Ashton is on Oak creek, in the eastern part of Sherman county, and on the Arcadia branch of the B. & M. R.R., 13 miles from Loup City, the county seat. The settlers were principally Polish immigrants, and the population now numbers about 200. The railroad was complete to this point in November, 1887, from which time the town dates its existence. The adjoining country is devoted principally to agriculture and stock raising. The shipments for the past year were 300,000 bushels of corn and 70 car loads of live stock. There are here a grain elevator, a feed mill, a bank, a hotel, agricultural implement repositories, lumber yards and other business enterprises and industries.

Litchfield is in the western part of Sherman county, in the Muddy Creek valley, 18 miles from Loup City, and 47 miles northwest from Grand Island, on the branch of the B. & M. R.R., from Nebraska City to Newcastle, Wyoming. The place has a population of 300 who are manifesting considerable enterprise, which is evidenced by roller mills, elevator, two banks, etc. There are also two churches -- Methodist and Presbyterian -- a G.A.R. post and a lodge of A.O.U.W. The local newspaper is the Litchfield Monitor, E.R. Bradley, publisher.

Loup City, the county seat of Sherman county is located in the north-central part of the county and has a population of 677. It is on the Arcadia branch of the B.&M. R.R., and is the terminus of a spur of the G.I. & O. branch of the U.P.Ry. The town has a good water works system, which cost $10,000, and a $70,000 roller flour mill, with a capacity of 125 barrels per day. A grand enterprise for the development of manufactures is a canal two and a half miles in length from the Middle Loup river to the town, have a fall of 56 feet and furnishing a splendid volume of water power. There are some fine brick business blocks here a and large grain elevator, besides other valuable improvements made within a short time. There are two banks, two lumber yards and three newspapers -- the Northwestern, Sherman County Times and Sherman County Alliance.
