county, Wisconsin, where he was born on a farm November 11, 1865, and there his youth and early manhood were spent amid rural scenes, with experiences calculated to bring to bear on life the powers and faculties that make for a strong and sturdy character. William Hale, the father of Melvine, was born in New York, from which state he served three years in the cavalry of the United States army, making a record of which his friends are justly proud. He came to Nebraska in 1871, and was located for some years in Hamilton county, but seven years later removed to Custer county, where he is still living, full of years and honor. His wife, Hulda Green, is of American descent, and was born in Indiana.

Melvine Hale, the fifth in a family of eleven children, was reared and educated under the parental roof, but began life for himself at a very early age. On beginning life for himself he was engaged on stock ranches in western Nebraska, Wyoming and Montana for more than fourteen years. In 1889 he came to this section of the state to enter a homestead claim in section 29, township 30, range 29, a tract of Cherry county land which he improved, and then sold in 1904. July 19, 1906, he bought the relinquishment of a claim under the Kincaid homestead law in section 24, township 35, range 27, containing three hundred and twenty acres, and owns an additional one hundred and sixty acres in section 20, township 35, range 26, which is devoted to crops, the home tract being used for grazing and the production of hay. At the present time he is keeping about a hundred head of cattle, with some twenty horses, a work for which his large experience on the western ranches gives him a peculiar fitness. He has a substantial stone residence, with other buildings for all his requirements, and the very considerable success that is attending his efforts is not a matter of wonder when one considers his preparation and determination.

Mr. Hale was married April 15, 1890, to Miss Nellie Spain, a daughter of S. Q. and Mary (Morgan) Spain. She was born in Iowa in 1870, coming to Nebraska with her parents, who were among the earlier pioneers of Cherry county, where her father was postmaster at Simeon for two years. Mr. and Mrs. Melvine Hale are the parents of five children: Daniel Ernest, Grace, William, Sanford Q. and Mary.

In matters of general politics Mr. Hale may be counted on as a Republican. He has never held any public position, but has felt that his home and farm afford ample room for all his activity and energy. In local affairs and in school interests he favors everything for public improvement and general progress.

Mr. Hale's varied experiences have taught him the value of a home, though in winning and making it, he has passed through all the hardships of life on the frontier, and of the years that have gone into history as the "hard times in western Nebraska." He has at times traveled fifty miles to Valentine for provisions, and has brought back a load of five thousand pounds, with the thermometer forty degrees below zero. He was often discouraged, and was tempted to give it up, but he was sure he could in the end succeed. He did endure, and is now reaping the fruit of industrious habits and a mighty persistency.

ROBERT BIRD.

Robert Bird, a leading old settler of Box Butte county, has a fine farm and pleasant home in section 36, township 27, range 47. He is a man who has always done his full share in the building up of his locality and since coming to this state has opened up and improved four different places in this region, one in Box Butte county and three in Sheridan county. Mr. Bird is well known and highly esteemed throughout his county as a worthy citizen and prosperous and successful farmer. Mr. Bird was born in Scotland in 1861. His father, James Bird, was a farmer, who lived and died in Scotland. He married Margarette Turnbull, a native of Scotland, and they were the parents of six children.

Our subject was raised in Scotland, receiving a business training as a boy, attending the public schools there, afterwards being employed for some years in a bank, and later worked in a land office for some years, besides some experience in farming. In 1891 he left his native land and came to America. He settled in the Black Hills country, where he worked on a ranch, being in the employ of Clay, Robinson & Company, large ranch owners, and he remained with them for five years. In the winter of 1893 he came to Sheridan county, Nebraska. Three years later he filed on a homestead situated nineteen miles south of Hay Springs, remaining there and proving up on the place, "batching it" all that time, and he succeeded in building up a good ranch, disposing of it in 1903. He then bought land near Hay Springs, on which he lived for four years, selling this place at a good profit. In 1907 he came to his present location, purchasing part of the place outright, and intends developing it into a first-class ranch. He is owner of a nice residence about a mile from the town of Alliance. In the year 1901 Mr. Bird was married to a daughter of Samuel McCutcheon, of American stock. Mrs. Bird prior to her marriage to our subject was a school teacher in the west, having followed that profession for several years. They have one child, Cecil Elliott Bird. Vernon and Bernice are Mrs. Bird's children by her first marriage. Mr. Bird takes a commendable interest in local affairs, voting the straight Republican ticket.

EDWARD G. HAHN.

Edward G. Hahn is one of those who for the past score of years has resided in Sheridan county and has seen the development and growth of this section from its early stages, and aided materially in the upbuilding of the community where he has made his home.

Mr. Hahn was born in Clayton county, Iowa, in 1867, and raised and educated on his father's farm. He is a son of Peter Hahn, a native of Germany, who came to the United States at the age of eight years with his parents, who settled in Iowa in 1858, where they took a homestead and farmed for several years, and are now living in Kearney, Nebraska. Our subject's mother, who prior to her marriage was Miss Elizabeth Latheman, was born and raised in Germany, and died in this country in 1880, leaving a family of twelve children, of whom he is the seventh member in order of birth. He started out for himself at the age of twenty-one years, and came to this county with his parents in 1886, working out in the neighborhood of their home, then took up a homestead two years later situated in section 29, township 28, range 45, and began to build up his farm. Here he "batched it" for one year, then was married in 1890 to Miss Katie Zurcher, born in Iowa in 1870, daughter of William Zurcher, a native of Germany, farmer by occupation, who came to this country in 1887 and settled in Sheridan county the same year. Mr. Zurcher's wife died in 1872 when Mrs. Hahn was a small child ten months old. Five children were born as a result of this union, who are named as follows: Nora, Ethel, Edna, George and Clara, all born and raised in this locality.

Mr. Hahn remained on his own homestead up to 1906, when he bought his father's place, putting up a new house on it, and operates this farm in addition to his own. When he first came here he engaged in farming, but during the dry years he lost his crops and this put him back considerable. He often felt like giving up his place, but saw nothing better to do, so stayed on and tried to make a living. For four years he was unable to get ahead any, although he never had a total failure of his crops, and managed to make a bare living. He kept buying a few head of stock and gradually got quite a herd together, and now engages in mixed farming and stock raising and is doing well. He owns twelve hundred and eighty acres, farming about one hundred of this, using a large part for grazing and hay land, and also rents out some of his farm. He keeps sixty-five head of cattle and about ten horses all the time. He is well satisfied with this region and states that he will remain here permanently, but the only drawback is the great distance to the town, Schill being his nearest postoffice. There is a good school near his ranch, which his children attend, and this is of great advantage. He has improved his farm with good buildings, and has it all fenced, having built over ten miles of fencing.

Mr. Hahn never takes much interest in politics, as he says he has no time to devote to those affairs and lets the other fellow attend to that part of the business, preferring to put in his time in building up his home. He is a Prohibitionist, and has been for a number of years.

An interesting picture of Mr. Hahn's residence and the family will be found on another page.

FACTS ABOUT ROCK COUNTY, NEB.

By P. H. Davis.

The subdivision of the state of Nebraska known as Rock county was detached from Brown county, of which it was a part, in 1888. When it was decided by the inhabitants of the territory comprising this county to detach the same from Brown county and organize a new county certain formalities had to be observed, and the first step necessary for the formation of a new county was to present a petition for the election, and in the petition so presented, the name of the proposed county was a necessary part. A few of the promoters of the new county idea met at the village of Newport to perfect arrangements for the purpose of circulating the petition and to select a name for the proposed county. At that meeting it was agreed that the county should be named after a stream of water, than which there is no more beautiful stream in all the state, viz., Rock creek. This stream has its source in the hay flats about seven miles northwest of Newport. It flows northward and empties into the Niobrara river. About half way between its source and mouth is a deposit of exceptionally fine building stone, and it is understood this stream took its name in an early day from this deposit of rock. On this stream is the only real rock quarry in the county.

Generally speaking, the soil of Rock county is a sandy loam. It is true that there are some sand hills, but there are also a great many exceedingly fine valleys in it, and for its size no county in the state produces more or better hay. There is also a good deal of excellent farm land in the county, and in the localities where the soil is adapted for farming, as good crops can be raised as are grown anywhere in eastern Nebraska. A large portion is suitable only for grazing and no county in the state has greater possibilities in the line of dairying than it has. Some reasons for this fact are: Practically enough grain is raised to supply the needs of the dairyman and stockman; there is plenty of hay in all parts of the county for home use, with thousands of tons left each year for the outside markets; there are numerous small streams, many lakes and underflow water easily accessible in all parts of the county. No county in the state excels Rock county in the quality, quantity and accessibility in this regard. The native grasses here are as good as are the grasses in any other part of the state on the same altitude, and even the sand hills furnish splendid summer grazing.

No place can you find a larger per cent. of the people prospering and living contentedly than in Rock county.

NEWPORT.

Before the railroad came through this county a bridge was built across the Niobrara river about ten miles north of this place. Mule trains crossed this bridge and proceeded many miles west on the north side of the river. This bridge was called the Newport bridge. When the railroad was built in 1883 the chief engineer thought it proper to call this place Newport. At that time it is said that the present town site of Newport resembled the famous summer and water resort, Newport as it was partly under water.

Newport bears the distinction of being the largest hay shipping point in the world. It lies nearly in the center of a large hay territory, and which extends into one almost unbroken valley for about twenty-two miles south. The hay business is carried on in some of its branches during every month in the year. About twenty-five thousand tons of hay are exported each year, in addition to the large amount consumed at home.

BASSETT.

Bassett, the county seat of Rock county, Nebraska, was named after J. W. Bassett, a ranchman, who came to Rock county in 1871 with a large herd of cattle. For a number of years he ranged his cattle in the head of the now famous Elkhorn valley, having his house and sheds just south of the large Bassett hill southeast of the present town site of Bassett. This hill is one of the highest hills in the country and the view from this place is magnificent. This hill was used by the cattle rustlers in the pioneer days of Rock county as a signal station. Lights were sent up as signals and could be seen for many miles.

The famous "Kid" Wade, the young horse-thief who operated so successfully in this section of the country and was finally caught in a barn in Bassett and later taken from the authorities by vigilantes, was hanged to a whistling post just east of Bassett. The next day his body was cut down and buried on this hill.

J. W. Bassett was a widower when he came to Rock county, and during his stay in this county his daughter kept house for him. He left in 1883, just after the railroad came through and settlers began to homestead the land.

J. H. CAMPBELL.

This gentleman has worked long and hard, denied himself in years gone by that he might become thoroughly successful in his life work, and is today reckoned among the leading citizens of Kimball county. He has a residence on his ranch, but also has a town house in Kimball so as to afford school advantages for the children.

J. H. Campbell was born in Dekalb county, Illinois, September 17, 1849, and made that state his home until he was twenty-two years of age. He was the youngest in a family of eight children, two sisters now living in Hamilton county, Nebraska, while the balance are scattered about the country. Both parents are dead. In 1871 Mr. Campbell came to Nebraska, settling in York county, where he lived for fourteen years and proved up on an eighty-acre homestead and then moved to Hamilton county, remaining there for two years, and landed in Kimball county (then called Cheyenne county), in 1887. He took a pre-emption and homestead on section 30, township 13, range 55, proved up on eighty acres and later filed on a Kincaid claim on section 24, which comprises his home ranch, although he has large interests in other lands in the vicinity. He has the ranch fitted up in splendid shape with good buildings and every improvement, and raises stock of all kinds, having a fine bunch of horses, also cultivates about one hundred and fifty acres.

Mr. Campbell was married while still living in Dekalb county, Illinois, to Miss Elizabeth Murray, their wedding occurring in October, 1868. Three children were born to them, only one of whom is now living—Iva—wife of Chris Pfeifer, living in Banner county, Nebraska. Mrs. Campbell died February 28, 1876. Mr. Campbell was married again February 20, 1879, in Hamilton county, Nebraska, to Mary L. Murray, a sister of his former wife, and a native of Illinois, born in Kane county. The parents of Mrs. Campbell are both dead. Four children were born of this union, two of whom are living—Roy and Etta Fay.

Mrs. Campbell has two sisters and one brother living in Nebraska. Mr. Campbell has always been active in county and local affairs, lending his influence for the best interests of his community. He was one of the first county commissioners of Kimball county and has held other public offices. In political views he is a Republican.

BENJAMIN F. THORNBURG.

Benjamin F. Thornburg, for many years past one of the leading business men of Potter, Nebraska, and who is also one of the earliest settlers of Cheyenne county, is the senior partner of the firm of Thornburg & Son, dealers in general merchandise at Potter. Mr. Thornburg has been closely identified with the up-building of that region, has passed through all the vicissitudes of pioneer life in the west, and well remembers the time when the dugout, in which he lived with his family for many years, was the familiar dwelling throughout the country. A large portion of his career has been spent in farming and ranching in Nebraska, and he is well known and highly esteemed by his fellow-men.

Mr. Thornburg is a native of Newcomertown, Ohio, born on January 12, 1849, and spent seven years of his childhood in that locality. In 1886 he came to Cheyenne county and took a homestead and timber claim in section 8, township 12, range 51, and followed farming on the place for seven years. During this time he also pre-empted a quarter section in the same vicinity, and was engaged in ranching for a number of years. In 1900 he started in the mercantile business at Potter, and succeeded in building up a large trade throughout the county and surrounding country. Mr. Thornburg was married February 9, 1871, at Kirksville, Missouri, to Miss Sarah J. Lutes, who was born November 11, 1855, in West Virginia. Her father and mother are now deceased, she being the eldest of a family of five children. Our subject and his wife have a family of four children, named as follows: George A., a member of the firm, who is married, his wife's maiden name being Minnie Hensen; they have two children, Hazel and Georgia. The second son, Edward, is engaged in ranching in this county. He married Margaret Brown, and they have one daughter, Agnes. Thomas F. Thornburg, the third son, is proprietor of a store at Sidney. He also is married and has one child, Dorothy. Susie Thornburg, the youngest child of our subject, is still living at home with her parents and is a charming and accomplished young woman. In politics Mr. Thornburg adheres to the principles of the Republican party and he takes an active part in local and county affairs. Socially he is a member of the Potter camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

J. P. MARSHALL.

J. P. Marshall, an enterprising and prosperous farmer of Williamsburg township, Phelps county, Nebraska, is widely known as a worthy citizen who has closely identified himself with the agricultural interests of his locality, and has built up a fine home and farm, but has not retired from all active business.

Mr. Marshall is a native of Canada, and came to the United States from Renfrew county, Ontario, Canada, in 1878. His father, James B. Marshall, has served as township clerk for many years past, and our subject's uncle, of whom a sketch will be found in this volume, is Hon. T. H. Marshall, who represented Phelps county in the state legislature in 1886. J. P. Marshall came to this township in 1884 with his father, who purchased three hundred and twenty acres of land in section 27, on which he lived until his recent retirement. The family came here from York county, Nebraska, where they had farmed for four years. Our subject owns a farm consisting of one hundred and sixty acres in section 26, Williamsburg township, Phelps county, and began farming for himself in 1887. He also owned and operated a threshing machine, which work he followed in York county, and since his residence here has owned a threshing outfit for over twenty years. He engages in mixed farming, raising quite a number of horses, cattle and hogs, and his grain crops are exceedingly good. In 1902 he had wheat which showed a yield of fifty bushels to the acre, and in 1892 he had a twenty-acre patch of corn which ran seventy-five bushels to the acre. He is one of the successful and substantial young farmers of this county, and an intelligent and public-spirited citizen. His brothers, O. B. and Charles A. Marshall, are together and operate their father's farm. Our subject had five brothers and four sisters.

Mr. Marshall is an Independent in politics. Mr. J. P. Marshall was married in 1886 to Mary Jones, whose parents were old settlers of Phelps county, Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have a family of five children—Ora L., S. Wesley, Abigail, Effie W. and Rhoda Priscilla.

FERDINAND E. NIKONT.

Ferdinand Nikont, known throughout Box Butte county as a man of good citizenship and untiring energy, is a resident of township 26, range 51, where he owns and operates an extensive farm of eight or ten sections. He has been identified with the upbuilding of that locality for many years, and while acquiring his valuable estate has also gained for himself an enviable reputation as one of the prominent old settlers and influential residents since the pioneer days of this region.

Mr. Nikont was born in the western part of Russia, of German parents, in 1857. His father was born in Russia, and was the first of the family of Nikont to leave Germany. Our subject was reared in the land of his birth, and as a boy attended the common schools and assisted his father in performing all the farm work on the home place. At the age of twenty-nine years Ferdinand and brothers came to America. During his young manhood he had learned the trade of an engineer, and worked in his home vicinity as a railroad engineer for several years. After landing in the United States he came west and settled in eastern Nebraska, where he followed farm work for a year, then came to Box Butte county and filed on a homestead southwest of Hemingford. His first building was a sod house, in which he and his brother "batched it" for several years. They had a very small start and went through the usual pioneer hardships and privations, having a hard time to get along, and when the dry years came upon them they were unable to raise any crops to speak of, also suffered from hail, etc. At this time the railroad was being laid through this region, and both brothers were able to secure work on the road and in this way managed to make a living and improve their farm to some extent.

At this time Mr. Nikont, with his brother and a brother-in-law, owns a ranch comprising ten sections of land, all of which is fully improved and well stocked with cattle. This ranch is situated on section 6, township 26, range 51, and is a valuable property.

Our subject is an independent voter.

BENJAMIN F. PAXTON.

Benjamin F. Paxton is a young and energetic farmer who is rapidly making his way to the front in agricultural circles in Cherry county, where he has discovered the rich possibilities of northwestern Nebraska for varied and systematic farming. His well kept place in section 24, township 33, range 28, shows a master hand at the management of affairs, and indicates a large success for him in the near future.

Mr. Paxton was born in the village of Wahoo, Nebraska, November 4, 1880, a son of Charles T. and Johannah (Arndt) Paxton, and was the fifth member of a family of seven children, named as follows: Alice T., Albert L. and Alfred V., twins; David E., Benjamin F., Mary L. and Katie I. David died in Lead City, South Dakota, in the summer of 1907. The father was a carpenter by trade, but familiar with farming, to which he turned his attention in 1883, locating his family that year on a homestead in Cherry county. The mother was a German by descent, and reared her children to the industrious habits and honest character peculiar to that race and blood. At first enduring privations the family lived in a small frame house, but later a more commodious log house was erected. The Paxton spirit was strong and a persistent holding of the situation has brought ample success at last.

Benjamin F. Paxton began life for himself at the age of seventeen years, and from the first has manifested a strong and manly character. For a time he was a farm laborer, and did such work as he could command. He was in South Dakota for a time, where he was employed in various capacities, but all the time preparing for his own independent and successful career. In 1903 he began farming in company with a brother, and they now own in partnership two hundred and forty acres, well located along the Niobrara river. He is giving considerable attention to gardening, in which he is making a satisfactory financial success.

The farm is fitted up for practical working, with a comfortable dwelling, stables and other needed buildings. Besides the ranch, the brothers individually own two tracts of land, Benjamin F. having filed on six hundred and forty acres of land in section 26, township 32, range 28, in 1906.

Alfred V. Paxton, the brother associated with our subject in his land deals, was born in 1875, and individually owns a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres. The push and enterprise of the brothers, together with their clear perception of sound business principles and their readiness to deal straight and square, have made them prominent factors in the agricultural interests of Cherry county.

William E. Haley, one of the prominent residents of Valentine, and an old settler of Cherry county, has always been closely identified with both the political and commercial interests of this locality.

Mr. Haley was born on a farm near Monticello, Jones county, Iowa, October 4, 1863, of Irish ancestry. The sixth in a family of eight children, he was reared and educated in Sioux county, Iowa, whither the family moved in 1868. At the age of twenty he came to O'Neil, Nebraska, where he was placed in charge of the Wilcox lumber yard, which position he held for five years. Since then Mr. Haley has been interested in the insurance and real estate business, principally in Cherry county.

In 1894 he took a Kincaid homestead, engaged in the ranching business and in connection with his other interests bred horses and other stock on his ranch of some one thousand four hundred acres, which is located only a short distance from Valentine. In 1889 Mr. Haley was married to Miss Emma G. McNichols, who was a teacher in the O'Neil high school. She was born in Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, a daughter of Michael McNichols, a farmer and one of the early settlers in O'Neil, coming to the state about the year 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Haley are the parents of eight children, named as follows: William B., who is employed in his father's office; Laurentia, Margaret, Clarence, Cletus, Martha, Zeta and Frank, of whom all excepting William and Laurentia were born in Valentine.

ticket, as chairman of the board was instrumental in locating the courthouse on its present site, supervised the construction of the same and had the lawn improved, including the planting of trees. All this was a labor of love, Mr. Haley freely giving his time and attention for the public good. As chairman of the building committee of the board of education he performed similar services for the new high school building, and of his work here any man may well feel proud. He was one of the organizers of the Valentine Building and Loan Association, and served as its secretary thirteen years. He served as deputy assessor for Valentine precinct in 1908 under appointment of P. H. Young.

Together with his family Mr. Haley is a communicant of the Catholic church. Of the social organizations he affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Royal Highlanders.

J. B. JETER.

The gentleman whose name heads this review is one of the leading citizens of North Platte, Nebraska, and particularly well known among all railroad men in this vicinity.

Mr. Jeter was born in Orleans, Orange county, Indiana, September 30, 1856. He is a son of J. S. Jeter, a native of Jessamine county, Kentucky, where the Jeter family have been prominent in the building up of the state, and were among the early settlers whose names figure prominently in the history of old Virginia, having originally come from England to America when the country was still in its early development. Our subject's mother, Miss Mary Sears, is a native of Orleans, Orange county, Indiana, also comes of old pioneer stock. Our subject was reared and educated in Indiana, and remained with his parents until a young man, assisting his father in the postoffice at Orleans, the father being postmaster, and the training he received stood him in good stead in later years when he was obliged to start out in life for himself and carve out a name and fortune for himself. Mr. Jeter began railroad work in 1881 and in 1886 he came to North Platte, and obtained employment with the Union Pacific road and began working his way up step by step, always striving for advancement, and while in one position studying to fit himself for the ductor on the Union Pacific railway, running from North Platte to Cheyenne. Soon after locating in North Platte, he became freight conductor for this company, and in 1899 was appointed passenger conductor. Prior to coming to North Platte he was connected with the bridge department of the Union Pacific railroad at Omaha, Nebraska. This was in 1881. He has a brother, S. I. Jeter, who is connected with the Union Pacific railway at Omaha, having been employed in the bridge department of the company for a period of thirty-eight years. Another brother, F. E. Jeter, is with the bridge department of the same railroad, located at Columbus, Nebraska.

HENRY T. DEAN.

Henry T. Dean, owner of and residing at the Stone Ranch located at Alden Station on the Burlington, is one of the wealthy and most influential men of his section. He has accumulated his valuable estate by energetic effort and strictest attention to duty, and his high station as a worthy citizen is well deserved.

Mr. Dean is a native of Hendricks county, Indiana, born near North Salem, December 12, 1858. He made that vicinity his home until 1881, having worked out three years; from that date until 1884 he resided in Audubon county, Iowa, and then moved to Nebraska, settling on a ranch in Saunders county, arriving in that region in March, 1884, where he remained for eight years. In the spring of 1892 he took up a homestead in section 35, township 19, range 50, Cheyenne county, and has made that his home ever since. He is owner of a beautiful ranch comprising two thousand seven hundred and forty acres, leasing besides this six hundred and forty acres of school land, on which their district school is located and controls altogether about five thousand acres, which is devoted principally to ranching purposes; on this there is about twenty miles of three-wire fence. He keeps about eight hundred head of cattle and horses, and irrigates seven hundred acres, raising splendid crops of alfalfa and wheat-grass hay. Four miles of Greenwood and Pumpkinseed creeks course through his ranch, which enables him to own and control two private irrigation ditches. He also owns several shares in Court House Rock Irrigation Company.

Our subject is a thorough stockman, and an authority in the matter of thoroughbred animals. He keeps only high-grade stock, dealing in Belgian horses and mules, of which he has two hundred head; he owns some of the finest Percheron and Belgian horses in the country. His cattle are all of the Galloway breed, and at present he has a herd of six hundred, and this herd is known far and wide as one of the best to be found in the west. The value of land has increased greatly in Cheyenne county since Mr. Dean settled here; to illustrate this increase, one quarter section of the land owned by Mr. Dean was exchanged for a pair of chickens and a cultivator at one time. Another quarter section sold for fifty dollars. The land is now worth twenty dollars and more per acre.

On October 19, 1880, Mr. Dean was married to Miss Laura Dixon, at Ladoga, Indiana. Mrs. Dean was born in Putnam county, Indiana, in January, 1864. Three children have been born to Mr. Dean and his good wife, namely: Goldie, who married Samuel Livingston, now living in Sidney, and Roy and Roscoe, both at home. The family occupy a new stone residence, and their home is one of the most pleasant to be found anywhere.

The large stone barn erected in 1904, together with stone outbuildings, give the ranch its name of Stone Ranch.

Mr. Dean is prominent in state and county affairs, and is one of the well-known, public-spirited men of his community. He has served his township in different capacities, and is at present assessor of Court House Rock precinct. He is a Democrat.

We are pleased to call your attention to a view of the ranch buildings on another page, showing as well the picturesque rock which gives the precinct its name.

LINEUS E. BENDER.

Lineus E. Bender, a well-to-do farmer and highly respected citizen of Sioux county, resides in section 33, township 32, range 53, where he has succeeded in building up a fine home. He is also one of the old settlers of that locality and a representative man of his community.

Mr. Bender was born in Ingham county, Michigan, in 1854. He comes of good old American stock, his father, Samuel Bender, being of German descent. He married Lydia Lee, who came of mixed blood and is a direct descendant of the celebrated Lee family and near relative of General Robert E. Lee and Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia.

The family lived in Michigan and farmed there for many years. Lineus was educated in the common schools as a boy, and later attended Albion College. The father died in 1859, and after that time our subject was obliged to strike out for himself, and followed farm work, also clerked in a store in different places for some time.

Some years were spent in northern Michigan, and he was married in 1880 to Miss Hattie Casey, daughter of William Casey, of Albion, Michigan. In 1898 Mr. Bender came west to Nebraska, locating in Sioux county, settling on the place known as the old Gray ranch, which is situated nine miles northwest of Crawford on Soldier creek. He was employed for two years by the Chicago & Northwestern railroad at Chadron, and after that time gave his undivided attention to the ranch, and has developed a fine place. There are three hundred and twenty acres, which Mr. Bender is owner of, and his son, Casey, also owns six hundred and forty acres of adjoining land.

Our subject spent many years of hard and constant labor in building up his estates, but has been well repaid for his efforts, and is now in position to enjoy his years of toil. He has witnessed many hard times, and while he has suffered exceedingly, fully realizes that nothing is worth having that is acquired without a struggle, and does not regret the time he has put in accumulating his property.

Mr. and Mrs. Bender have a family of seven children, who form an interesting and charming family group. They are named as follows: Casey W., Guy F., Samuel, Beulah, Lee, Margie and Carl. All the family are held in high esteem by their associates, and they occupy a foremost place in the community as worthy citizens.

He remained there up to 1899, when he moved to Bassett and opened up the same kind of a business there, continuing this up to 1900. In that year he went into the hardware and supply business under the firm name of The Bassett Hardware and Supply Company, in partnership with E. L. Meyers. They had a large trade from the start and had developed an extensive enterprise at the time he disposed of it in 1907. The mother, whose maiden name was Sophia Eicholz, together with her children, came to America in 1880. After landing in New York city they came west to Madison, Wisconsin, settling at Middleton, eight miles west of Madison, where our subject grew up, attending the common schools. self-taught. From the time he was fifteen years of age he has made his own way in the world, following farm work up to 1891, in Wisconsin, then came to Schuyler, Nebraska, where he worked for his elder brother William. He remained there up to 1901, then went to the Pacific coast, and was also all through Washington, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, Oregon and California, spending altogether fifteen months traveling through the western states. In 1898, during the Spanish-American war, he enlisted in Company K, Second Nebraska Regiment and was sent south to Chickamauga, remaining there for several months, and then, like many others, was discharged, seeing no very active service. He was through Nashville and other large cities of the south on this trip. In 1903 he settled at Sidney, engaging in business and has remained here since that time. He has been successful since starting, but suffered quite a loss caused by fire, June 21, 1903, although partly covered by insurance, and the accident only caused him to close his business for twenty-four hours. #### CHARLES W. THURSTON.

He has six windmills on the ranch, some fine lakes, plenty of game, ducks, geese, grouse, etc., which make fine sport for hunting during the season.

Mr. Thurston was born in Iowa county, Iowa, in 1875, on a farm. His father, David Thurston, was a well known farmer and ranchman in Nebraska, locating in Grant county in 1888, also was a pioneer in the eastern part of the state in Cass and Furnas counties. He married Emily Wight, and both were of old Yankee stock. Mrs. Thurston, the mother, resides in Hyannis, Nebraska, the father having died several years ago. When our subject was a lad of seven the family settled in Furnas county, after spending one year in Cass county. Charles and a brother, John H., grew up in Furnas county, and during their young manhood did a great deal of hunting, as the country was full of all kinds of wild game, many buffalo being killed in those days. During their first winter in that region they lived almost entirely on buffalo meat and corn bread. All supplies had to be hauled from Bloomington, a distance of eighty miles from their homestead. In 1890 the two brothers made settlement close to Hyannis, and started at ranching, both working as cowboys, and they gradually improved their place and together built up a good home and valuable estate, the property containing five thousand acres, which is devoted to ranching purposes, and they have made a splendid success of their venture.

Mr. Thurston is active in local political and business matters, and one of the substantial citizens of his community. The Rays are of Scotch descent, our subject's great-grandfather having been a soldier in the war of 1812, was captured by the Indians near Lake Erie, Pennsylvania, escaping from them after a time. His regiment was on the way near Blakely, and was engaged in the last battle of the war. He was mustered out at Memphis, clerk of his county. For two years he held the position of cashier of the bank at Miles, Iowa, and was one of the best known men in Jackson county, active in public affairs and one of the prominent leaders in every movement to develop the region in which he resided.

He originally came from New York state, and also was a pioneer in Michigan, and was in the same company with Captain Wood, who was an owner in the White Line steamer Wood, on the river service for many years. #### CARL M. LUX.

Carl M. Lux, one of the foremost residents of Sioux county, Nebraska, is a well-to-do ranchman and progressive agriculturist of section 6, township 32, range 53, where he has a pleasant home and is surrounded by all the comforts of rural life and many luxuries. Mr. Lux is one of the old-timers of this region and has taken an active part in the agricultural and commercial development here, and his name deserves prominent mention in the history of the growth of western Nebraska.

Mr. Lux was born in Rhine province, Germany, in 1852, and grew up there. His father, Conrad, was a farmer, and lived and died in that country, as also did his wife, whose maiden name was Gertrude Kaymer. After reaching young manhood Carl served for two years in the German army and at the end of that time returned to his home and entered the employ of a brewing company, remaining at that work for several years. In 1883 he came to the United States, and after landing in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, immediately struck out for the west, settling in Kansas, where he spent one year, then came to Sioux county. When he arrived here this region was simply a wild prairie with very few settlers, who were scattered at wide intervals throughout the county. The Chicago & Northwestern railway was built after he came here, and he helped in its construction. He filed on the land he now occupies as a homestead, also took up a pre-emption adjoining. Mr. Lux's ranch is located on Cottonwood creek, and during the early years his nearest railroad point was Chadron, from which he was obliged to haul all supplies. He freighted over the rough country from Chadron to the Black Hills and into Wyoming, following the life of the typical frontiersman during the first few years, and many nights he camped out on the ground under his wagon while on these trips. He lived all alone in his log shanty which he erected on his homestead, "batching it" for the first two years, working hard to get his farm in good shape and saving every dollar he was able to earn by working for others in the vicinity and constantly adding improvements to his home. He met with severe losses in the way of failure of crops and saw hard times, often becoming sadly discouraged, but determined not to leave the place, and finally was able to save a little money as the years grew better and is now very glad he stuck to it, as he has been well repaid for his labors and perseverance. His ranch contains eight hundred acres of good land, fitted with good substantial buildings, fences, etc., and he has about one hundred and twenty acres devoted to diversified farming. There is plenty of clear running water for all purposes, timber for fuel, also many shade, and fruit trees which he planted himself and are growing beautifully, making a very pretty place.

In 1887 Mr. Lux was married to Rena Feller. Mrs. Lux is the daughter of Frank Feller, who is one of the old settlers of Sioux county and is well and favorably known throughout this section of the state. Nine children have been born to our subject and Mrs. Lux, eight of whom are living, named as follows: Robert, Annie, Martha, Christina, Celia, Carl, Theresa and Sophia. The family form a most interesting group, and all are well liked by their associates.

Mr. Lux has always taken an active part in local affairs, and has served as county treasurer for two terms, also as justice of the peace. He is a Democrat and has the courage of his convictions.

Tinsley, residing on section 10, township 18, range 52, Morrill county, is one of the prominent old settlers of that region, having located here in 1885, and remained to see the wonderful changes that have taken place in the country, watching its growth from practically a barren wilderness to its present state of fertility, and has the proud satisfaction of knowing that this success has been due in a measure to his own efforts. He is a man of active public spirit, and held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

Mr. Tinsley was born in Coles county, Illinois, December 12, 1864, where he spent his entire boyhood. His father, William Tinsley, was a native of Kentucky, while his mother, Susan (Griffin), was born in Indiana. They settled in Illinois during their younger years. Both are now dead. When our subject attained his majority he left Illinois and came west to Nebraska, locating in Cheyenne county, arriving here in 1885. He homesteaded on a quarter in section 10, proved up and improved the place, adding more land to his original homestead, and is now owner of about eight hundred acres, using a large part of it as range land for a herd of cattle, also cultivating about one hundred and twenty acres. He has all good buildings and improvements on the ranch, and has met with deserved success in his work, being rated among the wealthy and successful men in the section. He has a large acreage in alfalfa, furnishing abundant feed and "pasture" for his bees, of which he has forty colonies. He but recently took up bee culture, and has made astonishing success, raising one thousand five hundred pounds of honey in a season. The Nebraska climate is peculiarly adapted to the production of a high grade of honey.

Mr. Tinsley was married to Julia A. Lipscomb, in Coles county, Illinois, November 12, 1884. Mrs. Tinsley was born in Indiana, and her parents, John and Eliza (Hutchison) Lipscomb, are still living in Coles county. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tinsley, named as follows: Clarence, married and living near Bayard; Goldie, William, Bert, Lillian, Myrtle, Vera and Lorine. They form a most interesting and congenial family, and their home is one of the bright spots that greets the traveler through the section. We take pleasure in calling attention to a view of the fine dwelling, large barn and outbuildings pictured in the illustrated pages of our work. Our subject holds the office of treasurer of school district No. 55, and takes a commendable interest in all local affairs. In political views he is a firm Democrat.

The family moved to and lived at Manitowoc, on the shores of Lake Michigan, until our subject was twelve years of age, then moved to Will county, Illinois, and at the breaking out of the war our subject enlisted in Company F, Sixty-fourth Illinois Regiment. He saw service with General Sherman, and at Atlanta received a severe wound. He also went through the Carolinas after this, but was never able to resume his duties as a soldier on account of having lost the use of his left arm at the battle mentioned above. At that time his regiment was under fire one hundred days during the Atlanta campaign, and he tells many interesting anecdotes of that time. After receiving his discharge at Quincy, Illinois, in May, 1865, Mr. Van Vleck attended the Northern Illinois College at Fulton, and later taught school in that state and also in Iowa. He came to Nebraska in 1879 and there followed teaching in Saunders county, and later in Sheridan county for two years. He finally located in this county in June, 1884. He had made six trips here from Ord, Nebraska, by team, and after he had been here for about a year his family came on to join him. He had taken up a homestead situated nine miles south of Hay Springs, and his first building on this place was a sod house in which they lived until the summer of 1886, when he built a better sod house. He broke up part of his land with an ox team which he had brought with him from Saunders county, and began improving his place, on which he proved up, remaining there up to 1889. He then moved to Rushville, and for several years, off and on, worked in the district clerk's office. His father, James Sims, a native of Missouri, was an early settler in Nebraska, coming to Keith county as early as 1886. He married Serelda Spencer, whose birthplace was in Indiana. John W. Sims grew up in Missouri, coming to Nebraska with his parents in the fall of 1890, filing on a homestead in the same vicinity with his father, the latter having first located nine miles north of Madrid, on section 34, township 12, range 37. During the first year on his farm John had poor crops, and the following year was hailed out, losing almost his entire season's work, but he succeeded in proving up on his farm, which he later sold. While the hard times were on he was compelled to work out in the vicinity of his home at whatever he could find to do. He came to the Searl ranch about 1899 and worked as foreman of that ranch for six years, in this way laying by a little money with which he started farming in the western part of Keith county, having had one hundred and sixty-nine acres of irrigable land there on section 23, township 13, range 40. This he improved with a good two-story, six-room house in 1908, and the following year erected barns and outbuildings.

Mr. Sims was married September 28, 1892, at Ogallala, to Miss Mary Breder, whose father, Henry Breder, was an old settler in this region, residing on section 34, township 12, range 37. ### RICHARD R. BALLIEU.

Richard R. Ballieu, a popular and capable citizen of Dawes county, is one of the men of whom the people of the surrounding community can justifiably be proud. Mr. Ballieu was born in Harrison county, Missouri, in 1858, a son of Jesse and Martha (Hubbard) Ballieu. His father was of French lineage, and was a minister of the gospel of the Baptist faith. He died when our subject was but four years of age.

The early years of Mr. Ballieu's life were spent in Missouri and Iowa, where he received a limited education. At the tender age of fourteen years he started out to earn his own livelihood, and the success with which he has met is due to the persistency and economy which he has always practiced. In 1876 he went to western Iowa. He also spent some time at Rockport, Atchison county, Missouri. In 1880 he went west into Burt county, Nebraska, and for some time worked out by the month.

Mr. Ballieu settled in Dawes county, Nebraska, in 1884, driving in a covered wagon from Valentine, to which place he had shipped his provisions. When he arrived at this place with his wife and two children, he had but one dollar and eighty cents, a pair of ponies and a wagon with which to make his start. He located in section 32, township 31, range 49, where he built a log cabin, the first home he knew in this western country. He secured a team of oxen, and earned a livelihood by breaking and doing odd jobs. The principles of thrift and economy which he has so strongly adhered to have won for him the grand success with which his honest efforts have met. He now has a nice ranch of four hundred acres of good land, all fenced and cross-fenced, with one hundred and eighty-five acres under cultivation. He also has an orchard comprising an area of about four acres, which is considered one of the finest in Dawes county. He has erected a comfortable residence together with good barns and sheds. During a period of eight years of drouth which our subject witnessed there was only one year in which his crop was a complete failure, while one year his crop was destroyed by hail.

In 1882 Mr. Ballieu was married to Miss Elizabeth Hanzy. Six children came to bless this union, viz.: John, Mary, Jesse, Nettie, Richard and Bryan. In 1898 Mrs. Ballieu died. Mr. Ballieu contracted a second marriage with Mary Skeet, to which union was born one child, Gladys.

In political matters Mr. Ballieu is an Independent voter. He has always taken an active interest in local affairs, and has done his share toward the development of Dawes county. His career is an excellent example of what can be accomplished in this western country. Coming here almost penniless, he has worked out for himself and family a comfortable home, where his genial countenance and friendly spirit have made him hosts of warm friends.

ALBERT KEMP.

Among the old-timers who settled in western Nebraska when the state was still in its infancy, and who has watched its development and growth, the gentleman whose name heads this review occupies a prominent place. He is well known as one of the prosperous business men of Bassett, and recognized as a leading citizen of the town.

Mr. Kemp was born in Genesee county, New York, April 19, 1846, a son of Arthur Kemp, a farmer and pioneer homesteader in Nebraska, who was born in England and came to the United States with his parents when six years of age. Our subject's mother, who was Miss Mary Bliss, died in Kalamazoo county, Michigan, in 1862. He was reared and educated in Kalamazoo county, whither the family removed about 1849, and during the war-enlisted in Company H, Seventh Michigan Cavalry. He, with his regiment, saw service in the army of the Potomac through Maryland and Virginia, and experienced all the hardships of a soldier's life. After the close of hostilities in the south the regiment was assigned to duty at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, but owing to sickness at the time of the regiment's service across the plains Mr. Kemp did not reach the far west. He was mustered out at Leavenworth and discharged at Jackson, Michigan, after eighteen months' service. After the war he came back to Michigan, and after a time went farther west, settling near Independence, Iowa, where he farmed for four years. In 1869 he came to Nebraska, locating near Schuyler, and from there went to Butler county where he took a homestead, living in a log cabin with a sod roof. He had but one team, a yoke of oxen, with which to do the work of building up and improving his farm. Then he went to southern Kansas where he farmed for six years near Pittsburg, in Crawford county. Returning to Nebraska, he settled in what is now Rock county, then a part of Brown, in the fall of 1882. He settled on a farm on the Niobrara river, remaining there for eight or ten years, going through many hard times during the drouth periods, hauling posts to Stuart to exchange for provisions for the family, and many nights was compelled to camp out under the wagon in the snow. About the year 1893 he moved to Bassett, and engaged in the livery business. He spent but a short time there before moving back on his farm; and later he opened a hardware establishment in Bassett, running this for two years. Afterwards he went into the feed, grocery and machinery business, operating this line for thirteen years, then sold out on April 24, 1906. In November, 1907, he opened a general store on the west side of Main street and is enjoying a lucrative trade. He has a farm of three hundred and seventeen acres adjoining the town site, a fine estate which he has accumulated by hard labor and good management.

On March 14, 1868, Mr. Kemp was married to Miss Elizabeth Baldwin, whose parents were old settlers in Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Kemp have a family of four children, namely: Lizzie, wife of J. S. Likens, of Lincoln; Mabel, in mission work in New Jersey; Josie, wife of William Mohrman, of Idaho; and Gertrude, who married George Mapes. Mr. Kemp's first wife died, and he was married again, in 1890, to Viola Brown, and two children are the result of this union, named Ida and Bertha.

Mr. Kemp is a man who takes a commendable interest in all local affairs, and uses his influence toward securing best conditions possible in his locality, and is highly respected by his fellowmen. In politics he is a Republican, a member of the Church of God and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Bassett.

W. WALLACE BELDEN.

Among those who came to western Nebraska when that state was in its first stages of development, with scarcely any improved land, and but very few white settlers in the region, the gentleman above mentioned deserves prominent notice. He was one of the first to settle in Cheyenne county, and has passed through all the pioneer experiences of the state in building up a home, incidentally assisting in a large measure in the progress and upbuilding of the locality where he chose his home. Mr. Belden resides in Redington, where he has a well-improved and valuable estate.

W. W. Belden was born in Pennsylvania on May 9, 1850. His boyhood was passed in that state, the family coming to Mercer county, Illinois, about 1865. There they lived for seven years, following farming, and our subject grew to manhood. Both parents are now deceased. After leaving Illinois Mr. Belden went to Clay county, Kansas, and subsequently lived in Republic and Cloud counties, that state, remaining in that region up to 1886, when he came to Nebraska. He settled at once in Cheyenne county, on section 22, township 19, range 51, purchasing a bunch of cattle and some horses, and began to develop a ranch and build up a home. During the early years he saw some hard times, meeting at times with crop failures and other discouragements, but stuck to his homestead and gradually was able to make improvements and forge ahead. He is progressive and up-to-date in his methods of farming, and highly respected as a worthy citizen and good neighbor.

Mr. Belden was married in Clay county, Kansas, on March 31, 1872, to Miss Amanda Dugger, who was born in Scott county, Illinois. They have a family of ten children, namely: Melissa C., now the wife of H. E. Randall; Effie, wife of Solomon Willis, living in Sidney; John O., of whom a more extended mention appears on another page; Pearl, wife of Frank Lipska, living in Belmont, south of Redington; Ella, wife of Eherman Gilman, residing at Redington; Sadie, wife of Dean Randall, living in Minatare, Nebraska, and Lillie, wife of Earl Hart, also living at Minatare. Lottje, Lloyd and Charles are single and live at home.

ERIC O. LIF.

During the past twenty-four years the gentleman whose name heads this review has taken an active part in the growth and development of western Nebraska, and particularly of Cheyenne county, where he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits most of that time. He has built up a fine property and has a comfortable home, acquired by dint of industry and good management, supplemented by honest dealings, and is held in high esteem as a worthy citizen and progressive farmer.

Eric O. Lif was born in Sweden, February 22, 1854, and grew to manhood in that country, following the occupation of farmer, and also learned the trade of mason and stone cutter and worked at it a part of his time. In 1884 he came to America, landing in Quebec on June 5th, and came directly west, locating at first in Grand Island, Nebraska, where he spent several months, then went to Sidney. On June 10, 1886, Mr. Lif took a homestead on section 17, township 18, range 47, and here he has spent his time since. He improved his farm constantly, occasionally having a hard time to get along, often suffering loss from crop failures, etc., but on the whole has been very successful, and is now the possessor of two hundred and eighty acres of deeded land. During the early years he turned his trade to account and built houses in the vicinity, in this way being able to lay by a little money and help himself along. He uses a portion of his land for grain raising, and has quite a herd of cattle and a small bunch of horses. Besides his home ranch he has several hundred acres of good hay bottom and pasture. He has one of the finest groves of trees in the locality which he planted.

On June 3, 1882, Mr. Lif married Carrie Larson, in Sweden, and to Mrs. Lif is due much credit in the accumulation of their property, as she worked faithfully with her husband in acquiring the same. The parents of both are deceased. Five children have come to them, namely: Anna, Christina, Fred W., Arthur and Albert, all living at home.

Lisco postoffice is situated on section 17, which is also the location of his home ranch, and Mr. Lif is acting in the capacity of postmaster. He has been connected with the local school for a number of years, and is road overseer for his district. In politics he is a Republican.

HENRY S. HARRIS.

The history of western Nebraska would be incomplete without mention being made of the well-known and familiar name of Henry S. Harris. He was the first sheriff of Rock county, Nebraska, and attracted wide public attention by the capture of several notorious horse thieves during his term of office. He was of fearless character and a typical frontiersman, and even before his election to office, captured Bohanan and Arnold, two daring horse thieves who had infested the territory. Mr. Harris made a most capable officer and he came to be dreaded by violators of the law.

The subject of our sketch was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, in the year 1850, his parents being Ephraim H. and Eliza (Barber) Harris. The father was born in Vermont and was of English ancestry, and he was a lumberman. The mother died when our subject was a baby.

In 1853 Ephraim Harris came west to Wisconsin, and the family, with the grandparents, followed in 1854, and they settled near the city of Waupaca. Our subject was reared here until he was sixteen years old and then commenced

"WILLOW CREEK RANCH," PROPERTY OF FRANK MCFADDEN,

work in the lumber woods, and for nine winters he followed lumbering. In the spring he often engaged in log-driving along the streams of Wisconsin. In 1875 he came further west and located in Greeley county, Nebraska, on a farm. On this trip he made a long drive with team and covered wagon, coming all the way from Wisconsin and stopping for three years in Iowa. When he reached his new home on government land in Greeley county, he had but twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents left to begin life with. He built a sod house, commenced breaking his land and had his first crop eaten up by grasshoppers. In 1878 he removed to Holt county and settled near Stuart village on low, level land that he used for haying purposes. Bad luck met him here and his crops were drowned out several years in succession, and he removed again to other localities, until in 1885 he went to Rock county, settling on school land. Here he put up buildings, made good improvements and later bought the farm. It was while living there that our subject was elected sheriff and had the experiences related in the opening lines of this sketch.

Henry S. Harris was married in 1870 to Miss Lucy Harris, a native of New York state, and a daughter of Orsemus and Annie (Allen) Harris, the former being a native of Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Harris are the parents of five children: May, married; Burt, Myrtle, Ina and Ben R.

In 1892 Mr. Harris went to Chicago and spent six years working in that city, then returning to Nebraska, settled on the North Loup river near Taylor. In 1902 he located where he now lives, on section 24, township 24, range 17, and has built up a fine home and ranch, having six hundred and forty acres used principally for stock purposes. Mr. Harris has had varying experiences and many hard trials during his life on the frontier, but he has made his way to success and prominence as a rancher and a farmer. He has been in a number of states, was the first man to take a family to the upper Spring creek country, in Greeley county, Nebraska, and now he has settled down permanently to enjoy a life of peace and comfort. Mr. Harris has done his share of pioneering and has performed a good part and is respected as a good citizen by all who know him.

FRANK MCFADDEN.

A drive through the ranching community of Keith county convinces one of the thrift enjoyed in that locality, and a visitor at the home of Frank McFadden is impressed with the fact that careful management and honest industry are prominent characteristics of the owner, whose well improved tract compares favorably with that of any farm in the county. Mr. McFadden resides at present in Paxton precinct, where he has made all improvements necessary to a Kincaid homestead.

Mr. McFadden was born in the village of Roshin, County Donegal, Ireland, August 20, 1860. His father, Michael McFadden, was a farmer and stock raiser and with the mother, Grace (McGarvey), was a native of Donegal. Frank was reared on the home farm, remaining there until he was seventeen years of age, then left his native land and emigrated to Scotland, where he worked for two years as a gardener. On Saturday, February 14, 1881, he came to America, sailing from Greenock, Scotland, landing after a stormy passage of seventeen days in New York. He spent three and a half years in New York city working as a helper in a store, and was employed for a time in the shipping department of a big wholesale establishment in that city. He next came west to Illinois, located in Sangamon county and remained there for three years, spending the first year as a farm hand and working rented land two years of the time. On March 16, 1888, he came to Keith county, Nebraska, settling on section 6, township 14, range 35, and built a shanty, sodding the outside, a dugout being used as a barn and cow shed. He began to farm, and tried to improve the place, but was unable to get water on the farm, so abandoned it after a five years' residence, and filed on a homestead in section 10, township 14, range 35. He at once erected substantial buildings and began stock raising on a small scale at first, but he has gradually increased his herd and improved the place, accumulating a good property. He runs about seven hundred head of cattle and from thirty-five to seventy horses. The ranch lies in the valley of the North Platte river, and is well located for cattle raising, having plenty of good grazing land on Willow creek, which furnishes an endless supply of good water, while he farms about sixty acres, raising good crops of small grain. He later filed on four hundred and eighty acres in section 24, township 15, range 36, which is his present residence. Since coming to this ranch Mr. McFadden had a serious fire go through the place in the spring of 1908, causing the loss of over one thousand dollars, the ranch being burned off and a large quantity of hay, also ten miles of fence destroyed. This has been rebuilt and two miles of wire fence added. He has had some hard times, but has prospered in the main, and since filing on his Kincaid homestead, Mr. McFadden has purchased half of section 14, township 14, range 35, and Mrs. McFadden secured one hundred and ten acres in Lincoln county, and Mr. McFadden is now numbered among the well-to-do men of his section. We show a view of the residence on section 24 and the ranch property in section 10 elsewhere in this work.

Mr. McFadden was married in Illiopolis, Illinois, February 25, 1886, to Miss Maggie Brogan, a daughter of Simon and Hannah (McGinley) Brogan, who were born, lived and died in Ireland. Mrs. McFadden came to America when a young girl, sailing from Belfast, May 15, 1880, on the Allen, landing in New York June 1st, and after three and a half years' residence in Philadelphia she departed for Sangamon county, December 3, 1883. Mr. and Mrs. McFadden are the parents of two children, Michael and Margaret, who attended the schools of Paxton for three years, finishing a course in North Platte. Michael filed on section 6, township 15, range 36, his father's first holding, and is perfecting his title under the Kincaid law. The family are all members of the Catholic church and Democratic in politics.

LYNN THOMPSON.

The gentleman above mentioned is one of the leading citizens of Gordon, widely known as a successful business man and worthy resident of that place. Mr. Thompson is a prominent druggist of Gordon, and conducts a first-class, up-to-date establishment.

Mr. Thompson was born near Buffalo, New York, in 1880. He is a son of Wellington Thompson, who is an old settler in Sheridan county, where he was raised and educated, attending the State University at Lincoln for one year and also the Highland Park School of Pharmacy at Des Moines, Iowa, from which institution he was graduated in 1902. After leaving school he went to Sioux City, Iowa, where he clerked for over a year in the drug store of L. P. Knos. He afterward went to Lead, South Dakota, and spent two years, during this time making a trip to the Pacific coast, being employed by the Owl Drug Company for some time. In 1905 he came back to Gordon and in December of that year purchased the drug business of Mrs. M. E. Hoffman. This was an old established business and Mr. Thompson went to work and put in a larger stock of goods and has made it one of the best equipped stores of its kind in the county and enjoys a large trade throughout this section. Mr. Thompson belongs to several orders of the town—Masonic order, Arcana Lodge, No. 195, also the Modern Woodmen, all of Gordon, Nebraska.

HON. THOMAS HOWE MARSHALL.

Honorable Thomas Howe Marshall, a leading farmer of Williamsburg township, Nebraska, whose public life is well known throughout the locality in which he resides, has gained an enviable reputation as a citizen and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his associates.

Mr. Marshall is a native of Carlton county, Ontario, Canada, of English and Scotch descent. His father, J. Marshall, was born in Hartford, Connecticut, where he grew up and entered the shipbuilding business, and later operated a ship yard. Our subject's grandfather, under the direction of Robert Fulton, made the iron for the first steamboat ever built. Our subject's grandfather was sent from England by the government before the revolution to take charge of a government shipyard at Hartford. He was a native of Scotland. Mr. Marshall has seven brothers: John, living at Regina, in northwestern Canada; William, who settled in Phelps county, Nebraska, and died there, leaving a family; James, located at Holdrege; Gustus, who died in Phelps county in 1905, leaving a widow and three children, one of whom, Rev. Marshall, is a Presbyterian missionary in India, and a graduate of Princeton University. George died in Canada, where he always resided; Benjamin, an old settler of Phelps county, is now in northwestern Canada; Alexander died in Canada.

Mr. Marshall is proprietor of three hundred and twenty acres of the finest land on the second bottom of the Platte river. He settled here in 1880, coming direct from Carlton county, Canada, where he was brought up on his father's farm, and during his young manhood was manager of some of the large lumber firms in that section. Since locating here he has been very successful in his farming ventures, and has built up a fine estate. He engages in mixed farming, and has kept about one hundred hogs and fifty cattle on his land. His crops show a splendid yield, wheat running over thirty bushels to the acre, corn forty-five and oats twenty-five, which is a very fair average.

Mr. Marshall represented the Republican party in the state legislature in 1886. He was a member of the Phelps county board for six years at the time the county was divided into districts and the number of supervisors reduced to seven. He has been an active member of the school board, and an earnest worker in church affairs. He is a steward and trustee of the Williamsburg Methodist Episcopal church.

In 1872 Mr. Marshall was married to Miss Marcie Kedey, a native of Carlton county, Ontario, who died in 1904. They were the parents of nine children, namely: John K., of Holdrege;

Jessie, now Mrs. Richard Morrison, and who before her marriage taught in this county for several years; Lizzie; Addie, wife of John Dahlsted, an implement dealer of Holdrege, who also taught school in this county for several years; Lillie, Thomas S. (deceased), Ralph, Moses and Grace. The family is highly respected in the community, and enjoy a host of friends and acquaintances.

JOHN SEVERSON.

John Severson, one of the sturdy sons of Norway who came to this country as a young man and who braved the storms of adversity and from a very small start has become the possessor of a fine property through perseverance and industry, lives on his well-kept estate in section 22, township 24, range 52, Box Butte county, Nebraska. Mr. Severson is among the oldest settlers in the western part of the county, and has taken an active part in the upbuilding of that region from its earliest stages of development. Incidentally he has acquired one of the finest ranches there during the past thirty years, and every dollar of his property has been gained by his own good management and faithful labors.

Mr. Severson was born in Norway, near Christiana, in 1840, on a farm, and his parents lived and died in that vicinity, following farming all their lives. John remained at home until he was thirty years of age, working as a farmer and day laborer, and was married there in 1863, to Mary Erickson, also born and reared in that locality. The young couple came to the United States in 1871, settling in Michigan, where our subject worked in the iron mines for about eight years. While mining he had the misfortune to have his ankle broken and was laid up with this injury for nearly a year, and has never recovered from this accident and still is lame from its effect. In 1879 he came west and located in Kearney county, Nebraska, which section was then entirely unimproved land. He bought a tract of railroad land and made it his home for several years, but was finally obliged to leave, as he was unable to make anything on the place. For one year he worked on the railroad, then settled in Pawnee county, renting a farm, and remained there for seven years and did fairly well. In 1889 he came to Box Butte county, locating on section 22, and started to develop a farm and build up a home. When he arrived in that locality he owned two teams, and soon afterward bought some cows and began mixed farming and stock raising. He constantly improved his farm and besides that did a great deal of work for others in the vicinity, and freighted through the country a good deal. His first mistake was made in trying to farm, as the conditions were not suited to that branch of work at that time, the seasons being dry, storms sweeping the section, etc. He did, however, raise one first-class crop, and that was in 1889, when he received one thousand bushels of wheat from eighty acres of land, and the three years following was unable to raise barely enough for seed. He was scarcely able to make a living off his land, and had to sell two cows to get money enough to pay for a binder which he had purchased. From that time on he gradually got into the stock business, and has done well along that line. He keeps about one hundred and twenty cattle and thirteen horses. He has improved his ranch in every way, owning in all five quarter sections, and one son, George, is also owner of six hundred and forty acres right near his father's ranch. Our subject leases one section which is used for hay land and pasture for his stock. His whole ranch is fenced, and he has good wells, windmills, etc. He has erected a handsome residence, and altogether has one of the prettiest and best improved estates in his locality.

Mr. Severson's family consists of himself, wife and two children, namely: George, aged twenty-three; and Minnie, aged twenty-five years. One daughter, Cora, died in 1895, when she was twenty-four years old.

Mr. Severson is a Republican. He has helped in establishing the schools in his community, and well remembers the time when the settlers were obliged to travel a distance of sixty miles for lumber to build the first schoolhouse. He has held the office of road overseer in his district for the past ten years.

HOMER H. WEBB.

Homer H. Webb, for the past few years a resident of Keya Paha county, Nebraska, resides on section 24, township 33, range 24, in McGuire precinct, and is well known throughout this locality as a progressive citizen and capable business man.

Mr. Webb was born in Story county, Iowa, October 29, 1870. His father, Granville D. Webb, was a farmer, of American stock, and came to this county with his family in the early stages of its development, and went through pioneer experience here, now residing in Oregon. The mother, who was Mary Allen in maidenhood, bore ten children, of whom our subject is the seventh member. He was reared on the farm, and when eighteen years old came to Keya Paha county and started farming on rented land, following that up to 1895, when he went to Colorado and remained for five years, there engaged in different kinds of work. He then returned to Keya Paha county and took up a homestead, the same on which he now resides, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, and later added to it, owning at the present time two hundred and forty acres, mostly all pasture land. He is engaged in stock raising, keeping about forty head of cattle and ten horses. He also has a large number of hogs. He is fast improving his place, and devotes all his time to building it up and having it in every way a model farm.

Mr. Webb was married in Springview, in 1893, to Miss Anna Lively, whose father was an early settler in Nebraska, and is now living in McGuire precinct. To Mr. and Mrs. Webb the following children have been born: Viola M., Carl S. and Blanche B.

For many years past Mr. Webb has been a follower of the Socialist party. He is active in local and school affairs, and lends his aid for good government and the building up of the best interests of his community.

EARL W. BOSTROM.

Earl W. Bostrom, one of the younger members of the farming community of Keith county, is a worthy representative of the family of that name, who were among the earliest settlers in the county and have made the region their home ever since.

Our subject was born in Galva, Illinois, August 23, 1878. Both his parents were natives of Sweden, coming to America when young people, the father about 1869. He was a native of the village of Geble, born May 26, 1842; his mother, who was Betsy Heddsrohms, was born in the county of Sunne, district of Wermland, and came to America when sixteen years of age, by the way of Gottenberg, Hull and Liverpool to New York. The family lived in Illinois until 1885, excepting two years in Polk county, Nebraska, near Stromsberg. There were eight children in his father's family: Otto J., Josie, Earl W., Arthur Edwin (deceased), Theresa, wife of Walter S. Prunty, a grocer of Cheyenne, Wyoming; Oscar A., Minnie E. and Evaline W. Oscar is married and lives on the old home ranch. On reaching Keith county in 1885, the father, Andrew Bostrom, filed on a homestead in section 32, township 13, range 41, and built a sod house, barn and chicken house, broke land for crops and started to develop a farm and home. Their only team was a yoke of oxen. Success was very slow, as they encountered many difficulties on account of the unsettled condition of the country and the fact that their supplies had to be hauled a long distance over rough and unbroken roads. In 1890 they had the terrible misfortune to lose the husband and father, and after his death the family saw hard times, going through the drouth seasons when crops failed and it was hard work to keep the family together and live comfortably. Otto secured work on the railroad, working as a section hand, but was soon made foreman and is now roadmaster of the division between Laramie and Rawlins. Earl also followed railroad work for seven years, the last two years of his service being as section foreman. The two own in partnership the quarter section of land on which the family now reside.

Since the death of the father, Earl has been the head of the family, bearing the burden cheerfully. The old home ranch of six hundred and forty acres lies on the state line, partly in Colorado, which is devoted to cattle raising. The tract of one hundred and sixty acres on which the family lives is irrigated and under cultivation. The whole farm is improved with a good house and outbuildings, with necessary fences.

Although a very young man, our subject has made his influence felt in his community, as he takes an active part in local affairs and gives his best aid to every movement for the advancement of the region. He is a Democrat in politics.

JAMES C. HARTFORD.

James C. Hartford is a native of Nebraska, born in Jefferson county in 1872. His father was Jesse Hartford, a pioneer of Loup county of the days of 1885. The father came first on a prospecting trip in 1884, filed on his land in section 32, township 23, range 17, and the next year returned and build a sod shanty, and then the family came to their new home a year later, in 1886. Our subject's mother was Laura White before marriage.

Here, in Loup county, on a farm our subject grew up, participating in the hardness of pioneer life to which the family was subjected. Early in his life he learned to do all the work of the farm and made all the long trips hauling the supplies from the far away town of North Loup. He drove an ox team when they came to the county in 1885, and for some time this was the only kind of team they had. Our subject remained with his father helping on the tree claim until 1893, and then he commenced working out for himself.

RESIDENCE OF ROBERT S. McCONNELL.
Morrill County, Nebraska.

In 1900 James C. Hartford was married to Miss May Hesselgesser, daughter of Robert H. Hesselgesser, one of the early pioneers of Loup county. Mr. and Mrs. Hartford have one child, a daughter, named Lela.

Our subject settled on his homestead in section 29, township 23, range 17, north of Calamus river, in 1905, and now operates a fine farm of nine hundred and sixty acres. He has built up a good home and farm and established himself on the road to a comfortable competency. He has always taken an active part in local affairs and has held various offices of trust and responsibility. He has performed his part in the development of the material prosperity of the community and is respected for his broad-gauged principles.

JAMES P. HARDIN.

James P. Hardin, known in Harlan county for the past quarter of a century, is one of the influential citizens of Turkey Creek township. He is engaged in conducting an extensive farm and has met with a marked degree of success, due to his energetic efforts and industrious habits, and is a gentleman who enjoys the esteem and respect of all who know him.

Mr. Hardin is a native of Putnam county, Indiana, and raised there. He is a son of John H. Hardin, and the family came to Davis county, Missouri, where they lived for a number of years before coming to Nebraska. In 1884 John H. Hardin, our subject's father, came to Turkey River township and bought a farm, living on it up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1899, at the age of eighty-five years. He was a native of Kentucky, born in Washington county, and his father was also John Hardin, of Virginia, and fought in the Revolutionary war. The Hardin family has been prominent and active in public affairs in Kentucky for many years past, and among the first families of that state. Our subject's mother was Miss Elizabeth Grant-ham, of Putnam county, Indiana. Mr. Hardin owns a well appointed farm of one hundred and sixty acres of good land along the Turkey creek, which is well improved. He is an old settler and has made a remarkable success as a farmer.

Mr. Hardin was united in marriage in 1897 to Mrs. Ida Walker, daughter of James Silvers, of Andrew county, Nebraska, who came from Lee county, Virginia, and who served in the Sixteenth Iowa Regiment during the Civil war. His wife was Miss Elizabeth Shepler, daughter of John Shepler, of Logan county. Mrs. Hardin's father died March 21, 1906. Mr. Hardin has four children, who are named as follows: Sarah, Minnie Ethol, John H. Hardin, who is now assistant cashier of the State Bank of Huntley, Nebraska, and Edward, living at home with his parents, and assisting his father in carrying on the farm. Mrs. Hardin has one child, May, from a former marriage. The family occupy a fine residence and enjoy many friends and acquaintances who partake of their generous hospitality in their pleasant home.

ROBERT S. McCONNELL.

Robert S. McConnell, who owns and operates a large estate on section 20, township 18, range 49, is one of the substantial men of his community who has made Nebraska his home for many years, having passed through the pioneer days of the state when he had a hard time to get along, but in spite of all has remained to reap the benefit of his years of toil and is now richly rewarded by the success which has come to him. He has devoted his entire career to farming and stock raising, his ranch consisting of twelve hundred and eighty acres, with a handsome residence which is situated in Court House Rock precinct, Cheyenne county.

Mr. McConnell was born in Metal township, Franklin county, Pennsylvania, March 12, 1853, where he grew to manhood. He was the only child of his parents, Robert and Nancy (Dunlap) McConnell, his father dying while he was a babe; the mother passed away in 1878 in the old Pennsylvania home. In the spring of 1875 Mr. McConnell left his native state and located on the border line of McDonough and Hancock counties, Illinois, where he had relatives living. For two years he worked at farm labor, then, renting land, farmed for himself until 1883. He then moved to Hampton, Iowa, where he farmed until coming to Nebraska in 1888. Settling in Cheyenne county on a pre-emption and tree claim on section 20, he later filed on a homestead in the same section, on which he proved up in due time and constantly added improvements as he became able, now having a complete set of good ranch buildings, with a splendid supply of water the year round.

Mr. McConnell is engaged in stock raising on a large scale, and at the present time has a herd of three hundred cattle and one hundred horses. He has about one hundred acres under cultivation, raising principally corn with some small grain.

Our subject was married in Franklin county, Iowa, August 18, 1886, to Miss Louise LaMore, a daughter of Robert and Lucy (Archalaris) LaMore. Mrs. McConnell was born and reared in Iowa. Her mother is at present living temporarily in California, the father having passed away some years ago. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. McConnell, as follows: Elsie May, a teacher of Morrill county; Robert Earl, who will graduate from the Sidney high school in 1909, and Cyril D., who is assisting his father on the home ranch.

Mr. McConnell is a man of broad experience and splendid business ability. He is well read and intelligent, taking a deep interest in all affairs of the nation and state. He is a firm Republican and a member of the county committee, and has served as treasurer of district No. 90. He is, with the family, a member of the Presbyterian church, and affiliates with the Modern Woodmen at Sidney. Mrs. McConnell is a member of the Royal Neighbors.

PEDER THORSEN.

Peder Thorsen, a man of good judgment and marked business ability, is one of the most prominent and successful residents of Sheridan county. He was born in Denmark in 1861, and raised on his father's farm, remaining with his parents until twenty-one years old, being the elder of two children, and receiving the solid and thorough training which falls to the lot of the people of that thrifty country. In 1882 he came to America locating in Colorado, and spent one year there, and was one year in Omaha, after which time he came to Sheridan county and settled there. In 1884 he pre-empted on the ranch where he now lives, his first habitation being a sod house in which he made his home for a number of years. He at once began farming and has continued at it ever since, buying all the land he owns at from two hundred and fifty dollars per quarter up, excepting four hundred and eighty acres, and now is the owner of an eighteen-hundred-acre ranch, all in one body, with twenty-seven hundred acres in another, all fenced and stocked with eight hundred head of cattle, one hundred horses and about one hundred and fifty hogs. In 1893 he erected a fine house on his farm, adding a large barn in the course of two years, and now has one of the best improved places in this locality. During the dry years, from 1895 to 1900, Mr. Thorsen met with much disappointment and loss. Nearly all his crops were ruined and he was only able to raise enough grain for seed, confining his efforts entirely to the cultivation of corn and potatoes.

Mr. Thorsen was married in 1884 to Miss Carrie Nelson, who is a native of Denmark, coming to America with her parents in 1882 and settling on a farm a short distance west of where our subject resided. They have no children. Mr. Thorsen always keeps abreast of the times and lends his influence to the upbuilding of the better interests of the community. He is satisfied that Sheridan county is far ahead of any place he has ever struck, and is contented to spend the balance of his days here. In political sentiment he is a Republican.

JOHN W. WEHN.

John W. Wehn, probably one of the best known residents of western Nebraska, and one who has been a leader in the political and other affairs of the region for many years past, is a resident of Bridgeport. He is also one of the wealthiest men of his county, having extensive ranching interests, etc.

Mr. Wehn was born in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, August 24, 1849. He received his early education in that city and made it his home up to the time of the war, when he enlisted as a private in Company G, One Hundred and Ninety-second United States Army Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was but little more than fifteen years of age when he entered the army, serving from February 4, 1865, to the close of the war, and was mustered out at Harpers Ferry. He returned to his home, remaining there up to 1867, and in November of that year crossed the Missouri river, landing in Nebraska on Thanksgiving day. He first made settlement in Beatrice, and spent several years in the vicinity, going to Dewitt, Saline county, in 1874, where he established The Opposition, which was the first Democratic newspaper printed in Nebraska south of the Platte river. He was editor and publisher of that organ for one year there, then transferred his headquarters to Wilber and edited it up to 1889.

During all of this time Mr. Wehn was interested more or less in politics, and in 1894 he received the appointment of register of the United States land office at Alliance, Nebraska, continuing in that office for four years. Since then he has been connected with nearly every matter of public importance in the locality.

Mr. Wehn is also heavily interested in different banking concerns, including the Bank of Oshkosh, Lewellyn, Bridgeport and Minatare. He is a gentleman of superior business ability and sound principles, and his standing as a citizen and public man is unquestioned. Politically he is a Democrat.

Mr. Wehn is of German descent, his parents coming from that country in the early years, and both are now deceased. He was married in Gage county, Nebraska, January 1, 1870, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Kinzie, a native of Wisconsin, whose father and mother now reside at DeWitt. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wehn, three of whom are living, namely: Lillian May, married to B. V. Reeves, living at Torrington, Wyoming; John Herbert and James Garland.

ROBERT R. REDDISH.

Box Butte county boasts of no more prominent man or highly respected citizen than the gentleman whose name heads this review. For many years he has been closely identified with the history of this region, has been one of the organizers of the schools in his locality, also one of the foremost promoters of its welfare. He resides on his extensive ranch in section 24, township 24, range 50, where he occupies a handsome home, and has all the comforts of rural life.

Mr. Reddish was born in Warren county, Iowa, in 1862, and was reared on a farm. His father, James, was a farmer and stockman, and he grew up in his native county, receiving a common school education. At the age of nineteen our subject left home and went to Wyoming, where he worked on different ranches, rounding up cattle, and followed the life of a cowboy for about eight years. He was all over the western country, through the Platte valley and in the vicinity of Sidney, Nebraska. In 1890 he returned to Iowa and spent two years in the vicinity of his old home, following farming there, then gave up his place and started in the livery business at Des Moines, Iowa. He remained at that place for five years, and was very successful in his work, but finally disposed of his holdings and again returned to Warren county, Iowa, and went to farming, operating the place for five years. In 1900 he sold his farm and came to Nebraska, purchasing a ranch of nineteen hundred and sixty acres, situated eleven miles southwest of Alliance, in Cheyenne county. He built up and improved the place in good shape, engaging exclusively in the stock raising business, and at the same time, ran a feed store in Alliance. He made a good deal of money in that business, and continued it up to 1906. In 1906 he bought his present ranch, moving on it in the summer of 1907, having disposed of his former ranch and feed store. His residence and other buildings are a credit to the community, his ranch consisting of twelve hundred acres, nearly all of it devoted to stock raising, although he crops a small part of the land. He is starting a large number of trees on the place and will soon have a fine grove and orchard, including apple, plum, pear trees and small fruits of every description. His residence is a handsome dwelling, surrounded by beautiful lawn, and is one of the pleasantest spots to be found in the locality, every detail of the place presenting a well-kept and neat appearance.

In 1889 Mr. Reddish was married to Viola M. Vernon, a daughter of Lafayette Vernon, who came west from Pennsylvania, settling in Kansas, where he went through pioneer experiences, and built up a good home. Mr. and Mrs. Reddish have two children, namely: Ray, aged fourteen years, and Beulah, aged ten years. Mr. Ray Reddish, although but fourteen years of age, is one of the gifted artists of the west; can draw anything he sees. Miss Beulah is also quite an artist and is learning to play nicely on the piano.

Our subject is a Democrat. He has never given much of his time to politics, having been too busy taking care of his home and ranch, although he stands for good government, and uses his influence in electing the best man nominated.

MRS. M. W. GRANT.

Mrs. M. W. Grant, one of the well-known residents of Brown county, is an old settler in Nebraska and a very estimable lady, respected by all who know her.

Mrs. Grant was born in New York State, December 25, 1844. Her father, Silas W. Erwin, was a farmer of American stock, and her mother, Sarah Brinkerhoff, was also of American descent. Our subject is the eldest of two children, was raised in New York state and married to C. G. Grant in 1867, also a native of New York, whose father was Nelson Grant, one of the prominent farmers and business men of the county in which he lived. Nelson Grant's wife was in maidenhood Philara Mein, of American birth.

In 1876 Charles G. Grant came to Iowa, settling in Webster county, and farmed it there for thirteen years, also being engaged in mining, at different times following his trade as stationary engineer. In 1870 they moved to Missouri, where they remained for one year, and in September, 1881, came to western Nebraska, traveling from Missouri with an ox team and covered wagon, driving a small bunch of cattle, arriving in Atkinson the day on which the first railroad ran into that town, at that time Atkinson being the postoffice and trading point of this locality. Mr. Grant first located on Niobrara river, later on Bone creek, and then on his present farm at Winfield, Brown county, here buying a pre-emption right. His first house was a log cabin with a sod roof, and the first year he was only able to raise a little garden stuff. All of his time was employed in building up his farm and making improvements, and in 1900 he died from the effects of a gunshot wound received in the Civil war, and was sincerely mourned as a kind husband and indulgent father. Mr. and Mrs. Grant were the parents of five children, two of whom died in infancy, and of the remaining three but two are now living: Bertha F., born April 25, 1878, now married, and Hugh E., born in January, 1882, on the Niobrara river, in what is now Rock county. Their first child, Gertie E., born in New York, in 1871, died in young womanhood.

During the war Mr. Grant served in Company I, One Hundred and Seventeenth New York Volunteers, and saw service in the Army of the Potomac. He received the wound which eventually caused his death at Fair Oaks, Virginia.

Mrs. Grant now owns and operates the farm of three hundred and twenty acres located on Pine creek, in both Brown and Rock counties, and the comfortable farm buildings, fine orchards containing all kinds of fruit, and the general air of thrift which prevails over all, bears evidence of her good management. For convenience Mrs. Grant has had the clear spring water piped through the house which runs from the hills near by.

WILLIAM R. WOOD.

William R. Wood, treasurer of Cheyenne county, was born in Adams county, Illinois, May 31, 1861, being the youngest of five children. His father and mother were natives of Ireland, but came to America in an early day and settled in Illinois. His father died in 1863, and his mother in 1870, in the county where the subject of this sketch was born. Mr. Wood has one sister still living in Adams county.

In 1882 he turned his steps westward and settled for a time in Cass county, Nebraska, but in the spring of 1896 he became a permanent resident of Cheyenne county. He located his homestead in the fall of 1885, choosing the southeast quarter of section 4, township 16, range 41, and added a tree claim several years later. He now owns six hundred and forty acres of desirable land with very good improvements. Mr. Wood has been careful and thorough in the management of his farm and has made good in every way. He has one hundred acres under cultivation, pastures seventy-five head of cattle and a small bunch of horses. The subject of this sketch is admittedly one of the prominent citizens of Cheyenne county. Although a Democrat in politics he has been honored by election to several important positions, and this is evidence of his popularity when it is known that the county is strongly Republican.

Mr. Wood has been active in all matters pertaining to the welfare of his state and county and his intelligent interest in local affairs has been thoroughly appreciated by his friends and neighbors. He held the office of county commissioner from 1896 to 1902 and the finances of Cheyenne county were materially advanced under his administration. He has also held the office of precinct assessor for several terms. In the fall of 1907 Mr. Wood was elected treasurer of Cheyenne county and commenced his duties January 1, 1908. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America.

MATTHIAS THEIN.

Matthias Thein, one of the foremost public-spirited and worthy citizens of Dawes county, is a native of Germany, where he was born at Luxemburg in 1859, a son of John Thein, a wealthy farmer and distiller. Our subject's father came to America at the age of twenty-one years, and was a member of the second party who crossed the plains to California in the gold rush of 1849. Here he made a fortune, returning later to Germany, where he invested in a large farm and distillery. Our subject's mother was also a native of Germany.

Until the age of twenty years, Matthias lived with his father, assisting him in farming while attending the common schools. In 1879 he came to America, landed in New York city, and went west into Iowa, where he followed the occupation of farming. After spending six years there, Mr. Thein visited his home in Germany, and upon his return to America again went to Iowa. For many years he followed railroading, handling groups of men on construction work for twelve years. He has been associated with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, assisting with the construction of this line north of Alliance.

Mr. Thein is the owner of a fine ranch of six hundred acres, which is fenced, and which is located in section 14, township 30, range 51. There are one hundred and thirty acres of cultivated land. He has erected some of the finest buildings to be found on any farm in Nebraska. His residence, a building which cost him fifteen hundred dollars, is a modern up-to-date dwelling, water-piped throughout, containing a bath room, and many of the conveniences of the modern city residence. He has a water reservoir with a capacity of one hundred and eighty barrels.

In 1891 the subject of this sketch was married to Jacobina Van Treeck, of Wisconsin. Her parents were farmers, natives of Germany. To this union was born one child, William, who first saw the light of day in 1892.
